The total of the write-offs over the 38 years since the act came into force represents an average of approximately $166,000 a year. Again, when one looks at the billions of dollars involved, I think one will certainly agree that this has been a good program.

What this bill requests is that the program be extended for a further two years, from July 1, 1983 to June 30, 1985. The bill is not requesting an extension of the capital amount. That has been sufficient and remains so. There is a ceiling of $1.55 billion on the amount to be guaranteed by the government.

Honourable senators, the bill, as I said, provides for merely an extension of the current program. It involves no further capital guarantees, but simply continues a service which is of great assistance to the agricultural industry.

Honourable senators, I beg your support for this particular bill, and hope that it will be passed in due course.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: May I ask the honourable senator if the interest rate has changed?

Senator Buckwold: It is a floating interest rate, and is one per cent above the prime bank rate. So, it varies with the ups and downs of the prime rate, with a surcharge of one per cent above that.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I wish to point out that this bill cleared second reading, committee of the whole and third reading in the other place in less than 20 minutes. It is obvious that there is general agreement to the bill, and we on this side have no serious objection to it.

However, I do not think it would cause any undue delay if we slept on it. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate until the next sitting.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Ernest G. Cottreau moved the second reading of Bill C-147, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to introduce for second reading Bill C-147, which is legislation to amend and to extend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

I am sure that you are aware that this is a bill intended to aid the small independent fishermen by helping to finance a number of fishery improvement projects, such as repairs to vessels and equipment. It is directed toward ongoing operations of the small independent fishermen rather than the building of large expensive trawlers.

This legislation specifies the amount that can be outstanding to an individual borrower at any one time, as well as the maximum term of each loan. It also lays down the total principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by all lending institutions in a lending period, and what that lending period will be.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans took over the administration of this act in June 1978 from the Department of Finance. Many fishermen depend on this act, and it is in their interests that the amendments be made soon since the present legislation terminates on June 30, 1983—a matter of only a few days.

The rate of interest under the act is set at 1 per cent over the prime lending rate of chartered banks. This fluctuates with the changes in the prime lending rate for the duration of the loan. This legislation is of great help to fishermen in that it facilitates credit for them and permits them to operate as free entrepreneurs.

With the extension of Canada's fishing zone, fishermen now are obliged to go farther off shore and they need more efficient vessels to harvest fish and to retain their quality until they reach the processing plant. In addition, the cost of vessels and equipment has increased due to inflation.

The guaranteed loans program carried out under this act provides a stable source of credit to many small independent fishermen, in the absence of which such credit would be less available from the banking community during those times when the market is sluggish. Without a program of this sort, it is quite likely that a small number of independent fishermen would be forced to borrow from large operators and fish processors which would jeopardize their freedom and independence.

On the west coast, where there are no subsidies and no provincial loan boards, this program has become increasingly important and popular with fishermen. Where provincial schemes are available, the demands placed on the legislation are not as great, although it is used in the Atlantic provinces as well. In Newfoundland, for example, the number of loans guaranteed under this act has increased substantially. Extension of the program is much less costly than direct subsidies.

I should also like to emphasize that since its inception the loss under this program has been less than three-quarters of 1 per cent. In addition, this approach of providing credit availability to fishermen is in line with the current fisheries policy.

I should also like to make the point that all loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act must be secured in the regular manner. Security is taken in the form of a chattel mortgage on the item purchased, or a mortgage on real property. The lender is given a written promise by the borrower to repay the loan. Other terms and conditions are worked out between the applicant and the lender.

What the amendments will do is extend the act for a two-year period from July 1, 1983 to June 30, 1985, and set the aggregate principal amount of loans made during that two-year period, in respect of which the minister would be liable for losses, at $100 million for all designated lenders under the act.

A further amendment to the act will make it mandatory for lenders to comply with the provisions of the regulations.

By way of explanation, perhaps I should point out that the existing act empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations concerning the administration of the program, but there is no provision in the legislation that makes it an offence to contravene the regulations. Under the proposed amendment, failure by lenders to comply with the regulations would void the minister's liability under the act. In effect, the amendment would firm up the program administration and require lenders to register with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans all loans made under the provisions of the act within three months of the granting of such loans.

Loans made by chartered banks and other designated lenders under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act have risen significantly over the years. From the inception of the plan in 1955 to March 31, 1982, approximately 14,759 loans have been made, amounting in total to approximately $184 million. The average size of the loan has increased from over $1,000 in 1955 to around $18,000 at the present time.

I am sure it will be recognized that the guaranteed loans program provides a solid credit base for fishermen through recognized credit institutions across the country. Lenders make loans with the same care taken in the conduct of their ordinary business and use normal commercial lending practices in drawing up agreements and in servicing the loans.

Honourable senators, I am sure you know that this legislation has had general all-party support. In view of the time element, I trust that you will want to give your support to it as well.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

MOTION RE SUSPENSION OF RECORDING OF DAILY ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Charles McElman, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, June 15, 1983, moved:

> That the practice of recording the daily attendance of senators in the Senate be suspended effective April 14, 1981, and remain suspended until the beginning of a new session of the Thirty-second Parliament, or the first session of the next succeeding Parliament, whichever may first occur.

He said: Honourable senators, I need not draw to your attention that there is a problem in the Senate with respect to attendance and penalties. I should like to refer briefly to the sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act which govern in these circumstances.

Section 34, which deals with the indemnity, states:

> —there shall be paid to every member of the Senate and House of Commons a sessional allowance at the rate of forty thousand, two hundred dollars per annum.

It follows that, if the sessional allowance is to be paid on an annual basis, calculation of deductions from such allowance should be and is meant to be on an annual basis. The act was not corrected at the time of last amendment to provide for that because the current circumstances were not foreseen.

Section 37 of the act provides for deductions. It also states that absences by reason of illness or on public or official business are not counted as absences.

Section 40 of the act provides that either the Senate or the House of Commons may make regulations to make attendance requirements more stringent, but there is not provision under which they can be made less stringent.

Section 44(1) reads as follows:

> For each session of Parliament, at the end of each month and at the end of the session, each member shall furnish the Clerk of the House of which he is a member with a statement, signed by him, of the number of days attendance during the month or session, as the case may be, for which he is entitled to the said allowance, and, in case days are included on which the member has failed to attend by reason of illness, setting forth that fact and that his absence was due to such illnes and was unavoidable.

Those are the provisions of the act with which we are concerned. Honourable senators should bear in mind that the provisions are identical for the Senate and the House of Commons.

The House of Commons has developed its own practices for the administration of those provisions of the act. It is not my purpose or intention to discuss or comment upon those administrative arrangements.

Many years ago the Senate also developed its own administrative procedures in this regard. The practice—and I stress the word "practice"—was instituted that the attendance or non-attendance of senators would be recorded at each sitting of the Senate and that such attendance or non-attendance would be published in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

An important reason for the institution of this practice in the Senate is the fact that, by law, a senator becomes disqualified as a senator if he or she fails to attend sittings of the Senate for two successive sessions of Parliament. Thus, the keeping of a record of attendance in the Senate became an important practice, contrary to the situation in the other place.

Those are the principal sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act and the administrative practices that now apply.

In a normal session—a session that continues for approximately one year—this presents no problem for most honourable senators; but this is not and has not been an ordinary session. This session began on April 14, 1980, more than three years and two months ago. Honourable senators will note that in the motion I have placed before you, I have suggested that the attendance record cease as of April 14, 1981—one year from the beginning of the session.

The fact that this session has dragged on—and I use those words advisedly—for more than three years is not the fault of the Senate and, indeed, is not the fault of the House of Commons. It is directly the fault of the government, of cabinet, which has failed to begin a new session and present Parliament with a Throne Speech at approximately one-year intervals. It is my view that cabinet has a duty and, indeed, a responsibility to present, each year, a statement of its plans and policies and to begin a new session. That has been the practice, a precedent of the Canadian Parliament; and it is a good practice.

This government, in its wisdom or lack of it, has chosen not to observe that time-honoured practice. Over the past one and a half years, almost on a monthly basis, it has been indicated that this session would be prorogued and a new session begun. It is now suggested by some that a new session will begin early in the fall, while others suggest it will be later in the fall. Honourable senators, such suggestions no longer impress me.

We are, therefore, left with the problem that the usual annual allowance for absence from the Senate, without suffering penalties, has been effectively reduced from the normal period of 21 days to less than seven days annually as of now, and it is still going down.

It is my understanding that a good number of senators, some of the most responsible, are now suffering penalties. As yet, I am not one, but I would point out that some of the best attenders and hardest workers in this body are now either beyond the period and are suffering penalties or their backs are to the wall. Such responsible senators should not be placed in the position in which they now find themselves because of what is, in my view, the irresponsibility of the administration.

The problem has been repeatedly drawn to the attention of the government leadership in the Senate over a long period of time, both privately and openly in this chamber. No corrective action has resulted. Other cabinet ministers have been alerted to this problem. Nothing constructive has happened to solve the problem.

The Honourable Senator Flynn, the Leader of the Opposition, offered to present an appropriate amendment if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would support it. He received a negative reaction. Senator Denis raised the subject again recently with the government leader and, again, there was a negative reaction. Senator Denis was told that it would not be "convenient." If one could bring levity into this, which is difficult to do, one might suggest that it is not convenient to pass the Canagrex bill at this time. The problem continues and many honourable senators continue to be penalized.

Honourable senators, the ideal way to solve this problem is by means of a bill amending the Senate and House of Commons Act, as was suggested by the Honourable Senator Flynn. We have, however, no indication that the government will introduce such an amendment. We have no solid commitment that this session will end next week, next month, or, indeed, next year.

It is in that light that I have brought forward this motion. Its effect would be to bring section 44(1) of the Senate and House of Commons Act into full force, requiring each senator to file with the Clerk of the Senate, at the end of each month and at the end of each session, a statement concerning attendance and non-attendance. This would place honourable senators on exactly the same footing as that of members of the House of Commons. It would also draw attention publicly to current practices concerning absences and penalties—or lack thereof—in the House of Commons. Any comparison of what goes on would not be odious to this chamber, but it would, I believe, bring responsible action from the government. I find unacceptable and untenable the suggestion that it is too late in the session to bring forward such an amendment.

As our good friend and now retired Honourable Senator Laird once said, it would be a very simple bill. It is so simple, so easy to bring forward and to have passed because the members of the House of Commons, in conscience, would find such a bill as amenable to themselves, in today's circumstance, as we would here.

Honourable senators, I am under no illusion that my motion might pass. I do hope, however, that some honourable senators will feel moved to make comments on it before it is either defeated or dies on the order paper.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 21, 1983, at 2 p.m.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not see Senator Frith in the chamber today. I am not sure if the Leader of the Government will be able to manage without him, but I should like a reply to the question I put to Senator Frith last night. I had hoped that today he would be in a position to enlighten us on the program of the Senate. Will we be deprived of his presence today?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I can say to my honourable friend that, as the leader, I find it difficult to get along without Senator Frith. However, he indicated to me yesterday that, for personal reasons, he may be a few minutes late this afternoon, but he does expect to be here shortly. I cannot say at the moment whether he will arrive before the end of Question Period, so perhaps I will try to answer my honourable friend's questions.

Senator Flynn: Has the Leader of the Government in the Senate any indication from the leadership in the other place as to what is expected of us? Has he received any instructions or orders from the government leader in the other place?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, perhaps "indications" would be a better word than "instructions".

Senator Flynn: It is a more polite word, but it has the same meaning.

Senator Olson: That is not the attitude or the system within which I try to operate. There are, of course, a number of bills that are considered essential which my honourable friend knows about and, no doubt, we will deal with some of them today.

Insofar as concerns any further legislation coming over from the other place that is not now on the Senate order paper, I think it is fair to say that the government still expresses the hope that Bill C-155 will move at least one more stage and, hopefully, even further than that. However, my honourable friend can draw his own conclusions from what happened yesterday with respect to that bill.

There are one or two other bills that might come to the Senate for consideration and perhaps I can give my friend an indication as to just what stage they are at. For example, there is an attempt—if that is the right word—to legislate an increase in the authority of the Export Development Corporation to $20 billion from about $10 or $12 billion. I am not sure of the exact amount, but it is significant. That bill is now in committee in the other place, but I cannot assure my honourable friend that it will come to the Senate in time to enable us to pass it through all stages.

Other than that, clearing up matters now on the order paper is probably a realistic view of what might happen in the next few days.

Senator Flynn: Were we to deal with all the bills on the order paper today or tomorrow, would that mean that we would adjourn tomorrow until Monday of next week?

Senator Olson: Were we to deal with all stages of debate, so that those bills could receive Royal Assent, that is not only a possibility but a very real possibility.

Senator Flynn: Is the Leader of the Government suggesting that we need to pass Bill C-164 tomorrow? Could that not be dealt with next week?

It seems to me that the government has supply until the end of the month, at least, and it is only important that this bill be passed and given Royal Assent by the end of the month.

Senator Olson: I understand that, and if there is some reason for its not being dealt with tomorrow, I would not insist that we sit on Thursday to deal with it. However, there are a number of other bills on the order paper, such as Bill C-85, and I suppose there is no problem with Bill C-148—

Hon. Jack Marshall: There might be a problem with Bill C-148.

Senator Olson: If there is, that is unknown to me. That bill only requests an extension of the termination date of that act. However, I did not think there was a problem in passing Bill C-148, Bill C-147 and Bill C-161. We have not given Royal Assent to the borrowing authority bill yet. I think that Bill C-164 could be dealt with on Monday of next week.

Senator Flynn: Very good.

PARLIAMENT HILL

ROYAL VISIT—INQUIRY RE DISPLAY OF BRITISH FLAG ON COURTESY STAFF

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I direct a question to the Leader of the Government respecting flags, as I did some weeks ago.

When I entered Parliament Hill yesterday I noticed on the courtesy staff the flag of the United Kingdom, the Union Jack. As a devout and appreciative student of constitutional experts such as Professor A. R. M. Lower, I had learned—at least, I thought I had learned—that when the Statute of Westminster was enacted under the regime of the great Prime Minister of Canada, R. B. Bennett, the Sovereign of the United Kingdom was also the Sovereign of Canada. Accordingly, we salute Her Majesty and her first son and his beautiful wife.

I wonder why it was necessary to fly the flag of the United Kingdom on the courtesy staff, which is immediately to the east of this building. If the Queen and her offspring belong equally, properly and delightedly to Canada, why was it necessary to fly the flag of the United Kingdom? As I understand it, R. B. Bennett believed that after 1931 all the dominions were equal in status and in no way subordinate one to another. I am not suggesting that Senator Olson was responsible for the flying of this flag, but I would appreciate it if he would look into that and tell me at a later time—we do not want to embarrass the royal visitors who are, obviously, extremely welcome in our country, as they should be—why there should be on this particular occasion a display of the flag of one member of the Commonwealth rather than our flag. We are, after all, an important member of the Commonwealth.

• (1410)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can ask for an explanation. I have no difficulty in agreeing with Senator Macquarrie that Her Majesty the Queen is the Queen of Canada. There is no question about that. It may be that he partly answered his own question when he raised the matter of courtesy in that that particular flagpole is, as he knows, used as a matter of courtesy. The United Kingdom has much in common with us when we display our affection for royalty, and it may be that that is the explanation.

Hon. Jack Marshall: The Canada Day bill is an example.

Senator Olson: However, I will make some inquiries.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I appreciate Senator Olson's response, and I hope he is not in any way thinking that I am confused with references to the royal standard. I am just invoking the concept of the equality of members within the Commonwealth. We both agree that the Commonwealth is—if not the greatest—one of the greatest international organizations in the world today.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at the same time that Senator Olson is making those inquiries perhaps he would ask why the flags of Australia and New Zealand were not displayed.

Senator Olson: I shall make those inquiries. While the answer may not be precisely the way I explained it a minute ago, it will be along those lines.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, at the same time could the Leader of the Government inquire as to whether there is a distinction between the Union Jack as flown in Great Britain as the flag of Great Britain and the Union Jack as flown as a symbol of the Commonwealth quite properly in Canada?

Senator Olson: I will include that in my inquiry.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE USER FEES AND EXTRA BILLING

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Social Development. In view of the fact that the Saskatchewan government has already abandoned health user fees and that recently the Manitoba government decided against instituting such fees, could the minister clarify the statement made by the Prime Minister in Toronto last week, which differs from the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare recently, relating to the federal government's attitude on the imposition of unfair and burdensome user fees by the Governments of Alberta and New Brunswick?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I am unaware of any conflict in those two statements. What I understand the Minister of National Health and Welfare to be saying is that she has been conducting negotiations with the provinces in order to prevent an escalation of user fee charges which would, in turn, create a serious debasement of our medicare program. In answer to questions from Senator Murray last week, I said that we were hopeful that those negotiations might produce some accord. The Prime Minister has indicated that he supports Miss Bégin in those negotiations.

I am not sure whether he made this statement in Toronto, but he said recently that he hoped it would be unnecessary to come to a conflict with the provinces, although he suspected that, in the case of Alberta at least, their action to introduce user charges was not so much based on revenue as on ideology.

I see no conflict in the efforts of Miss Bégin to find an accord, and also, at the same time, in a negotiation with the province, to indicate that the federal government will be stubborn in ensuring that medicare, as a universal program, is not eroded.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. In view of the apparent conflicting reports on this issue, would the Minister of State for Social Development inform the Canadian public about the whole subject of our health care program today by publishing either a green paper or a white paper on it, or, at least, make available a draft of the new Canadian health act to federal and provincial legislators and to the governing bodies of the medical and other health professions for their information and study?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I think the best way of proceeding to inform the Canadian public about the discussions under way between the federal government and certain provinces is for the federal government to issue an information paper. In that respect, I agree with the direction of Senator Haidasz' remarks, and I will make such representations to Miss Bégin, the minister responsible.

At the same time, it is not possible for me to table a bill which would indicate the government's policy. As Miss Bégin herself has made known to the Canadian public, she is actively considering a piece of legislation, but the matter is not, at this moment, one of government policy. In other words, no particular policy decisions have been taken by the government. Undoubtedly, when decisions are taken, they will be made known by the minister.

Senator Haidasz: In view of the fact that, for the first time in the history of St. Joseph's Health Centre in Toronto, 60 beds will be closed down for the next four months because of lack of funds, and in view of the minister's success in obtaining hundreds of millions of dollars for Canadair and de Havilland, would he intervene to obtain additional funds for the health care system to provide adequate hospitalization for the Canadian people?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is irrelevant.

Senator Austin: I am sure Senator Haidasz, who follows these matters, well knows that the administration of hospital care in the provinces is the responsibility of the provinces.

I am sure he also knows that the federal government's contributions to medicare, under the established programs financing arrangements, has continued to increase without indexing. I am also sure that the question he has addressed to me would much more properly be addressed to the Government of Ontario, the province in which he resides.

As far as the implication related to the government's investment in aerospace technology is concerned, perhaps Senator Haidasz would like to put to me the closure of de Havilland as a trade-off against additional medicare financing in Toronto.

Senator Haidasz: I am sure that the honourable minister will agree with me—I hope so, anyway—that the health of the Canadian people has a higher priority than the continuing of any jobs in Canadair and de Havilland industries.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, of course the health of the Canadian people is primary, and the Canadian community has the best medicare plan in the world. The federal government's resources behind it are superior to the resources placed behind any medicare program anywhere in the world, and superior to the resources placed by any province behind the medicare program. What I am saying to Senator Haidasz is that Canadians, on the whole, are a healthy society. Canadians on the whole, however, cannot make choices that trade off jobs, technology and prospects for economic growth against health. Health comes first at all times, but that does not indicate that health must be chosen while other priorities are discontinued.

● (1420)

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question relating to the question of user fees. Did I understand the minister to say that what the Prime Minister or the government is afraid of is the escalation of the user fee? If that is so, does it follow that a low user fee is acceptable to the government?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, Senator Flynn's question is answered simply by saying that the federal government is opposed to user fees—

Senator Flynn: But you mentioned escalation.

Senator Austin: —except that there exist, in two provinces at the moment, user fees at quite a nominal level. It would be better for the medicare program and for Canadians in those provinces if those user fees were discontinued.

Senator Flynn: I see; you did not, then, use "escalation" in the proper sense of the word.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, when this matter came up the other day, the honourable minister undertook to find out from Miss Bégin what she intended to say in her speech in New York. Has the minister anything further to report on that matter?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have a copy of Miss Bégin's address to the American Society in New York, delivered on June 13. I shall send a copy of it to Senator Murray.

Senator Murray: I thank the minister for that response. May I ask him whether his attention has been drawn to the interview which Mr. Trudeau gave to Le Devoir on the weekend, in which he indicated that Miss Bégin is preparing a document—not a bill, but a document—for presentation, in which document the issues at stake would be set out with greater clarity? Can the minister tell us whether there is a white paper, a green paper, or some such document forthcoming?

At the same time, will the minister tell us whether the government is doing opinion surveys across the country at the moment with respect to the medicare and hospital insurance programs and public attitudes towards them?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, Miss Bégin is giving consideration to an information document which would outline the position of the federal government on the question of medicare.

On the question of surveys, I am not aware of any specific surveys which the government is doing on medicare issues, but that does not mean there are no surveys being carried out. The federal government consults the Canadian people, through surveys, on a continuing basis.

Senator Murray: Would the minister undertake to find out what surveys are being carried out by the government concerning public attitudes in the general area of health and hospital programs? Will he advise the Senate of his findings in due course?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I will be very pleased to make inquiries into what is being done. I will also see whether such information can be made available.

Senator Murray: Has the minister heard of freedom of information legislation and the guidelines set out therein which the ministers in the government are supposed to abide by in this respect? There is no reason in the world why the questionnaires and the results of such surveys cannot be laid on the table here or in the other place and be made public under the freedom of information guidelines. I hope that the minister and the government will keep that in mind.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I will certainly keep in mind my obligations as a minister under all relevant legislation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, from time to time the minister has expressed his opinion in the house as to the level of federal government support for health services. He and I have not seen eye to eye on this aspect of the matter.

I ask the minister whether he is familiar with the statement issued by the provincial Ministers of Finance and Treasurers called Federal Proposal to Reduce Health and Post-Secondary Education Financing, dated April, 1983. If the minister refers to page 3 of that document, he will see that these ministers express their opinions on federal support for health in the following terms:

> The federal government's support of Canada's health system is declining.

The figures are then given.

> Even if one were to use the federal methodology, Ottawa's support of total provincial health spending peaked at 47.8 per cent in 1979-80 and by 1982-83 had fallen below 40 per cent.

The point of my question is this: Does the minister not see some relationship between this declining federal support for health services and the financial problems of the hospitals that were referred to by Senator Haidasz a moment or two ago?

It seems to me that the minister is in a doubtful position if he seeks to lay down provincial policy, as he is obviously attempting to do, without taking into account the fact that the federal contribution to health services is declining in no small way. Seven per cent and 8 per cent on 47.8 per cent is about a one-sixth decline. It is pretty important.

Senator Austin: I should be very happy to look at the document to which Senator Roblin refers. I have not seen it. It certainly is not my information that any decline in federal contributions to medicare is taking place. Just the contrary. Federal funding is continuing to rise. Perhaps the explanation is in a choice of accounting methods. In any event, I will look into it.

Senator Roblin: I am quite prepared to believe that federal spending is continuing to rise. However, I also ask the minister to consider the fact that costs have continued to rise. The point the provincial ministers are making is that costs are rising faster than the federal contributions, so much so that the federal contributions have gone down from 47.8 per cent to below 40 per cent in the last three-year period. I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will take this matter into account when she prepares her information statement for the Canadian people, because we must have a meeting of minds as to what the facts are about federal and provincial support for health services.

Senator Austin: The information I have, honourable senators, is that, as a percentage of GNP, health care costs in Canada were stable during the seventies at a rate of about 7 per cent, and that, in spite of restraint, the federal health care contributions to provinces have remained fully indexed and are expected to rise by approximately 10 per cent this year.

Senator Roblin: That does not deal with my question. My question has to do with the ratio of the federal contribution towards the total cost. The ratio is declining. It has declined from 47.8 per cent to below 40 per cent. These other figures are interesting, but paying the bills is what counts. That is why those hospital beds in Toronto that Senator Haidasz referred to are closed. It is the total bill that has to be looked at, and the relative share assumed by the two levels of government. I should like to have the minister clarify that point for me.

Senator Austin: Inasmuch as in 1977 the provinces wished to move to a block funding program, to which the federal government agreed, I think it has to be quite clear that the administration of costs for medical care in the provinces rests solely with the provinces. The point I am trying to make is that the federal government has not withdrawn its funding but is continuing to increase it. We do not participate in the administration of health costs in the provinces. If the provinces find that they would like some assistance in this area, I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be pleased to consider the possibility.

Senator Roblin: The minister was not listening very carefully to my quotation, because the quotation from the provincial ministers said that even if one were to use the federal methodology—in other words, going over to the minister's grounds to calculate these costs—we still get these percentages of 47.8 per cent down to below 40 per cent, so the minister has not answered the question.

Senator Flynn: As usual.

Senator Austin: I think the question will be better answered if I see the text and have an opportunity to consider it.

Senator Flynn: No doubt.

Senator Roblin: Does the minister, who is the minister in charge of it, tell me that he has not read this document of April 1983 from the provincial governments on the very point of health care? Surely somebody in his office at least made for him a digest of what they said.

Senator Austin: I am not the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am the Minister of State for Social Development, and in that respect I co-ordinate the spending of the federal government, and I overview the policy developments. I am not possessed instantly of every detail of every social policy program of the government.

Senator Flynn: Nothing new there.

Senator Austin: However, I am flattered that Senator Roblin would think that I have every provincial comment and representation at my fingertips. I would dearly love to be able to meet that measure.

Senator Roblin: I suppose that underlines why these gentlemen are complaining about the unilateral federal decisions. That is one of the central points they deal with in this document—unilateral federal decisions. I guess it is unilateral if the minister does not even read their submissions.

Senator Austin: That is a wee bit of a cheap shot, honourable senators. Nothing is proved by that statement except that Senator Roblin has an editorial opinion.

The federal government strives energetically at all times to consult the provinces, but it is not always possible to have unanimity of views, because the interests of the federal government and of the provinces differ on occasion, as Senator Roblin may well know from his previous political experience. I do not believe that anything is gained in this debate by McGowan Cup tactics.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend ascribes editorial opinion to me, then he is mistaken. I am not expressing my own opinion, but the written submission of the ten provinces of Canada. It is not my editorial opinion. If the minister, who presides over the grand policy of social, health and other concerns, is not really aware of what they think in connection with this matter, then I deplore the situation.

Senator Austin: The honourable senator said that we behaved unilaterally without considering the opinion of the provinces. I say to him that it is not sustained by either his quotation or his argument. I am saying there is a history of federal-provincial consultation and there is no evidence to demonstrate that we proceed unilaterally without involving the provinces in our concerns.

Senator Roblin: Of course, the minister proceeds unilaterally. He has heard of the revenue guarantee component of the Established Programs Financing fund, has he not? The minister is well acquainted with that. Was that not proceeded with unilaterally? Does that not lie at the base of a great many of the complaints raised by the provinces? Of course it does. For the minister to say that he has not moved unilaterally is unsustainable and, I repeat, that is the opinion of 10 provinces.

Senator Austin: Perhaps there is a small problem of communication between the honourable senator and me. We do not move unilaterally in the sense that the provinces are not consulted and decisions are taken without our being aware of their position. That was imputed by the honourable senator. If he is saying that the federal government should never make a move without the agreement of those ten provinces, then I would say it is not a sustainable position for any politician to take.

Senator Roblin: If we want to talk about McGowan Cup tactics, there is a fine example. Erect a straw man and knock him down. Well, that's a fine straw man. I never maintained, and no sensible person would ever maintain, that we have to have unanimity in the Canadian federation to do anything. The minister knows that. I am surprised that after six months or so in the job he still has not caught up with what the provinces are trying to tell him.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I must say to Senator Roblin that he will be surprised from time to time, for the reason that I will not know every document he produces off his shelf for the purpose of questioning me.

Senator Roblin: The minister should be careful with his answers, because his answer concerning the federal share of the health matter was given by him a couple of months ago when the senator from New Brunswick and I were discussing the matter. Following that discussion I took the trouble to go to my library to find out the facts, and the minister should do the same.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I shall end this debate by telling the honourable senator that I appreciate his lecture, and I will try hard to meet that test.

Senator Flynn: You won't succeed, in any event, so forget it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. No doubt he is aware of the various representations that have been made by several senators concerning the Garrison Dam project in Manitoba. No doubt he is also aware of the concern of Manitobans with regard to the quality of fresh fish in that province. No doubt he is also aware, through the many representations that have been made, of the concern expressed by the people of Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan with regard to their rivers and streams. I am sure that he is aware that the concerns expressed apply throughout the province.

The minister has always taken great pains to tell me that something was going to be done; yet I can honestly say that nothing has been done for the past two years. As an example, I would point to the delegation that went to Washington approximately two weeks ago.

An Hon. Senator: Were you there?

Senator Guay: I was not there, but I wish I had been. There were two provincial ministers, some members of the provincial legislature, one member of Parliament, the member for St. Boniface, and no ministers from Ottawa. According to the story in the Winnipeg Free Press, the day this delegation went to Washington to see two or three senators, the senators in question could not see them because of a vote being taken in the Senate, and so the delegation spoke to their executive assistants or somebody at that level.

Last Thursday the American Senate approved another $22.3 million for the Garrison project. One newspaper says that the approval by the U.S. Senate Appropriations Committee on Thursday of the $22.3 million for the Garrison project means that there is little Manitoba can do to block the construction of the Lone Tree Reservoir, the first part of the project that would be built in the Hudson Bay drainage basin. The Lone Tree project should be of great concern to Canada. Is there not some way that we can have appropriate representations at the cabinet level?

Hon. Jack Marshall: No.

Senator Guay: Representations at that level would show concern for the province of Manitoba and would show that the Canadian government is taking some action rather than waiting for the provincial government to act. If we had such federal government representation in Washington, we would probably get a more responsive audience. We cannot expect to get anything done if we continue to do what was done in forming the last delegation and send a member of the minister's staff, instead of the minister himself.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Shame!

Senator Guay: This is what is happening. I cannot emphasize too much the concern of the people in Manitoba, particularly over the inactivity at the federal level. They feel that if the federal government were to support the provincial government—notwithstanding the government in power in Manitoba—it would achieve the type of response we would all appreciate from our neighbour, the United States, which is a good friend of ours. To be heard in Washington, we need representation at the federal level.

Can the Leader of the Government tell me what can be done in this regard and can he obtain for the people of my province an appropriate assurance that something will be done to represent us?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Guay has asked questions on numerous occasions concerning this continuing difficulty with the United States. I have either answered his questions immediately or taken them as notice to obtain a reply from the Department of External Affairs. That reply has usually been to the effect that the Canadian government, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs and our embassy in Washington, are continuously raising this matter with the United States State Department and, indeed, with members of the Congress. I think that we feel as strongly as the honourable senator does that there is potential damage if this diversion project continues in the way it appears to be going. Nevertheless, it is a fact that the United States Congress has passed these appropriations, but it certainly has not been because we have not made very strong representations on behalf of Canada.

I can give Senator Guay the assurance that I will, again, convey his concerns to the Department of External Affairs, with the request that they again convey those concerns to the U.S. Administration, including the Congress which, as he has pointed out, has apparently passed further appropriations recently.

Senator Guay: I thank my leader for his comments and I appreciate them greatly, but I would like to add one further request. Will the Leader of the Government make representations on our behalf at the cabinet level? Could he obtain for us the assurance that, if there is another parliamentary delegation to Washington, a minister will be in attendance to do the selling job as opposed to a civil servant? Regardless of which ministry was represented, if we could have the assurance that a minister would be present I am sure our delegation would be more successful. Such an assurance would be greatly appreciated.

Senator Olson: I will include that request in my reference to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

ROYAL VISIT

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES, THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES—OFFICIAL FUNCTIONS—GUEST LISTS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government advise us whether the Senate will adjourn early today to enable senators to attend the reception at Kingsmere this evening?

An Hon. Senator: What senators?

An Hon. Senator: Who are invited?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is nothing to indicate that we will adjourn either early or late. There is a certain amount of work on the order paper. We have to deal with that. More than that, I cannot really say.

An Hon. Senator: Are we on regular power or standby power? That might have a bearing.

Senator Olson: I am not sure whether regular power has been restored. If not, we will have lights but not air conditioning. I can certainly recall from my early days here, when there was no air conditioning, that on hot days that was a definite factor in shortening debate. Whether that will be the case today, I don't know. In any case, the agenda is not long and I suppose we will adjourn when we finish it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Have you been invited to this evening's festivities?

Senator Olson: I am not sure one way or the other. I would have to check with my office. I know I received an invitation yesterday which I was unable to accept.

Senator Flynn: I don't understand that answer. Are you suggesting you did not give a reply?

Senator Olson: With respect to the invitation you are referring to, I can't say right at this moment. I believe I was invited and that I accepted, but I did not assume that, for that reason, the Senate would adjourn early.

Senator Flynn: Well, if you were the only one to be invited, I think we could dispense with your presence.

Senator Marshall: Since it is impossible to obtain answers to questions on the order paper with respect to matters emanating from the PMO, could the Leader of the Government provide us with a list of those who were invited to the state dinner last night and those who were invited to the affair this evening so that we will know where the Senate stands in relation to state invitations to members of Parliament?

Senator Olson: I cannot give an undertaking that the reply will be given forthwith, but I will take the question as notice.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been granted to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation hereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this sitting of the Committee was scheduled a long time ago. Honourable senators are aware that the Senate will be sitting tomorrow, but, fortunately or unfortunately, the Chairman of the Committee made arrangements some time ago to invite members of the Bar Association, including the President, Mr. Yves Fortier and other impressive witnesses. That is why we are asking for the authorization referred to in this motion.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

HELSINKI FINAL ACT—COMMENDATION OF CANADIAN INITIATIVES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, the Senate has already given permission to revert to notices of Motions, at the request of our deputy house leader. With leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), seconded by the Honourable Senator Asselin, P.C., I move:

> That this Chamber commend the initiatives and efforts of the government at the Madrid Review meeting as well as the Canadian parliamentary delegation to the Interparliamentary Union meeting held recently in Budapest supporting the human rights and fundamental freedoms provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, the spirit of which is so clearly and courageously defended by His Holiness Pope John Paul II during his present visit to Poland.

[Senator Flynn.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANAGREX BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Olson for the second reading of Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I assume that it is the subject matter of this bill that attracts the interest of the Senate today. It certainly did last night. I thought there were some excellent speeches last evening dealing with Canagrex, a subject with which we are all pretty well familiar by this time, although I detected that there was perhaps not the enthusiasm for the bill that one might have expected since, with Canagrex, we are facing in a sense a motherhood issue: We all want to sell more agricultural products abroad. We all want to ensure we have the best possible means of promoting the sales of agricultural products abroad. It is evident, then, that that objective will undoubtedly secure widespread support since it is consonant with our national interests.

It is one thing, however, to have a good idea; it is another thing to decide how best to develop it. It seems to me that some of the honourable senators who spoke yesterday—and I must include some of the people who appeared before the committee when it did its pre-study of this bill—exposed what I think are considerable weaknesses in the plan we have before us now.

One of the important things that the bill seeks to do is promote the sale of Canadian agricultural products abroad and, although it is a bill of a general nature, they are considering specialty crops, by and large, and some livestock products, but not wheat or dairy products which are now sold through other channels. The first proposal, in passing this bill, is that the government should do more, or at least do something to help the sale of these products, but when you examine the things that the bill proposes to do, it is obvious that many of those things are already being done by somebody else in the government.

When you look at the question of intergovernmental transactions which this bill is supposed to facilitate, you find that we have a body called the Canadian Commercial Corporation which has been in the business of intergovernmental transactions for the last 30 years, dealing with agricultural commodities as well as others. Therefore, when it comes to intergovernmental transactions, this bill seems to cover a requirement which has already been provided for.

The bill seeks to promote the sale of agricultural products. That, too, is a function we would all like to see engaged in, but a great deal is already being done along this line. There is a program for export market development called PEMD, run by one of the existing departments of government, which is engaged in this process of the promotion of the sale of agriculture products. We have in our embassies trade counsellors who are engaged in promoting agricultural products. I am willing to admit that it would please me much more if some of those trade counsellors were specialized agricultural trade promoters. Some may be, but I am reminded of the great success the American government has had in having agricultural attachés in their various embassies to promote the sale of their agricultural products abroad. I know that we have been doing something along that line, and I would not be surprised if we could do much better.

Several of the other activities included in this bill are already covered. The question of financing the sale of agricultural products abroad is already provided for under instrumentalities we now use, the Export Development Corporation being one of these. The promotion of agricultural products is covered by government activities which offered, in 1981, 50-50 assistance to 36 different organizations for trade fair participation, specialized training courses for potential buyers, market studies, market identification, seed trials, certification expenses, trial shipments, initial operating costs in the formation of export associations, competitive bid preparation expenses, et cetera. We see, therefore, in the general field of promoting the export of agricultural products, that something is already being done and that most of these specific functions I have been able to identify in the Canagrex bill correspond to something that we are already doing. I know that the minister's reaction to this comment will probably be that we are going to pull all these different forces together, put them all under one roof and do it better. It may well be that that will turn out to be the case, but I must say, having watched the way in which these various government bodies operate, one has to wonder whether shuffling the deck is going to make a big improvement.

One thing it is going to do is increase the cost; of that I can assure this chamber. Every time we see one of these new developments put in place, it certainly increases the cost. The minister has tried to calm our fears in this respect when he told us he was only asking for a dozen people—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): This year.

Senator Roblin: I think a dozen was the figure the minister used, plus a couple of million dollars. One immediately thinks to oneself that, if all these functions he is talking about need to be done under this one roof, how are a dozen people with a few million dollars going to do it in any effective way? That leaves a big question mark in my mind.

One thing I am perfectly clear about is that it will not stay that way, with 12 people and a couple of million dollars, for any length of time. It is, after all, the government that decided to become involved in the security of our petroleum supply and wound up with a couple of thousand filling stations. Once they get started, it is hard to tell what they are going to do. Obviously, the purchase of filling stations from BP or whomever, when gas and oil supplies were not also purchased from them, really indicates that the original goal of national self-sufficiency in oil and gas has been lost sight of, and that they are in it for the sake of the filling station business.

The moral of that is that if you get into Canagrex with a bureaucracy that starts off on a level that appears to be within reasonable bounds, we really have no assurance that it is going to stay that way. I would hazard a guess, knowing the personality of the present minister that, if he retains his portfolio—and he is the best qualified man on the other side to operate it—the odds are that Canagrex is going to grow. We are in at the birth of a new crown corporation that has been put together to carry on, by and large, functions that are already being performed by existing institutions of government with no guarantee, as far as I can see, and indeed no reasonable expectation that the new arrangements will be more economical, more effective or efficient than the old ones.

Senator Flynn: We are in at the birth of a monster.

Senator Roblin: It is not a monster yet, but it has the potential to be one.

The minister says that we have to have this establishment because all the other boys on the block have one. In the committee and elsewhere, he went through all the other countries that are exporting products on world markets which have their own marketing bodies such as this one, and indicated to us that he had to have this bill because he needed the same powers, particularly the power to buy and sell that these other government agricultural export promotion bodies have. The trouble is that they do not have that power. An analysis was made of the nations which he cited as being our competitors whose power he wished to match. The evidence submitted to the committee was that only one nation had the powers that he was asking for, and that was Israel. They have an export marketing organization and it does have the power to buy and sell, but no other nation on that list had such an establishment. I will not burden the house with the names on that list, because they are on record with the committee. Suffice it to say that that power was not used by those other exporting nations, so the argument does not seem to fit the facts.

Perhaps we should look on the bright side. Perhaps this new organization to help the sale of our agricultural products will work better than what we have now. I have to believe that, because I know the bill will go through. However, there is one part of this bill that has concerned a good many people, and that is the idea of the government's becoming the buyer and seller of these products. The people who are in the field today say, "We do not mind competition, but when we are competing with the government, that is not competition; that is something quite different. When government is in the field and you are competing with them, that is not competition as we understand it; that is big brother." That is a whole different bag of tricks when it comes to looking after the export of these specialty products. One would think, if you are bringing in this government-selling organization, it would be because the people on the job now are not very good at it; but when you look at the figures to see what private industry has been doing, you see that they have been increasing their sales 23 per cent per year for the last six years. I say to you, show me anybody else who has a record as good as that. The private industry can say, with some degree of satisfaction, that they have been doing a good job. Twenty-three per cent per year for the past six years has been the record of increased sales of specialty crops from Canada to the rest of the world.

That is not to say, however, that it could not be better. That is why I am willing to admit that there may be a possibility that the market development side of this bill may be worth trying. I put my reservations to one side. That is the good part of the bill, if there is anything good about it, but when you find that, in addition to that, they intend to get into the marketing side as well, that is something which remains unproved. The benefit cost of this has not been tackled, as far as I can tell, by the minister or anybody else. The minister says there is half a billion dollars' worth of sales out there for Canadian products.

But when you try to get down to the questions, "Where out there? Who out there? How out there?" the problem becomes more difficult to answer. It seems to me that the case for the selling organization that will be in competition—in that unique form of government competition—with the private trade is something which really needs to be thoroughly justified before we adopt it.

I am not saying it should never be adopted; there may be circumstances in which we could envisage that form of government activity as being necessary. I do not rule that out. We market other products that way. I do not ignore that fact. I am simply saying that in this situation I do not think the case has been made that it is necessary to do that now.

The benefits and costs have not been established; the targets are far too amorphous and difficult. I feel no confidence that the government can interpose itself satisfactorily into that marketing system. I share those concerns with honourable senators in the hope that they might stimulate some interest in this topic.

I do not really feel happy about voting for this bill, although I dare say it will be passed. However, when it is referred to committee, as I hope it will be, I propose to move some amendments to the bill. Some 38 amendments have been prepared, you will be delighted to know, not all of which are of equal importance. I do not intend to propose 38 amendments at the committee meeting, but I shall try one amendment—that is, the one on the main issue of the government being involved in the selling and the commercial side of this business. If that amendment passes, by any chance, then I might try some of the others, but I promise you I shall move that one amendment and let the other 30-odd take care of themselves when we see how the one I shall move gets along.

[Senator Roblin.]

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say in this debate this afternoon. If the bill is referred to committee this evening—as has been suggested—that will give me my opportunity to propose the amendments I seek, and I intend to do that.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Olson speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have made some notes of the concerns expressed by a number of honourable senators respecting Bill C-85, and shall try to answer some of them, though perhaps not with specific numbers that have come from surveys. The Minister of Agriculture has indicated his view of the potential expansion in export trade that could be developed for some farm products, or a combination of farm products.

However, it seems to me that there is a far more important and underlying reason for passing this bill and establishing the corporation known as Canagrex than has been referred to by honourable senators who have participated in the debate.

First of all, most of the apprehension is based on what might happen down the road, that there would be growth in the corporation and that it would invade the private sector to the extent that Canagrex would have unequalled competitive advantage and drive the private sector out of some of the markets. Let me say at the outset that Canagrex is not intended to invade the private sector. The bill makes it clear that it is not going to invade the private sector where there is a reasonably good job being done in promoting the sale of agricultural products in the international market.

There is one clause of the bill that says it shall not be used as a subsidy mechanism. That is quite clear. It is also clear from the discussions that I have had that Canagrex is going to go out and attempt to promote additional trade in agricultural products, trade that does not exist now. Otherwise it will not live up to our expectations. Let us be clear about that.

We know that there are some companies in the private sector which are doing reasonably well in some areas. There is no question about that. We also know that there are hundreds of smaller agricultural entities—in some cases co-operatives, in some cases small companies, and indeed, in some cases producers—which do not have the benefit of either a co-operative or a corporate structure which sincerely believe that entering the international market is really quite beyond them.

I do not think anyone who knows anything about that market will disagree that there is a potential for sales of agricultural and food products in the international market, and that, without a corporation such as Canagrex, it would take a great deal of time, organization and financial strength, to take the lumps and bumps that arise in a commercial business until a corporation is well into it.

Another thing that is fairly fundamental to this is that perishable products—perhaps not those in the category of lettuce or carrots—have a short life from the time they go from the farm gate to the time they have to be in the hands of the consumer. That invovles great risk.

We know that there are a number of small and even large corporations which have had some difficulty with that factor in marketing their agricultural and food products. There has to be a co-ordinated effort between production and getting it into the market stream and obtaining a regular customer and regular flow-through. It is so risky that a great deal of private corporations—certainly smaller co-operatives and others—simply cannot afford that. We all know that.

We also know that because of perishability—the short life of commodities that we are talking about—there is not a possibility of building up stocks on the production side so that foreign products can suddenly end up on the Canadian market and do damage to it.

We went through, of course, the marketing legislation when I was the Minister of Agriculture approximately 13 years ago.

Hon. Jack Marshall: But things were better then.

Senator Olson: But there was some difficulty with that bill, too. Let me recall to all honourable senators who have raised these apprehensions about the future that at that time the main argument against—I want to be careful how I say this—enabling legislation to allow producers to establish marketing agencies over which they would have some influence and control was that it was going to grow like Topsy.

At that time it was the egg producers who were pleading for enabling legislation so that they would have the legal structure to put a marketing board together and to obtain the delegated authority they required from the provinces to do so. That involved eggs and broilers.

Honourable senators, 13 years later the only two marketing boards that have been set up under that legislation are those for eggs and broilers.

It was stated clearly by me as the representative of the government at that time that there would be no further commodity brought under that enabling legislation unless a majority of those concerned voted to do so. It seems to me, in fairness to the producers who now believe that they can make better use of agriculture and food production in Canada to expand their efforts into foreign markets, that we should, at least, set up the structure so that they can try. That is all they are asking. Almost everyone who has talked about Bill C-85 agrees that it is beneficial to have a corporation to promote, facilitate and engage—when they come to the word "engage" that is where they fall down—to promote and facilitate the export of agricultural and food products. On the next page we see "promoting, facilitating . . . in the export of agricultural food products." Where they have the problem is with the word "engage" in the buying and selling.

Honourable senators, that is where the risk is.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: But no subsidy.

Senator Olson: Subsidy is prohibited by this bill. I do not claim to be an expert in the export market, but we were involved in it rather deeply with the Canadian Dairy Commission. Some years it was a reasonably good business but when you are competing with treasuries of the EEC and the United States, it is not a very good business. That, of course, was also based on an act that already existed where subsidies were paid to the dairy producers.

I think it is being unrealistic, in recognizing how business operates in the real world, if you believe that you can simply do some promotion—however good that promotion may be—and expect somebody else to take the risk on doing the business. That is not the way the real world in agricultural and food products is. However much philosophy you want to heap on that argument, you have to get out there. In many cases the smaller producers are co-operatives that are too small to be in that business, and there are other farmers, perhaps fairly big farmers, but they are not in the league where they can get into the international export business with perishable goods. Nevertheless, it is a fact that if you want to move into exporting there are some risks that have to be taken. There has to be some financial stability and some financial strength behind it so that you can bring both sides forward together, the production and the marketing, through to the consumer.

I am bewildered a little by some of the arguments. We know that both of those have to go together. Let us take broilers as an example. Perhaps a good market for broilers that could be established between a reliable producer, namely, Canada, and an ongoing daily reliable consumer in the Middle East, and there could be a significant increase in production which would be to the benefit of Canadian producers. I also know that both of them have to be brought along together and there has to be some kind of an institution to achieve that. Canagrex is what is being proposed so that it can have that stability. There are going to be some ups and downs. Everybody knows it is not going to be smooth sailing. I plead with honourable senators to give these producers a chance.

I could make some of the same arguments again today that I made 10 or 12 years ago when we were putting up enabling legislation for producers to get together so that they could have some say, some influence and some direct marketing of their product. Up until that time they took it to the farm gate or to the nearest marketplace in a small town or a big city, and turned it over to somebody else. Many of them did it well. The important thing is that they were not in the business with the same point of view as the producer. Everybody beyond the farm gate—if I can use that term—was interested in the margins. That is a normal thing in business. The producer was interested in a predictable volume and price level. They were ready to produce to fit the market requirements, either up or down, and to adjust their prices accordingly—something which they have done very well, in my view, in the past 10 or 12 years.

Consumer groups were concerned about gouging and that has not happened because the provisions in that bill, and the agreements that were made, provided that those prices when they were given that authority had to move up and down in line with their costs, and it did and it has.

Going back even farther, I remember the arguments that were made at that time. Why in the name of common sense do we deny these people the right to increase their production in a reasonable way out into the international market for their own benefit if we allow other groups to get together? We allow labour unions to get together and set down some of the terms and conditions with a structure which sets up the rules under which they do it. Marketing boards were set up for exactly the same purpose. If there are producers across this country who sincerely believe they are too small by themselves but who can get into an organization such as Canagrex with all the limitations that are placed on Canagrex, why would we deny them the right to try?

That potential market that is out there has to be developed. They have to explore every possibility of selling new production in new markets. Those are the terms and conditions of this bill and the authority that would be set up. We can talk about all the people who support it and those who are opposed to it. The people in the farm organizations who are opposed to it today are the same ones who were opposed to enabling legislation for marketing 12 years ago. The same ghosts that they raised then are around again only they never materialized in the 12 years since. I do not think we should deny other people the right to get together and to try to better their lot with a stable market for a certain volume so that they can start to have some predictability in what they ought to produce. Those people, as well as any other group in our society, ought to have it if they want it, and they have been asking for it.

I have heard a number of arguments today and yesterday that somehow this is for the sake of the bureaucracy. Nothing could be further from the truth. The producers want an opportunity to set it up and to have the kind of legal provisions that are in Bill C-85. If they fail, that is tough, but they are not so naive that they are unfamiliar with the requirements of developing new international markets. I hope that honourable senators will support this bill and give them a chance to try.

There is provision in this bill for a report to be made to Parliament annually. I think there are other provisions in it that set up safeguards against all of the fears of what might happen five or ten years down the road.

In conclusion, I would again like to appeal to honourable senators to look at what happened to the so-called enabling legislation respecting marketing boards. Eggs were 10 to 12 cents a dozen, and even in 1970 and 1971 that was something like 50 per cent of their cost of production. The legislation applied only to those who were in desperate straits. We indicated it would apply only to people who wanted to get together and who could get the delegation of provincial authority because we have never assumed, even at that time, that we had the right to set prices or production quotas.

Honourable senators, give them a chance to see what they can do in the international market. After not months but years of preparation, this seems to be the kind of legislation authority that they need in order to have a chance to see what they can do to better their lot in the international market.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government two questions.

My first question relates to the delay. If I am not mistaken, the House of Commons passed an order to force a final decision on this bill before Christmas. Why did the government wait about six months before allowing the Commons to pass this legislation when it required only one more day of debate?

My second question relates to the fact that the Leader of the Government has been mentioning the enabling legislation regarding marketing boards as being a great success. I am wondering why we are not using this enabling legislation to resolve the problems that this legislation is supposed to address. Do we need Canagrex, or could the marketing boards be used?

Senator Olson: As to the first question, that is, why did it take so long to get to the two days that had been set aside as a time allocation, I am not sure that I know the answer. I can only say that there were many procedural difficulties—some of which were inventions that had not arisen before—that got in the way from time to time.

Senator Flynn: Procedural where?

Senator Olson: In the other place.

Senator Flynn: There were none.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend will recall that there certainly were. What is more, at one time there was an indication by the government that they wanted to end the session early in February.

Senator Flynn: But when they decided they would not, they delayed the legislation.

Senator Olson: There were several requirements before prorogation that I am sure my honourable friend recalls as well as I. We went from one stage to another and got into the situation where we needed borrowing authority, and so on. There was a long series of events, one leading into the other, and the house leader was unable to find two consecutive days, or even two days, during which the House of Commons could deal with this bill.

Honourable senators, I am afraid that, for the moment, I have forgotten Senator Flynn's second question.

Senator Flynn: With regard to the answer to the first question, I would point out that the only explanation I heard, which is apparently more plausible than what the leader has said, was that the Leader of the Government in the other place wanted to punish Mr. Whelan for having forced closure or having put the time allocation motion before he was permitted to do so. If that is the only reason, I think it should be put on the record. It is a rather amusing explanation.

Senator Olson: If that is the reason Senator Flynn thinks is applicable, I am afraid that that will have to remain his own private reason; it is not an official reason. Therefore, I would not be willing to agree with it, and I am sure Senator Flynn expects me to respond in this vein.

Senator Flynn: I agree with the leader that it is not an official reason. Even if it were true, I am quite sure the Leader of the Government would respond with an official reason.

My second question was: Why should we not use the marketing board enabling legislation rather than this?

Senator Olson: The marketing boards are not equipped to handle this kind of situation in the international market.

Senator Flynn: I thought the egg marketing board dealt with broilers and eggs.

Senator Olson: Yes, and that is exactly what the government said it was going to do at the time the legislation was passed. That has not been a story of complete sweetness and light over the 12 years. It was predictable that there were going to be some difficulties. That board was set up to deal with the situation within the domestic market.

Senator Flynn: You were so happy with it.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend should not put interpretations on my attitude indicating that I was so happy with it.

Senator Flynn: That was your main argument.

Senator Olson: What I said—and Senator Flynn should remember this—was that the government kept its word absolutely as to what was going to happen to the enabling legislation. The debate concerning this enabling legislation went on for months, and all the fears expressed at that time simply came to nothing. The government indicated that the enabling legislation was designed for those producers, when the majority of them wanted to use it and not before. That is the exact history of that legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that Bill C-85 be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: When will this committee sit?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I cannot be absolutely certain, but I believe that a meeting is to be arranged for 8 o'clock this evening.

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, Senator Olson is correct. Notice of a meeting at 8 o'clock this evening will be circulated.

Motion agreed to.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Buckwold for the second reading of Bill C-148, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I hasten to reassure any who may be apprenhensive about it that my emergence as a farm spokesman for the Conservative Party is a purely temporary phenomenon, and is absolutely unrelated to the results of the leadership convention of our party last weekend.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): You did not even have time to plant a crop this year.

Senator Murray: Unaccustomed as I am to this role, which I cheerfully accepted from our whip last evening, I would point out that my task has been made a good deal easier by the characteristic lucidity and succinctness of the explanation put forward last evening by Senator Buckwold.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: This bill will make available to farmers, for another two years, loan guarantees to a maximum of $100,000 per farm at an interest rate of prime-plus-one per cent.

If this is not the difference between life and death for many farmers, it certainly makes a difference between progress and stagnation for many, and it comes at an opportune time.

High interest rates have put a severe squeeze on farmers, just as they have on small businesses, generally. Indeed, I know that farm bankruptcies numbered 191 in the first five months of this year. While that may not appear to be very high when compared to the scandalously large number of bankruptcies in construction and the retail trades, and so on, still the percentage increase in farm bankruptcies is extremely high. I think honourable senators would find that the number of farm bankruptcies almost tripled in the first five months of 1983 as compared to the same period in 1982. The farm income figures for the past year or so illustrate quite well the rough period that the agricultural industry has gone through during the recent recession. In 1982 there was a 14 per cent decrease in net farm income over the previous year. If inflation is taken into account, that would amount to a drop of almost 25 per cent in net farm income in real terms.

As Senator Buckwold pointed out last night, despite these straitened circumstances, farmers borrowed some $208 million under this guarantee program last year. When the Minister of Agriculture spoke to this matter in the other place on Friday, he said that some 69 per cent of that money had gone towards the purchase of farm equipment; 11 per cent towards construction and repairs; and the balance towards the purchase of land and livestock. That proves that even in economic adversity, the Canadian farmer is making the kind of investment in plant and equipment that has made the Canadian agriculture industry highly productive and competitive in the world. This is surely something which it is our duty to encourage.

While interest rates appear to have stabilized temporarily, the fact of the matter is that many farmers are carrying a back-breaking burden of debt that was incurred when interest rates were at the level of 15 per cent, 16 per cent and higher. There is a desperate need for consolidation loans at lower interest rates. Honourable senators may be aware that a program which offers such loans through the Farm Credit Corporation has run out of money. The Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable Eugene Whelan, is not very sanguine, it appears, about the possibility of having the funds replenished by his colleague, the Minister of Finance. There has been some suggestion that the program which we are discussing today, the Farm Improvement Loans program, ought to be applied, in some way, to the purpose of providing consolidation loans at lower interest rates.

In any case, honourable senators, there is an urgent need for action. I think it is appropriate to underline those difficult circumstances which many farmers are experiencing today and which are not addressed by the bill which is before us. After all, when we give encouragement of any kind to the agricultural industry, we are not talking about bailing out the Maislins of this world, nor are we talking about underwriting the bizarre management practices of Canadair. What we are doing is investing in a sector of the Canadian economy that is world competitive, that is eminently productive, that is a mainstay of our national economy and is a valued and cherished way of life for thousands of Canadians.

Let this bill pass. We believe that it is important that this extension be given, and given immediately, to this important program.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Buckwold speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I should first like to thank Senator Murray for his kind words about the sponsor of the bill. It is unusual in this chamber to hear such a thing, I must admit, but it is most welcome.

Hon. David Walker: Hear, hear.

Senator Buckwold: I should also like to thank him for the comments that he made respecting the bill. Although he is a neophyte farmer, I can see the hayseeds growing out of his ears already.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He is a quick study.

Senator Buckwold: He has wisely put his finger directly on some of the financial problems facing the agricultural industry. I certainly have no doubt that consolidation of expensive farm loans is required. I suggest that we could also use some increased funding for the grain cash advances, about which we will probably hear more in due course. The Farm Credit Corporation could use some additional funding as well.

[Senator Murray.]

All in all, however, as was pointed out by Senator Murray, through good management, great skills and high productivity, the farm community has come through better—which does not say that many were not hurt or did not suffer—than most Canadian industries during this high interest rate period.

I am delighted that Senator Murray, along with members of his party across the way, has seen fit to endorse the renewal of the Farm Improvement Loans Act for another two years, and that we will continue to provide that sort of funding at reasonable rates to the farmers of the country.

Having said that, might I add that I doubt whether this bill need go to committee. I believe that in the other place it went through all readings and Committee of the Whole within about 20 minutes. I am not suggesting that that happen today, but it is my hope that I may move that this bill be read for the third time at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Buckwold, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Cottreau for the second reading of Bill C-147, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, in dealing with Bill C-147 I should like to commend Senator Cottreau for his explanation and introduction of the bill last evening. This is yet another bill having to do with improvement loans. From looking at House of Commons Debates, it is obvious that the bill went through three readings in a short period of time.

Honourable senators, this bill does no harm to anyone. Its aim is to further limit the liability of the Crown for guaranteed loans made to fishermen or other owners of fishing vessels, and for building essential to the fish harvesting but not processing operation. In other words, the legislation is to extend and simultaneously amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

I have been watching the fisheries improvement loans program, from the time it was instituted in 1955. In view of the importance of the fishing industry to Newfoundland, for example, I do not think that the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act is required at all. It emphasizes, to me, the lack of co-ordination between the federal and provincial governments with regard to the management and control of the fisheries. Allow me to make a couple of comparisons to show what I mean.

Last year in Newfoundland, under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, there were 242 loans granted, totalling just over a million dollars. Under the Fisheries Loan Board of Newfoundland, which offers a similar service to fishermen at a better rate of interest, 674 loans were granted, for a total of $12 million, which equalled the total amount that the federal government, through the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, directed to all of the provinces in Canada. I suggest that the federal government would be wiser to advance the monies required to the Province of Newfoundland, which is more aware of what is going on in the fisheries industry and thus able to direct the loans to the better assistance of the fishermen.

Although the federal government guarantees the loans at one point above prime lending rate under the Fisheries Loans Board of Newfoundland there is a guaranteed bank loan program whereby fishermen can get over $50,000 at an interest rate of three points below the prime rate. At the present time, the rate of interest is only 8.5 per cent. That fisheries loan program is almost the same as the federal program. Why we need two programs, with two pyramids of staffs, is beyond me.

In introducing the bill, the Minister of Agriculture indicated that studies were being conducted on how to improve financial arrangements for fishermen. To put it in proper perspective, let me just read what he said, referring to the Kirby report, which says that one of the problems of the whole fishing industry is financial:

> Without getting into the pros and cons of the recommendations in these two reports on the particular issue, it is entirely possible that at some point in the future, with the concurrence of the industry, we can come up with an improved financial assistance program for fishermen tailored to the prevailing economic situation. However, any such new scheme will need much careful planning and consultation and could take a number of years to implement. In the meantime we feel it is in the best interests of fishermen and the industry as a whole to continue with the present Fisheries Improvement Loans Act for at least another two years.

Fine. As I said earlier, it will not do anybody any harm. However, the fact that since 1955, after 28 years, not enough studies have been conducted on fisheries improvement loans or help in financing for the industry just shows the inefficiency of the system as it now exists. I am not that happy that the amount of the fisheries improvement loans will be increased, because it will not do anything for the fishermen in Newfoundland, other than advance another $1 million to that program.

There is another factor in Newfoundland and that is that the banks are not that ready to grant loans. There have been many examples where they have given out loans not guaranteed by the government but under their own programs, and are thus able to get a higher rate of interest and take all kinds of liens on the property of fishermen, who have no hope for the future if the fishing industry is bad, as indeed it is. The state of the whole fishing industry in Canada is a topic one could talk on for hours.

On behalf of my party, I have no objection to passing this bill through all stages. However, there is another point I should like to bring up, if I may digress for a moment, and that is the importance the fishing industry has in this Senate.

When I was appointed to the Senate in 1978 I was surprised to learn that there was no fisheries committee, and I brought the topic up on a number of occasions, but to no avail. When we have an industry with a budget of half a billion dollars, that is the third ranking in export value after the agriculture and forestry industries, having an export value of $1.5 million so that Canada is now the world's largest exporter of fish, I wonder why the Senate does not find it important enough to have a committee on fisheries.

I am reasonable, and I would not expect to have a committee on fisheries alone. However, there are many examples of where the problems of the fisheries in Canada could come under an umbrella of an existing resources committee in the Senate. One of the things that bothers me is that, despite the fact that many of our resource industries come under the umbrella of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, the Senate gave approval to the formation of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture by itself; it gave approval to the Northern Pipeline committee, and I understand that in the next session we will have an energy committee. Yet the Senate does not deem fisheries, which is the third largest trade exporter in Canada, important enough for the establishment of a fisheries committee. Why not combine fisheries, energy and agriculture under one resources committee, which to me is only common sense. I hope that those responsible will consider that, realizing the importance of this matter and the necessity of having such a committee with more prominence in this house.

According to the Rules of the Senate the problems of fisheries now come under a hodge-podge of various committees. For example, in the terms of reference of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs fisheries would come under, "territorial and offshore matters" and "treaties and international agreements." There is a reference to it in the terms of reference of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications under, "navigation, shipping and navigable waters," and in those of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce it comes under, "natural resources and mines."

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Did we not have a motion in this respect?

Senator Marshall: Not with regard to fisheries.

Senator Frith: I thought there was something.

Senator Marshall: In any case, honourable senators, perhaps we can look at that again. I suggest very strongly that for our own importance and self-esteem we should very seriously consider the two suggestions I have just made.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, having said that, and having digressed from the purposes of the bill before us, I repeat that I do not think there is any need to continue further, other than to say there is no harm done. This bill extends the legislation in the manner I have indicated, and on behalf of my party I can say that we agree to pass it through all stages.

Hon. Ernest G. Cottreau: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I remind honourable senators that if Senator Cottreau speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Cottreau: Honourable senators, I simply wish to express my thanks to Senator Marshall for his contribution to the debate. I listen to Senator Marshall with great respect on the subject of fisheries. I know of no one who is more informed on it.

I did not get the impression that it is necessary for this bill to be referred to committee, so I simply ask that it be given second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cottreau, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1983-84

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 15, the debate on the motion of Senator Frith for the second reading of Bill C-164, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, when speaking last week on the borrowing authority bill, I named it the Williamsburg bill. Bill C-164 would have to be named the anti-Williamsburg bill. In all fairness it must be pointed out that it is anti-Williamsburg from the point of view of time, in that the estimates were prepared before the Williamsburg meeting, but it is definitely anti-Williamsburg in its philosophy.

It should be no surprise to anyone that the estimates are of a certain type and magnitude, because there is an established pattern of the Liberal Party to preach restraint on the one hand and to practise waste and mismanagement on the other. We have had a succession of finance ministers carrying out that policy. There was John Turner who, as many will recall, began the procedure by carrying out his so-called tax reform. We also had Donald Macdonald, who was so successful at it that the Prime Minister has now engaged him to advise future generations on the pattern. We have also had Jean Chrétien and Allan MacEachen. The last name was more successful than the others, because he had a budget every week. Now we have a Minister of Finance who does not care about the magnitude of the deficits. He knows that his time is limited and that he will pass it on to someone of a different political philosophy and say, "You straighten out the mess!"

The expenditures are so large that it is difficult for the average person to comprehend the figures. For that reason, and particularly for the benefit of the sponsor of the bill, I shall take a few moments to put some of these things into perspective in a fashion that I hope the average person can understand.

The estimates involve the expenditure of $10,000 per taxpayer—not per individual but per Canadian taxpayer. That figure is eight times the amount of expenditure that existed when Pierre Trudeau first became Prime Minister. It represents eight times the expenditure of 15 years ago. During that time we have incurred a terrific deficit. The average Canadian might not appreciate the magnitude of the deficit, but perhaps he will begin to understand when I explain that the interest on the deficit is costing each taxpayer $1,800, or roughly $150 per taxpayer each month just to pay the interest on our deficit.

The interest consumes—and the word "consumes" is the right one—all of the income tax paid by Canadian taxpayers who pay income tax on salaries of $50,000 or less per year, and that represents by far the greatest number of taxpayers and the greatest amount of income tax paid.

A private company with revenue equalling 70 per cent of its expenditure and a gross debt four times the amount of its net assets would be forced into bankruptcy. The government has survived simply because there is no procedure to force the government into bankruptcy. However, if there is an opportunity to establish a new bureaucracy, I am sure the government will find an excuse to establish one.

Estimates of the gross national debt vary between $160 billion to $165 billion. I appreciate that it takes time to get the final debt figure for the previous fiscal year, but I hope it is available and that the sponsor of the bill will be able to give us the exact figure of the gross national debt.

During the past winter the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance spent some time studying the estimates. I have had a rather difficult time in that committee because I have been unable to find a Liberal in favour of the six-and-five program or one who supported and put into practice that program. I was surprised to see a headline in the Montreal Gazette of June 15 which stated that the government was planning a new push on the six-and-five program. The Minister of Finance thinks that Canadians have forgotten about it and therefore he has organized a dinner for next week. Invitations have been sent out to 300 businessmen, parliamentarians, labour and government leaders and journalists who have been asked to pay $15 for a lasagna dinner and Canadian wine.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Will that be at Kingsmere?

Senator Phillips: I cannot think of anything that better describes the success of this government in fighting inflation than that menu and the price tag—$15 for lasagna and a glass of Brights. That sums up the success of the six-and-five program.

Senator Marshall: For that amount one could have lobster from P.E.I.

Senator Phillips: Yes, one could. I hope they have not invited too many cabinet ministers to attend that dinner, and certainly they would not be getting awards. We have heard Senate cabinet ministers complain that they cannot live within the six-and-five program, that they must have additional staff, the expense of which could exceed that program. If we compare their activities with those of other cabinet ministers, they are pikers, and I would tell Senator Olson that they are way behind the situation.

The total estimates have increased 18 per cent, which is three times the amount that they should have increased under the six-and-five program; and that 18 per cent does not include supplementary estimates. So it is certain that we shall have supplementary estimates, and we have had numerous warnings of that. It is quite likely that we shall have four times the 6 per cent that should have occurred under the six-and-five program.

I wish to give the house a few examples of increases within departments where they have grossly exceeded the six-and-five program. Canada Employment and Immigration will spend more on Unemployment Insurance than they will on employment programs. Payments to the Unemployment Insurance Fund have increased 143 per cent to $2.8 billion. The job creation programs have increased 84 per cent to $961 million. Honourable senators, that represents one-third of the benefits paid out in unemployment insurance. Crown corporations have increased 30.1 per cent to $3.8 billion. That figure will be higher because that was before the fiasco with Canadair and de Havilland occurred. So we will have a further increase there. Professional and special services, an item which covers consultants, increased by 16 per cent. That item will increase, too, because for some reason the closer we get to an election the more consultants are hired.

Senator Austin seems to have his own unique way of circumventing the six-and-five program. Other cabinet ministers are trying to increase their expenditures, but Senator Austin is trying to increase his deficit. Last week we were told that de Havilland's deficit was $1.4 billion, and then we dealt with the supplementary estimates which increased that figure to $1.7 billion because they included Canadair, and then this week we had de Havilland again.

I was going to say more on de Havilland later, but I shall deal with the matter now, because it is a very interesting topic. The government has two crown corporations in the aircraft industry, both of which are doing very well, if one counts the size of their deficits, their losses.

I would like to draw the attention of honourable senators to a few facts about de Havilland. Apparently, that corporation was not satisfied with all the publicity going to Canadair so they got into the act by announcing a loss of $265 million in seven months, not exactly a memorable record of achievement. I would like to refer to the statement which the Minister of State responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation had appended to last week's Hansard. It reads, in part:

> —unlike its competitors who are receiving strong government support, de Havilland has received no government risk-sharing support for the Dash-8. It will not be fair to expect de Havilland to operate and be judged against its competitors if it is not supported as they are.

Last year de Havilland lost $265 million. Its sales declined from $450 million to $151 million. The breakdown on capitalized costs for de Havilland was $83 million for the Dash-7 and $113 million for the Dash-8. Canadian taxpayers will assume that loss. To have a loss of that magnitude and to have sales of $151 million appears to me to be fairly concrete support. I ask the sponsor of the bill: How much more support does he expect de Havilland to receive?

Earlier today Senator Haidasz pointed out that, while money seems to be available for de Havilland, it is not available for health care. At some point the government must get its priorities straight. Yesterday, I believe, Dr. Stuart Smith, who is well known to the sponsor of the bill, complained about the lack of government support for medical research. The government says that its reason for funding Canadair and de Havilland is that we must develop technology in Canada. It requires extensive technology to perform medical research, so why are some of these funds not directed to that area of technology?

De Havilland Aircraft and the other crown corporations are not the only culprits. A review by the opposition research office showed that salaries increased in 10 different departments or programs on the average of 17.2 per cent—three times the rate of the six-and-five program. The National Capital Commission increased its salary expenditures by 18.2 per cent. Despite the fact that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has changed its function and transferred many of its people to other departments, its salary increase is 18.6 per cent. If DREE is any indication, apparently it costs more to close out a program than to operate one. One quarter of the 131 departments or programs surveyed showed increases of over 10 per cent, and 10 programs showed increases ranging between 15.1 per cent and 28.4 per cent.

I asked the Minister of Finance, at a meeting of the Senate National Finance Committee, about these salary increases by two departments, the Department of Finance and Treasury Board. I thought that surely these two departments would be following the six-and-five program and keeping their expenditures on salary increases and personnel under control, and that these two departments would be outstanding examples in that regard. I learned that the Department of Finance increased not only its expenditures but also its number of employees by 14 per cent. The minister said that he would not apologize for that increase because his employees work hard. If one looks at the results one is tempted to ask what they are doing because they have not come forward with any concrete results. The minister said that a lot of these expenses occurred because of reclassifications. What is the purpose of having the six-and-five program if we are going to reclassify everybody and increase their salaries in that way?

We have received no real accounting on the so-called special recovery projects. We received various announcements that the Department of Public Works, for example, is undertaking certain projects. The Department of Fisheries, after the Kirby royal commission, announced special recovery projects for fishermen building wharfs. Well, that is desirable, but I doubt that it will do anything for the actual fishermen. It will provide work for the labourers in the area, work that is badly needed, but it will do nothing with respect to the actual catching of fish.

I ask the sponsor of the bill to give us an accounting of the special recovery projects. How much money has been spent to date? I would like a breakdown of that by province, and I would like the length of time involved in each case. Is it one year, three years or five years?

One item that occupied the attention of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance was falling oil prices. The public fails to realize that oil prices have now become a major source of government revenue. Had OPEC not reduced the price of oil and it had remained at $42 U.S. per barrel, the federal government would have realized $11.4 billion in taxation revenue, the provinces would have realized $9.5 billion in taxation revenue, and the oil industry would have realized $10.8 billion in revenue.

In accordance with all projections, the planning for a number of years ahead has been altered because of the drop in oil prices, and yet we have not received any indication from the government of what course it will follow. Will we go to world oil prices? Will we go to 75 per cent of the world price? At present we are at about 85 per cent of the world price. Still there is no indication of where we will go. I suspect that, because of the amount of taxation involved, we will go to the world price.

I hope the sponsor of the bill will be able to give us some indication. After all, it is getting on to July 1, when another price increase is scheduled. Can he tell us what will take place on July 1, other than a ceremony on the lawn in front of the Peace Tower?

Honourable senators, I began my remarks by referring to Williamsburg. Realizing that the Deputy Leader of the Government will want some special place to go on his vacation, and recalling that last year he went to Australia, after which he was busy writing reports to the government for some time—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): A working vacation.

Hon. Lowell Murray: I think he bought a cassette player.

Senator Frith: Actually, I had one of my own. There's heart for you!

Senator Phillips: I should like to suggest to him that he go to Williamsburg this year, because that is a delightful spot. When I was there I found that Williamsburg had about it an air, almost an aura, of democracy. Now I am sure it has an air of solid financial planning, and I should like the Honourable Senator Frith to go there on his vacation, and he can take along as many of his government supporters as he wishes.

Senator Frith: You never know what you are likely to get into when you sponsor a simple appropriation bill.

Senator Phillips: Then, when he returns, he can spend all winter long writing government reports on a new economic policy.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, like other honourable senators, I was entertained by the opposition's answer to Irving Berlin and the old refrain we hear with reference to appropriations. I cannot seriously criticize Senator Phillips for using the appropriation bill to get in a few licks. In his place I think I should have done the same.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Sure you would.

Senator Frith: In closing the debate on second reading, however, I must stress that Senator Phillips has, as we have come to expect, emphasized the amount of the appropriation and supply being asked for and the amount of the deficit, but we have heard nothing about what he would do that would be different. In other words, would he, as a matter of economic policy, recommend that we ask for less supply? Would he ask that the government actually spend less money? If so, where would he suggest the cuts take place? Should they be in the budgetary area? Should they be in the statutory area?

Senator Phillips: Are you agreeing to take my advice, if I tell you what to do?

Senator Frith: I will not agree to take your advice, but I suppose we could come to a mutual agreement to take each other's advice, which, in effect, would be a standoff.

Would Senator Phillips spend less? If so, what would he cut? Would it be budgetary or statutory? Would he cut transfers to the provinces? Would he cut unemployment insurance payments?

An Hon. Senator: He would cut only what is wasteful.

Senator Frith: Which one of these would be wasteful, then? Would he, as a matter of policy and speaking for his party, propose cutting these items that I am listing, which are indeed the major elements of the amount required: transfers to provinces; unemployment insurance payments; old age security; family allowance; medicare? Would he close down de Havilland and Canadair? Would he get us out of the aerospace industry? Of course, all of those could quite easily be a part of the proposals, but I suggest that we would wait a long time—indeed, we will wait a long time—before hearing in an appropriation debate anything but the old refrain about the cost to the taxpayers and the size of the deficit.

Senator Phillips even suggested that we should spend more in some cases, such as on medical research. At least he was specific on that.

With reference to six-and-five, I think Senator Phillips had a sub-refrain. He seems to feel that no department should increase its estimates by more than six-and-five. That was not my understanding of the six-and-five program. It was meant to show leadership in restraint with respect to wage increases and price increases.

In the light of that, I am sure it would be worthwhile putting on record what the effect of the six-and-five program has been. First, let me deal with the matter of which departments have followed the program. In the beginning of the program exceptions and anomalies were found, and in every case I am aware of they were dealt with. Certainly, with respect to wage increases the departments have followed the six-and-five guidelines as they were requested to.

What has been the result of that program? Well, almost a year later the result is that the annual rate of inflation in April fell to 6.6 per cent—

Senator Flynn: Oh, come on. That has nothing to do with this appropriation bill.

An Hon. Senator: What a claim!

Senator Frith: Of course, I understand the position of the opposition is that the drop in interest rates and the drop in inflation were purely accidental and had nothing whatever to do with the six-and-five program.

An Hon. Senator: They had everything to do with the recession.

Senator Frith: They say the drop just happened to come about. I appreciate their position. However, that is not my position, and I propose to suggest that there is a causative relationship between the two events.

An Hon. Senator: Not proven.

Senator Frith: Therefore, I intend to put on record the results of the six-and-five program. Let me go back to April 6—

Senator Flynn: Give us some facts, but not your results.

Senator Frith: These are the facts with respect to what took place. Our interpretations of what caused it differ. The opposition says that this is pure fluke. The government says that it was caused in a very major way by the leadership shown by the government in the six-and-five program. Why do we have to keep shouting at each other? We know that there is a difference of opinion. I am going to put forward the facts. The government will have their point of view and the opposition theirs, and the public can decide whether these facts were a pure fluke and whether the government's program contributed to them or not. As Senator Flynn says, let us have the facts, and then other people can draw their own conclusions.

As I was saying, the annual rate of inflation in April fell to 6.6 per cent, continuing its unbroken slide since the six-and-five program was announced last June, thus making the first-year target of six per cent inflation a realistic possibility by as early as the May figures to be released today, June 21.

April's 6.6 annual figure was the lowest recorded in over six years. The annualized rate for the three-month period February-March-April was 4.1 per cent, improving on the 4.9 per cent recorded for November-December-January.

The following are the key changes in what has been happening in the seven major components of the consumer price index in the three months ending in April.

Food prices rose compared to the previous three months, when they were actually falling. The increase partially reflects higher prices for fresh produce as domestic supplies of stored fruits and vegetables were depleted, and the usually adequate supplies of imported produce from the U.S. and Central America were reduced or delayed by bad weather. Increased prices for certain beef cuts, particularly steaks for the barbeque season, which typically show higher prices from April on, also contributed to the rise. Although food jumped in price over the period, the average grocery bill in April was only 3.5 per cent more than one year earlier.

Housing cost increases slowed considerably from the November-January period, mainly because of slowing mortgage interest costs, prices for homes and communications costs, which more than offset provincial increases in electricity charges and the first-of-year federal increase in fuel oil prices.

Clothing prices in February-April accelerated after three months of almost no movement, owing to widespread pre-and post-Christmas sales. The increase reflects a return to pre-Christmas levels, as well as general price hikes of five to ten per cent on new spring merchandise. Despite the recent increase, clothing prices are less than five per cent higher than one year ago.

Transportation costs declined in the wake of continuing gasoline price wars in several Ontario cities. The decline was also linked to lower air fares produced by the March seat sale and to unchanged automobile prices.

Price increases in health and personal care were virtually unchanged from the earlier three months.

In recreation, reading and education, price increases were unchanged from the earlier three months. Tobacco and alcohol price increases slowed considerably from the previous three months.

As the first anniversary of the six-and-five program approaches, there is strong reason to expect the first year target of 6 per cent inflation will be reached certainly with the June figures; if not a month earlier with the upcoming May data.

Senator Flynn: What about unemployment and bankruptcies?

Senator Frith: This optimism stems partly from the fact that inflation in May and June of 1982 was relatively high, being 1.4 and 1 per cent, respectively. A more subdued rate anticipated this May and June would allow the year-over-year average to continue down. For the annual rate to be 6 per cent or less in June, the average monthly increase in May and June must be 0.86 per cent or less.

What should be a more relaxed pressure on prices this year compared to last is mainly due to the softer impact of the most recent Quebec and Ontario budgets. Last year, these provincial budgets added a sizeable sales tax burden to prices of consumer goods and services which has not been repeated this year, with the exception of the enlarged Ontario sales tax on tobacco and alcohol. The delay of a new provincial budget in British Columbia by the recent election campaign has also meant that prices in that province have not been fuelled by new budget increases.

Also helping put the brakes on inflation have been lower wage settlements. In the first quarter of 1983, wage settlements averaged 6.6 per cent compared to 12.9 per cent in the same period last year. This improvement has helped to temper the cost-price push.

Although a continued drop in inflation seems assured in the next two months, just how far it falls will depend on a number of factors. Food prices typically rise in May and June as domestic storage produce is exhausted and the nation awaits local summer harvest. This year unfavourable weather conditions in the U.S. have hampered the supply of reasonably priced imported produce. In Quebec the supermarket price wars which dampened food prices over the past few months appear to be at an end with Steinbergs being forced to scrap its five per cent rebate campaign. Prices in the province, therefore, can be expected to move upward.

Another uncertainty is the behaviour of gas prices. The January 1 $3 per barrel increase for crude oil began to affect prices in March, but was largely neutralized by gas station price wars. These price wars, while continuing in some regions, do not appear to have lasted to the same extent in May as in earlier months, and some increase may be registered for May or June.

Despite these uncertainties, the prospects for lower inflation remain good. A projection of trends in inflation suggests that May 1983 could register an inflation rate of 5.6 per cent. Economists such as Ben Joyce, of Burns Fry Limited, have already gone on record as forecasting the CPI annual rate will fall to 5.9 per cent sometime in the April-May-June period.

While long-term price stability will depend on factors such as the deficit, wage settlements not rebounding and future energy pricing policy, in the short term inflation should continue to subside. The six per cent target should be reached by June, although gains thereafter will be in much smaller measure.

Honourable senators, those are the facts and the anticipations. As honourable senators will have observed, I did not suggest that all of those downward trends have been caused solely by the six-and-five program. I think it would be as unreasonable for me to suggest that the six-and-five program was totally responsible for these reductions as I consider it unreasonable for the opposition to suggest that it has had no effect whatsoever.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Murray: May I ask a question of my honourable friend?

Senator Frith: I would like to finish dealing with the points raised by Senator Phillips, so perhaps my friend could save his question till then.

Senator Phillips raised some questions with regard to information on the Special Recovery Program. I would refer him to the budget. The details of the Special Recovery Program are contained therein, and we have on our order paper an item which gives us the opportunity to debate the budget. I propose to make an intervention on that subject, in part to reply to Senator Murray's eloquent intervention.

Senator Flynn: When the session resumes in October?

Senator Frith: I suggest that Senator Phillips might want to deal with the question of details of the Special Recovery Program under that heading, perhaps before or even after my intervention, if he wishes.

I will not make any prediction about oil prices. Predictions are for people—

Senator Flynn: They are for an election campaign.

Senator Frith: No, I will not make a prediction about that either.

Senator Flynn: No, predictions are for election campaigns.

Senator Frith: Yes, predictions are for election campaigns and sporting events, and those who really enjoy the prediction business can often be found in the hands of bookmakers or at pari-mutuel windows—more often at the "buy" window than at the "pay" window, I find, so I do not believe in indulging in predictions.

With reference to the gross national product, I do not have that information on the appropriation bill. However, I am sure it is as available to Senator Phillips as it is to me, and he may wish to use it, too, in the budget debate.

Honourable senators, again we find in the appropriation bill an excellent opportunity to discuss economic policies and the differences of opinion and perspectives that exist, as they ought to, between parties in a democracy. I have listened to Senator Phillips and I have noticed that he has, as usual, courteously listened to me. The issue has been joined, and I ask that we have second reading of this bill.

Senator Murray: May I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether, in the considerable amount of supporting material he has been furnished with by his advisers, there were any projections regarding the course of interest rates in Canada over the next six to 12 months?

I ask the question because it is obvious that the government has done some sums in this regard. Indeed, in the budget documents tabled by Mr. Lalonde some weeks ago there is an indication as to what the size of the public debt will look like over the next five years.

To have made those projections, the government would have had to make some assumptions regarding the likely course of interest rates. Therefore, I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether he has at hand any documentation from the government which relates to where interest rates are going to be in the next six to 12 months in this country.

Senator Frith: No, I do not. Honourable senators will notice that with reference to the material I put on the record regarding prices, it consisted mostly of reports about what has taken place rather than predictions, although there were some predictions about what would happen within the next week or two, or even today.

I do not have predictions on interest rates. I suppose one can assume that there will be some relationship between price rises and interest rates, but in listening to the Minister of Finance discuss this under questioning by Senator Roblin and Senator Phillips before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance—and I certainly do not count myself as an expert—what impressed me most, both from the questioning and from the answers, was that this is a rather complicated question and it is a tricky business to predict interest rates.

If there is material available beyond what is already on the record as a result of the minister's appearance before the committee, I shall attempt to obtain it.

Senator Murray: It is too late to do so for the current debate, but since the deputy leader has undertaken to speak to the inquiry standing in the name of the Leader of the Government, I should like to ask him to obtain that information and undertake to provide it to the Senate when he participates in that debate.

It is clear, from the projections Mr. Lalonde has stated regarding the size of the public debt envelope over the next four or five years, that the government has made certain assumptions regarding interest rates, and I should like to know what those assumptions are. I ask the deputy leader to obtain them and put them on the record of this house when he speaks to the inquiry standing in the name of Senator Olson.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, without undertaking to furnish them, I certainly think that the focus that Senator Murray is putting on the subject is reasonable. I shall attempt to obtain that information for him; in particular, what assumptions lay at the basis of any predictions relating to interest rates.

Senator Phillips: I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if he expects to receive the award at the six-and-five banquet next week for the reading he just gave.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, so far as I am aware, I have not been nominated for any award. I do not know that anyone in a position to make the nomination knew that I was going to make that speech. Perhaps after they have read it, I should enter the sweepstakes.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Frith, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING

Hon. Daniel Riley moved the second reading of Bill C-161, an act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2).

He said: Honourable senators, first I want to assure Senator Flynn that this is not the same speech as the one delivered in the other place on the introduction of the bill.

It is with a feeling of some satisfaction that I rise to speak in support of Bill C-161, an act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act. As honourable senators are aware, the Government of Canada has been very much concerned with the development of Canada's most precious asset in order to ensure that the growth and changing economic needs of this country are fully explored and met by a diversified and trained labour force. I speak, of course, of our young people—Canadian students.

I am sure that honourable senators will agree that if we are to meet this objective it is essential that quality education be accessible to all Canadians, not only to those who can devote themselves full-time to their studies, but also to the many others who need or want to upgrade their skills but are only able to do so on a part-time basis.

As all honourable senators know, the difficult economic conditions which we have had to face during the past while have taken their toll. Unemployment has affected all sectors. Many students have graduated without any job prospects, and from having spoken to many of them in New Brunswick I know the difficulties they are facing. It is, therefore, very important that assistance be provided to those former students who are unable to repay their Canada student loans.

I shall now indicate to honourable senators the three major concerns which are addressed in Bill C-161.

First, the present weekly loan limit for Canada student loans has not been changed since 1974, and in order to raise the level to one which more adequately reflects today's education costs, the weekly loan limit is to be increased under the provisions of this bill from $56.25 a week to $100 a week.

Secondly, in order to take into account the needs of the part-time population—which I have already referred to—Bill C-161 proposes to extend guaranteed loans to part-time students who will be pursuing courses at the post-secondary level, courses which are now accepted by designated institutions as credits towards a degree, diploma or certificate. Those loans will be granted on a demonstrated-need basis and will cover the cost of books, tuition, transportation, child care and miscellaneous allowances. I feel certain, honourable senators, that with this extended assistance to part-time students we can only add to the employability of many Canadians, and it is hoped that this will contribute to the work force more skilled and professional people.

I have also referred to the unemployment situation among our young graduates, particularly as it relates to their inability to repay their student loans. Under Bill C-161, a program of interest relief will be initiated to assist such individuals. Under that program, a borrower who is unemployed and who has a gross family income below a minimum level may apply to the Government of Canada to assume interest charges on outstanding loans for a period of up to 18 months. As you all know, this will be in addition to the six-month period of interest-free status granted to all students to complete their studies. The program of interest relief may also reduce defaults on Canada student loans because of the extended time period within which a borrower may repay his loan.

I would also like to mention one special provision in this bill. As you know, in addition to those who are unemployed there are many who are unable to repay their loans because of temporary illness, temporary or permanent disability. Clause 7.1(1) of the bill extends the interest relief program to those who are unable to repay their loans on account of temporary illness or disability.

Clause 8.1(1) provides for a waiver for those who are permanently disabled.

The Secretary of State, when announcing these proposals on March 18, indicated that consultations would be held with the provinces. I am pleased to report that such consultations have been held. The program of assistance provided in Bill C-161 has met with a full measure of provincial support. In addition to provincial support, these measures have also been well accepted by various student associations across Canada.

The objectives of the assistance program contained in this bill can only help meet the needs of Canadians. Therefore, I urge honourable senators to lend their full support to this essential piece of legislation.

I do not believe this bill was referred to committee in the other place, and I would suggest that we do not refer it to committee here because it is a very simple bill.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Be careful!

Senator Riley: It does nothing more than increase the benefits available to students who are applying for loans, and assist them in the repayment of loans if they are disabled or unemployed. Therefore, I ask that you support this bill.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-161, an act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2). I assure the mover of the bill, Senator Riley, that we in the opposition are in a position to co-operate in the passage of this legislation. In fact, he knows that we have been ready to do so ever since the minister announced his proposed changes outside of the House of Commons on March 18.

It has taken the government three months to introduce the bill, and our major concern is whether or not these changes will be in place for September 1983. I, as well as many other of my colleagues who represent university centres across Canada, have heard the concerns of admission officers, of students who are seeking to make future plans, of parents, families and others who are supporting students, and of those who are anxious to continue their education.

As we now know, and as the minister has been outlining before the other place, this legislation provides for changes to three major categories. First, guaranteed loans are being extended to include eligible part-time students. Secondly, an interest relief program for unemployed graduates will provide for the payment of interest charges on student loans for both full and part-time students for a period of up to 18 months. Thirdly, the weekly student loan limits, as was mentioned by the sponsor of the bill, will be increased from the current level of $56.25 to $100 a week.

I have some comments to make on these measures, but by way of general background to this legislation I would like first to take a brief look at the government's treatment of post-secondary education as a whole, and to look at these amendments in that context.

The Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, recently tabled Bill C-150, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, which enshrines the earlier announcement of his intention to limit to the six-and-five formula transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education support. The savings to the federal government, compared to what would have been paid out under existing legislation, will be $104 million in 1983-84 and $247 million in 1984-85. The two-year break in the normal escalation formula will result in additional savings in each subsequent year, since transfers will escalate from a lower base.

In the meantime, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Axworthy, has announced an extra $50 million for the 1983 Canada Summer Student Job Creation Program. Likewise, the Secretary of State said that the amendments we are discussing today would cost the federal treasury another $60 million in loan guarantees to the banks. I would like to know where the balance of the savings from putting the EPF transfers on six-and-five—approximately $240 million—are going. We know that these savings are not—and I repeat "are not"—being used to reduce the federal deficit. We are regularly asked to deal with bills requesting additional borrowing authority for the federal government. Now we hear from the Minister of Finance that the money is not being spent in any form on either post-secondary institutions or their students.

Once again, it would seem that in a policy area that is crucial to the development of the nation's most important resource—our youth—the government has no long-term direction. Many of us on this side have questioned various ministers in the government about this very troubling deficiency. We have noted that more and more people are choosing to remain in or to return to post-secondary institutions, because they cannot find work or because they need new skills in order to qualify for the few existing jobs. Yet, at the same time as enrolments are swelling, the federal government has decided to cut back its support of post-secondary education.

Honourable senators, what about the student who enters into a loan agreement at the given interest rate, much like someone who enters into an agreement for a mortgage at a high rate, only to see the prime rate fall, leaving him or her with an enormous repayment schedule? I see nothing in this bill that would provide some flexibility in the interest rate formula which is established by the federal government. However, I understand that negotiations between federal officials and the banks are being planned for later this summer. I want to encourage the Secretary of State to enter into those negotiations mindful of the current interest rates on repayments faced by students who already carry loans taken out when rates were extremely high. This bill, in its present form, offers them no relief. We look forward to a further amendment or announcement in that regard.

I look forward as well to hearing of some progress that can be communicated to students who are applying for assistance in the months ahead. I know that the Secretary of State is aware that applications for student assistance were up 23 per cent across the country in the last year alone.

The bill increases government spending at the federal level in the order of $60 million over the next two years. It amends the Canada Student Loans Act in three ways.

First, it increases the weekly loan limit from $56.25—which, if it were not so pitiful, would almost be laughable—to the grand sum of $100, which I suppose is intended to take the increased cost of living into account.

Second, it provides an increased relief program for unemployed graduates for an additional 18 months, bringing the total relief plan up to two years; and after six months it is renewable every three months.

Third, and perhaps most important, it guarantees loans to part-time students to cover tuition fees, books, learning materials, local transportation and related costs.

We recognize the necessity for all of these provisions and are prepared to support them.

The increase in the CSLP weekly loan ceiling from $56.25 to $100 barely meets the increase in inflation and, without the accompaniment of some form of grant, substantially increases the burden of debt on students from $1,800 per year in 1975 to $3,200 per year in 1983-84. A student who borrowed the maximum amount of $3,200 for four years and repaid it over a nine-and-a-half-year period, which is entirely within the law, at current interest rates, would have a total debt load of something in excess of $15,000. The student's heart is not bleeding with gratitude for that.

When will the federal government begin to take some responsibility for grant assistance to students? The provinces have been forced to introduce grants and other forms of non-repayable assistance to help students meet their financial needs and reduce their debt load. As a result, the federal share of student aid expenditures dropped from 50 per cent in 1965-66 to 26 per cent in 1980-81.

The minister must also surely review his own statements, having promised students again this year that he would be introducing a bursary program. Of course, to this point in time, neither the students nor parliamentarians have seen this bursary program. I would like to urge upon the minister, on behalf of my colleagues, and I suspect on behalf of honourable members in the other place, that he proceed with that bursary program as quickly as possible. It is absolutely essential.

I would like to turn to another aspect of what is before us, the interest relief plan. Federal student assistance has done more to benefit private lending institutions and collection agencies, through interest and default payments and collection charges, than it has to help the needy student. Over $7 million has been paid to collection agencies over the years 1980 to 1982. That is the amount of a 25 per cent collection charge on some $36 million collected. Defaults have steadily risen in the last two years from 11,000 in 1980-81 to 13,000 in 1981-82, and a startling 15,000 just in the first three months of 1982-83. I believe the government understands why. It is a natural consequence of existing economic conditions in this country.

Holding this false perception of the part-time student, it is no wonder that the government has failed to include part-time students in its interest relief program. Instead, the government, in this bill, is requiring repayment of part-time loans no more than two years after the loan is made, beginning payment one month after the loan is received, with interest accruing immediately and creating a more stringent means test than that in place for full-time students, such that the ability to repay seems a greater factor in determining loan eligibility than financial need.

Many part-time students are just that because of the increasingly prohibitive cost of obtaining a full-time university education. The costs incurred by part-time students are the same per course as for full-time students. A number of studies have demonstrated that part-time students tend to come from families whose parental income and educational attainment are lower than full-time students. They are part-time because they cannot afford to be full-time and cannot afford to draw on family resources to enable them to be full-time. Therefore, they should be treated in a different way from that in which they are being treated by this legislation.

The country is facing a crisis which is reflected in education and in economic conditions. The future of the country depends on our having a well-educated population, educated to the maximum of its ability, and being given every opportunity and encouragement to enlarge upon the capacity of each individual to absorb learning and to apply it. The future of the country socially depends to a great extent on the ability of the people to learn through the education system and other systems about how to socialize, to adapt to and to accommodate others in the way in which they go about their lives.

The country, even from the point of view of its diversity—given that it has a number of regions, each one quite different from the other—can only benefit from an educational system which will allow for the teaching of the differences which make us one rather than divide us. The future of the country rests on whether or not we are prepared to place the kind of emphasis on education at every level which will enable each Canadian to acquire the necessary learning skills so he can adapt to the changes, technological and social, which are taking place.

I urge the government, once and for all, to commit itself to developing a national policy on post-secondary education, a strategy based on the principles of equal opportunity and equal access. We are one of the few industrialized countries in the world which has not yet faced that particular challenge. Time is passing us by.

Honourable senators, we are prepared to have second and third reading of this bill today, if that is the pleasure of the government.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few comments on this legislation. I listened with interest to the good explanation that the mover made, and I listened with interest to the contribution that Senator Bélisle has just made, noting his references to the established programs financing legislation and to Bill C-150, which will come before us in due course. I would be tempted to enter into an argument with Senator Bélisle now, but I think it would be more appropriate to reserve that until Bill C-150 is before us. Suffice it to say that I think Senator Bélisle's remarks in relation to the established programs financing legislation and its proposed changes are simplistic in the extreme.

As for the bill before us now, in my view, the extension of assistance to part-time students is extremely important and I welcome this change in the legislation. I must also say that, when you consider that the maximum available for part-time students, under this legislation, may be as much as $2,500 per year, this seems to me to be adequate, and I am sure it will be adequate in all but a very few exceptional cases.

By the same token, honourable senators, I think that the increase of the weekly limit for full-time students from $56, or thereabouts, to $100 ought also to be adequate in most cases. Most students can find some other resources. As Senator Bélisle pointed out, this provision means that a student could borrow up to $3,200 per year, taking the average university year to be 32 weeks long. If this were done for three years, or, in some cases, four, and if interest were added to the amount, upon graduation the student would find himself having incurred a reasonably large debt. There are a lot of students today who are unhappy about this and who are reluctant to borrow to the extreme because of the debt they will incur and have to repay on graduation, after the usual six months' delay. In this regard, I must say that I welcome the possibility of an additional 18 months' time extension of the repayment period.

I am aware that a good many of the provinces have some kind of bursary or grant program that will operate in conjunction with this legislation. I think it is a pity that these programs vary as much as they do from province to province. I can agree with Senator Bélisle's suggestion, in the hope that the federal government might very well enter the field of grant or bursary assistance and try to provide a policy that will be more or less uniform across Canada.

I should remind Senator Bélisle that a great many of our colleagues in this country, particularly in the province of Quebec, are reluctant to allow the federal government to participate in policy making insofar as education—even post-secondary education—is concerned. While I think there are a great many Canadians today who would welcome the federal government's entering into the field of post-secondary education in order to secure more uniform standards and arrangements all across Canada, I am not sure that it is practically feasible for us to attempt to do so at the present time.

I may point out to honourable senators that I advocated this kind of participation by the federal government over the whole period of my university presidency. I have never agreed that the federal government does not have the right to participate directly in the financing of post-secondary education. Whereas I had very little support from most of my colleagues across Canada when I spoke this way 15 years ago, there is now a great deal more support for that view in Canada.

At any rate, honourable senators, I think I have said what I need to say about this bill. It is good legislation. I welcome the inclusion of part-time students, the increase of the weekly amount that full-time students may borrow, and the interest relief provisions for the unemployed and for those who may be physically impaired or ill. I support this legislation with enthusiasm.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, I was going to make reference to my honourable colleague or my learned colleague, but he, having used the word "simplistic," should perhaps not be qualified as a "learned" senator. Perhaps he feels that, because he has some knowledge of one university, he can speak for others across this country. We have been listening to some of his speeches for years and years. At times I had the inclination to rise and say, "Which Bible has he been reading?" It is obvious, however, that I have had the charity never to use the word "simplistic" in reference to him.

Maybe it is because he has greyer hair than I do or because he probably went to university longer than I did, I do not know; I will only say this with respect to education: I know that education is an exclusive right of the provinces. The senator made reference to the province of Quebec. I am not from Quebec; I am from Ontario. My friend will recall that in 1957 and in 1958, the then Prime Minister, after receiving—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I take it that Senator Bélisle has risen on a point of privilege or a point of order.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps he will speak tomorrow on third reading.

Senator Frith: I think, however, that he has already spoken once on second reading of this bill. Having made this point, and since we are about to move third reading of this bill tomorrow, he might want to raise these matters at that time, when he can speak once more to the bill.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, if the Deputy Leader of the Government feels that only some of us have the right to speak two, three or ten times on a bill, I am willing to bow to his wish and adjourn the debate on second reading.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, this debate relates to Bill C-150. That is why I said that I thought it should more properly take place when that bill is debated.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, let us be clear. No one is entitled to any more rights than any one else. I merely called for order, after waiting a fair while to do so, to point out that none of us is entitled to speak more than once on second or third reading of a bill without permission of the Senate. I did not want to cut the honourable senator off.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Senator Bélisle rose on a question of privilege. He did not mention that, but it was a question of privilege.

Senator Frith: In fairness, Senator Asselin, I began by asking: "Are we to assume that Senator Bélisle is rising on a point of privilege?" I was making my best effort not to cut Senator Bélisle off but to give him an opportunity to continue. Furthermore, assuming that the honourable senator did rise on a point of order, I was suggesting that he might want to speak on third reading, at which time he could also make the point. I was trying to be helpful, not to be inhibitive.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned there is one point that I want to raise, and I think it is more appropriate to do so at this time than on third reading.

I want to express my concern—which I have expressed before, when there was general discussion of the Canada Student Loans Act—at the rate of default in payment. The figures have not been given to us. I drew to the attention of the Senate a study conducted by what I believe was a prominent Toronto newspaper, in which loans in default were analyzed. It was found that a great many of the loans in default were those of individuals of rather high income-earning ability—people in the professions who somehow just seemed to ignore the fact that they owed money to the government and did not repay their loans. The question at that time was: What is the government doing about collecting loans from people who are fully capable of repaying them? I am not talking about those who are unemployed, disabled or ill. I am talking about people who are fully able to repay these loans.

I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill to cogitate on this matter. I am still interested in the amount of such monies that is outstanding, the length of time that the loans have been in default and the action the government has taken to collect those loans given legitimately to people who are well able to repay them. I hope that at the next sitting we will have that information.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak to this bill, but several points have been raised which prompt me to make a very brief intervention. When Senator Hicks and, subsequently, Senator Bélisle were speaking, I was reminded of what is perhaps the most famous dictum on education that has ever been delivered. In an episode in one of the works of Plato, Socrates says this: Let us not quarrel in the name of education. Let us agree on two things. First, it is a good thing and a necessary thing. Secondly, it is the duty of every man to work for education as long as he shall live.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I have to remind honourable senators that if Senator Riley speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I listened with interest to the remarks made by Senators Bélisle, Hicks, Frith, Buckwold and Rowe. Some of the things mentioned by those honourable senators have occurred to me from time to time as well.

I do not know much about the proposed bursary program for secondary education, but I would point out that there is no time limit on this program for the $100 per week. If a student gets too deeply involved, there is a monitoring system, as honourable senators probably know, whereby the student's financial state is reviewed from time to time and, if he is getting too deeply into debt, efforts are made to assist him in getting out of his financial difficulties.

Senator Bélisle mentioned collection agencies. That has always been a great cause of concern to me, because I hear from many students who get into difficulties. What happens is that the bank calls a loan; the Department of Justice is advised and they send a letter of demand to the student; if they do not get any response or co-operation it is put out by tender to a collection agency, and the collection agency then puts the heat on the student. I do not think it is the best method of collecting the money, but in what other way can they proceed to collect the money?

Senator Buckwold mentioned defaults. There is a steady rate of default, unquestionably. However, I would point out that if a student is earning money and is able to afford it, he is pursued, first, by the Department of Justice; and then, if he does not co-operate by making payments in full or in part, it is put into the hands of a collection agency, which can proceed right to a writ of execution. I know this has happened, because I have such cases in my files where judgments have been obtained and writs of execution issued. If anybody is earning a lot of money, has assets and should be paying, I am sure that this is the only possible system that can be used.

Senator Buckwold: Are any figures available?

Senator Riley: I do not have figures. I have seen them but I do not recall them, and I do not want to test my memory under these circumstances.

Senator Asselin: I hope the honourable senator will not mention names.

Senator Riley: No, not at all.

Senator Buckwold: The senator will not be named.

Senator Frith: The list would start with the A's anyway.

Senator Flynn: It was a long time ago.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I ask that the bill now receive second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Senator Flynn: Next sitting. We have to give Senator Bélisle a chance to speak.

Senator Asselin: I want to speak too.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

MOTION RE SUSPENSION OF RECORDING OF DAILY ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator McElman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the practice of recording the daily attendance of Senators in the Senate be suspended effective April 14, 1981, and remain suspended until the beginning of a new session of the 32nd Parliament, or the first session of the next succeeding Parliament, whichever may first occur.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to make a comment on the order for resumption of the debate on the motion of Senator McElman, which stands in my name on the order paper. I do not intend to speak on it this week, and therefore would be glad to yield to any other honourable senator who wishes to do so.

Order stands.

CANAGREX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. C. B. Sherwood, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, presented the following report:

June 22, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture to which was referred Bill C-85, "An Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada" has in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, June 21, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

C. B. Sherwood

Deputy Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Has the sponsor anything to say?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will be very brief. I gave in very objective terms—

Senator Flynn: You want a debate, for sure.

Senator Olson: —an outline of the purposes of the bill, and, following a number of interventions, certain questions were raised. I then made a somewhat more vigorous defence of the importance and appropriateness of this bill, and I take it that I completely satisfied all the questions that were raised. Therefore, I hope that honourable senators will give this bill third reading at this time.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure that the sponsor of this bill would expect me to observe that objectivity lies in the eye of the beholder—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): And increases with the distance from the problem, as Galsworthy said.

Senator Roblin: I am not so sure about that. All I know is that I am not prepared to subscribe to the universal approval of this bill as my honourable friend solicits. I am here to move an amendment dealing with one of the objectionable aspects of this piece of legislation.

The Canagrex bill has been before Parliament for, lo, these many months, and there cannot be many members of this house who are not acquainted with its general provisions.

I rather regret that, owing to the circumstances, it was not possible for all members of this chamber to attend the meetings of the Senate Committee on Agriculture to which the bill was consigned for review and discussion.

That committee held quite a number of meetings in its pre-study of the bill before it reached the chamber, and held another meeting last evening at which the Minister of Agriculture gave a stellar performance. One has to admit that he is one of the most engaging politicians in the House of Commons. Not only can he talk better than I ad nauseam on subjects which interest him, but he brings to them a variety of examples, quotations, inferences and references which wins over anybody except somebody as hardshelled as I happen to be with respect to this matter.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): He always speaks very highly of you.

Senator Roblin: Yes, he speaks highly of me, but in such a way that I am not sure that he really means it in the sense I would hope he would. In any event, he and I do not agree but get along famously.

He has the wonderful gift—and it is a gift for a politician—of being able to talk on a subject without saying very much about it, and can bring into the discussion all kinds of extraneous matters which have nothing to do with the subject before the committee.

Senator Frith: That is why you get along so well.

Senator Roblin: There may be a point there, but I am not going to dwell on it too long.

As I say, the Minister of Agriculture gave a stellar performance last evening, and I must pay my respects to him for his being a dedicated advocate of his point of view.

If honourable senators had attended only that committee meeting, they would have been deprived of hearing the opinions of many others who do not share the view of the minister.

In fact, I think it is fair to say, if one wants to count noses—and that is one way of doing things in a democratic society—that more people have doubts about the wisdom of this legislation than have the conviction that it is the proper thing for this Parliament to enact. I think there are good reasons for that.

There are certain aspects of this bill which stimulate no controversy, to the extent that they are aimed at producing a concentration on developing agricultural exports for Canada, and at capturing a larger share of the world market, particularly for specialized crops. I think that is a main thrust of this legislation. One has to say that is a good thing.

The legislation ignores the fact—as does the minister—that at the present time this government, and let us give them credit for it, does many things which tend to that end. There are a number of different programs in the various departments which deal with the promotion of agricultural products, with the financing of exports, with the financing of agricultural trade shows and endeavours, with the funding of agriculture representatives in our embassies around the world, and all that kind of thing which was carefully considered by the committee, or at least presented to the committee, which I referred to on another occasion. The minister's view, of course, is that by bringing these things together under one head something better will be done.

One has to hope so, and to that extent I suppose there is nothing to do but trust him. However, he did not give me any feeling that he was going to do something about the activities of those three or four other departments which work in this field, so as to cut down on their contributions to the problem so that his concentration would not simply add to the bureaucratic effort that is being put forward. One has to wonder about the whole question of a special crown corporation. Will it, in fact, be effective in this field, and will it effect those economies of administration which one could foresee as a possible result of this piece of legislation?

I am not prepared to oppose the bill on those grounds alone. If those were the main issues involved, as far as I am concerned, one would have to say, "Well, maybe we should give it a try."

It is perfectly true that there were 37 witnesses who appeared before the committee who thought that it should not be given a try, but one has to wonder what their concerns were.

If one were to pinpoint the problems with this piece of legislation, one would dwell on the point I have already mentioned in this chamber, which many other members of this chamber have also mentioned, and that has to do with the buying and selling function incorporated in the bill. In my opinion, most of the aims of this bill could have been met without the power to buy and sell. That power has created all the problems. It happens to be a characteristic of government or, at least, of the bureaucracy, that they put everything they can think of into most bills, whether or not they really intend to use it all, and we find that in the end they really do. If you give people any power, regardless of what they say about it when you give it to them, the ultimate result is that they use it.

[Senator Roblin.]

Those people in the agricultural communities in Canada who are concerned that the government will, indeed, use the powers contained in this bill, I think, are on sound ground because, it seems to me, undoubtedly they will.

● (1410)

It is to that one point, the buying and selling function that is incorporated in this legislation, that I wish to direct the attention of the Senate. It is in that regard that we might well consider modifying this bill so that it is more in tune with the general tenor of the representations made to the committee, and more in tune with that which I, for one, regard to be the more effective areas in which government can act.

In my province of Manitoba some of the major agricultural interests affected by this bill did not like this question of buy-sell.

I should like to refer to the Manitoba Canola Growers Association. What is canola? Canola is only the most dramatic example of progress and development in the agricultural industry that I can think of. It is the biggest change that has been made in the production of the Canadian agricultural economy and has met with widespread markets both at home and abroad. The development of the canola industry in the past four or five years has been dramatic, as every westerner knows, and now some people in Ontario are going to know it as well because I believe they now have a canola grinding mill. The sale of canola has been managed without any serious input on the part of government. No one can say that the private canola trade has been negligent or ineffective; indeed, they have increased the sale of that product in a remarkable way. In fact, as I mentioned in the chamber on the last occasion I touched on this matter, in connection with these special crops the increase that the private trade had realized over the past six years boiled down to 26 per cent per annum. You tell me any other activity of Canadian export development that has reached a level of 26 per cent per annum for the past six years, and I will take my hat off. That seems to me to be a remarkable achievement. It bears on the reason why the Manitoba Canola Growers Association just wonder whether this bill is altogether a good idea when it comes to buying and selling. They are not alone.

The Manitoba Cattle Producers Association, which is a significant body in our province, has had some concerns about the bill, as well as the Manitoba Farm Bureau which encompasses many agricultural interests within the province. One might have been inclined to say it was a spokesman for Manitoba agriculture, although the pools in Manitoba sometimes do not agree with it in every respect. Be that as it may, it is an important body and, in my province, is worthy of being considered.

Those three organizations all registered their objections to this bill, and I think I am correct in telling you that the main cause of their concern was this buy-sell function which is incorporated in the legislation.

There is a list of approximately 37 witnesses, by far the majority, perhaps two-to-one or three-to-two—I would not like to be held to the number, but a substantial majority had some concern about the bill. This included four provincial governments—the Governments of Alberta, New Brunswick, Ontario and Saskatchewan. That seems to me to present some real problems for this chamber. The bill may have, like the curate's egg, some good parts in it, but it obviously has some bad parts in it, otherwise these people would not have presented their case as vehemently as they did. I have only mentioned a few of those who appeared before the committee.

While I moved an amendment to this bill in committee, I did not get very far with it. I think three or four members of the committee voted in favour of making an amendment to this bill to deal with the question of buy-sell. Nevertheless, I feel it is sufficiently important to bring this issue before the Senate, with a request—

Hon. Martial Asselin: That is why they want to abolish the Senate; it is too partisan.

Senator Roblin: Senator Asselin says that the Senate is too partisan. That is true. The vote in the committee was partisan, which is curious because oftentimes in the Senate we do a little better than that.

Senator Frith: Perhaps coincidentally.

Senator Roblin: Allow me to call it curious, because I know that on some other occasions in Senate committees we are able to develop a less partisan attitude to matters. However, considering the person under whose auspices the bill comes to us, namely, the Honourable Minister of Agriculture, I am not surprised that considerable interest was developed on the part of government supporters in the committee to support it. Certainly I agree that the Leader of the Government gave a rousing defence of the policy the other day, and I must say I thought it was one of his better efforts, so I would like to offer my felicitations to him on his dedication to the issue involved.

I have said enough. Everybody knows this issue. We know what the problem is. It merely remains to test the opinion of the Senate as to what we ought to do.

My proposal is that we delete clause 14(1)(a) of the bill. That is the first clause which deals with the question of the powers of buying and selling that it is sought to confer upon this new crown corporation. If this amendment carries, there are subsequent amendments that ought to be made. If it does not carry, we shall have tested the opinion of the Senate, shall know what it is and shall be guided accordingly.

Senator Frith: Very sensible.

Senator Roblin: I hope, honourable senators, you will allow me to propose this amendment, seconded by my colleague, Senator Murray, the latest recruit to the agricultural interest in the Conservative caucus. He did so well in his initial endeavour the other day that I at once recruited him to the ranks.

Hon. C. William Doody: How is he on Granola?

Senator Roblin: He thinks it's great; he has it for breakfast every morning. He has told me that, and I am sure it is the fact.

To get back to the subject at hand, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, I move:

> That the bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended in clause 14 by striking out paragraph 1(a) at lines 24 to 27 inclusive at page 9 and by relettering the remaining paragraphs accordingly.

The effect of this amendment is to commence the process of deleting the powers of buying and selling from this bill. If it passes, we will see what the next move is.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will be very brief.

Senator Flynn: Don't repeat the speech you made before.

Senator Olson: I am just getting to that. Senator Roblin began his speech this afternoon by saying that the point he was about to make he had made in his speech the other day. That is exactly right. That was the way I interpreted what he had to say, that his apprehensions about, or his objections to, the bill centred around clause 14(1)(a).

Senator Roblin: I cherished the hope that the committee would take me off the horn of my dilemma.

Senator Olson: What I am surprised at is that the speech I made in response did not persuade him that it was an essential part of the bill.

Senator Flynn: It would have been a surprise had it been the other way.

Senator Olson: Indeed, he referred to, I was going to say, the admonition or defence of that paragraph made by the Minister of Agriculture in committee, and indicated that he was impressed, at least, by the performance of the Minister of Agriculture in doing it in that way and relating situations and prospects of international sales that at some times would require Canagrex to have that authority.

Senator Roblin appears to remain unconvinced. I believe I answered him the other day. The Minister of Agriculture added to it in committee, and while I respect the honourable senator's right to move an amendment to test the view of the Senate, I believe I could not add more today to what was said in both of those speeches. I regret that the honourable senator was not persuaded by the validity of those admonitions.

Senator Flynn: If that is all you have to say, why did you rise in the first place?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I rise in the most difficult of circumstances for a politician.

Senator Flynn: You are used to it.

Senator Molgat: As a politician who has been a long-time believer in the party system, and still is—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Molgat: —I rise to say that on this occasion I find myself in the unusual situation of having to support Senator Roblin.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Molgat: I find myself in an unusual situation, because I spent almost 10 years across the aisle from Senator Roblin when he was Premier of Manitoba and I was Leader of the Opposition, and during that time I found I had to oppose almost all of what he proposed. However, I suppose those are the circumstances that make the party system work.

On this occasion I find, as a regional representative, that I must support the proposition he has put before us. I do so under difficult circumstances because I shall soon be celebrating 30 years in elective office and in this house, and for all of those years I have been a firm, strict, loyal party man. That is how our system works, but one wonders whether we should not have another look at that system as it applies to this chamber.

Recently, thanks to the confidence placed in me by this chamber and by members of the committee, I was elected chairman of a committee established to study Senate reform, and I suppose, in my small way, this is my first step in that direction. I told the whip, and I must say that he did not put undue pressure upon me. He imposed the normal pressure, which I quite understand, having occupied a similar position for some time.

Returning to the subject of Canagrex, I find that there is a wide difference of opinion on a regional basis. During the pre-study undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture I seriously attempted to find some compromise, to see whether we could somehow accommodate the interests of those who legitimately believe that Canagrex needs all the powers set out in this bill and the interests of those who want to see Canada in the forefront of agricultural exports, which is where we should be; to see whether there could be some balance between those views. I recognize the legitimate interests of those who are pushing for Canagrex. Basically, they are the agricultural producers in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. So far as I can see, that is where the great push came from, and I respect their problems and needs.

It seemed to me that we could find some accommodation on a regional basis. After all, the Canadian Wheat Board, which, in my view, has done a great job for western Canada, and which I support, is a regional structure. It does not apply across the country and there are clear geographical limits. As a compromise, I suggested that we find some way of making Canagrex operate in those regions that wanted it, and not in those regions where there were reservations. That suggestion was not acceptable. I proposed that Canagrex operate on a commodity basis, because there are problems with specific commodities. For example, the pulse growers and tobacco growers may have specific needs, and those needs ought to be met. But that suggestion did not reach a responsive ear.

So we find that Canagrex is being imposed throughout the country even though there are reservations, and serious ones, in certain regions, and my own region is one of those that has reservations. I am not suggesting that everybody in my region is opposed to the powers of Canagrex, but there are many who have reservations. I think that, as national bodies, the government and this chamber ought to recognize those reservations.

Perhaps I am more conscious of the problems, having sat for the past few weeks listening to arguments about the need for recognition of regional differences and the need for regional representation. One might ask, "Why didn't you do that 10 years ago?" and I accept that criticism. The situation is here before us now. So, with all the reservations that I have indicated and all the difficulties that the bill presents, I propose to support the amendment moved by Senator Roblin.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, my few words will probably reflect the opposite to what we have just heard from Senator Molgat. I, too, am concerned about my responsibilities to my region, and also my party affiliations, but, unlike Senator Molgat, I have brought down the wrath of my leader by voting against the government.

Hon. Jack Marshall: You are a better man.

Senator Flynn: I don't remember.

Senator Asselin: We should count the occasions.

Senator Buckwold: When I first read the Canagrex bill, I felt very much like Senator Molgat feels now. I read the committee reports, and I indicated in some of the discussions that I had serious reservations about some parts of the bill. However, as a regional representative, I am here to say that I can honestly and with a clear conscience support this bill, and not because I am here as a stalwart of the party.

I listened with interest to the explanation given by the Leader of the Government. I have discussed this matter with certain interested parties back home. I have not received one single representation from the Government of Saskatchewan—though it presented a brief to the committee against this bill—or one letter from concerned individuals in the agricultural scene in my province. I have had some discussions with individuals and companies from Manitoba. Manitoba seems to be very much engrossed in this particular bill.

Honourable senators, from the point of view of a regional representative, I can tell you that I have come around to thinking that it would be a good thing if Canagrex is established and given an opportunity to show what it can do. Certainly, we should not be against anything that will improve the export potential and opportunities of our agricultural industry. I now feel that this bill could—and I emphasize "could"—be a step in the right direction. I am prepared to support it.

● (1430)

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I would like to record my support for the amendment that has been proposed by Senator Roblin. I am extremely disappointed that the committee, in its deliberations on this bill, apparently decided against attaching any significant weight to the wide difference of opinion that exists across the country, as was illustrated by the opinions expressed by members of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

As has been pointed out by Senator Buckwold, the situation is different in different regions of the country. In my own case, I have received a significant number of representations from interested agricultural groups in Alberta, the majority of whom have expressed not only deep concern about but, in some cases, very strong opposition to the legislation. It would be fair to say, however, that the majority have not opposed the legislation outright but have expressed grave concern, primarily on the point outlined by Senator Roblin's amendment.

There seems to be, however, a fairly general agreement on the concept of a federal agency that would facilitate and encourage greater activity in the export of agricultural products. It is when you get into this area of processing, buying and selling that the duplication of existing facilities in the private sector becomes important to many of these groups. Concern has also been expressed about the greater degree of government intervention that there would be. Therefore, there are many serious reservations as to the wisdom of this legislation.

It is not surprising that the Minister of Agriculture has argued in favour of this measure and is insisting that Canagrex be given all these powers. He has made it clear on many occasions that he is an interventionist. He believes that government intervention is a solution to most of the problems faced by the economy, including those in the field of agriculture. Holding that philosophy, it is quite understandable that he favours ever-increasing government intervention in this area.

I reiterate the concern I expressed yesterday. If we are going to try out this proposed scheme—and there is no question that it is going to be tried out—it would be extremely unfortunate if we created further divisions within the agricultural community itself by insisting on putting into the legislation a power for which no case has been made, but which is necessary if the corporation is to carry out its prime purpose.

For these reasons, I whole-heartedly support Senator Roblin's amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, that this bill be read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be amended in clause 14 by striking out paragraph (1)(a) at lines 24 to 27 inclusive at page 9 and by relettering the remaining paragraphs accordingly.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

• (1440)

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Motion in amendment of Senator Roblin resolved in the negative on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, June 27, 1983, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government what the business of the Senate will be for next week? I know I always ask tough questions.

• (1450)

[English]

But you can't blame a guy for trying.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): We shall be busy next week.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we have just dealt with the first order, relating to Bill C-85. We hope to have third reading of some of the other bills—namely, Bills C-161, C-147 and C-148—today, although it may be that Bill C-147 will receive third reading next week. That would be one item for next week, and third reading of the supply bill. It is possible that legislation will be coming from the other place.

I have made inquiries about what the Leader of the Opposition calls the "must" list, but, as honourable senators will understand, the party that now forms the government never operates on the basis of "must" or force. Representing the principles of hope, it has a "hope" list but not a "must" list. Of course, the Crow is high on the "hope" list.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You call that hope?

Senator Frith: Among the other bills that are before the other place for debate, and that the government has hopes for, are: the government organization bill; the sports pool bill; certain amendments to the Federal Court Act; regional economic expansion; perhaps a resolution on aboriginal rights; and perhaps a resolution on property rights.

Senator Flynn: Did you say "property rights"?

Senator Frith: Yes, I did. Those are not on the "must" list, but they are on the "hope" list.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I am very surprised to hear reference to the resolution on property rights because I thought the leader told us that it was not possible, under the rules applicable to the House of Commons, to bring in that resolution during the present session.

At one point I came close to making an offer to the Leader of the Government to deal with it in this house to avoid that difficulty. Do I understand that he has found a way around the rules applicable to the other place in order to bring in that resolution?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have no specific information on a solution to the rules problem, but it remains, despite any procedural difficulties, on the government's "hope" list.

Senator Flynn: I still make my offer to the government side to commence the debate here, and I do not think the rules would apply were we to send a message to the other place that the Senate is in favour of including property rights in the Constitution.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition because I had forgotten that he had made that offer.

Senator Flynn: I am not saying that. I was asking—

Senator Frith: In any event, he has renewed his offer and has reminded me of it, and I will pass that along.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, may I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if he can clarify the present status of the Crow legislation? We heard a news report last evening that the government had agreed to refer that bill to committee for further study, which I assume would take place in the summer months. If that is the case, the bill will not be coming before us next week because it will not be passed by the House of Commons before the summer adjournment. Does he have any information on that?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I believe there is a chance that the procedural device being used by the New Democratic Party in the other place can be surmounted in such a way as to get the Crow bill before committee; in other words, to complete second reading and get it to the stage where the committee is at least close to submitting a report. If that is all that is attained, then, as Senator Manning quite properly pointed out, the committee conceivably could meet during the summer, in which case we would not receive the bill before the summer adjournment. It is to be hoped that the other place will complete second reading later this week, if not today.

Senator Flynn: Will the bill be referred to committee?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Hon. Martial Asselin: Some time ago, I asked the Minister of State responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport to make a statement on the use of French in his Department. He told us that he would do so in a matter of days or weeks. That was a while ago and, in fact, I think this request was made three weeks ago. Does the Minister intend to make his statement before the end of the session?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that Senator Asselin has asked that question, because I am prepared to make a statement this afternoon on the subject.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Good timing!

Senator Perrault: It is with a great deal of pleasure that I am able to announce to honourable senators that the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch has been working actively towards achieving full compliance with the official languages mandate.

In this regard a formal official languages plan has been submitted to the Treasury Board Secretariat where Treasury Board ministers are undertaking a review of all 1983-84 departmental plans. My officials have been working in close collaboration and co-operation with the Department of National Health and Welfare in preparing what we feel is a most positive and challenging plan. I should like to emphasize that we are fully committed to this plan, and we trust that, following Treasury Board approval, concrete results will become evident.

The Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch will be working closely with the National Sport and Recreation Centre and the national sport governing bodies which, as honourable senators know full well, are the delivery agents for amateur sports and fitness programs at the national level. These individual associations are autonomous and retain their complete independence under volunteer boards of directors elected by their membership. Honourable senators will appreciate the spirit of collaboration and co-operation which must exist between the government and non-government sectors if this plan is to be implemented successfully.

Fitness and Amateur Sport achieves its objectives through close collaboration with the voluntary sector. Without the millions of hours of voluntary work provided by thousands of Canadians in all of the provinces, it is unlikely that this country would be in a position today to speak of sports excellence and to speak of thriving fitness and participation levels—and they do exist in every part of Canada today. National voluntary sport and recreation associations are among this country's most valuable assets. The dedication and energy of their members from every province and territory defy description. However, they are by definition, associations of volunteers who give of their time and skills because they believe in the value of fitness and sport in this country.

[Translation]

Our Official Languages Program contains provisions that will help these associations to conform to the spirit of the Official Languages Act. However, we must not forget that these associations do not come under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch and are therefore not subject to the same rules of compliance as the branch itself. Fitness and Amateur Sport will be starting an official languages program to help associations design and implement their program to improve their capacity for providing service to all Canadians in the language of their choice. The branch will provide follow-up, and as far as its modest resources allow, will provide tools and mechanisms that will make it possible to achieve these objectives. It will be up to volunteers to make this part of the program a success. Fitness and Amateur Sport will give them every possible encouragement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

● (1500)

[English]

Senator Perrault: Not only have my officials drafted a useful and credible plan, but in the course of its preparation they have met with representatives of the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec and Le Regroupement des organismes nationaux du loisir du Québec and have obtained their support for our plan. I am very pleased to state that. We have had very close working sessions with both organizations, and they support the plan that we have submitted to Treasury Board. Once this plan has received Treasury Board approval—and I am confident that it will receive the necessary degree of support—I will gladly table this document in the Senate, and I look forward to receiving constructive feedback from all honourable senators, because I know there is a deep interest in it on both sides of the chamber.

Following this, I should be only too happy to discuss it further and to answer questions in committee or elsewhere as the occasion presents itself. I trust my honourable colleagues share in our enthusiasm, and I anticipate a positive outcome. Thank you very much. Merci beaucoup.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I raised this issue some time ago in this House because of representations I had received from the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec as well as from local and national organizations in every province about the fact that they and their members found it very difficult to communicate in French when dealing with amateur sport. As a result of those representations, I asked the Minister several times to remedy the situation. It has taken considerable time. The Official Languages Act was passed by Parliament 11 years ago, but its enforcement must still be monitored very closely. In my opinion, the Minister should not have to be reminded of his duty in this regard every time this Act of Parliament is broken. The Treasury Board has set the standards for the services that should be provided by every government department as required under the Official Languages Act, but a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages had to be set up to monitor the enforcement of an Act of Parliament passed 11 years ago. It is too bad we must harp on about this constantly, but it is very frustrating to always have to ask the Minister whether he monitors the manner in which this legislation, which is so important for the cultural and linguistic future of Canada, is being enforced. I congratulate the Minister on his efforts to make his Department realize the importance of this legislation. He has set an example himself as he now speaks very acceptable French, and he has told us that he has set up a committee to promote the training of francophones in his Department. Such a decision is very much to his credit. In any case, I shall get in touch with the people who have contacted me and ask them to take note of the promises just made by the Minister and to check later on whether his program has been implemented. Meanwhile, I congratulate him on his decision.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the same minister.

I also agree and I happen to know that Mrs. Séguin, the President of the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec, has made several representations to the minister. I had an opportunity to discuss this with the minister who told me that he had had many worthwhile meetings with Mrs. Séguin and that they had seen eye to eye on many issues.

I also appreciate the announcement he has just made today. However, he did say that the matter is now in the hands of Treasury Board, and that is what prompts my question.

If it is in the hands of Treasury Board, do you think it might be possible to make an announcement about these new requirements to the public and to the organizations concerned, with a view to providing better services for them? Second, would it be possible to make that announcement before the end of the month?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the announcement will be made just as soon as it receives Treasury Board approval. I think that, in deference to the Senate, the report should be brought to the Senate before the summer recess, if it is possible to do that. In any case, if in some functional fashion it were possible to implement certain recommendations during the summer period, I know that honourable senators would be supportive of doing that, even before we debate the full report. If there are improvements that can be made which do not violate parliamentary traditions, they should be implemented.

[Translation]

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, may I ask whether the minister and the clerks of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages have agreed on the date when he will appear before the committee?

[Senator Asselin.]

[English]

Senator Perrault: There has been discussion about establishing a mutually satisfactory date for my appearance before the committee, but I think it important to have the approved Treasury Board plan of action available for discussion at that committee meeting. It would serve a more useful purpose to bring the approved plan for discussion in the committee.

Senator Guay: Has the minister received any assurance from Treasury Board that they will do their utmost to see that they get it out before the end of next week? Have you had any discussions with them?

Senator Perrault: Treasury Board is anxious to deal with it. The Commissioner of Official Languages, as well, would like to see progress made. As I stated in the formal part of my remarks, the fact is that the branch deals with many volunteer organizations that are not by law subject to the same language regulations as the department itself, so implementation of language standards is a more complicated matter. The volunteer organizations must be encouraged to adopt a program of compliance with reasonable language regulations.

Senator Guay: In the statement that you referred to Treasury Board have the five points suggested by the Commissioner of Official Languages been taken into consideration?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I remind you again that, as a result of meetings the Fédération des Francophones hors Québec and le Regroupement des organismes nationaux du loisir du Québec both support the plan, and the points that have been raised in previous discussions are covered by that.

AIR CANADA

NEWFOUNDLAND-UNITED KINGDOM SERVICE—FARE STRUCTURE

Hon. Jack Marshall: I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. Would he himself investigate, or have the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs investigate, the discriminatory practices in the Air Canada fare structure, whereby their fare from Halifax to the U.K. is $599, yet Newfoundlanders flying to the U.K. from Gander, which is a much nearer point, have to pay $799—$200 more?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I should be glad to refer that question to the Minister of Transport, who can ask Air Canada for an explanation. I do not know whether Senator Marshall wants to put it on the record now—I suppose it can be found—but I think it would be helpful if he would refer to the class of fares he is talking about, because sometimes one can fly to the same destination on the same plane, even in the same seat, and pay a different fare.

Senator Marshall: Let me say, as background, that people from Newfoundland who are flying to the U.K. now have to fly back to Halifax and pay an extra $80 to get on that flight to save $110. It is purely discriminatory.

I raise this matter as a point of privilege because a choral group of approximately 14 students raised their own money to fly to England—they did not go to the government looking for help—on a student exchange program, and for Air Canada to say that the fare from Halifax is $200 less because there is more competition in Halifax is both flimsy and ridiculous.

The matter should be investigated and we should have the Chairman of Air Canada or his officials appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to explain their position. Newfoundlanders are being penalized, because the province is nearer to England than the other provinces are, and yet Newfoundlanders have to pay $200 more. It just does not make sense.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I was not inviting the honourable senator to make the argument, although—

Senator Marshall: Well, I had to make some argument.

Senator Olson: I am not objecting to it. I merely want to ensure that we are identifying the same fare, because there may be an excursion fare that he is comparing with the regular fare. All I require is background information to enable me to refer the matter to the Minister of Transport.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUBMISSION OF ANNUAL REPORTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government advise us with respect to the situation in which Canada Post Corporation finds itself regarding its annual reports? Canada Post Corporation is a crown corporation which, I believe, comes under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, which lays down certain rules as to when the corporation should report with respect to its financial operations and its capital budget. Can the Leader of the Government tell us when Canada Post Corporation is likely to comply with the law?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries this afternoon, and I hope to have an answer for the honourable senator at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Roblin: I can assist the Leader of the Government in his inquiry by telling him that, according to my information, Canada Post Corporation has not complied with the law with respect to the previous fiscal year, either with respect to its financial statement or its capital budget.

I would point out to the government leader that the same corporation has, I believe, until June 30—a significant date for us—to make its financial report and its capital report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983.

I might share with the Leader of the Government my concern that this is not the first crown corporation that has failed to abide by the law. Canadair is one notorious example with which we are familiar. My concern is that we have not been given the report of Canada Post Corporation, not solely because of its problems with respect to its internal accounting situation—which I believe is chaotic—because it does not really know how much money it has lost.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Or perhaps because it knows.

Senator Roblin: The Leader of the Opposition says, with his usual wisdom, that perhaps it is because it knows. One thing I am sure of is that we do not know.

In view of the fact that the report is now 15 months in arrears with respect to 1982, and there is a good possibility of the corporation's being in arrears for the current year, there is some concern in the minds of honourable senators, and I am sure in the minds of others, as to whether or not we are going to have this information.

It seems to me that it is not plausible for the government to allow a crown corporation to violate the statute, which says that the corporation must report. It has not reported and, in my view, some action should be taken about it.

Senator Olson: I appreciate the honourable senator's comments, which will be referred to the minister responsible.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—THIRD READING

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the third reading of Bill C-148, an act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—THIRD READING

Hon. Ernest G. Cottreau moved the third reading of Bill C-147, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1983-84

THIRD READING

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the third reading of Bill C-164, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—THIRD READING

Hon. Daniel Riley moved the third reading of Bill C-161, an act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2).

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, when I adjourned the debate yesterday afternoon, it was my desire to reply to Senator Hicks. Following the sitting, I spoke to the honourable senator, who informed me that he had used the word "simplistic" not in relation to my whole speech but only in relation to part of what I said in connection with the bill.

When I was asked to speak to the bill, I prepared my notes with care, in order that I would not use phraseology that might offend anyone. Having re-read my remarks, I do not feel that one word should be changed, because I believe that what I said was factual.

Honourable senators, thank you for giving me the opportunity to place these comments on the record.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 27, 1983, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 27, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

INCOME TAX

INTERPRETATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

On the tabling of:

Notice of Ways and Means Motion with respect to the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions, issued by the Minister of Finance, dated June 23, 1983.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I ask my honourable friend whether the report he has just tabled with respect to Canada's international conventions on income tax with other countries arises out of the budget, or is it something quite separate from that?

Senator Olson: I do not believe it arises out of the budget, although there may be some inplications from it. There are a number of such agreements and, according to the title and the explanation, the document is an attempt to interpret those agreements.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is that the best you can do?

Senator Olson: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition knows as well as I that when giving interpretations rarely do you get in all cases unanimous agreement on the interpretation.

Senator Flynn: That may be true with respect to some cases, but usually if you are competent you can get agreement.

Senator Olson: We on this side of the house have never questioned that.

SPORTS POOLS

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-95

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-95, intituled: An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Is it the intention of the Leader of the Government to refer the subject matter of this bill to committee? If so, it is logical to conclude that the government expects the bill to come to us before the end of this very long session. Can the leader give us the assurance that we will get this bill before Wednesday night because, as I understand it, the House of Commons has scheduled Thursday as a private members' day. So to receive Royal Assent, the bill would have to come to us, I would hope, before 10 p.m. on Wednesday.

Senator Olson: I cannot give complete, unequivocal or absolute assurance—

Senator Flynn: It would be the first time, anyway.

Senator Olson: —that the bill will come to the Senate before Wednesday. However, I have reason to believe that it will come either tomorrow or Wednesday. With that likelihood in mind it seems to me only reasonable to refer the subject matter of the bill to committee for pre-study so that when the bill does arrive honourable senators will already have had an opportunity to obtain from the responsible minister the background information that would enable them to deal with it expeditiously. That would be particularly true if the bill were to arrive late on Wednesday. The opportunity of looking at it in advance of its coming to us formally from the other place would be particularly helpful.

Senator Flynn: Is the leader then suggesting that the committee would begin its examination of the subject matter either tomorrow or Wednesday?

Senator Olson: Yes. I am suggesting that if we can pass this motion tonight the committee will be able to consider the bill some time tomorrow or Wednesday.

Senator Flynn: If we accede to your request what assurance do we have that it will not prove to have been unnecessary? After all, if we find at 11 o'clock tonight that the other place has not disposed of this bill might that not be an indication that the bill will not reach us before the proposed adjournment of the house on June 30? Of course, in that event, the Senate could come back the following week to deal with that bill in a proper fashion.

Senator Olson: That is certainly one possibility. I am glad the Leader of the Opposition has suggested that we could deal with some of these bills next week or the week after.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He did not say the week after; he said next week.

Senator Olson: Well, I suppose it would be whatever length of time it took to deal with them. In any event, there is a problem with respect to both Bill C-95 and Bill C-156, the act to provide assistance for industrial development. There are some profound reasons why these bills ought to be given Royal Assent prior to the adjournment of the House of Commons in accordance with the house order calling for adjournment at 6 o'clock on Thursday. That was why I hoped the Leader of the Opposition would want to give honourable senators every opportunity to study the subject matter of these bills in advance, thus enabling them to deal with them intelligently, even though it might be over a very short time, leading up to passage and Royal Assent before 6 o'clock on Thursday which, as I have said, is the deadline set by the house order of the other place.

Senator Flynn: Suppose the Senate wanted to deal with these bills intelligently, which I think is the word the Leader of the Government used, and for that purpose decided to come back next week—I know that Senator Steuart would have no objection to coming back next week to discharge his responsibilities fully—

An Hon. Senator: Perhaps we could do this on Sunday.

Senator Flynn: If we were to pass this or other bills next week, how would the House of Commons, complying with its order, be able to come back for royal assent? If we were to pass this or other bills next week, could the House of Commons come back for Royal Assent? Do their new rules allow them to return immediately, or would we have to wait until September 12, when they will normally be sitting, for Royal Assent?

• (2010)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I believe there is a provision in the house order whereby the Speaker can call the members back before September 12—

Senator Flynn: For Royal Assent only?

Senator Olson: Whether Royal Assent is spelled out in the language of the order or not, under normal circumstances the provision would cover a call back for any emergency that has to be dealt with before September 12. However, I expect that we could avoid that kind of emergency arising at all with respect to some of these bills, including Bill C-95, if we dispose of them before June 30.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I wonder if the Leader of the Government has been in touch with the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science in connection with Bill C-95, and whether the chairman is going to be in the chamber this week so that we can carry out the proposal he is putting forward? Is there a deputy chairman of that committee, or has the co-ordinator of committees been advised of what is going on?

Senator Olson: The answer to most of those questions is yes. I am not exactly sure when the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science intends to be here, but perhaps the committee should be prepared to have a meeting reasonably soon, either tomorrow or Wednesday, so that the minister can give a detailed explanation of the bill. I have not, however, discussed that with the chairman of the committee today.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps you should have inquired of him before asking leave to proceed, in order to make sure that you are not asking the Senate to give you leave for nothing. If the committee is going to be given permission to begin the study of the subject matter of this bill tomorrow, it should indeed be able to proceed tomorrow, otherwise we can deal with this motion tomorrow.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, what we are asking for is authorization for the committee to do that study. As I am sure the Leader of the Opposition knows and as has happened so many times in the past, all of these details will be worked out in the normal way with the chairman co-ordinating the activities of committees.

Senator Flynn: The point is that you are asking for something that is not normal. That is why I say that you should be able to tell this chamber that you have arranged in advance for the study to begin tomorrow. However, I suppose, we have to have faith, as usual.

I have an additional question for the Leader of the Government. Have we any assurance that the minister will be in attendance before the committee? He is not here tonight.

Senator Olson: I can give assurance that, whenever the committee can make arrangements—

Senator Flynn: I mean tomorrow.

Senator Olson: I give assurance that soon as the committee can arrange a meeting the minister will be there to make an opening statement to the committee. I cannot, however, be sure when that will be.

Senator Flynn: Will he be there to reply to questions, as well as for the opening statement?

• (2015)

Senator Olson: Yes, I can give that assurance, too.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: I do not have the impression that this Bill will involve a major and thorough study in committee. The purpose of the Bill is simply to establish the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation and a board of directors composed of a Chairman, several Vice-Chairmen and not more than fifteen other members. It will be interesting to know the qualifications of the individuals who will be appointed. When the Minister appears before the committee, will he be submitting a list of these appointments?

[English]

Senator Olson: I cannot give that assurance to you this evening, but I think that that would be a proper question to put to the minister responsible, the Honourable Senator Perrault, as soon as the committee meets.

Senator Asselin: Could I ask the minister to appear before the committee with a list of those who have agreed to sit on the council of the society?

Senator Olson: I will see that that question is conveyed to the minister so that, whether or not he has a list prepared, he will be able to give an acceptable answer to the question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, while on the subject of the pre-study of bills, the information I have is that, in addition to the bill we have just been speaking about, Bill C-95, an act to provide for government operated pool systems, there is a distinct possibility that we will receive from the other place the following legislation: Bill C-119, an act respecting the repeal of certain statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary. That is not the usual kind of bill relating to miscellaneous statute amendments, which cleans up typographical and other small errors. Bill C-119 cleans up some 50- or 60-year old statutes that are no longer in effect. Bill C-152, relating to the organization of the Government of Canada—

Hon. C. William Doody: That is overdue.

Senator Frith: —and Bill C-159, respecting the Tax Court of Canada and the Judges Act. As I understand it, that bill may be split into two parts. It increases the number of judges and it relates to the Tax Court of Canada. That legislation has not been introduced in the split form, but I am warning honourable senators that we may very well receive two bills, one dealing with the increase of the number of judges and one dealing with the Tax Court of Canada.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: What does the organization bill deal with?

Senator Frith: With the re-organization of government departments.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): And the appointment of parliamentary secretaries for the Senate.

Senator Frith: It is my opinion that that bill is one that we are least likely to receive, because I do not think the House of Commons is as close to agreement on that particular bill as it is on some of the others.

We also expect to receive Bill C-163, respecting the establishment of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. That bill came about as a result of the inquiry held by the Honourable Mr. Justice Dubin. Another is Bill C-165, an act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada. That has been referred to by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and deals with the new form of DREE. Honourable senators will remember that DREE provided for a designation of certain areas as being entitled to regional and economic assistance. The new bill works on a system of factors that enables every part of the country to qualify for certain amounts under varying circumstances.

Bill S-24, an act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation, might be returned to us with a small amendment that we will be asked to concur in.

Another bill we might receive is Bill C-149, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, one to which I have referred on previous occasions.

Honourable senators, I have heard the discussion about pre-study and I have prepared some motions for authorization of pre-study of some of these other bills simply to put the committees in a position to do a pre-study if they so wish. One of those bills is Bill C-165, which is an important bill, and my suggestion is that we give the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce authorization to pre-study it. I would also suggest that the same committee have authorization to consider the subject matter of Bill C-149, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

I also have a motion respecting a pre-study of Bill C-159 by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, but I will put that one aside because we may get that legislation in two separate bills.

With respect to Bill C-163, to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, I suggest that we authorize the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to examine the subject matter in advance of that bill coming before the Senate. It is for the pre-study of those three bills that I am asking honourable senators to give leave. If honourable senators feel that in principle we ought not to authorize pre-study, then we might as well vote against all three of them at once. If it is agreed to give leave, then perhaps we should approve all three of them. Before asking for leave on those three motions, I will ask honourable senators to give their views.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I am rather hesitant to agree to that suggestion because we do not really know what bills are going to be coming before us. We would probably be prepared to give leave with respect to the legislation amending the Judges Act, but we do not know if that will come in one or two parts.

Senator Frith: I put that one aside.

Senator Flynn: We would be prepared to agree to your suggestion on that bill because we have examined the legislation and we know that there are no strong objections in the house to it. I am not sure that we are ready to give leave this evening with respect to the other bills. I think that we should wait until tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as these are all substantive motions requiring one day's notice, I give notice now that I will so move tomorrow.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting this evening and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators will perhaps have noted that the other place is debating a motion concerning an amendment to the Constitution respecting aboriginal rights. Therefore, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees:

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the Senate of Canada resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on the item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

Honourable senators, before the question is put, my proposal is to introduce the subject this evening. I have some notes and can give an outline of the government's position with reference to this motion. Then, of course, I would expect that, if leave is granted and if I do proceed this evening, we will adjourn the debate and other senators who so wish will have an opportunity to speak to the motion. If leave is not granted we can consider this to be a notice of motion and proceed with the matter tomorrow.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Would the deputy leader tell us whether the house passed this resolution today?

Senator Frith: My information, honourable senators, is that debate on the aboriginal rights resolution was, by house order, to be finished tonight by 5 o'clock. I do not know whether it was, and for that I apologize.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, today I was listening to the debate in the other place. At 5 o'clock, and apparently for quite a long time prior to that time, they were debating Bill C-95. That does not appear to be anything like approval of this resolution by the other place. Had the resolution been approved by the other place, I would agree to leave being granted. Without that assurance, however, I think this will have to be considered as notice.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I should have explained that the proposal is to proceed in both houses concurrently rather than consecutively. Therefore, we can proceed with the resolution whether it has been passed by the other place or not.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Where has this resolution been for the last month or so?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the same can be asked about any piece of business that comes to this chamber now.

Senator Roblin: If we are proceeding with the resolution concurrently, there was no need to wait for the House of Commons. We could have dealt with it a month ago.

Senator Frith: Of course we could have.

Hon. Martial Asselin: It is always the same at the end of the session.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, let me disclaim any implication that I am putting blame on anyone. I am not debating whether the resolution ought to have been brought here earlier. I am simply asking leave to deal with it tonight. I understand that leave has not been granted. That being the case, perhaps this can be considered as notice of motion for tomorrow.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition would reconsider his position, in view of what the deputy leader has said. The deputy leader could explain the resolution, on the understanding that he does not expect it to be adopted tonight. Not only would this save some time, but honourable senators would be better equipped to respond to those opening remarks if they are made tonight rather than tomorrow. That is all we are asking. The debate could be adjourned by the Leader of the Opposition, or whomever else he wishes to have adjourn it, after the deputy leader has made his opening comments.

Hon. Jack Marshall: You are treating us like a bunch of children.

Senator Flynn: The point is that, if I remember correctly and despite the objections that Senator Steuart had at that time, the Constitution Act, 1982 deprives the Senate of its right of veto in constitutional matters. Therefore, our adoption or non-adoption of any constitutional resolution means practically nothing, except when we know what the other place might have said about it. That is why I asked the deputy leader whether the Commons had approved it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have some better information on this point, in case the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make use of it for his intervention. The information I now have indicates that the aboriginal rights resolution was debated in the House of Commons this morning. It will be debated again on Wednesday between 4 o'clock and 4.45 p.m. Therefore, the resolution will be debated concurrently if we proceed with it either tonight or tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: In view of what I was saying about the provisions of the Constitution Act with respect to the powers, or the lack of powers, of the Senate respecting constitutional matters, it is really irrelevant for us to deal with this matter quickly. We could very well deal with it when we come back in the fall. I believe we have approximately six months in which to say yes or no. Even if we say no it means yes—

Senator Roblin: That is right.

Senator Flynn: —so what is the point of giving leave?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, am I to understand that leave is not granted?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Frith: Then, honourable senators, I give notice of the motion for tomorrow.

• (2035)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, as I read the list of bills that we have to deal with in the next three days, there are 12.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): There is not a chance in the world of getting those bills.

Senator Marshall: There are 12 bills to deal with in three days. The only way we can get any background information is to look at the debates of the other place. It is very obvious from the press now that the journalists and all the people of Canada are disgusted with the House of Commons; they are saying that the House of Commons is no good. Ever since I have been in the Senate we have been hearing and reading in the newspapers that we are no good. We have nothing to fall back on if we want to carry out our responsibilities. How does the Leader of the Government or the Deputy Leader of the Government expect us to deal with 12 bills in three days—

Senator Roblin: Plus a resolution on the Constitution.

Senator Marshall: —and carry out our responsibilities as we are supposed to, unless the deputy leader is of the same opinion that he was a few months ago when he said that regardless of what the bill is, if the government wants it passed it will be passed? What are we supposed to do if we want to be responsible?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I understand exactly the viewpoint of Senator Marshall. He must know of some bills that I do not know of if it is 12. However, that does not matter, because his point is equally forceful if it is eight bills, so there is no point in quibbling over the number of bills. It is clear that if we are to finish this week we will be under very heavy stress and pressure, and it will be very difficult for us to do our job. I agree with him that it will be difficult, and it may be that we cannot do it. It may very well be that we cannot do it and that we will have to sit into July.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Or September.

Senator Frith: There is nothing in our rules that, in the first place, requires leave to be given. As honourable senators know, if we get first readings of these bills on Wednesday or Tuesday, if leave is not granted two days are required between first reading and second reading, and another day between second reading and third reading.

Hon. Martial Asselin: We will be back September 12.

Senator Frith: There is absolutely nothing the government can do, or that anyone can do, to force us, because if anyone refuses leave we have to let the days go by. I agree with Senator Marshall that it will be difficult. We will be asking for leave, but if we cannot get it done this week—and we do not know whether we will get all eight bills—if we cannot do the eight bills, if we get them all, and the resolution, as Senator Roblin pointed out, then we just do not, and we will have to figure out a way to spend more time on it than just this week.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: If the House of Commons is going to adjourn, we would carry on quite willingly if we have to.

Senator Asselin: Until September.

Senator Steuart: We could carry on for a week or two weeks to pass the bills that cannot get Royal Assent until next fall some time. As I understand it, if they adjourn the house they cannot call them back anyway until September 12.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Oh, yes they can.

Senator Frith: I do not think that is right. The provision in their present order requires them to adjourn on June 30, but there are two ways in which they can change that. They can pass a motion suspending the rules and extending the time, or they can, of course, adjourn as provided for in the rules and the Speaker can call them back for an emergency, and if they consider the emergency—

Senator Asselin: Tell them to pass the motion.

Senator Frith: I will not do that. I am simply saying what their options are. What they will do is what they will do, and what we will do is what we will do. I am saying that is an option that is open to them.

Senator Asselin: Let them pass the motion.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Under these difficult circumstances, could the Deputy Leader of the Government tell us what the proposed sittings of this chamber are this week until the adjournment comes? Are we sitting tomorrow at 2 o'clock, are we sitting in the morning, at night? What are we doing Wednesday and what are we doing Thursday? Would he mind setting that out for us?

Senator Frith: Thank you, Senator Molson. The present plan is to sit Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at 2 o'clock.

Senator Flynn: Until when?

Senator Olson: However long is necessary.

Senator Frith: That will take us to July 1, but, of course, we would not sit on that day. Once we commence our sittings we shall see what legislation arrives from the other place. Our rules provide for us to sit at 2 p.m. each day, but we may well ask the Senate to sit at 11 a.m. if it is necessary for us to do so. However, the present plan is to sit at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday and we shall sit for as long as there is business to be considered. It may be necessary to sit at 11 a.m. on either Wednesday or Thursday if the amount of legislation justifies it.

An Hon. Senator: And on Wednesday evening?

Senator Frith: If necessary we shall also sit on Wednesday evening.

Senator Olson: Particularly the committees.

Senator Flynn: The Deputy Leader of the Government said that we shall sit for as long as necessary. If the Senate were to sit beyond 12 o'clock midnight, does he believe that would be in accordance with the rules of the Senate? I know that we have agreed to do that under special circumstances, but does the deputy leader suggest that he can force the Senate to sit after 12 o'clock midnight on a given day? Our sittings will commence at 2 p.m. What happens if the sitting continues until 2 a.m. the following morning? I am asking the deputy leader for his interpretation of our rules in this respect.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is really a question of the choice of verbs. We would not want to force the Senate to sit after 12 o'clock midnight if honourable senators did not wish to do so. We would explore the possibility of such a sitting only after consultation with the Leader of the Opposition.

With regard to the point raised that when the house adjourns it stands adjourned until 2 o'clock the next day, and whether that would mean that each day's sitting must end at 12 o'clock midnight, I can only say that it is an interesting point.

Senator Flynn: It is an interesting point and also a very practical one. We should know what is the position of the Deputy Leader of the Government, because a difficulty may arise. If the Senate were forced to sit after 12 o'clock midnight and then adjourned until the following day at 2 p.m., it would mean that we would lose a full day. I would like to know the Deputy Leader of the Government's interpretation. For instance, if tomorrow we sat until 2 a.m. on Wednesday morning and we then adjourned until 2 p.m. the following day, it would mean that we would not sit until 2 p.m. Thursday.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, at this particular moment the point would appear to be academic, because the Senate is not yet in that situation. At the moment the question is hypothetical. In my view it is undesirable to give an interpretation until we are faced with the problem. I might add that my interpretation carries no more weight that anyone else's, and of course His Honour the Speaker's interpretation ranks alone. Perhaps I should point out that similar rules are sometimes interpreted by simply not observing the clock. I hope that the Senate will not be faced with that situation this week, but, in my view, we should cross that bridge when we come to it.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that in the meantime His Honour the Speaker should look into the matter.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to receive further clarification on this whole matter. I spent 22 years in the other place, and I am sure that Senator Argue will recall that when he sat in opposition there the government of the day, including Senator Olson, said in so many words what has been said here this evening, namely, "If you are good boys and do this, that or the other thing, we will let you go home". That used to occur prior to the Christmas, Easter and summer recesses. I call it legislation by blackmail. Senator Olson shakes his head. The Deputy Leader of the Government, explaining that the matter was hypothetical, proposed that we should do something in case this or that happened, which itself was purely hypothetical. Senator Olson said, "However long is necessary". He was standing behind the Deputy Leader of the Government and was putting words in his mouth. Yesterday, in the course of the CTV program Question Period, the silver tongued-orator did very well. In fact, I believe he pulled a "Smallwood". He talked so much that the moderator did not have time to ask questions. However, the senator did pretty well.

Why don't we stop this pussyfooting around? The Leader of the Government and his deputy leader should just say, "Look, we are going to get this through, no matter whether it involves frustration or exhaustion". So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to stay here for as long as necessary. I don't care how long it takes. Concerning the notice of motion that was made by Senator Olson and read so comprehensively by the deputy leader, surely someone must have thought of it long before it was typewritten this afternoon. Someone must have decided on it long before bringing it here this evening and saying that we have to get this through. Why all this sudden explosion about having to do something right away? Why was this legislation not here before for pre-study? I suggest to the leader and the deputy leader that they stop their namby-pamby playing around and simply tell us that they are going to put this through whether we like it or not.

The Leader of the Opposition raised the question of what would happen if the Senate sat after 12 o'clock midnight. The leader and deputy leader should stop playing around. They might as well be brutally frank about it. Senator Olson said "However long is necessary." The implication was that they were going to have it, regardless. If that was not the implication, then let him explain it further and I will be more than happy to sit down.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is quite a load for me to explain, because my thinking and attitude on the matter is completely different from that of Senator Muir's. When I said "However long is required," it could mean half an hour. I have a good deal of respect for the Senate's capability to make intelligent decisions quickly. It has demonstrated that many times in the past.

Senator Muir: Frankly I find those first words somewhat nauseating. Let's get to the facts of life.

Senator Olson: Then let us look at the facts of life. Perhaps I should preface my remarks by saying that I believe that Senator Frith, as house leader, was very fair in outlining the legislation that might come to us during the next few days.

Hon. Martial Asselin: You must have known that three weeks ago.

Senator Olson: We did not know that three weeks ago.

Senator Frith: Each week I have told the Senate everything I knew about legislation that we expected to get from the other place.

• (2050)

Senator Asselin: You wanted to take us by surprise.

Senator Olson: High priority was given to a number of pieces of legislation, such as the borrowing authority bill, the appropriation bill and the Canagrex bill, to mention a few, and the Senate has dealt with them. Three weeks ago we were not sure that we would not receive many more bills. Now we have a list.

Frankly, I do not believe that all of these bills will get to us. However, in fairness to honourable senators opposite, I think that the house leader ought to list all legislation we might receive. But even if you look at the possibilities, there are no surprises. For example, Bill C-95 has been around for months. It is not a case of this house having to go through a perseverance test to pass that legislation. Another possibility is Bill C-152, which deals with government reorganization. We may or may not get that bill, but it is not unknown to senators. It has been around for at least six months. There is a possibility we may receive the legislation respecting the Judges Act. Senator Flynn has already indicated that he has some background knowledge of that bill, and that there is no great difficulty with regard to it. I do not think it will take very long to deal with Bill C-163, the Canadian Aviation Safety Act. The bill is well known to people who have an interest in that particular area. Bill S-24, the Canada-West Germany tax agreement bill, will probably not take us any more than a few minutes to deal with, because it has already been passed in all its stages by this house. I understand that if we do receive it we will be asked to concur to one amendment.

I say very sincerely to Senator Muir and Senator Marshall, both of whom have expressed some concern, that the list is not a long one of new subject matters requiring a great deal of background study. And I say equally as sincerely that I think that the Senate is capable of coming to grips with such legislation and dealing with it relatively quickly, as in the past, when it has pre-studied the subject matter of legislation. So the list of 12 pieces of legislation mentioned by Senator Marshall can probably be reduced to between six and eight. And, realistically, the list can probably be reduced by one or two more bills.

HISTORIC ANNIVERSARIES

BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF THE ARRIVAL OF THE UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS—SAINT-JEAN-BAPTISTE DAY—DISCOVERY OF CANADA—INQUIRY AMENDED

Leave having been granted to revert to Notices of Inquiries.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I would like to make a minor change to the inquiry standing in my name. The inquiry now reads:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to three historic anniversaries occurring on June 24: (a) the bicentennial celebration of the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists; (b) Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day; and (c) the discovery of Canada.

I ask that the words "occurring on June 24 " be removed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Do you not wish to pin the discovery of Canada down to a certain date?

Hon. Martial Asselin: Do you have a date in mind?

Senator Bosa: The reason I was prompted to make the change is that all the United Empire Loyalists did not arrive in Canada on the same day, and it would be inaccurate to say that they have chosen June 24 as the day to celebrate that very historical anniversary.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I hope my honourable friend intends to explain what he means by the "discovery of Canada". Is he going to start with Leif Ericson or go back before his time? Is he going to start with Sir Humphrey Gilbert, who came to Newfoundland some 300 years ago, or is he going to start with Jacques Cartier?

Senator Flynn: Or with Giovanni Caboto.

Senator Roblin: Or is the honourable senator going to say that the discovery of Canada hinges on the voyage of a man called John Cabot? I want my honourable friend to explain which discovery he has in mind because I shall follow his speech with much interest.

Hon. Robert Muir: The preponderance of evidence indicates that John Cabot landed on Cape Breton Island, not Newfoundland.

Senator Bosa: In answer to Senator Roblin's query, I shall speak of that person who is generally accepted as the official discoverer of this country; not the first person to land on this continent, but the person Encyclopedia Britannica recognizes as being the official discoverer of this country.

Senator Flynn: What do you mean by "official"?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the inquiry may be so amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

PUBLIC SECTOR COMPENSATION RESTRAINT PROGRAM

CANCELLATION OF DINNER CELEBRATING FIRST ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, last week the Deputy Leader of the Government made a great speech during the debate on the appropriation bill in which he lauded the famous six-and-five program of the government. At about the same time I received an invitation from Senator Keith Davey, who is not present in the chamber tonight—but I am sure that it has nothing to do with the matter I am about to raise—and the Honourable Serge Joyal, inviting me to dinner in the Confederation Room of the West Block, House of Commons, on June 28 at 1830 hours. The occasion is to celebrate the six-and-five program and to hand out some awards or something.

Hon. Robert Muir: Oscars.

Senator Flynn: I understand that the event has been cancelled. I wonder whether the Leader of the Government can explain why? Perhaps he has been given an explanation from the Honourable Serge Joyal or even Senator Keith Davey, although I do not know in what capacity he was inviting people to this event. My interest in why this event was cancelled is not that I am upset, because I had already decided I would not attend, but merely for the information of those who may not have been invited but who may have read about the matter in the press.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to make inquiries. I, too, received an invitation—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is more than I received.

Senator Olson: —but, unlike Senator Flynn, I intended to accept my invitation because I think that Canadians have demonstrated a tremendous ability to co-operate with each other and with their various levels of government in reducing inflation from what was, I believe, around 12 per cent down to 5.4 per cent. That is a tremendous achievement. So the reasons for having the celebration obviously are valid, but there may be some reasons why there is no dinner.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps the reasons for cancellation may be even more valid.

Senator Olson: I shall have to make inquiries.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government has suggested that the six-and-five program has resulted in bringing inflation down from 12 per cent to 5.4 per cent. Of course, he is repeating what the deputy leader said in his remarks last week. According to various economists, the only reason for that drop in the rate of inflation is the terrible recession we have suffered for the past 15 months.

Senator Olson: Certainly the recession has been difficult for Canada, as it has been for almost every country in the world. That is very well known. However, I believe that the difficulties faced by Canada have been less severe than those faced by other countries. What is more, we are now starting to see some positive signs of growth and a turnaround. In fact it is a far more broadly based economic recovery than many of us even dared to hope three or four months ago. I think the Canadian people ought to take a great deal of satisfaction from that as well.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but that has nothing to do with six-and-five.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Can the Leader of the Government say whether the government or the PMO have recovered the $1.38 for each invitation they sent out? Have they recovered that amount or how will that be dealt with under the restraint program?

Senator Olson: I am not sure that $1.38 is an extravagant cost for sending an invitation. I know of no precedent for attempting to recover the cost of invitations for an event that did not take place.

Senator Roblin: Whose idea was this anyway?

Senator Marshall: In view of the fact that they will be returning the cheques they received, the 140 cheques for 32 cents each, in order to save money could the Canada Post not send those out without postage so that they could recover that measly amount of money?

Senator Olson: I am not quite able to appreciate fully Senator Marshall's concern for 32 cents times 140 cheques, but, to answer his question straight out, I do not know of any way in which the Post Office could relinquish its requirement to collect postage on whatever they carry.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Leader of the Government on the exchange which took place between him and the house leader on this side. During the time of the high inflation rate, and goodness knows it was high enough, the Leader of the Government went on record as saying that it was caused by the Reagan policies in the United States. He said that the close proximity of Canada to the United States caused the high inflation in Canada. In view of that fact, and in view of the fact that the inflation rate in Canada is starting to go down, following a much quicker decline of the inflation rate in the United States, is the Leader of the Government willing to admit that there might be some connection there, owing to our closeness to the giant? Would that not have some effect on Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think Senator Muir is attempting to simplify a very complex question. I am afraid I cannot join with him in that oversimplification. If he is asking me whether there is a relationship between the rate of inflation in Canada and the rate of inflation in our great neighbour to the south, a country which is very important to our financial system and to our whole economy because of the freedom of movement and access we have to each other's markets, the answer is that, yes, there is a direct relationship. Of course, one of the points I was making when he was asking his questions in the first place, although I do not want to go into the matter in great detail now, is that there is also a direct relationship between interest rates and inflation. One follows or leads the other in almost all cases.

I am not sure which question Senator Muir is referring to now, but we know that most of those questions were related to some level of interest rate. So long as we have the freedom of movement in commerce and in finance between our two countries, there is a direct relationship between the interest that can be charged in this country and the rate that is in effect in the United States. That is a fact. The relationship between that and inflation is just as valid today as it was when I replied to those questions. So the answer is yes.

ARMED FORCES DAY

LACK OF CEREMONY ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Hon. Jack Marshall: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question with respect to Armed Forces Day, which evidently was Saturday last. Just about the only way one would know there was such a day was by reading about it in a special section of the Ottawa Citizen.

If Armed Forces Day was celebrated, can the Leader of the Government explain why nothing was represented on Parliament Hill to show the people just what we have in our Canadian forces? Indeed, why is there not more exposure of our Canadian forces, if they are celebrating Armed Forces Day?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): One of the purposes of Armed Forces Day is to enable most of the Canadian forces bases across the country to hold something like an open house—I am not sure if they call it that—to which they can invite the public. That was certainly the situation in the part of Canada I come from.

I believe there is, if not a great deal of advertising, at least some advertising relating to Armed Forces Day. It is a form of recognition which is meant to focus the attention of the public on the armed forces, perhaps particularly on their bases.

Senator Marshall: Well, I called the Department of National Defence and was advised that they do not do anything on Armed Forces Day. Whatever exposure they can afford to give the armed forces they reserve for Canada Day, which should be Dominion Day.

Senator Olson: The Senate made a decision about that.

Senator Marshall: At a time in history when Canadian forces are an embarrassment to the world, and when you consider the amount of money—$50-odd million—being wasted on advocacy advertising that is meaningless, will the Leader of the Government take the matter up with the powers that be so that those people who are supposed to advertise the Canadian forces will try to arouse a feeling in the Canadian public that Armed Forces Day is important and is truly a part of Canada? Will he do that, or is the government just trying to hide the fact that the Canadian forces are so weak that we shouldn't show them?

Senator Olson: No, the government is not trying to hide anything. I almost said "not trying to hide the fact," but that would have been incorrect because it is not a fact. I don't know what else to say.

If Senator Marshall is not happy with the amount of money that was used to advertise Canadian Armed Forces Day, I am sorry. He is certainly entitled to his opinion. However, as he himself pointed out, there was a special supplement in the newspaper that he identified, but that was not the only paper covering the event. I certainly noticed the supplement in the Citizen, and I believe I saw one or two other indications in other papers that Armed Forces Day was being honoured. There were a number of tributes paid to the armed forces by those supplements and particularly by some of the advertisers.

I am not sure just what point Senator Marshall is trying to make. If it is that we do not spend enough money on advertising and on trying to draw public attention to Canadian Armed Forces Day, then I take it he is recommending I advise my colleagues that in future we should spend more money on that kind of advertising.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE STRIKE OF GRAIN HANDLERS—SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

An Hon. Senator: Welcome back.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It is nice to see the minister back.

Senator Steuart: Let there be a little decorum in this place, please.

There is a great deal of concern in western Canada, particularly among western farmers, that the rapid movement of wheat to the west coast not be interrupted. Could the minister bring us up to date with respect to the quarrels that have arisen between the grain handlers union and the companies on the west coast?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, William Kelly, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour, suggested to the parties involved that they should settle their dispute on the basis of one-dollar increase in the hourly rate.

I am informed that over the weekend the grain workers union approved the settlement by a vote of about 70 per cent. I understand that a radio news report out of Vancouver has stated that the terminal grain operators there have also accepted the settlement. I am not 100 per cent sure of that, but I understand that that was what the radio report stated.

Personally, I am very pleased that the grain workers' union have agreed to this settlement. It indicates to me that this is a very responsible union, led by a responsible leader, Mr. Henry Kancs. Proof of this, honourable senators, is that in the last few weeks, although the union refused to undertake overtime, in their regular shifts they were able to bring about car unloads at the west coast very close to record levels, so they have continued to perform at a very commendable rate.

I know from talking to Mr. Kancs personally that he feels that his workers should be efficient and competent, and work in the best interests of the grain producers of western Canada, because large exports of grain out of Canada are essential to the economic well-being of this country. I would therefore like to express my own appreciation to Henry Kancs and the membership of his union for their responsible attitude.

Although I cannot vouch for it, I am confident that the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators Association have also accepted

Mr. Kelly's proposal, that this labour dispute has been settled and that the productivity of the workers on the west coast will continue in order that record exports can continue to be made.

Senator Steuart: I have a supplementary question for the minister. I did not hear what that settlement was. Is it an increase of a dollar an hour, and, if so, what would that be as a percentage?

Senator Argue: It is close to seven per cent.

Senator Flynn: Then it is over six-and-five.

Senator Roblin: And this is the five-year, not the six-year.

THE BUDGET, 1983

CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PLAN

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers this evening. The first is in response to a question asked by Senator Asselin respecting the government's position relating to grants under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan. This is a fairly long reply, and I would ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The precise meaning of the question asked by the honourable senator is unclear, but I take it that he is asking for the government's position with respect to applicants for a grant under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan (CHOSP) between the date that the CHOSP funding was increased—April 19, 1983—and the date after which applications were no longer being accepted by CMHC—May 5, 1983.

As the honourable senator will know, the federal government has provided an additional $75 million to ensure that all qualified applications and requests for start designation received by CMHC by May 5, 1983 could be honoured. To be eligible, home purchasers will have to have completed an offer to purchase by December 31, 1983 on a house having a certified construction start prior to May 6, 1983. The unit designation procedure was established when CHOSP was extended into 1983 with an additional $100 million and made available on a 'first come, first served' basis.

It is evident that CHOSP is an unparalleled success. By the end of 1983, about 285,000 Canadian families will have been assisted in obtaining a home of their own. Since the Plan was first introduced, there has been a dramatic turnaround in the residential construction industry. The housing industry is now projecting starts will exceed 160,000 in 1983. CHOSP has fulfilled its role in stimulating the economic recovery and creating thousands of jobs for Canadians. The effect of the Plan is demonstrated by the number of single housing starts in May 1983—14,488—which is an all-time record.

Home ownership is now within the reach of thousands of Canadian families who could not afford a home of their own when CHOSP was introduced. The current lower interest rates mean that the income required to purchase a home is some $7,500 less than when rates were at their peak. In addition, the government has announced changes to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan (RHOSP) regulations which will encourage Canadians to put their savings to work and which will provide a benefit to many new home purchasers similar in magnitude to that which was available under CHOSP.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the other delayed answer I have is in response to a question asked by Senator Guay regarding the Garrison diversion project. This, too, is a fairly long answer, but a very precise and comprehensive one. I was almost hoping that someone would insist upon my reading it.

Hon. David Walker: If it it so good, we will accept it as read.

Senator Olson: I would ask that this answer be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Canadian Government shares the concern of honourable members over proposed appropriations by Congress of $22.3 million in fiscal year 1984 for construction of the Garrison Diversion Project. Senator Guay will by now know that the full Senate voted June 22 to defeat an amendment which would have deleted Garrison funding from the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Bill under consideration. However, the bill has yet to go before the conference of members from the Senate and House of Representatives before final approval is given to the 1984 appropriations. I would point out that the funding proposal contains a stipulation that none of the monies will be spent on features affecting water flowing into Canada.

As I indicated in my earlier reply to the honourable senator, the Canadian Government has taken advantage of every available opportunity to ensure that Canadian interests and concerns with respect to the Garrison Project are fully understood and taken into consideration by the U.S. Administration and by Congress. This was demonstrated by the May visit to Washington of the all-party federal/provincial delegation which met with a number of members of Congress to reiterate our strong concern respecting substantially increased appropriations proposed for 1984 and design features of the currently authorized plan which might adversely affect Canadian waters. Earlier this month, the Minister for Employment and Immigration travelled to Washington to make representations to members of Congress concerning implications of the Garrison Project for Manitoba interests. The ambassador recently wrote to all U.S. senators reiterating the position put forward in an attached letter from Premier Pawley that additional funds for Garrison should not be approved until outstanding bilateral issues concerning the Project are resolved in accordance with the Boundary Waters Treaty. In the week just prior to the Senate vote, the Embassy in Washington was instructed to send a diplomatic note on Garrison to the Administration, with a request that it be conveyed to all Congressmen. The note expressed concern over the reprogramming of 1983 funds and the sharply increased level of funding proposed for 1984, at a time when bilateral consultations are still in progress.

These efforts will continue in July when Ambassador Gotlieb will convey Canadian views directly to Interior Secretary Watt. The objective underlying all such representations is, of course, to assure that no features of the project which would adversely affect waters flowing into Canada are constructed until Canadian concerns have been fully resolved.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is my honourable friend prepared to respond this evening to the question I posed on June 22 last regarding the reports of the Canada Post Corporation that have been promised for the last two years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators, I do not have a reply to that question tonight. I have made inquiries regarding that matter and I shall make further attempts to expedite a reply since I certainly would like to have it before we adjourn.

Senator Roblin: I, too, hope we will receive a reply regarding that matter since the last revelations we have had from crown corporations have added to the national debt something in the order of $2 billion. We have received no report from Canada Post Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 1982, and there is as yet no sign of one for 1983, even though the statute clearly calls for a report. I cannot understand why the government has not insisted on these reports being presented.

Senator Olson: I understood the purport of Senator Roblin's question from the comments he made in the first instance.

OFFICIAL REPORT

DELIVERY TO SENATORS' OFFICES

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: I would like to ask if there is any particular reason why Debates of the Senate are delivered so late in the day. We adjourned on Thursday last and returned here today, and my copy of the Debates was not in my office until late this afternoon.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, although this area is not within my jurisdiction, I know you have to ask the question of me. However, I am sure that the people who have responsibility for the delivery of Debates of the Senate have heard Senator Guay's inquiry.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

IMPORTATION OF FISH—STATISTICS

Question No. 106 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What is the breakdown of the amount of fish imported into Canada for the last five years with regard to (i) species (ii) weights (iii) exporting country?

Reply by the Minister of Supply and Services:

Statistics Canada reports:

Statistics on Canadian imports of fish in the last five years (i) by species (ii) weight (iii) dollar value and (iv) exporting country are given in Statistics Canada's publication IMPORTS Merchandise Trade, Catalogue No. 65-203 Annual, 1982, pages 18 to 31 inclusive.

THE SENATE

MOTION RE SUSPENSION OF RECORDING OF DAILY ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator McElman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the practice of recording the daily attendance of Senators in the Senate be suspended effective April 14, 1981, and remain suspended until the beginning of a new session of the 32nd Parliament, or the first session of the next succeeding Parliament, whichever may first occur.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask a question of Senator Frith regarding this matter. If Senator Frith were to say that we will have a new session in the fall of this year, possibly Senator McElman would be willing to withdraw his motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition has, with his customary unerring intuition, scooped me. The reason I have been standing this order is because I know that that is indeed the plan, namely, to sit for one or two days, then prorogue, and start a new session. However, I want to have that information in a firmer form than I have at the present time.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I may say that I, too, would want that information in firmer form before I withdrew my motion.

Senator Frith: I might say that I would not blame you.

Order stands.

CANADIAN SECURITY

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-157—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) pursuant to notice of June 9, 1983, moved:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-157 intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate;
> That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;
> That the Committee have power to act jointly with any committee appointed by the other place to examine the subject-matter of the aforementioned Bill; and
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to request that House, if it deems it advisable, to appoint a committee to act jointly with that already chosen by this House.

He said: Honourable senators, I only want to make a short intervention at this time respecting the motion of which I gave notice a few days ago regarding the appointment of a special committee of the Senate to examine and consider the subject matter of Bill C-157 in advance of the bill's coming before the Senate. There are a number of reasons why I believe that we ought to get this under way at this time so that the committee can have an opportunity to look at certain aspects of this matter during the adjournment period, which will probably be from June 30 until September 12.

The third paragraph of the motion states:

> That the Committee have power to act jointly with any committee appointed by the other place to examine the subject-matter of the aforementioned Bill;

There is some difficulty—and I do not want to try to explain that difficulty—with respect to whether or not the other place is going to pass a motion that would, in some respects, accept our invitation to join with us to examine the subject-matter of Bill C-157.

The subject of a new Security Intelligence Service is so important that some examination should be conducted by a group of people who are interested and who have a high level of competence and understanding in the area, in this case, members of the Senate of Canada. Therefore, we ought to establish the authorization for this special committee and be prepared to move forward on this so that some meetings can be held during the summer recess.

One further request I have, honourable senators, and one which I think may clear up some misunderstanding—although I am not sure there has been very much—is that we delete from the first paragraph of the motion after the semicolon the words "or any other matter relating thereto." Quite frankly, I think we should limit the inquiry to the contents of Bill C-157. I know I require unanimous agreement from the Senate to amend the motion.

My other request is that we add, after the second paragraph, the following:

> That the committee submit its report no later than October 27th, 1983;

I do not have a great deal more to say on this matter, other than I think the Senate can do an excellent job as far as an examination of this subject is concerned, as the Senate has demonstrated more than once in the past. The Senate can perform a useful public service by hearing witnesses from both sides of the question, the pro and con, but indeed it is far more complicated than that.

I would think honourable senators would agree with me that we can find a group among us, perhaps eight or nine, who can perform a useful public service during the recess if we were to authorize the establishment of this committee.

Therefore, I ask honourable senators on both sides of the house ot concur in moving forward on this and, hopefully, to accept the two amendments to which I have referred, the one minor amendment and the other with respect to the date of the report.

If honourable senators do not wish to do that, I have no option but to give notice of those amendments or almost—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Someone else has to do that.

Senator Olson: That is correct, it could be done that way, or I could give notice now and introduce a different motion at the next sitting of the Senate, but I would hope that there is enough agreement on both sides of the house that this is the right thing to do in the public interest.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Would the Leader of the Government repeat the amendments?

Senator Olson: Certainly. The first amendment is found at the end of the first paragraph. The first paragraph states:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-157—

It then sets out what the act is designed to do, and concludes by stating:

> —in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate;

What is added after that is:

—or any other matter relating thereto.

I suggest that we delete that part so that the study is confined to Bill C-157.

The second amendment to the original notice of motion is:

That the committee submit its report no later than October 27th, 1983.

Senator Roblin: May I ask my honourable friend what version of his resolution he is referring to? I am looking at the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate dated Wednesday, June 22, 1983, in which this resolution appears on page vii. I do not see any reference to the phrase "or any other matter relating thereto." Have I misread it?

Senator Olson: I hope that is right, because that was not intended to be inserted in the motion. The copies of the motion I have before me contain those words.

Senator Roblin: It is quite unlikely that we will conclude the discussion on this matter this evening, so could my honourable friend take advantage of the interval to tell us which version of the resolution is really his? Would the real resolution please stand up?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): What page were you referring to in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): We referred to page vii of the Minutes.

Senator Olson: I see that now.

Senator Roblin: There is no reference that I can spot to the phrase my honourable friend wants deleted.

Senator Olson: I am very appreciative of Senator Roblin's drawing that to my attention. I was referring to the sheets I have in front of me. That is exactly how I should like the motion to read.

So, the one amendment would be to insert:

That the committee submit its report no later than October 27th, 1983.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I have privately indicated to the Leader of the Government our reservations on this side regarding a referral of this matter to a special committee of the Senate, rather than to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs if the other place decides not to join with us in a joint committee.

Secondly, I do not think we should make a decision on this before knowing what the other place is going to do; therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANADA EVIDENCE BILL, 1982

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE INTERIM REPORT

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred the Bill S-33, intituled: "An Act to give effect, for Canada, to the Uniform Evidence Act adopted by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada", have leave to make an interim report thereon.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

INTERIM REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Tuesday, June 28, 1983

1. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill S-33, intituled: "An Act to give effect, for Canada, to the Uniform Evidence Act adopted by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of December 7, 1982, examined the said Bill and now presents its interim report as follows:

2. Your Committee has heard representations from the following organizations and individuals: The Canadian Bar Association (on two occasions), the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association of Edmonton, the Advocates' Society (civil proceedings), the Canadian Bankers' Association, the Criminal Lawyers' Association, the Advocates' Society (criminal proceedings), the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Payments Association, le Barreau du Québec, the Association of Records Managers and Administrators, Mr. Justice Pigeon (retired), Professor Stanley Schiff (Faculty of Law, University of Toronto), and Professor Paul Rothstein (Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C.). Officials from the Department of Justice appeared twice before your Committee.

3. Your Committee also received written comments from several other individuals and organizations. Some of the provinces indicated they preferred to observe the progress of the Committee for the time being.

4. In its second presentation to your Committee on June 22nd, the Canadian Bar Association stated that its major detailed brief as well as a separate brief prepared jointly with the Barreau du Québec relating to the practise of law in Quebec, represented the views of concerned and experienced members of the Association. However, as there had been no time to process those reports through the various organs of the Canadian Bar Association as required by its by-laws, they were not being delivered as official statements of the position of the Canadian Bar Association.

5. Your Committee heard many representations with respect to Bill S-33 regarding the procedure followed by the Department of Justice in preparing it. The most frequent criticism of a general nature made to the Committee was that during the genesis of Bill S-33 there was insufficient consultation with academic experts in the law of evidence as well as with the practising Bar. The defence Bar in particular felt that, as a result, the Bill tended to be "Crown oriented".

6. There were a number of varying opinions as to whether S-33 was a code of evidence. The Government took the position that it was not intended to be. Your Committee is of the opinion that, while a few witnesses did not see the necessity of a comprehensive statutory statement on the law of evidence, most of them would approve or at least accept a Uniform Law of Evidence Act, provided the substantive changes which they recommended were incorporated into it.

7. Officials of the Department of Justice attended and followed closely all the hearings of your Committee. They have received copies of all submissions and briefs. In addition, most of the witnesses who appeared before the Committee have offered to assist in the revision of Bill S-33 which the Committee understands will take place during the coming summer adjournment of Parliament.

8. Your Committee therefore recommends:

(a) that during the revision of S-33, the appropriate officials of the Department of Justice work closely with the Canadian Bar Association, professional and other groups and individuals who have offered their services;

(b) that the revision contain a preamble indicating clearly that the Uniform Law of Evidence Act is not intended to be a code;

(c) that the Minister of Justice send a draft of the revised proposed legislation to interested governments, organizations and individuals for their comments and analyses before submitting another Bill to Parliament.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have not received a message from the House of Commons, which means that it has not passed any other Bills, including, if I am not mistaken, the resolution on native rights, that is, the amendment to the 1982 Constitution.

I wish the Leader of the Government or his deputy would let us know what is going on. Is there a conspiracy in the other place to send us all the legislation to be passed at the very last minute? When are we going to receive the six or seven Bills the Leader mentioned yesterday? Some time during the day tomorrow? Will the Senate again be put in a position where it will have to pass a whole series of Bills in a few minutes? I really would like some information on this.

From what I have seen going on in the House of Commons, it seems to me that the Government House Leader in the other place is playing a cat-and-mouse game with the Opposition, and even more so with the Senate. He is taking for granted that all we have to do is say yes right away, if we want to adjourn the day after tomorrow. Otherwise, we might be coming back next week. In any case, I would like to know what is happening as far as the Government is concerned. Let the Government be frank and tell us exactly what it expects us to do and how it thinks we will be able to discharge our responsibilities.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to assure the Leader of the Opposition that there is no conspiracy, or whatever term he used, or any cat-and-mouse game being played by the government. All the government is doing is trying to obtain agreement from the opposition parties in the other place to deal with those bills that were mentioned by the Deputy Leader of the Government yesterday. The government is attempting to do that in a manner which would maximize the time left, which we now know is until 6 o'clock Thursday, June 30. I do not think I should comment further as to why the opposition parties in the other place are not giving their consent. I indicated yesterday that we did not expect to get all the bills, and that we did not know which ones would be passed in the short time left before the adjournment. We were trying to inform honourable senators on both sides of this house what was being negotiated so that we could arrange our time, by using the pre-study technique and that sort of thing, to deal with these matters. I am not prepared now—I know better because I have been around long enough—to predict when other people will come to an agreement. It is my sincere opinion that they would be doing a service to Canada if they could come to an agreement on some if not all of those bills, but I cannot predict that. It may be that the house leader can indicate whether there is a higher or lower probability today that we will get some of them. What we were doing was alerting honourable senators, especially the opposition, as to what might be coming before us in the three days left until the order for adjournment in the Commons takes effect.

● (1410)

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, as usual, the Leader of the Government has said nothing at all.

Senator Olson: I explained exactly why we were trying to be helpful.

Senator Flynn: Yesterday the leader invited the Senate to pass a motion to refer the subject matter of the sports pool legislation to committee, saying that it was urgent. The committee has not been called and we do not know whether it is going to be called today. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport was supposed to be here today but he is not.

Hon. Martial Asselin: He is in British Columbia.

Hon. Jack Marshall: And the chairman of the committee is not here either.

Senator Flynn: That is my first point. My second point is that yesterday the Commons spent the whole day on the sports pool legislation. Today, they decided that they are going to rush through Bill C-163, to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Agreement was reached within two hours to pass this bill on second reading, refer it to committee and have the report stage on third reading proceeded with very quickly. If this had been done yesterday, we could have received the bill today and proceeded with it in the normal way. The government preferred to push the opposition to the limit on a bill that the opposition did not want to pass, and now today they are dealing with something else. As a result, the Senate is going to receive that legislation much too late to be able to deal with it properly. The Senate is the last worry of the Leader of the Government in the other place, and apparently it is the last worry of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition should not say things like that, but perhaps he has some purpose in doing so which is not apparent to me at the moment.

Senator Flynn: Yes, I have a purpose.

Hon. David Walker: We would like to get rid of you.

Senator Flynn: I would like to improve him.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Don't be so ambitious!

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Government in the other place has, as his paramount purpose, getting bills passed that are important to the public service and beneficial to Canadians. There are a number of them there, including the ones that the Leader of the Opposition has referred to.

I think it is unfair for the Leader of the Opposition to say, whatever reasons the opposition members have for failing to deal with these bills, that the responsibility comes down on the head of the house leader in the other place. The comment he made about me is also unfair, but I have broad shoulders and I know that every once in a while I have to take that sort of thing from him.

Senator Flynn: It may be unfair if the Leader of the Government has done his best to try to convince the house leader in the other place to take account of the position of the Senate. We know very well that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board bill, which they are going to pass today, could have been passed a long time ago because it has been on their order paper for months. In my view it is a more important bill than the sports pool bill—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: —which is the cherished baby of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, who is now entering the chamber.

If I have been unfair to the Leader of the Government, perhaps he can assure us that he was unsuccessful in trying to convince Mr. Pinard of the necessity of taking into account the position of the Senate. If he tells me that he made that effort, I will withdraw my comment that the last thing he worries about is the position of the Senate. However, only that explanation will move me to withdraw my comment.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have discussed the time requirements, and I have also complimented the opposition and other senators for giving us the opportunity of moving, sometimes, reasonably quickly on matters that have been before us for a long time. I think the house leader in the other place has taken all of that into account. I know he is aware of it because I have discussed it with him many times. However, perhaps that is not where the problem lies. It may be that he is unable to convey that to the other house leaders so that they can appreciate the situation.

I am satisfied that if the other place had been willing to adopt any one of the eight measures yesterday, last week or even before that, and had made the kind of agreement that the Leader of the Opposition now claims was made—I am not arguing that; he may be right about that—these bills could have been passed, as he has pointed out, many days ago.

However, we cannot turn back the clock. We only have the hours from now until June 30, and I am sure that Senator Flynn, as Leader of the Opposition, along with everyone else in the Senate, wants to co-operate in making the best use of the time we have left.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, from what I could see of what was going on in the other place this morning, the aviation bill, which was given second reading and referred to committee, could have been passed a long time ago, because members of the opposition mentioned that the delay was the fault of the house leader in the other place. That has been clearly stated on the record, and no one has rebutted that statement.

The government is stubborn. It is telling us that it will not give us a chance to deal properly with this bill unless we pass other more controversial bills. That is the kind of blackmail that has been going on, and the victim is, of course, the Senate. I am quite sure that a significant number of my good friends on the other side share this belief.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: I am glad that I got at least one acknowledgement from the other side on that point.

● (1420)

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, if I may, I would like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with his comments of last night regarding inflation. According to the information at hand, taken from the U.S. Bureau of Labour statistics, The Economist and Statistics Canada, in the month of May in Canada the inflation rate was 5.4 per cent; the unemployment rate was 12.4 per cent, and the misery rate was 17.8 per cent. In April the United States inflation rate was 3.9 per cent—and it is expected to be much better when the statistics are in for May—the unemployment rate in May was 10.1 per cent and the misery rate was 14 per cent.

May I ask the Honourable Leader of the Government this question: If the six-and-five program is lauded so highly as being such a success, why is Canada not ahead, in terms of percentages, of the United States?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not sure that I made the statement in quite the way Senator Muir has put it. What I did say was that the relative inflation rate of 5.4 per cent, calculated on an annual basis between the months of April and May, is a significant improvement over what it was a year ago. Indeed, a year ago I believe that many people—including, perhaps, some members of the government—were not sure whether we could bring the inflation rate down to that level, as a consequence of the drop in interest rates and so on, so that the economy could begin to pick up. I think that we, as Canadians, ought to be very proud that we were, as a nation, able to bring that about.

We are aware that there is an unacceptably high unemployment rate, not only in this country but in several other countries, and this fact is vital to our economy because of the high level of trading and economic activity that is interrelated with their economies. The American interest rates and unemployment levels, at least over the last while, have been somewhat lower than ours. The comparison that I was making was as to the improvement over the past 12 months. The contribution that Canadians have made is such that the inflation situation is not as bad as it would otherwise have been.

Senator Muir: I would certainly agree with the honourable leader when he says that things are much better now than they were a year ago. With respect to unemployment, however, the Canadian rate is higher than that of the U.S., West Germany, Japan, France, Italy and Sweden.

I am glad that the honourable gentleman is giving credit to the Canadian people for the effort they have made. Is he still suggesting, however, that the improvement has been brought about solely as a result of the six-and-five program?

Senator Olson: That question has been asked over and over again.

Senator Muir: We get different answers all the time.

Senator Olson: No, honourable senators, the same answer is given all the time. It is that the government, at least in some respects, took the lead in attempting to set a target, which was to reduce the inflation rate to 6 per cent in one year and to 5 per cent in the following year. A variety of meetings, conferences, consultations and so forth were held for the purpose of asking the private sector—whether it was business, labour or private entrepreneurs—to co-operate for the sake of the Canadian economy and the general well-being of the Canadian people. The object was to bring the inflation rate down to the levels that were predicted in the six-and-five program.

If Senator Muir would not like to give the government any credit for the improvement, that is up to him. In my view the government took the lead in directing at least some activity towards trying to bring the inflation rate down. However, we want to give full credit to everybody else who contributed to bringing the inflation rate down.

Senator Muir: The honourable gentleman is, as usual, twisting and squirming and putting words in my mouth. Give the government credit, yes, but according to the spokesmen for the government—and they can be quoted—six-and-five did it all; not the Canadian people, as the minister says today. That is the only thing. Do not put words in my mouth. Listen more carefully.

• (1425)

Senator Olson: I was not trying to put words into the honourable senator's mouth. I was trying to clarify what seemed to be something that was not quite clear to him.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I thank him for the delayed answer he gave me to my previous question. I refer to the concern of people from the province of Manitoba with regard to the Garrison Dam project.

On page 5871 of Debates of the Senate the Leader of the Government indicated pretty well what has transpired, and what we have mentioned from time to time in the last few weeks about, particularly, the representations made in May in Washington by a group of both provincial and federal representatives, whereby I brought to attention the fact that the minister had not been there. In the second paragraph of the response of the Leader of the Government yesterday he said:

> Earlier this month, the Minister for Employment and Immigration travelled to Washington to make representations to members of Congress concerning implications of the Garrison Project for Manitoba interests.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he can tell me the date when the Minister for Employment and Immigration was in Washington, and what was the actual result of his delegation? Who did he see and what were the results? This is not mentioned in the answer. I think it would be very interesting if we were to get a report from the minister on the success he achieved while in Washington.

I realize that in the last paragraph of the answer the Leader of the Government said:

> These efforts will continue in July when Ambassador Gotlieb will convey Canadian views directly to Interior Secretary Watt. The objective underlying all such representations is, of course, to assure that no features of the project which would adversely affect waters flowing into Canada are constructed until Canadian concerns have been fully resolved.

I would suggest that the Canadian concerns have not been fully resolved. I know what is going to be done in July, but it would be interesting indeed if the Leader of the Government could obtain for me the results of the visit of the Minister for Employment and Immigration to Washington, and also tell us the date he was there so that we could follow this up and know exactly what is taking place. While you mention the fact that he was there, there is nothing to tell us whom he saw or what success he had.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I will refer that question to the Minister for Employment and Immigration.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ADVANCED LIGHT RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I should like to say how very sorry many of us were to see the minister making a spectacle of himself on national television last night, strutting and uttering bombast and threats against the recently re-elected Government of British Columbia.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What else is new?

Senator Murray: I wish to know whether the minister would like to take advantage of this opportunity to withdraw any unfortunate threats that he made on national television last night, and bring things into their proper perspective on this issue.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to make a statement in defence of the word "Canada." I am rather surprised that this vocal representative of the party which aspires to be the Government of Canada, the party which states that it believes in Canada, would stand up on the floor of the Senate and defend an action which is indefensible.

Let me point out some facts of life about the situation in my province. The Government of Canada entered into an agreement with the Province of British Columbia to help put in place one of the world's outstanding pieces of transportation technology, developed in Canada by Canadians who come from every province in the land. The agreement was to install in British Columbia's lower mainland a superb light rapid transit system developed in Kingston, Ontario. It features first-rate technology, excellent Canadian engineering and excellent Canadian workmanship and electronics.

The reason for federal involvement? As honourable senators may know, the Province of of British Columbia will be hosting an international transportation fair in 1986. We hope that thousands of people from Canada and abroad will attend Expo '86. It was felt appropriate that in view of the multibillion dollar market for light rapid transit technology which exists in today's world, the federal government should help to put in place in British Columbia a demonstration LRT project featuring this Canadian technology, a project which the world could be invited to see in operation before and during Expo '86.

What would that mean? World-wide sales. It would mean jobs for workers in that industry in the honourable senator's province and in other provinces across the country. Largely through the effort of those ministers in Cabinet representing British Columbia, including my friend and colleague, Senator Jack Austin—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: —an agreement was signed with the Government of British Columbia to provide $60 million in funds contributed to that LRT demonstration project by taxpayers in all provinces. A formal legal agreement was reached with the Province of British Columbia for the provision of funds for the demonstration LRT section and the construction of LRT vehicles. The agreement also called for an accord with respect to signage and symbols. One of the reasons for requesting federal signage and symbols is to ensure that provincial governments and the people of the regions understand that there are people of all parties working at the federal level, in the Senate and the House of Commons, who are deeply concerned about their regions, that provincial governments are not the exclusive spokesmen for the hopes, dreams and aspirations of Canadians. A comprehensive agreement was signed in February of 1982.

On behalf of the Canadian people we agreed to pay 50 per cent of the costs of this demonstration one-mile section in the City of Vancouver. On behalf of the Canadian people we agreed to pay approximately 50 per cent of the cost of building 114 light rapid transit vehicles, with the firm understanding that there would be appropriate Canadian symbols displayed in connection with that project. As I have said, a legal document was put in place, and the agreement was duly signed by the Premier of British Columbia, my cabinet colleague, Senator Austin, myself and others. What happened? We were informed that the opening ceremony for this light rapid transit facility would be held yesterday morning. We were informed that the word "Canada" would appear on those LRT vehicles. That assurance was given at the highest cabinet level and by the head of the light rapid transit organization. At 8 o'clock yesterday morning I was informed unofficially that the Government of British Columbia at the last moment had refused to have the word "Canada" placed on the outside of the vehicles, 50 per cent of the cost of which was paid for by Canadian taxpayers from coast to coast. We said that we would refuse to attend the ceremony unless the word "Canada" appeared on those vehicles.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: I was told that the failure to advise us of this breach of contract and of faith was because they were afraid to tell us because they thought that "the senator would not appear for the ceremony if he knew in advance". Frankly, honourable senators, this incredible conduct is no way to enhance and develop federal-provincial relations. It is no way to advance understanding and co-operation between any federal government—be it Conservative, Liberal, or one of any other political persuasion—and the provincial governments. Therefore federal representatives absented ourselves from the ceremony. Later I stated on behalf of the people of Canada that I deplore the provincial action, that I was dissatisfied with the failure to allow "Canada" to appear on the cars, that I regretted the action taken, and I felt it would do very little to enhance relationships between the two levels of government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: There was no specific threat whatsoever to withdraw funds from the Province of British Columbia. If this is the new Conservative approach—and I doubt it because I do not believe that even the honourable senator's colleagues support the view he has taken today—I am appalled. The Conservative senators I know are deeply committed to Canada and I can only say that I am surprised that Honourable Senator Murray would utter such words in defence of such an indefensible proposition. Surely this Parliament and the parties that serve here must convey to the Canadian people in all regions that the people who serve them in Ottawa are just as deeply concerned about serving Canada's regions as are certain provincial premiers, who all too often claim that they are the only legitimate spokesmen for the interests of the Canadian people. This is not true.

● (1435)

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Who claims that?

Senator Perrault: If we do not have the right and responsibility to stand up and take a position in defence of federalism on a non-partisan basis, then we should not be serving here at all.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: The minister has been very unclear as to what is in this agreement between Canada and British Columbia. At one point in his remarks he said that Canada and British Columbia had agreed to reach an accord on signage and symbols, whatever that means. It is not quite clear from the minister's remarks whether there is or is not agreement on that particular point. Therefore, I ask him to table, as soon as he can conveniently do so, a copy of the agreement so that we can all have a look at it. Those of us who watched the national news last evening heard the minister threatening the Province of British Columbia as to the availability of federal funds for future projects.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Fiscal retaliation.

Senator Murray: Once again, I give the minister the opportunity to withdraw that kind of threat toward the taxpayers of his own provinces.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: They can threaten us but we cannot threaten them.

Senator Frith: That's right.

Senator Perrault: I am grateful to the people of my province for their support, as indicated in one poll taken this morning which I am advised shows that they are in favour of the federal position and against the position taken by Senator Murray by 8 to 1.

Senator Balfour: There was another poll taken there just a few weeks ago.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board): You have got them going, Ray.

Senator Perrault: Let us put the pertinent part of the agreement on the record.

Senator Murray: Table it so we can see the whole thing.

Senator Perrault: It reads as follows:

> The wording, format, design and location of all signs plaques and of the logo, marks or other identification marks to be developed by UTA and as well as all other corporate public communications referred to in paragraphs 4.06(a) through (d) must be planned and scheduled with the full participation of the Crown and be commensurate with the Crown's 50 per cent participation in the cost of the Project and the purchase of the vehicles and must be satisfactory to the Crown before they can be placed, erected, affixed or painted on.

That part of the agreement was violated in fact and in spirit and in principle by the Government of the Province of British Columbia.

Senator Flynn: That is not very convincing.

Senator Perrault: I trust that Senator Murray is not defending violations of that part of the agreement. There are clear violations of this and other sections of the agreement.

Senator Murray: The minister knows that he cannot read selectively from a document, that he will have to table the entire document. If that section of the agreement provides that there be agreement on logos and signage, then he and his colleagues and the officers of the Government of Canada are derelict for not having reached the agreement many weeks ago and for not discovering until yesterday morning that their precious maple leaf and bar was not on the car.

Senator Perrault: Any fair-minded or logical person would dismiss the comments made by Senator Murray as completely unworthy of either the senator or the Senate. I would be most pleased to table the document which I hold in my hand.

Senator Murray: And withdraw the threats.

Senator Perrault: I suggest to Senator Murray that if he truly wishes to serve the interests of the federal system—

Senator Murray: Withdraw the threats of last night.

Senator Perrault: —regardless of the party to which any of us may belong, he will check his facts before he stands in his place and makes inane statements.

May I table this document?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, with all due respect, what the minister has quoted does not support his contention at all. He mentioned the Crown. It could be the Crown in the right of the province or the Crown in the right of Canada. There is nothing there that really supports the opinion of the minister. He should not get so excited. He got too excited yesterday. He should not continue. Let him quiet down and try to reflect upon what he did yesterday and what he should do in the future.

● (1440)

Senator Perrault: Senator Flynn urging restraint is like an arsonist giving a lecture on fire prevention.

Senator Flynn: It's timing; you have got to know when to do it.

Senator Perrault: May I inform honourable senators that the agreement was drawn—

Senator Steuart: By a real lawyer.

Senator Perrault: —was drawn between legal officers of Crown Federal and Crown Provincial. There is no doubt in the minds of those who have read the agreement what the agreement is all about. Indeed, I can share with honourable senators the fact that in my view the minister responsible for light rapid transit in the Vancouver area is personally most unhappy and frankly apologetic about the situation, as is the head of Urban Transit, who was overruled by a higher power.

Senator Flynn: Who was the higher power? I think you should be more precise now.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It wasn't God, was it?

Senator Flynn: You say that the minister is sorry, but who was responsible? Is the Premier of British Columbia the man you are insinuating was responsible for that? It is all very well to create a strawman and punch him to death, but surely you can come up with something to say that is intelligible.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I do not wish to extend unduly this debate—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Who started it? You started it.

Senator Perrault: —but when the most senior minister in a cabinet is overruled after achieving an agreement—

Senator Asselin: By whom?

Senator Perrault: —an agreement with the federal government, obviously a person senior to that minister has made the decision.

Senator Roblin: Oh, you are coy.

Senator Steuart: It was either Father Bennett or God himself. Figure it out for yourselves.

Senator Flynn: In any event, we will no doubt see, because it is quite clear now that the minister has been alluding to Premier Bennett. We will see what reply Premier Bennett has to make.

Senator Balfour: If I may put a supplementary to the minister, did I understand Senator Perrault to deny that yesterday in the presence of television cameras he made a threat of fiscal retaliation against the people of British Columbia, either in express terms or by implication?

Senator Flynn: He didn't mean it.

Senator Balfour: That was my understanding.

Senator Perrault: I stated that the matter would have to be the subject of discussion involving the federal cabinet, and that meetings would be held in Ottawa. Those meetings will be held to determine what the future holds. Clearly, however, when a government violates a legal agreement, one must assess one's relationship with that government. Certainly, as a British Columbian I do not want to see any retaliation against the people of my province and I will fight that. I will not support that.

Senator Flynn: Maybe not today.

Senator Asselin: But yesterday.

Senator Perrault: But in my view the Government of British Columbia, by the action it took yesterday, is not encouraging those who wish to serve the interests of that province here.

Senator Flynn: Senator Austin, is that your advice? Do you share those views?

Senator Asselin: No, Jack wasn't there.

MEDICARE—USER FEES AND EXTRA BILLING

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development. A few days ago he and I had an exchange on the question of Madam Bégin's threats uttered in New York concerning a Canada health act which might or might not be brought in in the fall. The Minister of State for Social Development was kind enough to send me a copy of the text of Madam Bégin's speech in New York in which, indeed, there is no reference to a Canada health act being brought in in the fall containing the provisions I referred to.

However, I find that the statements attributed to the minister were contained in an interview with the Canadian Press in New York. I would ask the minister whether he has had an opportunity to speak with his colleague about what she intended to say in that interview, and, in any case, whether he can obtain for senators a transcript of that interview.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I have inquired after a transcript but I have been told that none is available. Apparently there was a press scrum after her address in which she made some comments. I understand from the minister that she said that she is contemplating the possibility of introducing legislation to ensure that universal access to medicare will remain the dominant principle in the Canadian health care system.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ISSUANCE OF SALARY CHEQUES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Flynn concerning an alleged delay in the issuance of salary cheques to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am not sure of the date the question was asked.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It was a long time ago. Are you sure you don't have the date there? It must have been the end of the fiscal year, surely.

Senator Olson: Yes, it must have been the end of March or the beginning of April 1983. The answer is fairly technical.

Senator Flynn: If it is not too long, I think it would be interesting for you to read it now.

Senator Olson: Very well. I believe the gist of the question was to ask the minister for an explanation of why the government found it necessary to delay the issuance of pay cheques to members of the RCMP. Evidently in his question Senator Flynn referred to a newspaper article that had suggested that the borrowing authority was the cause of the situation. The answer is as follows:

> The newspaper article attributes the RCMP pay situation to the borrowing bill of $5 billion. This is not the case nor is the Government out of funds.
> The issue is a technical thing related to the interim supply bill which covers the cash requirements of all departments for the first three months of 1983-84.
> Because the RCMP cheques are dated April 1, 1983, and not March 31 as reported by the press, the full amount of these cheques must initially be paid out of 1983-84 funds. Accounting adjustments are made later to charge 1982-83 with costs up to March 31. The RCMP has sufficient funds for this purpose in its 1982-83 payroll budget.
> The RCMP acted prudently in holding the cheques one day; they can be released after the interim supply bill is given Royal Assent later today.
> It is normal for payroll cheques to be distributed in advance to departments and agencies on the clear understanding that they will not be released before paydays.
> Payroll cheques are dated every second Friday but they are distributed on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays—in accordance with an agreement between the Government and the chartered banks—to alleviate lineups.
> The RCMP is on a different 2 week pay cycle than most departments with its next one being April 1, and the agreement, in this case, is that the cheques would be issued on Thursday March 31. Since Friday is a holiday, however, distribution was expected today.
> With Royal Assent later today and the subsequent release of supply, the RCMP will be able to issue the cheques tomorrow. (1 day late from expectations).
> Special arrangements have been made to obtain the required Governor General's warrant immediately after Royal Assent. The RCMP will then advise all units across Canada (by telex) to release the pay cheques.

The answer, of course, relates back to that date, but it does give in precise detail the answer to Senator Flynn's question.

• (1450)

Senator Flynn: I want to thank the minister for this reply. I will look at it because it is interesting from a technical point of view.

THE SENATE

ORAL QUESTIONS—APPLICATION OF ACCESS TO INFORMATION ACT

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The access to government information legislation comes into force on July 1 by proclamation. Relating this to our own situation I was wondering if questions asked in the Senate will be subjected to the delay of 30 days that is provided for in the legislation. It is very seldom that we have a reply within that time, and I wonder if the proclamation of that legislation will result in a change in our situation.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The answer to that question is no, since perhaps 90 per cent of the questions are answered within a lesser period of time than 30 days. We will try to keep up that practice and, indeed, be as efficient as we have been in the past.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): In view of my honourable friend's comment, may I ask why I have not yet received an answer to my question regarding the post office?

The post office is a crown corporation. It is, under the Financial Administration Act, expected to file two reports—one on its activities and one on its capital budget for the year—within thirty days after the end of each year. It has not reported for 1982; it is not going to report for 1983. Has the deficit in the post office anything to do with the non-receipt of these reports?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): As I told Senator Roblin yesterday, and once before, I am attempting to get a full and complete answer to that question, which information he has every right to have.

Senator Roblin: I am glad to have that right, but I would like even more to have the answer. I wonder if my honourable friend is going to give me the answer before we rise for the summer.

Senator Olson: I am attempting to obtain an answer, as I said. I feel a bit embarrassed that I have not received it to date. I think it has some technicalities attached to it, but I will certainly get it as soon as I can.

Senator Roblin: Would my honourable friend undertake to send it to me, if it is received after we have risen for the summer?

Senator Olson: I will undertake to do that also.

THE SENATE

REFORM—REPORT OF DELEGATION TO AUSTRALIA

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order having to do with a question which I asked of Senator

Frith on June 15 with regard to the election of senators in Australia.

I received a letter dated June 24, 1983 from a professor at the University of Waterloo, and perhaps I shall read a paragraph of it to explain what he said:

> Your assessment, for example, that senators are subject to control by the parties is correct in the sense that the party executive (or some part of it) accepts nominations and has the power to rank candidates on the ballot. The ballot position, of course, is probably the key factor in determining which individuals are actually elected under a PR system—not their personal qualities; their beliefs or their experience.

The PR system there referred to, I presume, means proportional representation.

Is this what Senator Frith is advocating for Canada?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have lost count of how many times I have said this, but I do not mind repeating it a hundred times if necessary. The answer is no, that is not what I am recommending for Canada. As I have said on other occasions when I have talked about what I think we should borrow from the Australian system, we should not borrow the system of party slates; that we should not aspire to develop for Canada the system that exists in Australia by reason of the very strong control that the two major parties have over the electoral system in Australia.

My recommendation is based on the assumption that proportional representation will work better in Canada, even though there are party lists, because there are regional parties in Canada and therefore the result, on the basis of Canadian voting patterns, would be that no party would have control of the Senate.

Senator Marshall: It was disclosed the other day in the television news coverage that, after a couple of hundred years in the United States, the Supreme Court has ruled that the Senate does not have a veto over the executive. The executive, in the United States, is appointed by the President, and evidently the Senate does not have a veto over what that non-elected body might do. The point I am making is that, if it is good enough for the President of the United States to pick his executive, who are not elected and who are the people who run the country, for their personal qualities, how can we consider having an elected Senate in Canada, which would do nothing for the country?

Senator Frith: That is essentially a rhetorical question, but nevertheless I will treat it as asking for information. It seems to me the question is: If there is a system that exists in the United States involving the appointment of the executive, how can we in Canada even consider an elected Senate? I do not see the connection, and I do not see why we cannot consider a elected Senate just because of something that happens in the United States.

Senator Marshall: All I am saying is that this is an exercise in futility on which we are wasting money considering something that has been in existence in the United States for over one hundred years. Considering the problems that exist here, let us be independent and do what we should in the light of our responsibility to the public. Let us not get involved in the utter nonsense that is going on now.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we have a difference of opinion. Senator Marshall's views differ from mine but I do not consider them utter nonsense. He thinks that my views are, and I suppose that is democracy.

ADVANCED LIGHT RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CANADA-BRITISH COLUMBIA AGREEMENT

Hon. Lowell Murray: Mr. Speaker, I have now obtained a copy of the document, tabled a few minutes ago by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, which purported to be an agreement between the federal government and the Government of British Columbia. What it is, in fact, is a news release issued by the minister and, although it does in fact quote part of one paragraph, I would ask the minister to table the entire agreement at his early convenience.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, I did not attempt to suggest to the Senate that what I tabled was the total agreement. I said I would be pleased to table the document which "I held in my hand", and I have tabled that document.

The entire agreement involving two levels of government is another matter, the tabling of which may involve seeking permission from the Government of British Columbia. However, the possibility, at least, of tabling this document will be examined.

CANADIAN SECURITY

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-157—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Hon. Senator Olson, seconded by the Hon. Senator Frith:
> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-157 intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate;
> That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee submit its report not later than October 27th, 1983;

That the Committee have power to act jointly with any committee appointed by the other place to examine the subject-matter of the aforementioned Bill; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to request that House, if it deems it advisable, to appoint a committee to act jointly with that already chosen by this House.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday I indicated we had certain reservations regarding this motion. What I would like to say to the Leader of the Government is, that if he has no serious objections, I would rather wait until Thursday to dispose of this motion. We will know at that time whether the House of Commons has or has not decided to join us. If it does not, we will probably have no objection to a special committee of the Senate examining this matter.

However, I would rather wait and see what the House of Commons intends to do.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are a number of things we have to consider, including the suggestion that Senator Flynn has made. One of those things, of course, is that we may not be here on Thursday because, if there is agreement in the other place, Thursday is probably going to be private members' day there. If that is all that remains, then we may not be sitting on that day.

● (1500)

As I tried to explain to Senator Flynn yesterday, we have other arrangements to take care of with respect to this matter. The committee would be established to examine the subject matter of Bill C-157, and to issue an invitation, if you wish, to the House of Commons to join with us in that study. If the House of Commons fails to take advantage of that invitation, then by passing the motion in its current form we would have achieved all of those things that we wished to achieve, in any event—that is, we could go forward with it, but the invitation would be open for the House of Commons to join with us until they adjourn no later than 6 o'clock on Thursday, June 30, 1983.

There is also the matter of appointing members of the Senate to the special committee once the motion is passed. As Senator Flynn knows, we require unanimous agreement to do that. We would require the guarantee that all honourable senators would give their unanimous consent that appointments be made during that same sitting of the Senate, otherwise we would receive authorization to establish the committee, but would have received no authorization to appoint the members.

I plead with Senator Flynn to make whatever comments he wishes to make on this matter now so that a special committee of the Senate can be established to hear the views of those interested in this particular matter, and to ensure that that committee can report to the Senate by October 27, 1983.

I think it would be a disservice if we failed to take advantage of the time available to us over the next four months, or so, and if we did not appoint a Senate committee for that purpose.

Senator Flynn: I do not wish to delay the decision later than, let us say, Thursday, and I could have an answer for my honourable friend tomorrow. I just want to be able to assess the situation with regard to the other place, and the reaction opposition parties may have to this proposal.

I agree with the Leader of the Government that we should have a committee commence hearings during the summer recess, but I hope that that would not be in the next few weeks, and certainly not before August, in any event.

I am suggesting that we stand this order now until the next sitting. I will then be in a position to let the Leader of the Government know what position we intend to take on this matter. If the House of Commons does not appear to be willing to join with us, I certainly will not resist the appointment of a special committee of the Senate.

Senator Olson: I appreciate that, but I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition could go a little further than that. I said that there was a possibility we may not meet on Thursday.

Senator Flynn: If that appears to be the case, we shall deal with the matter tomorrow.

Senator Olson: If the Leader of the Opposition could give us an undertaking that we will deal with this tomorrow, and also that we will pass a motion appointing members to that committee tomorrow as well, that would be acceptable.

Senator Flynn: It would be useless to pass the motion and not complete the matter by appointing the committee members.

Senator Olson: If that is generally agreed to by the Leader of the Opposition, and all other honourable senators who are listening, then that is acceptable.

Hon. Martial Asselin: You said that you wanted to invite the members of the House of Commons to join with us in establishing a joint committee. When will you do that?

Senator Olson: The message is sent to the House of Commons when the motion is passed.

Senator Asselin: That will be too late.

Senator Olson: Senator Asselin knows that the members of the House of Commons are aware that this motion is before us. When it is passed by the Senate, we will send a formal message to them. I suppose that that is another argument in support of the statement that we should deal with it today rather than tomorrow.

If Senator Flynn is not willing to proceed with this matter today, but will give us the undertaking that the matter will be dealt with tomorrow and that unanimous consent will be given—and I know that that cannot simply be given by the Leader of the Opposition, but that all honourable senators must give that unanimous consent—we would be willing to accept that.

If that is the undertaking the Leader of the Opposition is willing to give us, we should be in a position to deal with this tomorrow, but I hope he will not ask for a further delay or amendments to the motion tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: Quite frankly, after our caucus meeting tomorrow morning, I will be in a position to tell the Leader of the Government what we intend to do with respect to this matter. As I said, if the House of Commons decides not to join with us in establishing a joint committee to examine this matter, we can adopt the resolution and appoint a special committee of the Senate right away.

Senator Olson: I accept that from the leader. I think it would be better if he were to do that right now, but if tomorrow is more convenient, that is fine.

Order stands.

CANADA EVIDENCE BILL, 1982

CONSIDERATION OF INTERIM REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Interim Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs which was presented earlier this day.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, when members of the Canadian Bar Association appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for the second time last week, its President, Mr. Yves Fortier, mentioned to me afterwards that Bill S-33 was probably one of the most important pieces of legislation to the law profession, and, of course, ultimately to the public which that profession serves, that has ever had to be considered by that association. I think the committee itself appreciated and understood that, and it was for that reason we decided that we should make an interim report to the Senate on this bill.

In the copy of the report that I believe has been distributed you will see that the committee heard from a number of witnesses. We heard a range of criticism and comment from representatives of the civil bar, the criminal bar and specialists in particular fields.

As we mention in paragraph 5, there was a fair amount of criticism expressed with respect to the process which had taken place in that a number of witnesses felt that there had not been sufficient consultation with practising members of the bar and with certain specialists in the law of evidence, such as law professors.

We heard from the Department of Justice with respect to the process it had followed, and were told that this bill had taken some four years to prepare. We felt there was some validity to part of the criticism but, on the other hand, the Canadian Bar Association itself admitted that lawyers, because of their very occupation, tend not to get involved in the study of proposed legislation unless they are directly asked to do so, or, in fact, are forced to do so, because they have so many other matters which claim priority.

However, the Canadian Bar Association, after its initial appearance before us, enlisted the aid of approximately 15 different experts in various fields of law directly interested in particular aspects of Bill S-33. As a result of their work, we were presented last week with an enormous brief of detailed comments and criticisms on the entire range of that bill.

The Canadian Bar Association also worked with the Barreau du Québec in order to present a special brief which dealt principally with the possible effects of Bill S-33 on the civil code of Quebec. All of these very detailed briefs were extremely helpful. We have appended them to the reports of the committee's proceedings, and did not try to assess the merits of every point raised at the time because it would have been impossible to do so. In order to do that kind of study, we would probably need another four years. However, officials from the Department of Justice were in attendance throughout the proceedings and obtained copies of all the briefs and submissions that were made.

I suppose it could be said that there was a feeling that the witnesses tended to take some special issue with those provisions in the bill which perhaps would not be as helpful to them, or which were unclear, or might be difficult to carry out, while they tended to ignore, or approve by their silence, other areas which they felt would not assist them in their particular area of advocacy. However, over a broad spectrum the witnesses were extremely fair in their comments. In fact, Mr. Edward Greenspan, Q.C., who appeared on behalf of the criminal section of the Advocates Society, pointed out to us that he felt that the ultimate test in looking at this bill and its provisions had to be fairness not only to the legal profession but also to the defendant and the litigants in a particular law suit. He put the case extremely well and the standard which he suggested is certainly one which the committee could support.

The other area that was mentioned fairly frequently was whether this bill was a code, or was intended to be a code. The Department of Justice reassured us that it was not intended to be a code. I found it rather difficult to extract a clear definition of when a code is actually a code. I believe that is one of the reasons why we have recommended that there should be something in the preamble that states very clearly the intention of the legislation.

There were some groups who came before us simply to speak to specific clauses of the bill, in particular those provisions which would have an impact on evidence in emerging fields of high technology respecting computer evidence. I believe it is a very complex field and one which requires a lot of study and input from professionals and experts. The example which was drawn to our attention by another distinguished member of the bar, Mr. Gordon Henderson, Q.C., of Ottawa, was the use in the bill of words such as "copy", "facsimile" and "true copy", as well as a number of other words that seemed not to have been well defined. There again, in order to have consistency in this bill and to make it uniform with other federal legislation, such as the Criminal Code, a great deal of work will have to be done.

We also were fortunate enough to have the Honourable Mr. Justice Pigeon appear before our committee. He spoke specifically to the French version of the bill which, I think it would be fair to say, he found deplorable in its original state. However, even before he appeared before us the department was already working on a new version which will incorporate, we hope, better language as well as better provisions.

It will be noted that we have recommended that during the revision—which, we understand, the department will be working on this summer—the officials take advantage of the many offers that were made to them by the Canadian Bar Association, and by other professionals and experts, to assist them in the actual drafting or consideration of various provisions in the bill. Honourable senators do not have to be told how useful and beneficial it is to engage the services of professional people and experts because we have done it on many occasions, and in the long run it has saved time and money, not only for the government but also for the public.

The Minister of Justice has been kept informed of the hearings before our committee, and has co-operated with us fully. He indicated that he will be studying with his department all the recommendations that have been made. I anticipate that when a new version of this bill is presented, it will certainly bear the fruit of much of the work that has already been done by this committee, and we will look forward to making another careful study of it at that time.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, on second reading, the Official Opposition gave its support in principle to a bill of this type. We were aware of this after consulting with provincial attorneys general, and we had come to the conclusion that a standard evidence act should be adopted by the Canadian Parliament. As the committee Chairman has said—and I would like in passing to congratulate her on the very patient and able manner in which she chaired that committee—the committee tackled its task in earnest. We heard many experts and specialists in evidence law, such as university professors and retired judges, who not only told us about the defects of this bill, but who also praised some positive elements of the bill now before us.

The most significant submissions were made by the Canadian Bar Association and the Bar of the Province of Quebec. The Canadian Bar Association especially made a very careful clause by clause analysis of the bill and raised such important objections that we concluded that the defects contained in this bill had to be corrected.

The Bar of the Province of Quebec pointed out among other things that the Evidence Act did not apply in the same way to civil and to criminal matters. It was even suggested that we might divide this bill into two parts to deal separately with the Evidence Act as it applies to the Civil Code and to the Criminal Code. What really struck me in the studies on the shortcomings of this bill is that we ended up by concluding that if we were to adopt the bill as it was, an accused would not have much of a chance to plead his case before the courts. We were aware of course that the Crown must defend the rights of society. But an individual also has rights which must be protected when he is defending himself against an accusation. The defence counsels in criminal law who appeared before the committee did say how important it was for us to keep the rights of individuals in mind when studying such a far-reaching piece of legislation, because many of its chapters raised new points of law. I would remind honourable senators that banking institutions came to discuss how computer print-outs might be accepted as prima facie evidence.

We should also talk about the security systems within those financial and banking institutions so as to know how such evidence might be presented by a responsible and competent person who would say to the court: Here is what the computer has to say, and that ought to be taken into consideration by the court.

We also had to discuss how an individual pleading his case against a financial or banking institution might defend himself if he were faced with prima facie evidence such as computer print-outs brought before the court.

Those are all important legal aspects which were debated before the committee, but we of the Official Opposition will accept the report presented by the chairman. We hope that during the summer recess the people who appeared before the committee and the associations of legal experts will co-operate with the officials of the Department of Justice with a view to drafting a bill which will be more acceptable, closer to reality and consistent with the evidence we have heard. That is why the Official Opposition will support the committee report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Since no other senator wishes to take part in this debate, we will consider it closed.

THE ESTIMATES 1983-84

CONSIDERATION OF INTERIM REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, which was presented on Tuesday, June 14, 1983.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, recently I presented the interim report of the National Finance Committee on the main estimates, and it was printed as an appendix to the proceedings of that day. As a result honourable senators have had an opportunity to read it.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What was the date, please?

Senator Everett: I would have to look that up for you. Do you wish me to do that?

Senator Roblin: I do not want to interrupt you.

Hon. Charles McElman: It was June 14.

Senator Everett: I would remind honourable senators that about a year ago the Senate approved the formation of a Subcommittee on Estimates as part of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. That committee was appointed by the Senate under the chairmanship of Senator Doody. Therefore, this is the first year that the subcommittee has handled the estimates.

Honourable senators, I really stand here in the wrong place. Senator Doody should be making his address to the report. However, he has indicated that he wishes to be a little more critical in his remarks than I may wish to be and, therefore, he would rather that I handle the first discussion on the report.

I congratulate the members of the committee, especially the chairman, Senator Doody, and also Mr. Jeff Greenberg of the Parliamentary Centre, who acted as the study director, for an excellent examination of the main estimates and, I believe, an excellent report.

If you read the report, honourable senators, you will see that it indicates that a considerable amount of progress has been made in stabilizing the Canadian economy. The annual inflation rate, recently reported, has dropped to 5.4 per cent and, indeed, the May over April figures indicate an annualized rate of inflation of 4.25 per cent. The rate of inflation is down and appears to be, at this time, dropping.

Unemployment has dropped from 12.8 per cent to 12.4 per cent—a slow drop, indeed, but nonetheless it is going in the right direction. As the economy expands, I think we can have confidence that unemployment will drop further.

The growth in the gross national product in the first quarter is 3.4 per cent in nominal terms and 1.8 per cent annualized in real terms. To put that in context, one has to recognize that for the five quarters prior to that the gross national product in Canada had been negative, not positive. Therefore, the rebound that is taking place is, indeed, taking place faster than was originally expected.

When we look at the exchange rate we find that the Canadian dollar is up against most other currencies and, in fact, has held fairly steady even with the U.S. dollar. It has done this, interestingly, while the spread in interest rates between the United States and Canada has been reduced. At the present time 30-day commercial rates in Canada are about one-quarter of one per cent above those in the United States; and long-term corporate rates have dropped from a spread between Canada and the United States of 2½ per cent to one-half of one per cent at this time. This has happened without a decrease in the exchange rate.

This "happier"—and I say that conditionally—state of events was achieved by a steady reduction in the money supply over a long period of time and by the willingness of the government to accept the flak of high interest rates, high unemployment, and a reduction in economic growth—a difficult thing to do, but that, after all, is what governing is all about.

During that period there was, of course, an expansionary budget, which in fact ran contrary to the setting of monetary policy. It is important to note, however, that, despite that expansionary budget, the deficit was not monetized and therefore, as I will attempt to show later, did not contribute to inflation. In fact, the expansionary budget mitigated the painful effects of the slowing economy on those who could least protect themselves. The final element was the six-and-five policy, which applied the reality that was being achieved in the marketplace to the government sector.

What were the critics of government policy suggesting? What did they say the settings should have been? If I recall correctly—and I think I am accurate—they were against the six-and-five policy; they suggested that we should expand the money supply, that we should balance the budget, that we should lower interest rates and that we should let the exchange rate drop. The undoubted result of that would have been a much larger than contemplated drop in the exchange rate. I think at the time they said that if we allowed interest rates to come down by 2 per cent, the exchange rate would have come down by 6 or 7 per cent. It is pretty clear that, had that policy been followed, we would have been involved in a much, much lower exchange rate than we have today and one lower than that which was predicted by those who suggested that policy. If the effect of that lower exchange rate were combined with their suggested increase in the money supply, we would have been faced with a very high inflation. Had the critics' policy been followed, interest rates indeed would have dropped for a time, but as inflation took hold and was driven to new highs, so would interest rates have been driven to new highs. People would have suffered more under that suggested policy than they have under the policy that has been followed. It was difficult and required a great deal of patience, but the government, in this case, did the right thing and had the political fortitude to stick with it. The result we face today is an economy that is prepared for real growth so that the benefits will not be destroyed by the effects of inflation.

In the report of the subcommittee, one of the areas that was examined and is of great concern to people who view the economy today is that of budget deficits. For the year ending March 31, 1982, the federal deficit was $21.1 billion. For the year ending March 31, 1983, the federal deficit is $25.2 billion, and for the year ending March 31, 1984, it is estimated to be $31.3 billion.

The important issue respecting a deficit, in economic terms, is whether or not it is being monetized. In other words, is its size so great that the central bank is forced to increase the money supply in order to accommodate it? This is not happening, and I quote the Governor of the Bank of Canada in saying that it is not happening yet. That word "yet" is very important.

Another problem with the deficit which has been of concern to people is whether or not there is crowding out; that is, competition between the government and the private sector for the available funds. Crowding out is not happening at this point because there is an astonishingly high savings rate in Canada. In addition, there is, of course, reduced activity and reduced requirements for funds in the private sector.

Honourable senators, the deficit has two components. First, it has a cyclical component, which is composed of those stabilizing elements of government spending such as unemployment insurance, which increase expenditures when the economy is operating below capacity, and revenues, which, of course, are reduced when the economy is operating below capacity. The other element of the budget deficit is the structural component, which is what is left after the cyclical component has been removed.

How large is the structural or continuing element of the deficit? At March 31, 1982, the deficit was $22.1 billion and represented 6.3 per cent of the gross national product. The structural element of the deficit at that time was 3 per cent of the GNP; that is, almost half of the 6.3 per cent.

When we deal with the cyclical and structural elements of the budget, we come to the concept that is known as full employment budgeting. This is a means of telling whether at a particular time a budget deficit is stimulating the economy. The deficit is stimulative if, at full employment, it still exists. The Department of Finance use an unemployment rate of 6.3 to 7 per cent in order to determine this fact. They do not call it the full employment rate, but use the euphemism "the average rate of labour utilization." However, I choose to call it the full employment rate. If we estimate the gross national product in 1983 to be $374.5 billion and use an unemployment rate of 6.3 to 7 per cent, even then our deficit would be 3.1 per cent of that gross national product. So we come to the conclusion that the deficit is stimulative.

We then have to look at whether or not that deficit has been damaging to the economy. In one way, honourable senators, it has been damaging to the economy. It has certainly made the economy less responsive to monetary policy; there is no question of that. However, as I said earlier, it did help mitigate the effects upon the less protected members of society of the downturn in the economy caused by the restriction of monetary growth. Indeed, when the economy went into recession, fiscal policy was correctly set at that point to stimulate the economy back towards a reasonable rate of growth. The deficit was not monetized and there was no crowding out.

I would say, therefore, that on balance the effect of the deficit was probably good. In future, however, the effect might be quite different. I believe that a good deal has been achieved by the recent economic policies of the government and the central bank, but there are some very disquieting signs on the horizon. They arise mainly out of the fact that expectations of continuing inflation are still deeply embedded in people's psyches. People say to themselves that inflation is licked, but deep down, if you probe, it will be found that they believe the price of land, paintings, collectibles and goods are going to go back up again. Superficially they will tell you inflation has been licked, but deep down they believe that there is going to be inflation in the future. I think that makes people less resistant to price increases. In fact, if there are price increases they react to them by increasing their rate of acquisition. In other words, under this situation of continuing expectations an increase in the money supply can be translated into a nominal growth of GNP rather than a real growth, and, of course, the difference between nominal and real is the rate of inflation.

Then we have to deal with whether or not the money supply is being increased. First of all, we have the problem in the world economy of liquidity. We have the incredible size of the non-performing loans of banks in Canada and the United States. I do not have the exact figure, but I believe the Royal Bank reported in its last quarterly report that its non-performing loans (loans on which the interest is not being paid and no repayment is being made) at the present time run between $2 billion and $3 billion. That is for one Canadian bank, and that is repeated in all the Canadian banks, and I would think in the majority of the American banks. We all know the situation with the less developed countries in respect of their international loans. The estimate is that they now have $700 billion to $800 billion of loans, most of which are non-performing. This is of considerable concern to anybody who looks at the economy, and I for one believe that it is having a real effect on the settings of monetary policy in Canada, the United States and throughout the world.

I believe that the central banks are afraid to carry on anything less than a fairly expansionary, and maybe a highly expansionary, monetary policy because of this liquidity problem. I believe that they got to the point in their restrictive monetary policy where they realized that if they went any further they were in danger of causing major defaults and a world-wide depression, and so they reversed that policy.

Indeed, monetary policy appears to be highly expansionary. Now, it is difficult to tell, because we have abandoned the publishing of monetary targets in both Canada and the United States. We did that because they were supposedly unreliable. My reaction is that the central banks must use some target figures, and I cannot believe that they are so arcane that they cannot tell people what their target is and how they are doing in achieving it. That raises the suspicion in my mind that the central banks are confronted with a liquidity problem; they want to expand the money supply at a higher rate, and they do not want to have to explain that fact by virtue of having a target.

At the present time, on the latest figures M-1 in Canada is growing at 8.6 per cent a year, and M-1A at 13.2 per cent, considerably above the targets at the time they were abandoned. That is despite the fact that when the central bank abandoned the target Mr. Bouey said that the target was unreliable because it understated the actual situation. Well, if it understated it, then 8.6 per cent on M-1 and 13.2 per cent on M-1A are even higher than they appear. The answer when you confront them with that, as we did Mr. Drabble in committee the other day, is that the public is keeping larger money balances in a period of lower interest rates. Obviously, if the public keeps higher money balances, that increases M-1 and reduces the other aggregates such as M-2 and M-3. So they are just saying there is a transfer of funds because the public is willing to keep higher money balances in a period of lower interest rates. But interest rates are not that low. Historically they are still pretty high. Secondly, we have gone through a period when the public was trained to get interest on its balances, and I do not believe for a moment that they have given that up and have suddenly started putting their money in current accounts and not getting a return on it.

I am therefore very suspicious of this business of the central bank abandoning monetary targets and trying to explain it away by saying that they are not reliable or that the public all of a sudden is keeping larger money balances. I contend that there are evidences that the money supply in Canada and the United States is growing far faster than it should be, and it is not in the best interests of the economy. It may be that the central banks have no control over it, but that in fact is what appears to be happening.

I did say that the deficit was not a problem in the past. I believe the deficit could become a real problem in a revived economy. The Department of Finance estimates that by 1987 the deficit will still be 3 per cent of the gross national product even though the economy is growing rapidly. I have seen an estimate which indicates that in the United States the deficit in 1987 will be 5 per cent to 6 per cent of the gross national product.

One of the things that we were depending on in Canada to reduce the deficit was energy revenues. We thought that that would put us on side—tremendous revenues flowing to the federal government as a result of the negotiations with Alberta and the National Energy Policy. It is interesting to note, as we say in the report, that the expected federal revenues from energy between 1981 and 1986 were figured to be $38.8 billion. Based on the April 1983 budget it now appears that between 1981 and 1986 they are going to be $13.8 billion, which is a reduction in revenue of $25 billion. Unless there is a big change we shall not be able to depend on energy taxes to overcome our deficit.

This deficit could cause one of two things to happen. There could be a competition for funds as the economy revives. Here is the government sector requiring some $31.3 billion in 1984, and a revived private sector requiring money for capacity expansion and for other reasons. There could be a competition for funds, which could result in high interest rates. Or, what is more likely to happen, there could be monetization of the deficit in order to avoid that competition; in other words, another even more egregious, increase in the money supply, thereby setting off an inflationary trend. And one must remember that if we increase the money supply today, it will be 18 months before the total effect of that increase will be realized in the economy.

So I congratulate the government and the central bank on what has been achieved; but I am concerned that because of the deficit and the monetary policy that seems to be in place at the present time, we are in danger. Everyone is talking about the fact that the economy will be slow to rebound. If we look at the figures, we find that the economy is rebounding at the same rate as in the United States, on track with every other comeback from a postwar recession.

In committee we were terribly disquieted by the Minister of Finance who said that the effect of expansionary monetary and fiscal policies is not a matter of concern because of the low level of utilization of industrial capacity and the high unemployment rate. Honourable senators, that is what we have said every time at this stage in a rebound from a recession, that because utilization of industrial capacity is low, and the unemployment rate is high, we can stimulate the economy and not run the risk of generating inflation.

There is no question that increase in the money supply, whether caused by liquidity problems, a political desire to get the economy going again or the size of the deficit, will go into the economy. It goes to either real growth or to inflation. Today everyone is saying "You don't have to worry about it. Look at wage settlements. They are only running around 5 per cent to 7 per cent". Honourable senators, they are no guide. Wage settlements, as His Honour the Speaker will tell you, are a lagging indicator. The working men, the labour unions, react to inflation late, not early.

We have achieved a great deal in this economy at the cost of a great deal of pain, and I am concerned that the present policies that are in place—not only here but also in the United States—could destroy everything that we have achieved, and we could very easily find ourselves in virulent inflation in the next year or two.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Everett a question? In an earlier debate he pointed out that the formula for calculating inflation in the United States is different from that used in Canada and that under a comparable set of circumstances the Canadian formula indicates a higher rate of inflation than the American formula. Does the honourable senator have any figures to indicate what the present Canadian rate of inflation would be if computed on the same formula as the American system? A figure of 5.4 is the Canadian formula. What would it be under the American formula?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Nil.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I do not believe anyone has any accurate quantification of that figure. It is not that our method of determining the consumer price index results in a lower figure than in the United States, but that ours is less sensitive to the changes that are taking place. First, the Americans take a monthly inflation rate and annualize it to the twelfth power. Our inflation rate is the annual difference over a period of one year. In addition, in connection with the housing statistics in America, which represent a large component of the consumer price index, I believe they take the mortgage rates that exist for that month, whereas we take mortgage rates that are amortized over a five-year period. It means that when inflation is dropping, Canada will appear to have a higher inflation rate than the United States. It is also true that when inflation goes back up again, Canada again will lag and at that stage will appear to have a lower rate of inflation than the United States. I know that Statistics Canada considers that its method is the better one, and, indeed, I believe that the Americans are giving serious consideration to changing to a similar method. However, our method of calculating does not mean that our rate is always higher than the American rate. It is simply that due to the way we calculate it we lag behind them.

When Dr. Courchene appeared before our committee he indicated some difference, but I cannot say for certain what it was. I believe that even Governor Bouey, when he appeared before the committee, at a time when inflation rates were considerably higher, indicated that at one point the rate might be 3 per cent or 4 per cent less in Canada if it were calculated on the American method. That was at a time when interest rates were falling quite precipitously. It is almost impossible to calculate it, because it is changing all the time.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the honourable senator, which is inspired by the honourable senator's words of congratulation to the members of the committee for the report. I am a member of the committee, but I did not see the report until after it was presented to the Senate. I mentioned that fact to Senator Everett at the time. Therefore any acceptance of credit for the report on my part would be under false pretenses, since I had not seen the report, although in committee I moved that we report to the Senate or that a draft report be prepared. My question is: Do the other members of the committee deserve the honourable senator's congratulations? Apart from Senator Doody, did any of them see the report, presented by Senator Everett, or a draft of it, even though I did not?

Senator Everett: First, the report was printed as an appendix to the proceedings of the day that I made the report. It was also distributed to every senator on that date. Senator Godfrey is right in that the members of the committee did not see the report before it was presented. I should like to quote from the minutes of the committee for June 7, 1983:

> It was moved by Senator Godfrey and agreed
> That a report upon the expenditures proposed in the main estimates be prepared and presented to the Senate.

It is perhaps fair to indicate that there was an oversight. The matter was in the hands of the subcommittee, and they thought the motion gave them the right to make the report without further reference. We have done that in the past, but generally it has been agreed that the report should be left in the hands of the chairman or the steering committee. However, that was not the case on this occasion and the committee implied from Senator Godfrey's motion that it could go ahead and present the report. I have to admit that Senator Godfrey has a point.

Senator Godfrey: I do not deserve the honourable senator's compliments.

• (1600)

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I would like to make a brief comment on the impact of the national deficit, to which Senator Everett has referred.

First, I congratulate him on the address he has given this afternoon. It was a very thoughtful analysis of the financial problems and the economic situation as they prevail in this country today. He has underscored, not merely some of the present indications of economic recovery, but the fact that in that recovery there are very latent dangers that may arise in the future to which we should not shut our eyes.

I call honourable senators' attention to one of the characteristics of our national deficit, which is cause for very deep concern. Very often you hear comparisons between the deficits of the United States government and the deficits of the Canadian government. If the comparison is made on the basis of population, the American deficit, which is running about $200 billion this year, is roughly equivalent to $21 billion in Canada where we have approximately one tenth of the population and a much smaller overall economy. What is often overlooked is that while our deficit on a population basis is even more severe than that confronting the United States, the great bulk of the U.S. deficit arises from its defence program.

The United States defence program this year will cost in the vicinity of $265 billion. Theoretically, if the United States spent only $65 billion on national defence they would have a balanced budget. I say "theoretically" because, obviously, with expenditures of that kind you cannot turn them on and off like a tap. Nevertheless, the huge U.S. deficit of $200 billion is still significantly less than their total annual expenditures on national defence alone.

While Canada's deficit is higher than that of the United States on a per capita basis, our expenditures on national defence are minimal. That fact directs our attention to a characteristic of our national deficit that is serious because it indicates that the bulk of our national deficit arises from costs which are much more difficult to control than are capital expenditures such as expenditures on national defence. Most of our deficit arises from built-in costs in our social services and domestic programs where the possibility of curtailment is more restricted and far more difficult to deal with than is the case when you are dealing primarily with capital expenditures which can be deferred or cut back without the serious domestic impact that would result from a comparable cut made in expenditures that relate to social services.

To me, this fact is a great cause for concern. We have built up in our country a structure of public expenditures resulting from a very extensive program of social services, which may be very commendable and of which we probably can be very proud, but that does not alter the fact that they carry a very high price tag.

Through the interventionist philosophy of the government of this country we have squandered billions of additional dollars and are committed to billions more as a result of government intervention in many fields which many people feel the government has no need to be involved in at all. It is the fact that our staggering deficits are rising largely from these types of expenditures which preclude making a meaningful comparison between our deficit and that of a nation which is spending $265 billion on national defence. We are in a much more vulnerable position. I could not agree more with what Senator Everett has said, that while our deficit may be manageable now, it has in it characteristics which down the road may lead us into very serious trouble, unless both the size of the deficit and the major factors creating the deficit are recognized and remedial steps are taken soon.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Everett one question relative to the size of the deficit in Canada. Did the committee hear any testimony as to the sum total of the federal deficit when coupled with the provincial deficits, as opposed to the total of the federal and state deficits in the United States? I believe that the sum total of provincial and federal deficits in Canada is proportionately greater than the total of the U.S. federal and state deficits.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, there was some examination of the total deficit of the federal, provincial and municipal governments in Canada as related to the gross national product, and how much of that total deficit is structural, cyclical and, in general, how it relates to the estimates of the gross national product for the next few years. I do not believe a comparison was made with the United States on that basis. However, I shall obtain whatever figures I can for the honourable senator and send them along to him.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

HISTORIC ANNIVERSARIES

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Monday, June 27, 1983:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to three historic anniversaries: (a) the bicentennial celebration of the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists; (b) Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day; and (c) the discovery of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to draw your attention to a very important event in the history of Canada taking place this year, the bicentennial anniversary of the arrival in Canada of the United Empire Loyalists. I should also like to draw to the attention of honourable senators the historical importance of two anniversaries which occur on June 24—the proclamation of St. John the Baptist as the patron Saint of French Canadians and the first landing of Giovanni Caboto somewhere on the Atlantic Coast of Canada in 1497. I should like to say a few words about each one of these anniversaries. They will help us understand the duality of Canada and the multicultural nature of Canada's ethnic structure.

First, I shall say a few words about the United Empire Loyalists. As is well known, the Loyalists were residents of the American colonies during the events which led up to the rebellion there in 1775. They supported the Crown throughout the War of Independence and, this war having been lost, either chose or were driven to immigrate to the British colonies of Quebec, which then included Ontario, and Nova Scotia, out of which New Brunswick was later formed.

The Loyalists came from all classes of society, although the rich, the urban, the official, and the conservative contributed disproportionately to their ranks. While they all had a common allegiance to the British Crown, it is a mistake to assume that all the Loyalists were British in national origin. They were not; although the British naturally predominated, many would have considered themselves dissenting Americans, while others were of German or Dutch extraction.

Great Britain's Indian allies also deserve the designation Loyalist. They, too, stood by the Crown in its war with radical republicanism, and in its aftermath many of them were forced to give up their traditional homeland south of the Great Lakes and to resettle in what was to become Canada. In the past, we have given all too little prominence, in our histories and celebrations, to the role played by Britain's Indian allies in the American War of Independence, and in the defeat of American efforts to spread their political ideas to Canada by force of arms, most particularly in the War of 1812.

In order to commemorate the arrival of the Loyalists in Canada two hundred years ago, ceremonies will be held in New Brunswick this year and in Ontario next year. The celebrations in New Brunswick have already begun although the main ceremonies will not take place until later this summer.

I am sure that honourable senators on both sides of the house will join me in paying tribute to the Loyalists, a sturdy, stable, industrious and creative group of immigrants who came to Canada when the country badly needed additional settlers if she was to continue to hold the northern portion of the continent separate from the United States. Their coming led to the formation of the provinces of Ontario and New Brunswick and accelerated the development of responsible government in the years to come.

In the course of my research I have also discovered that in this chamber there is at least one descendant of the United Empire Loyalists—Senator Duff Roblin. Even more startling, my research revealed that one of Senator Roblin's ancestors was Cesare Alberti, who came to North America in the year of Our Lord 1640 on a Dutch ship named Koning David, which means "King David". How the name of Cesare Alberti was transformed into Duff Roblin I can't explain.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Neither can I.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): There are many things we cannot explain.

Senator Bosa: I am, however, a great admirer of Senator Roblin and I was so even before I discovered that our respective ancestors might have had an ethnic affinity. I admire Senator Roblin for his oratorical skills. Oh, how I wish I could articulate my ideas with the same clarity and ease as he does. Senator Roblin has a vast and comprehensive knowledge of so many intricate and complex subjects. I admire his dignified comportment in this chamber. Senator Roblin is a real credit to the Senate. Obviously, he has inherited all these positive characteristics from his ancestors. Cesare Alberti was a pioneer and must have possessed many positive qualities, but it is quite possible that he might also have been a little politically misguided, a condition that has obviously filtered down through his descendants.

It is also fitting that I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that French Canadians and those of French Canadian descent all over Canada and North America have celebrated on June 24 the festival of St. John the Baptist. Initially a popular festival of very early summer, St. Jean Baptiste day became by the mid-19th century a national as well as a religious celebration, symbolizing both the pride of Canadians at having discovered, explored and settled a vast continent and their determination to maintain a healthy, creative and progressive French-speaking civilization here in North America.

The French settlers of the seventeenth century brought with them to the shores of the St. Lawrence the customs of the regions they came from. In 1636, the Relations des Jésuites told of the fires of St. John, a regular phenomenon during the entire period of New France, accompanied by religious ceremonies consisting of sacred hymns and prayers. Unaffected by the British conquest, the custom has remained a part of a number of popular festivities celebrated by the descendants of these settlers. At that time, however, there was no particular patriotic connotation.

On June 24, 1834, a banquet organized by Ludger Duvernay took place on rue Saint-Antoine, in the garden of a barrister named John McDonnell: sixty people attended the gathering. Among the speakers that day were Jacques Viger, Mayor of Montreal, who presided over the banquet, and Louis-Hippolyte Lafontaine. An account of the banquet, published in La Minerve on June 26, mentioned 25 toasts, the first of which was "to the people, the source of all legitimate authority". The celebrants proclaimed St. John the Baptist the patron saint of the French Canadian people and decided as well to celebrate his birthday every year. The newspaper Le Canadien underscored the aptness of this official recognition given to the saint.

An act of Parliament assented to in 1849 made the association Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Montréal a civil corporation. The statutes and by-laws adopted on February 28, 1878 ensured the association's smooth functioning. Contained in these statues were the group's main objectives:

1. To unite all Canadians;

2. To provide them with a reason to come together, and the opportunity to fraternize and become better acquainted;

3. To cement the unity that must prevail between members of the same family;

4. To promote, through every legitimate means, the national and industrial interests of the Canadian people and, in particular, those of the members of the Association;

5. To create, through annual subscriptions, a fund that will be used for charitable works, to aid members beset by adversity and illness, and provide proper burial for those among them who die in poverty;

6. And finally, to encourage all who will belong to practice mutually all that which honour and brotherhood prescribe to children of the same nation.

And for the efficacy and prosperity of its work, the Association places itself under the protection of the great St. John the Baptist, whom it has adopted as patron and whom it will solemnly honour on the 24th of June each year.

In 1977 St. Jean Baptiste day was decreed by the association as the national holiday which is known as the Fête Nationale des Québécois. We all join in wishing French Canadians a belated but sincere "bonne fête".

June 24 is also the anniversary of the date on which Giovanni Caboto made his first landfall somewhere on the Atlantic coast of Canada, most probably in the vicinity of Cape Breton, and then continued to explore the shores of Labrador and Newfoundland. Since he was in the service of King Henry VII, he claimed these lands in the name of the English Crown, thus establishing an early British claim to North America.

Yet it is not well known that Giovanni Caboto was an Italian from Venice since he is usually referred to by the anglicized version of his name, John Cabot, or as Jean Cabot, in Canadian history textbooks.

The Canadian Historical Sites and Monuments Board is considering erecting two identical plaques to commemorate this historical event, one in Cape Breton and the other in Newfoundland as it is not proven where he landed first. I should like to congratulate the members of the board for this initiative. There should be more recognition given to the pioneers who discovered, explored and developed this country.

I have one great regret, though, about the decision made by the Historical Sites and Monuments Board. Giovanni Caboto never changed his name to either John Cabot or Jean Cabot. Notwithstanding the documented evidence that I have made available to the board, the members have decided to phrase the wording on the plaque in such a way that would lead one to believe that Caboto had, in fact, changed his name. I regret this very much and I hope members of the board will, in their wisdom, see the merit of reconsidering their decision before the unveiling of the plaques.

Honourable senators, I believe that we, as Canadians, do too little to honour our nation's founders and early pioneers. There are statues here and there, sometimes a small museum dedicated to one particular individual, a few local and national celebrations, but there is very little done on a country-wide basis. Hockey has its Hall of Fame to honour the players, coaches and managers who have contributed most to the development of the game, so have baseball and football, but we lack any real equivalent dedicated to the graphic depiction of the exploits of early Canadians.

A new Museum of Man or Hall of the Pioneers is long overdue, but there is an even greater need for a museum dedicated to the memory of early Canadians, to the Indians and Inuit, to the early European navigators who first explored our coastlines, to the explorers who penetrated inland, and the settlers from many of the world's nations who cleared the fields and established a new society.

While a major, centrally-located collection dedicated to our founders is important, it is equally if not more important that we arrange for smaller travelling displays. Canada is a vast country, and wherever we locate our major museums, they will not be readily accessible to most Canadians. This helps to discourage our learning about other regions that may be thousands of miles distant from our homes. The problem is particularly great for young students in smaller communities who may not have access even to regional collections to supplement their Canadian studies. The provision of travelling displays compact enough to be set up in local schools, municipal offices and even meeting halls could do much to enrich the education of our children and to knit our communities closer together. Larger travelling displays could also be put together for showing at regional museums.

Honourable senators, I do not believe we should wait another two hundred years to do greater honour to our nation's founders and pioneers. The time to begin is now. The federal government has a legitimate constitutional role in promoting national unity, interprovincial and inter-regional understanding. It has an equally important interest in promoting greater understanding among the many ethnic groups who, together, constitute our cultural mosaic, and in illustrating their role in the exploration and settlement of the country.

As we approach Canada Day, July 1, let us give serious consideration to honouring Canada's founders and pioneers in a way that all Canadians will identify with and cause us to feel a sense of pride in our history.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Bosa tells me that it is possible that some other senators may wish to speak on this debate, so I shall move its adjournment for at least one day in order to give them an opportunity to participate.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-165

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I move motion No. 2 standing in my name, I would ask leave of the Senate to change "Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce" to "Standing Senate Committee on National Finance".

The reason I ask that that be done is that the National Finance Committee did a special study on regional economic expansion, and I think it would be a more appropriate committee to deal with this bill than the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. If I have that leave, I will move the motion, and then comment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Then, I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-165, intituled: "An Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

Honourable senators, if I may explain, the plan is to have a meeting of the committee tomorrow morning at 9.30, and the intention is that the minister will appear.

There are two other motions standing in my name—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps I may interrupt my honourable friend to ask him whether it is necessary for this committee to meet at 9.30 tomorrow morning. As the deputy leader well knows, there are other obligations which members of the Senate have on Wednesday mornings. It would, however, be possible to have this committee meet later on in the morning, say at 11 o'clock, but 9.30 o'clock is not suitable.

I would also point out to him that, as yet, we have no indication of a firm nature that the bill will, indeed, be considered by the other place in toto either tomorrow or the next day, and if that is not done tomorrow, it will not be done at all. Does the Deputy Leader of the Government have any information on the status of this bill in the other place that would lead him to think that we will get it for consideration before the end of the debate tomorrow? If he has such information, I would be glad to hear it.

In any event, I suggest to him that the time of 9.30 a.m. is ill-chosen.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that time was chosen after consultation with the chairman of the committee and consideration of the information I had as to the availability of the minister. If the time of that committee meeting can be changed to 11 o'clock, I will leave that to the chairman and the other members of the committee—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The House will be sitting tomorrow at 11.00 a.m.

Senator Frith: I was merely announcing the plan, and if it creates some problems, we will have to try to adjust it. Perhaps Senator Everett has something to add to that, but before I sit down I shall give you some further information that I have. The bill is now before committee in the other place. They are dealing with some amendments and expect to give it third reading tomorrow by 1 o'clock.

Senator Flynn: Eleven o'clock would be fine.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Did the honourable senator say that the other place was sitting at 11 o'clock tomorrow?

Senator Flynn: Yes. Under their present rules they sit from 11.00 a.m. until 11.00 p.m., except for the lunch break.

Senator Frith: That is why I expect it will receive third reading at 12.45 p.m.

Senator Everett: That means, then, that there are no national caucus meetings tomorrow?

Senator Flynn: Yes, from 9.30 a.m. until 11.00 a.m.

Senator Everett: The other option presented to me was that the committee might meet at 8 o'clock this evening.

Senator Roblin: Speaking for myself, I have no objection to meeting at 8 o'clock tonight.

Senator Everett: In that case, I will inquire if the minister can be available for 8 o'clock this evening.

• (1630)

Senator Flynn: I said one or the other.

Senator Everett: I will then excuse myself and determine whether the minister is available for 8 o'clock this evening.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps I can make a general comment as to what legislation I think we are probably looking at for this week. All I am doing is sharing with honourable senators the information I have and my opinion based on that information.

I think there is still a good chance that we will receive three bills, one being the one just referred to, Bill C-165; another being Bill C-163, respecting the establishment of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. I shall move that the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to study the subject-matter of Bill C-163. That bill is also scheduled to be voted on at third reading by 1 o'clock tomorrow. That is my understanding, but I am unable to say whether that is a house order or a state of the agreement at the present time.

We also expect to receive Bill C-159, respecting the Tax Court of Canada and the Judges Act. As I said last evening, there is a distinct possibility that that bill will be split into two.

[Senator Frith.]

So, there is a possibility that we may receive Bill C-163, Bill C-165, Bill C-159 and Bill C-149, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act. I see an old salt, Senator Murray, shaking his head. I take it he thinks that it is unlikely we will receive a bill about freshwater fish. In any event, I am going to move that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to study its subject-matter.

On the basis of the information I have now, the other bills that are in play, if I may use that expression, are much less likely to be referred to the Senate tomorrow.

AVIATION SAFETY

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-163

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of yesterday, moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-163, intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

He said: Again, honourable senators, the information I have is that third reading of this bill is likely to be voted on by 1:00 p.m. tomorrow. That means that we will receive it sometime tomorrow afternoon. Whether the Senate will be in a position to pass it, or whether the committee will be in a position to study the subject-matter of the bill, are matters that we will have to see the development of, but I ask that the committee at least have that authority.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in addition to the three bills I have just referred to, Bill C-159, Bill C-163 and Bill C-165, there is also the possibility that we may receive Bill C-149, but as far as the others are concerned, I think the possibilities are less likely.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): We will wait until tomorrow to see what happens respecting amendment of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, because the committee will not be in a position to deal with that bill tomorrow, I am quite sure.

Senator Frith: I do not want to force the issue. I gave notice of this motion yesterday, but if—

Senator Flynn: If there is need we can adopt that motion tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Frith: Then I shall ask that the motion that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to study the subject-matter of Bill C-149 stand until tomorrow.

It appears that Bill C-95, an act to provide for government operated pool systems, is fading as a possibility. Yesterday we gave the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science authority to study the subject matter of that bill. Therefore, to complete that picture, although it may turn out to be a brutum fulmen, I think we should give that committee authority to meet tomorrow while the Senate is sitting.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, 29th June, 1983, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I require some clarification, honourable senators. We are talking about the gambling bill, are we?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Roblin: Is there not a committee meeting scheduled for 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon with respect to that bill?

Senator Frith: Yes. I am now requesting that the committee have power to sit while the Senate is sitting.

Senator Roblin: I see. The Senate sits at 2 p.m., the committee is scheduled to meet at 1 p.m., and you want to cover all possibilities.

Senator Frith: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO TRAVEL OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. George van Roggen, pursuant to notice of Monday, June 27, 1983, moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was authorized by the Senate on 16th June, 1982, to examine and report upon Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, be empowered to travel from place to place outside Canada for the purpose of such examination.

He said: Honourable senators, by way of explanation, and before the question is put, I should mention that approximately one year ago, when the Senate authorized the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to undertake a study of Canada's relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa, there were one or two comments of levity in the Senate. As I recall, one senator asked how he could get on the committee, and another said, "When do we leave?"

Since that time, the committee has conducted a continuing series of in-depth studies on the subject. I, as the chairman, and indeed the steering committee and the committee itself, have given a great deal of thought to the need for travel relative to this study, and the obvious problems confronting a committee of this size in travelling. We were persuaded that that was not possible for two reasons, the first being that the whole committee could not undertake travel in the area under study for no other reason, than that it is larger than most committees of the Senate. It was enlarged to accommodate the Subcommittee on National Defence, the members of which have not been active in the study of Canada's relations with the Middle East and North Africa.

The second reason for arriving at that conclusion was that we were persuaded, not only by ourselves but by others we spoke to, that the report of the committee when prepared would lack credibility if we had not been upon the ground at all.

As difficult as it will be to select from among those who have been assiduous in their attendance at the meetings of the committee we have held so far, we have agreed in the steering committee and in the committee itself that a subcommittee be struck so that a small number of the committee members might visit on the ground and there meet with senior people in the governments of the countries concerned so as to give additional weight and expertise to the report.

I might say that for the moment I would leave the actual number and the consequent budget to negotiations between myself and the members of the Standing Senate Committee on International Economy, Budgets and Administration. I might say we are considering at the moment a comparatively small subcommittee attending any travels in that area.

• (1640)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Did my honourable friend say ten?

Senator van Roggen: I did not give a number.

Senator Roblin: Did you give a date?

Senator van Roggen: The number ten was used in some preliminary discussions in committee. We have given further thought to the subject in examining costs and so on, and I think I would start by negotiating with the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration on a number smaller than that.

Senator Roblin: I am really not trying to get into a discussion on this subject, but I thought the honourable senator said ten. My other question is as to whether he can give us a date.

Senator van Roggen: We have considered the last two weeks of September as an appropriate time to go but there are so many religious holidays, both Moslem and Jewish, at that time that it would be rather difficult to maintain the continuity of our trip, so the date might be in early October.

I discussed this matter with the Minister of State for External Affairs who encouraged us to go on this trip. He is planning a trip there some time this fall and, obviously, the two trips should not coincide or overlap. Therefore, we have to wait until we have some idea as to when he will be going and try to schedule our dates accordingly.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of Monday, June 27, 1983, moved:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples; Now Therefore the Senate of Canada resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

[Senator van Roggen.]

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussion on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

He said: Honourable senators, as I mentioned yesterday, the intention is to proceed with this motion concurrently rather than consecutively with the House of Commons. It has already been introduced in that house by the Minister of Justice, and I am informed there is an order there that it will be voted on by 4.45 tomorrow afternoon, but I am not sure that that is accurate. In any event, since we are proceeding concurrently, I am introducing the motion here this afternoon so that we are at least keeping pace with the other place.

Honourable senators, the sponsor of the resolution in the other place is the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, who, as most of you will know, is a former highly respected law professor as well as a very widely respected lawyer. I think it might be on a technical-legal question of this kind presumptuous of me to try to improve on his introduction of the subject in the other house, but I have some of his notes here as well as some of my own.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Let us hear your notes.

Senator Frith: I have no intention to parrot his words, but I should like to point out that, essentially, I will be following his analysis and marshalling of the material, although not word for word.

Honourable senators will recognize that this is the first of the resolutions under the new formula for the amendment of the Constitution. The Minister of Justice and many others feel that it is rather fitting that the first one should relate to rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal people.

First, what I propose to do is refer to those provisions in the Constitution that relate to aboriginal rights. Secondly, I shall turn to the resolution to see how it is proposed to amend them. Thirdly, I shall make some reference to the Constitutional Conference that was held on the subject. Fourthly, I will explain the effect of each of the suggested amendments and ask for support.

Let us look at the present Constitution. There are three references to the aboriginal peoples of Canada in the Constitution Act, 1982. Section 25 is entitled "General" and the marginal note is: "Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter", which is a good summary of what the section provides. That section states:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including
> (a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and
> (b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

I should like to underline "that may be acquired" because those words will become significant when we look at the resolution.

The next section is section 35 and it comprises all of Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982. This is the second reference to the aboriginal peoples of Canada in our new Constitution. The large title is "Rights of The Aboriginal Peoples of Canada." The marginal note of the section is: "Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights." Section 35(1) states:

> The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

The next marginal note is: "Definition of 'aboriginal peoples of Canada.' " Subsection (2) states:

> In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Honourable senators will perhaps have noted that as far as we are able to determine, Canada is one of the very few countries whose constitutions recognize and affirm the existence of rights of aboriginal peoples and, insofar as I am aware, section 35(2) is the first and only place so far in either the statutes or in the Constitution where the term "aboriginal peoples of Canada" is defined.

The third section dealing with aboriginal peoples of Canada is in Part IV, section 37. Part IV is entitled: "Constitutional Conference." The marginal note for section 37(1) refers to the "Constitutional conference." That section states:

> A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

The marginal note for subsection (2) is: "Participation of aboriginal peoples." That subsection states:

> The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

● (1650)

The marginal note at item No. 3 is "Participation of territories." It states:

> The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Honourable senators will note that in 1982 a sort of tag end was left in section 35 because it referred to the need to call a constitutional conference within a one-year period. That conference agenda had to include an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada.

Section 35 refers to "The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada—"and refers only to rights that are aboriginal in nature or have been or may be acquired by treaty. The section deals with existing rights—what the minister in his speech in the other place described as "Canada's historical obligation to its native peoples."

Section 37 differs on the subject of rights. It speaks of the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada. The wording of section 37 is broader than that contained in section 35. The rights in section 37 need not exist at the present time; rather, it looks to rights not yet identified and is not constrained by the terms "aboriginal" or "treaty." Section 37 concerns itself with the rights of the aboriginal peoples as they should be as well as what they are. Of course, the two sections are linked.

Honourable senators will know that since the new Constitution came into effect many people have had recourse to the courts in order to enforce rights and to obtain definition of rights contained in the Constitution Act. Section 37 makes a special provision for the aboriginal peoples to have recourse by what might be called a "political path" to seek identification and definition not only of rights now contained in the Constitution, but of rights to be included in the future.

Three elements form the basis of the framework of the special position of the aboriginal peoples in Canada that I have just described.

The first is section 25, which protects the rights of the aboriginal peoples by a rule of non-derogation. You will remember that the marginal note to section 25 was "Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter."

The second is section 35 which recognizes existing aboriginal and treaty rights.

The third is the broader section, section 37, which provides for inclusion of further rights of aboriginal peoples in the Constitution and assures their participation in discussion of their rights.

Honourable senators, let us now look at the resolution which is contained in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate. Bearing in mind the present provisions, let us look at what the resolution suggests. The resolution contains a preamble referring to the Constitution Act, 1982. It then refers to the method of amendment. The next paragraph mentions the Canadian society continuing to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that the Constitution guarantees. The resolution then refers to the transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state.

The following paragraph comments directly on the historical and equitable fitness of the early exercise of that full authority as it should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples.

[Senator Frith.]

Pursuant to the formula, the Senate of Canada resolves that His Excellency the Governor General—we need not refer to the House of Commons in our particular resolution—be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution. Honourable senators, that is rather significant because, as you know, previously such a resolution would make an address to Her Majesty. The new amending formula simply requires a proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal, as requested, in accordance with the amending formula.

The resolution then outlines the first amendment. It states:

> Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

Honourable senators will remember that section 25(b) of the Constitution Act said that there would be no derogation from > any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

The first amendment deals with rights that exist and not just rights that may be acquired.

The second amendment proposed in the resolution deals with section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Honourable senators will remember that that was the section which referred to the recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights and the definition of aboriginal peoples of Canada. It is suggested that that section be amended by adding subsections (3) and (4). No change is proposed to subsections (1) and (2) as they presently exist. These subsections will have the effect of adding certainty to subsections (1) and (2). The amendment is as follows:

> "(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.
> (4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

Section 3 of the suggested proclamation states:

> 3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:
> "35.1 The Government of Canada and the provincial Governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

I would pause there, honourable senators, to remind you that class 24 of section 91 deals with Indians and the rights of Indians.

The suggested proclamation goes on to state:

> (a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and
> (b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

Honourable senators, by way of explanation I will comment briefly on each one of those items.

Then the suggested proclamation states:

It adds a new Part, Part IV.1, and provides that:

> In addition to the conference convened in March 1983,—

In looking at the present provisions, we realized there was a rag-tag end left over because a constitutional conference had to be called before March 1983, which has now been held. We are now adding this new Part IV.1 dealing with constitutional conferences because, under the old Constitution, that was the only conference that had to be held.

● (1700)

With respect to constitutional conferences, the resolution reads as follows:

> 37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.
> (2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

This is a continuation of the special treatment given to the aboriginal people in an effort to define and protect their rights by participation in constitutional amendments, whereas others who wish to have their rights defined usually do so through the courts rather than through constitutional amendment.

> (3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory—

This is as it presently exists and will apply to the new conferences that must be convened. The resolution further reads:

> (4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1).

Honourable senators will remember that that subsection is the one by which the existing treaty rights of the aboriginal people of Canada are recognized and affirmed.

The resolution continues:

> "54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

Honourable senators will remember that the two additional conferences are to be held in 1985 and in 1987, after which time they would be exhausted and might as well be repealed.

> 6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:
> "61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

This simply means that if this resolution is passed it is being tacked on to the provisions of the entire Constitution, which is referred to as the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982.

> 7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

Honourable senators, that is what is proposed. We can therefore look ahead to three further constitutional conferences dealing with what we might call the unfinished business respecting our aboriginal people and the Constitution, the first such conference to be held on March 16, 1984; the second, April 17, 1985; and the third prior to April 17, 1987. There are three partners to this enterprise: the aboriginal people, the Government of Canada, and the provincial and territorial governments.

Honourable senators, I should now like to make a few brief comments by way of explanation of the amendment we have been discussing. It is proposed that a substantial amendment be made to section 35 by way of a new subsection, to make it clear that the rights referred to include rights that now exist by way of land claims, agreement and so on. There has been a section added to ensure that aboriginal rights are guaranteed equally to male and female aboriginal persons. Honourable senators will remember that that issue was featured during the debates on this subject and during the public discussion because, under the Indian Act, Indian women are sometimes treated as having different rights from Indian men.

As to the matter of the wording contained in this resolution being agreed upon at the conference, I should indicate to honourable senators that the minister has informed me that the leaders of the aboriginal people have notified the government in writing that the wording now before us can stand, which will avoid delay by way of further conference in the process of amendment.

The last of the amendments proposed in the resolution before us requires some explanation. Honourable senators will remember that during the many legislative and public debates on this question, the aboriginal organizations wished to have what they describe as a "consent" or a "veto" clause, which would make it a constitutional requirement that they signify their consent to any amendment to any of the sections of the Constitution that specifically affect them. This means that their approval of the amendments that are before us now, for example, would be necessary.

In furtherance of this objective, as I have indicated, the resolution proposes a new section in Part IV of the act, which is section 35.1. Its effect, as I have noted in reading it, is to extend into the future the role played by the aboriginal leaders at the conference to be held this year, and at the three constitutional conferences which are provided for in the future, thereby giving permanent effect to the thrust of the original section 37.

The new section identifies sections 25 and 35 of the Constitution Act of 1982. These we have looked at earlier. It also identifies section 91(24) of the Constitution Act of 1867. Honourable senators will recall that that is the provision which confers on the Parliament of Canada the exclusive right to legislate "for Indians and Indian lands."

I should also emphasize the fact that the new section takes the form of a commitment by the Government of Canada and the provincial governments rather than the form of a justiciable provision. The request, earlier, was for a provision whereby the aboriginal people must consent to any amendment that affected them. What has been brought forward here is a compromise, in that the government has taken the position that the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the provinces, being elected by the people of Canada or by the people of a particular province, should be the only bodies with the right to veto or to consent to amendments. Further, the government was against the concept of the consent or the constitutional approval requirement of a group based, essentially, on ethnicity. Therefore, this is a compromise and comes by way of a commitment by the Government of Canada rather than by way of an amendment to the Constitution, which would give to the native or aboriginal people the same rights as those of the Parliament of Canada or the provincial legislatures.

As a general rule, an amendment to the Constitution of Canada calls for the passage of a resolution by the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, and by at least seven of the legislatures of the provinces. In the accord to which I referred earlier, nine of the provinces and the Government of Canada undertook to pass the necessary resolutions prior to December 31, 1983. That was to ensure that the sought for amendments to the Constitution would be made in good time.

Turning once again to the proposed new section 35.1, if it were to be passed in the form of an actual constitutionally entrenched provision, its effect would be to alter the amending formula by adding another body—namely, the aboriginal people—to the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislatures of the provinces.

Therefore, what we have here is, in effect, a political commitment but one that is enshrined in the Constitution. Section 35(1) might therefore be described as an express convention of the Constitution.

• (1710)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I apologize for not being able to hear the whole of the honourable senator's speech, but perhaps I could ask a question.

Senator Frith: I am almost at the end; I have only a couple more paragraphs.

Honourable senators, the additional amendments that I referred to in the resolution are those dealing with what are called consequential amendments, in particular the need to repeal those sections that would have been exhausted in 1987, the technical labelling or reference description of the Constitution, and how this resolution, if it is passed, is to be referred to.

Honourable senators, I close, as I began, with a reference to the Minister of Justice, and point out, as he did, that this is an historic resolution that is before us. It is the first under the amending formula. It is fitting that it refers to cleaning up our historical obligations to our aboriginal people, and I am sure it will be the beginning of a chapter that, as the minister said, our children and our children's children will read with pride.

I ask honourable senators to support the resolution.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to make some comments on the resolution this evening, and in view of the lateness of the hour I will then ask leave to adjourn the debate and possibly finish my comments tomorrow.

I have some serious misgivings, not necessarily so much about what we are doing but about the way we are doing it and the speed with which it is suggested we do it. I do not disagree with the principle that the rights of the aboriginal people, the original settlers in this land, should be enshrined in the Constitution. I think most Canadians agree with that principle. However, when we developed the Constitution and talked about amending it my understanding was that while it should not be almost impossible to amend it, that it should not be something we should do casually, with any great speed; that serious consideration should be given to serious amendments to the Constitution, and these amendments that are being suggested are indeed serious.

I should like to know what consideration the native people have, in fact, given to these amendments which I understand, came, in part, out of the meeting held in March. That again raises a question. If this meeting was held in March, why are we three months later being presented, on what appear to be the last few days before adjournment, with this resolution? Why did the government wait that long to introduce this resolution? There is nothing really very new in this, nothing that the native people have not been asking for, so I do not think we could accept the excuse that it took three months to develop it. I cannot understand why they have waited this long to bring it before the other place and the Senate.

I have been told by Senator Frith that there is every likelihood that the other place may pass this resolution by tomorrow afternoon. I am not impressed. I have watched the other place in the last three months ringing bells, passing resolutions and coming almost to a standstill, and suddenly two or three days before the adjournment they are acting with blinding speed. I am not sure that we should act with the same kind of speed in this matter. Over the years we have been accused of rubber-stamping too often government legislation and government actions. I am not sure that this is not the place where we should say, "Let's slow down a little bit."

I will give just two examples tonight, and I will deal with the matter in a little broader way tomorrow, if I get permission of the Senate to adjourn the debate. We are asking here that any future land claim settlements, for example, agreed to by the Government of Canada and the native people would then become part of the Constitution of Canada.

Let me give just one example. I was for many months involved with a land claim in the western Arctic. If that land claim as laid out in the agreement in principle signed by the government in 1978 receives final agreement and is then translated into legislation that will give that agreement the effect of law, we will see the entire land mass around the Beaufort Sea locked up. The entire North Slope of the Yukon will be turned into a wilderness park under the absolute control of the Inuvialuit, the Inuit people of the western Arctic. They are requesting control over the Mackenzie Delta. They are also requesting control of and ownership of all the land in the Tuktoyaktuk peninsula. If honourable senators look at the map they will find that that gives them total control of all the land mass in Canada surrounding the Beaufort Sea.

If agreement is reached and it passes the other place and the Senate it would then, if we followed this, become part of the Constitution of Canada. If the people who are spending billions of dollars developing oil and gas in the Beaufort Sea decide—and they are already asking—that they want a port, a pipeline or any access by land or through the Mackenzie Delta into the Beaufort Sea, ordinarily that would mean there would have to be an amendment to the acts giving legality to the agreement reached between the Inuvialuit people and the Government of Canada. However, if we pass this resolution, it is my understanding that they would have to get an amendment to the Constitution of Canada. That is just one example.

Let me give another example, and that is the women's rights question. There is no question that all of us are aware of the fact that the treaty rights were passed down in the male line of the Indian population. The government decided arbitrarily 100 or 115 years ago who were treaty Indians, who were registered Indians, who would be recognized by the government and who would not be. At that time it was proposed that if a female Indian married someone who was not a status Indian her descendants lost their treaty rights. Many Indian women have objected to this. However, it never passed; it stayed as it was.

If this amendment passes—and I am not suggesting it should not pass—and they get equal rights with the males, I should like to know, and I think we would all like to know, what this will do to the treaty rights. Will it be back-dated? If it is, that would mean almost everyone in Canada who could claim any degree of Indian blood would then have to be given consideration for treaty rights. In this case there may be an answer to it. They may just say "from now on"; they may not make it retroactive. If they do make it retroactive I do not know how they would unscramble it. I use that one example to point out that what we are doing here does not concern only the aboriginal people. It concerns all of us.

When we are talking about land claims today, which concern just law and treaties, we are talking about big business. With one land claim alone in the western Arctic we are talking not only about 2,500 to 2,700 Inuit people; we are talking about 37,000 square miles of land that they are claiming. We are talking about well over $150 million. That is just one claim, and there are six, seven, eight or nine claims being worked on right now. We are talking about the native peole claiming a tremendous percentage, if not almost all, of the Northwest Territories, for example.

What we do here concerns not only the native people. It concerns all of us. It is extremely important, and is, I think, far too important to be dealt with casually in one or two days. I think we need to take a serious look at this.

Those are just two points that I want to mention tonight. I hope that when we have debated the matter we will consider referring it to a committee to have it studied. It needs some study. I should like to know what the native people themselves think. If I could be assured they are in agreement with this, then I should like to know what the Government of the Northwest Territories and what the Government of Yukon think about it. I know that the duly elected Government of Yukon has some very strong thoughts about the land claim that concerns the North Slope, for example. Therefore I will ask for leave to adjourn the debate to continue this subject tomorrow.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the honourable senator. Am I right in my recollection that he was commissioned by the government to undertake certain studies of problems relating to our native people, and that some of his interesting remarks result from that particular inquiry?

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, I was appointed the senior negotiator for the Western Arctic Land Claim dealing with the North Slope of Yukon, the Mackenzie Delta and land generally in the western Arctic dealing with the Inuvialuit, who are the Indian people of the western Arctic. I dealt with the matter for approximately one year and a half, but unfortunately there was an impasse between myself and—I wish to make this clear—not necessarily the Inuvialuit people but some of the representatives of the Inuvialuit. Therefore, I bowed gracefully out of the scene and the negotiations are now being handled by another negotiator. However, in the process I learned a great deal about the situation, and as a result I have grave concern about this resolution.

On motion of Senator Steuart, debate adjourned.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

COMMITTEE REQUESTED TO CONSIDER REDUCTION IN SIZE OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEES AND THE CREATION OF A STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, pursuant to notice of Monday, June 27, 1983, moved:

> That the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders be requested to consider and report upon:
> (a) the possibility of reducing the size of Standing Committees of the Senate;
> (b) the creation of a new Standing Committee to be called: "The Senate Committee on National Defence".

He said: Honourable senators, as you are aware, the chairmen of all committees of the Senate have been meeting periodically with the leaders, deputy leaders and whips from both sides of the house to consider problems concerning the management and operation of the Senate and its committees. Such a meeting was held last week. The meeting was well attended and concerned itself with the problems caused by the increasing number of committees and the decreasing number of senators attending committee meetings.

We dealt also with the many complaints, which have been directed to me in my capacity as co-ordinator of committees, concerning simultaneous meetings of committees and the difficulty encountered by some chairmen in maintaining a quorum. It was felt, therefore, that the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders should take a hard look at the membership of all Senate committees. In the motion we do not suggest any figures. We leave that to the good judgment of the committee.

I may be prejudiced with regard to part (b) of the motion, but I believe that the Subcommittee on National Defence has earned the title of Standing Committee by reason of performance. I believe also that there is a requirement, from the point of view of ourselves as well as our allies, that there be a permanent body in Canada's Parliament concerned primarily with matters of defence.

In point of fact, this motion is not required, since the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders is empowered of its own initiative to undertake any revision of the rules and to make a proposal to the Senate. However, after consultation with the chairman, he felt that on this occasion it would be advisable to proceed in this manner in order to inform honourable senators of what is being considered. He has also asked me to convey to the Senate that the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders will meet on Thursday morning, June 30, at 9.30 a.m.

As I have said, the motion itself is not essential, but I suggest it be adopted at this time and that any debate on its substance, if required, take place after it has been considered by the Standing Rules and Orders Committee.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I will not take up the time of the Senate except to lend my support to the motion as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which Senator Lafond's committee on national defence is a subcommittee. The subcommittee has undertaken work which, I am sure, all honourable senators would agree, should warrant it to stand as a separate committee, but whether it should be a special or standing committee I will leave for others to decide. Certainly the operation of the Foreign Affairs Committee would be easier if the two committees were separate, because at the present time it is somewhat clumsy having so many members on the one committee. The subcommittee does not have to give notice to the Foreign Affairs Committee of what it is doing, but by definition we have to give the subcommittee notice of what we are doing. For both of those reasons I support Senator Lafond's motion.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I fully agree with the remarks Senator van Roggen has just made concerning the establishment of a Special Senate Committee on National Defence. I understand that the reduction in the number of committee members stems from the establishment of this new committee. Perhaps the Foreign Affairs Committee could have the number of its committee members reduced in order to have the same number of committee members as the Committee on National Defence. Is that the idea?

Senator Lafond: Surely you remember the conversations we had the last time we met, Senator Flynn. The chairmen of the various Senate committees were later contacted to ascertain just how many members, in their opinion, should sit on their respective committees; when you read the motion, you will realize that we have suggested no figure; if representations are to be made, I feel they should be made to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders or that its report should be amended when it comes before us. The Senate has the final say in these matters.

Senator Flynn: I would not want the approval of the resolution to necessarily entail the approval in principle of the reduction in membership for all committees. As far as I am concerned, I do not see too many difficulties with having committees of less than 20 members. Some have more than that. What I mean is that those two matters are not at all interconnected, but if we look at the possibility of reducing the membership in one committee, we might at the same time examine the procedure for substituting committee members by inserting in our Standing Orders the formula used for the Joint Committee on Senate Reform, which allows for very rapid replacement. In my view, the smaller the number, the greater the need for a procedure to find a ready substitute for an absent member. I do not think it is necessary to change Senator Lafond's proposal in order that the committee may look at that matter at the same time.

Senator Lafond: True enough. All we are asking the committee is that it study and report on the possibility of reducing membership. As for the rest, the membership appointing procedure, I am in complete agreement with Senator Flynn. I have been advocating that reform for a number of years, and it is my hope that we will succeed this time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Since we have already emphasized the fact that the committee may, ex proprio motu, make changes that are not subject to a reference, the committee's attention can be called upon Senator Flynn's comments, with which I am in agreement, that this aspect can be examined at the same time.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the creation of a Standing Senate Committee on National Defence, because the subject interests me very much, but I am interested in the creation of other committees which I feel would be very important. In particular, I am thinking of a committee on fisheries, which I have suggested on a number of occasions. I wonder whether any consideration was given to the establishment of a Senate fisheries committee at the meeting that was held to deal with Senator Lafond's motion. Approximately four years ago, shortly after I was appointed to the Senate, I presented a paper proposing that the committees be reformed and reduced in size. I sent it to whoever was responsible for such matters at the time, but it received no attention whatsoever. However, can anybody tell me whether any consideration was given to creating a fisheries committee, which could be under, as I suggested before, the umbrella of an overall resources committee or the agriculture committee or the energy committee. Why has no consideration been given to this matter other than the shaking of heads?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the caucus of committee chairmen may consider the restructuring of committees, the creation of new committees and the size of committees. The practice has been that when such a matter has been raised in the chamber, either by formal motion or by discussion, the committee could take into account what has been said, consider the matter and then give its views.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I can inform you that the creation of a new committee on fisheries was not considered by the caucus of committee chairmen. I am sure that the Honourable Senator Molson will take note of what Senator Marshall has placed on record this afternoon. I suggest to Senator Marshall that he obtain from the Clerk of the Senate an outline of the procedure that was employed the last time to add a new standing committee to our rules. It last occurred when the Senate Standing Committee on Agriculture was created.

Senator Marshall: It seems that things change every couple of weeks. When I mentioned this matter the last time I was told that the committee would consider it. Now I am being told that I must present a motion.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Marshall: Will somebody give me an explanation, because the rules seem to change with the fancies and whims of whoever replies.

Senator Frith: It is clear—and I don't think that anybody will disagree—that the Standing Rules and Orders Committee has the power to consider rule changes without reference from the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 29, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE GEORGE J. McILRAITH, P.C.

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as many of us are aware, one of our colleagues will be retiring during the summer recess. I would therefore like to take this opportunity, inasmuch as it may be the last—although I realize there is a possibility of our meeting tomorrow—to pay tribute to Senator McIlraith, who will be retiring from the Senate on July 29.

Senator McIlraith has had a long and distinguished political career, both here in the Senate and, indeed, for many years in the other place. Senator McIlraith was first elected to the House of Commons in 1940. He was re-elected another nine times in succession, which I think is something of a record, and is, indeed, a tremendous achievement.

During that time George McIlraith served as Parliamentary Assistant to the Right Honourable C. D. Howe, Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, and as Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as well as to the Minister of Defence Production. As many honourable senators know, he subsequently served in the cabinet in various portfolios, including Transport, Public Works and Solicitor General. He also served as President of the Privy Council.

Many of us have been privileged to know Senator McIlraith as an outstanding parliamentarian in both houses of Parliament. This, of course, was very evident when Senator McIlraith served as house leader in the other place, at which time many of us were exposed to his skill as a parliamentary tactician.

In the Senate, George McIlraith has lent his expertise to a great many complex issues in a number of capacities, but particularly as a member of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. His advice has been sought and highly valued by senators on both sides of this chamber.

I should like to pay a special tribute to Senator McIlraith and to wish him well in his retirement. It is my hope that he will return to visit us often in the future.

Honourable senators, I have come to the end of my prepared text, but I should like to add just one or two further comments. I have known Senator McIlraith in the House of Commons under very difficult circumstances, when he was the house leader. I am not quite sure of the years in which he served in that capacity, but I know that he had the very heavy responsibility of guiding the government business through that chamber in a minority situation, which is trying at all times. The almost instinctive way in which he handled matters, taking into account the atmosphere in the house, and the manner in which he conducted public business, was most impressive. I think that is one of the greatest tributes that could be paid to a parliamentarian.

At the risk of repeating myself, I will add that in this chamber and in committee, with respect to the procedures and processes we must go through, Senator McIlraith has demonstrated not only a willingness to be helpful but also an ability to guide and assist honourable senators on both sides of the house in such a way that we have been able to carry out with greater facility the high level of responsibility placed upon us in the course of our duties.

In conclusion, let me say that Senator McIlraith has had one of the most distinguished of parliamentary careers, in terms of practical application and getting the work done, while at the same time respecting the rights of all honourable members.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it was not until I heard my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, make mention of Senator McIlraith's name that I realized it is indeed true that, before long, by virtue of the effluxion of time, he will no longer be sitting with us in this place. I am pleased that my leader has given me the opportunity to say a word of appreciation and gratitude for the services of George McIlraith to the Parliament and to the people of Canada.

Of all the things I recall about George McIlraith—and I am sure that this will be a memory shared by all honourable senators—one of the most important surely is his understanding of the parliamentary system. He comprehends not only the rules of Parliament, which is one thing, but he understands the spirit of our institution, which is something else again. It is only when we are able to marry an interpretation of the rules with the spirit of the institution that we can make this Parliament, and the Senate chamber in particular, work well for the people of Canada.

He is a traditionalist, and I salute him for it. He understands the development and evolution of this institution through the centuries, and that is an understanding that needs to be renewed constantly. I hope those of us who remain in this place after he has left his seat will remember the spirit—which he attempted, with some success, I think, to leave with us—of this institution of which we are so proud.

I join with the Leader of the Government in offering this tribute to the career of George McIlraith. He is the sort of man who has gone from strength to strength. He started out, I do not say as a "lowly" member of the House of Commons, because there is no such thing, but as a junior member of the House of Commons, and his progress through that body was steady, until he arrived at a point of very considerable leadership and responsibility. I know, from my relatively short acquaintance with his activities in this chamber, that I can say exactly the same thing about his activities here. Therefore, I am rather disposed to believe that, although he will cease to be an active senator, before long we will certainly be conscious of his continuing influence, an influence for good, in the developing parliamentary institutions of this country.

I join with all of those in this chamber who salute Senator McIlraith on this occasion, and particularly wish him many happy days, and many fruitful and productive days, in the time that lies ahead.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, in associating myself with the Leader of the Government and Senator Roblin in their expressions of appreciation for the contribution Senator McIlraith has made, not only to the Senate but to the Canadian nation, I should like to express a hope—and Senator McIlraith probably knows what I am going to say now.

I preface my remarks by saying that I know of no person in Canada who is more informed about Canadian political history than Senator McIlraith. As one who has done some work in that field, I express the hope that Senator McIlraith will, during his years of retirement, which we hope will be many, put down on paper some of his political memoirs, for the information, entertainment and guidance of those who will come after him.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, as a lifetime resident of this area, as is Senator McIlraith, I am very happy to hear tributes to him from coast to coast.

Even though I still consider myself a young senator, I am going to go back more years than I probably wish to. Some time in 1937 there had been a political upheaval in Quebec, and patronage in the province of Quebec developed some new faces. It so happened that I was a student then, working part time in an enterprise the chief of which, through patronage channels, had recently been appointed sergeant in charge of the Quebec Provincial Police in western Quebec. One Saturday afternoon I was in the office looking after printing and other business matters when a young, tall, lean, red-haired person with a hat on came in to lodge a complaint to the effect that some of his fishing gear had been stolen from his cottage up in Pontiac. I told him that the sergeant was away on other duties, and he very quietly and patiently sat there for about three hours with hat on, reading, until the sergeant came in and he could lodge his complaint. That was my first encounter with George McIlraith.

Senator Lafond: He was a redhead then. Shortly after the war, when I became actively involved in politics, George, of course, was one of the local members of Parliament. We have been very close since 1948, exchanging ideas and inspiration, the inspiration coming mostly in my direction. It has been a constant companionship and exchange of views. That association has been a great part of my life, and I hope it will continue for many years. Although this senior parliamentarian, who has been around these buildings longer than most, will no longer have an office here, I am sure that we will want him to visit under the parliamentary roof as often as possible. As Senator Roblin mentioned, very few parliamentarians in the last 40 years have been as conscious or as "soucieux" of the privileges of Parliament, of the House of Commons while he was there and of the Senate since he has been with us. I am sorry indeed that the rules require that he leave our company.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, in all of my experience in Parliament I know of no person, other than Mr. John Diefenbaker, that I admire more than George McIlraith. I attended Osgoode Hall with him and we had a wonderful time there. At times he looks so dour, but he is really one of the funniest persons I have ever met. He is witty and has a great sense of humour. Life is always pleasant when George is around, and that is an important asset in a parliamentarian. He has never been licked, and has won time and again. I recall that when I arrived as a freshman member of Parliament and asked him how I would get along, he replied, "You will be surprised." That was the answer he gave me. At all times I received encouragement from him. He never had a swelled head but was always himself. He has a charming wife and a nice family. It is an important aspect of his character that everyone who knows George likes him. Without going into detail, because I know that others wish to participate, I cannot speak too highly of my old friend George. I hope he will be spared many a day to enjoy what he has built for himself, namely, a tremendous number of friends, be they Tories or Liberals. Good old George.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I should like to add my voice to what has been said about our colleague, Senator McIlraith. I first met him approximately 28 years ago. I well recall the way that he dealt with his constituents. Almost daily, during the course of many hours in his office, he attended to their business in the minutest detail. That attribute, together with his scholarly understanding of the rules and his ability to speak with clarity, enabled him over the years to give wise counsel to the government of which he was a member.

Senator George McIlraith is a great Canadian. He seems to understand western Canada. I suppose part of the reason is that he had served as Parliamentary Assistant to the Right Honourable C.D. Howe, and had had a great deal to do with the operation of the government's grain program. I had the occasion to be with George McIlraith when he was dealing with farm audiences in western Canada, and he certainly indicated to them and to me that he understood their needs. He is the only parliamentarian that I have had the honour to meet who could drive an eight-horse team. His wide knowledge of the agricultural community is due in part to the fact that he was raised on a farm in Ontario.

George McIlraith's contributions to the Senate and to Canada will be greatly missed. I wish Mrs. McIlraith and Senator McIlraith every hapiness in retirement.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as I was torn between various responsibilities today and had to sit on a committee, I learned only at the very last minute that we would pay tribute to Senator McIlraith today on his retirement. That is why I asked the Deputy Leader, Senator Roblin, who has a great talent for improvisation, to pay tribute to Senator McIlraith on behalf of the Official Opposition. I would not want Senator McIlraith to imagine that even though I remained seated, I do not have as much admiration for him as all those who have already spoken in praise of him.

We met when I was elected to the House of Commons in 1958. He had already been sitting in the other place since 1940. I could note in passing that Senator Denis is the dean of Parliament, as he was elected to the House of Commons in 1935. In two years, he will have been among us for 50 years, since he is not subject to the retirement rule.

Hon. Azellus Denis: You make me feel very old!

Senator Flynn: Senator McIlraith is therefore the second in seniority in Parliament. I would like to tell him that I have always admired his level-headedness, his devotion to duty and his objectivity in dealing with problems in the other place and in the Senate. He has made an excellent contribution in every area. He has every reason to be proud of his work in Parliament and for his country. After the glowing tribute paid to him by Senator Roblin, I would like to assure him, on my own behalf and on behalf of the Official Opposition, of our deepest friendship. I also want to mention his charming wife and I ask Senator McIlraith to give her my regards. Once again, we wish him a well-deserved retirement, with the understanding that he will come back to see us very often so that we may benefit from his experience, his excellent advice and his sound judgment.

[English]

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I too would like to say a few words in tribute to the political career of the Honourable George James McIlraith.

George McIlraith came to Parliament as a 31-year-old youngster, for in those days he was considered young to be in Parliament. From the outset he displayed a respect and knowledge of the political system at the party level. He was the type of politician who quickly gained and forever retained the admiration and respect of his constituents. As has been said, he won 10 successive elections, coming to Parliament as the young member for Ottawa West.

I know that in recent years it has pained Senator McIlraith deeply to see Parliament diminished, as it has been in the role of the backbencher in the other house, and to see Parliament at large not serving as fully as it should, and was meant to, the purposes of the Canadian people through elective representation. However, he has, through all of those years, been an adornment to Parliament and to the political system, and I simply want to join in paying tribute to him for his understanding of the system and his constant upholding of it.

I wish to say to him that we shall all miss him greatly and that we wish him and Mrs. McIlraith the very best in the years ahead.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, you overwhelm me. I hardly know what to say, but I must make two points: the first is to thank you for your very kind remarks and good wishes; the second is to tell you that you have been much too flattering to me—very much too flattering.

You may find it interesting that, when I first ran for Parliament, it was said—and I hope I still have the clippings, although I am not too sure—that I was too young. Well, time took care of that rather effectively. Yes, that was the main charge against me then; I was too young. One of our local newspapers, now no longer published, made much of that, with appropriate headlines. The publisher of that outstanding newspaper had a great interest in elections, I might add, by virtue of his position in another party, to which I did not belong.

In any event, there have been great changes. It has been interesting to observe the degree of influence of each of the six prime ministers who have had the responsibility of that office in that period of time, and it has been interesting to watch this place. I had had some contact with it 15 years earlier, which does not seem that long ago now.

The other day, in preparing to meet with the committee dealing with Senate reform, I had occasion to inquire of the appropriate Senate office how many senators had been appointed since I had come to Parliament. I came to Parliament at the same time as two of our better known senators, the former Senator Paterson and Senator Salter Hayden. Since we came to Parliament there have been 248 senators appointed. Among those 248 were many distinguished and outstanding senators of whom we have every reason to be proud. I hope that they are remembered and that some of their ideas are heeded. But more important still is that in the next few, fleeting years—fleeting, because these years do go by rather quickly—the next 248 senators should be equally able, so that one will be able to say of them that their abilities and the contributions they will have made were appreciated.

It is ironic that I took an extraordinarily active part in procuring the legislation that provides for retirement at age

75. I must say, notwithstanding some of the delicacies of the situation, that I still believe it is good legislation. My deskmate to the right was the first one appointed after that rule came into operation.

Honourable senators, I think it is a good rule and I, for my part, look forward with eagerness to my retirement from the Senate. Let me say, however, that I want you all to understand that I am going to miss you very much. I wish you well in your work because, more than ever—and I have been watching the Senate rather closely since 1926—there is a greater need for objectivity in reviewing the matters that come before this house. I would like to speak about that, but I promise not to do so.

I repeat, I wish all honourable senators well in carrying out their responsibilities. Your work is essential in Canadian society today.

Honourable senators, I do not know what the future will bring. It is the way of life that we do not know that, and I suppose that is a very good thing. However, I look forward to the future with eagerness. I close this expression of thanks and appreciation with the wish that you also may look forward with eagerness to the years that lie ahead. I thank you very much.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I do not want to repeat what has already been said about the Honourable George McIlraith. However, I do wish to add a few words, because we have been not only colleagues but were also seat-mates in the cabinet for a long time. Senator McIlraith guided me in discussions, giving me not only principle but, sometimes, some tactical means of obtaining the objective I was pursuing.

I shall have the opportunity to do something special for Senator McIlraith early in the fall. I hope that at that time all honourable senators will be present, and then I shall be the one to speak about Senator McIlraith.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

1982-83 FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I wish to table:

Financial Statements of the Canada Development Investment Corporation for the year ended March 31, 1983, pursuant to section 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

These statements include the financial statements of Canadair Limited, The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited, and Eldorado Nuclear Limited.

Separately, I wish to table:

Report of Teleglobe Canada on the examination of the accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended March 31, 1983, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C, 1970.

I table this report separately because Teleglobe Canada reports to me but is not a responsibility of the Canada Development Investment Corporation.

• (1440)

Honourable senators, in addition, I have a statement to make with respect to the Canada Development Investment Corporation financial statements. I ask leave of the Senate to have this statement printed in today's Debates of the Senate as an appendix, so that I can save the chamber the time of listening to it. If there are any questions, I shall be here tomorrow and shall be glad to respond.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I am sorry that I missed part of my honourable friend's statement. What does he want to have appended to the record rather than read?

Senator Austin: I should like to append to the record my statement on the tabling of the CDIC financial statements, a copy of which I forwarded earlier today to Senator Roblin, rather than make a statement to the Senate at this time, in the hope that the time of the Senate will be preserved. As I advised honourable senators, I should be glad to answer questions on my statement tomorrow, if that is the wish of any honourable senator.

Senator Roblin: I regret to tell my honourable friend that I have not received the document he speaks of. That has happened before with interchanges between him and me. I do not blame him, but it is the fact that I have not received it. I am naturally anxious to know from my honourable friend if he is introducing any new material in his statement that might provoke a response from someone like me, in case we are not here tomorrow, which is a possibility.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I regret that Senator Roblin did not receive the statement. That is the second time in a row that this has happened. I sent the statement to his office just after 12 o'clock noon. I will check to see where the problem is. I know that a statement I was to send to Senator Nurgitz was inadvertently put in the mail and it took some 10 days for him to receive it, although I asked that it be sent by hand.

Further to the question asked by Senator Roblin, I cannot predict whether or not he would wish to respond to the statement, but perhaps I can put this statement in his hand within the next hour, and if he wishes to respond he can do so later today.

Senator Roblin: That is agreeable to me. I must tell my honourable friend that, due to the scheduling of committees around here recently, I have not been in my office since 12 o'clock, so it may well be there. I was otherwise engaged in a committee and did not get back to my office to look at it.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: If it had been marked "Confidential" Senator Roblin would have had it in five minutes.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You would have had it.

Senator Austin: That was my problem.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, if my friend is going to make a statement tomorrow, would he be good enough to tell us what role he played in rolling up the greatest debt in the history of Canada in a seven-year period? As a matter of fact, $1.5 billion was more than the total debt of Canada for our first hundred years, and my friend sits over there and grins. What part did he play in this catastrophe? It is probably the worst catastrophe Parliament has ever experienced, piling up in one crown corporation in a period of seven years a debt of $1.5 billion. The public cannot understand that sort of thing. The figures are enormous. It is 1,500 millions of dollars. It is simply shocking.

My friend, we want some explanation from you. You always get in these tight corners, whatever occupation you have had in any of the cabinets. You should be able to explain this to us. We did not have any warning of it. We did not know what was going on, and year after year—would you just pay attention to what I am saying? I want the answer to this. Year after year there was no balance sheet; nothing came out of you; nothing came out of Canadair, and the debt piled up and up and up. Then, when it suited your purpose, or your colleagues' purpose, you finally brought down, with a laugh, this horrible, horrible statement.

It is one of the most serious things that has ever happened in the history of Parliament, and I am asking you to give us some reason for it. First, why the delay? Why not a statement every year? Then, what is most important of all, how in the name of God did you ever pile up a debt like that? Where did the money go? Who benefited from it? The money must have gone somewhere. If it did not go into Canadair, where did it go?.

Would my friend give this serious consideration, or is he saying to himself, "I think I've got this covered up all right. Everything is going to be all right"? I am asking him seriously.

I am also suggesting that there should be at least a royal commission to investigate, not only Canadair but my honourable friend's work in connection with Canadair. It is perfectly natural that that should be so. Lest he keep on laughing, let me say that this is not the end of what I am going to say or what I am going to do. I hope that by tomorrow you will have some explanation, even though it is not satisfactory, which might have some sense to it, some reasonableness to it.

I think now you have got a serious look on your face and you will pay attention to what I have been talking about.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I must say that Senator Walker is not a person that I enjoy listening to. He makes personal asides, and has done so previously in my Senate career, to my very great resentment.

Senator Walker: I always will as long as you are here.

Senator Austin: Knowing who you are, I am sure you will continue to be who you are, and I will continue to find you very unpleasant, Senator Walker.

Senator Walker: From you that is a compliment. Go ahead.

Senator Austin: Now I would like to tell honourable senators what they already know, but what Senator Walker is apparently unaware of, and that is that I tabled a report on Canadair on June 7 in this chamber. I hope all honourable senators have received it. I did the same with respect to de Havilland on June 22.

I took responsibility for Canadair and de Havilland effective November 23, 1982, some seven months ago. I was asked by the Prime Minister to do so because of an emerging concern about substantial losses in those companies. My role has been that of an investigator and of a discloser of the information that has now appeared in those two reports and in evidence I and officials have given to the Public Accounts Committee in the other place and the Standing House Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Matters.

I believe that the public record is very clear and I owe Senator Walker no further explanation as a result of his uninformed questioning of this afternoon.

Senator Walker: Then do I understand it that, other than the reports already filed regarding this atrocious debt, nothing more will come? There will be no explanation other than what has already been given? The Canadian people want to know that.

Senator Austin: Senator Walker, the record is very clear, and your colleagues in the other place have questioned me and my officials for hours and hours. I warrant that you have not read any of the reports tabled in the Senate or any of the evidence given in the committee of the other place regarding those two companies. I want to make it abundantly clear to this chamber that the losses of Canadair and de Havilland are losses in part due to the economic environment, and in the case of Canadair, in part due to management mistakes, which I have disclosed in detail.

I have nothing further to disclose, but if Senator Walker has not taken the time to inform himself, no doubt he now will.

Senator Walker: I know all about it, otherwise I would not be asking the question.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I hesitate to interrupt a private discussion between two distinguished members of this house, but I should like to remind the minister that on June 14 I raised certain questions with respect to the government's conduct in this whole matter. The minister, half way through my remarks, found something better to do and did not hear all of my remarks, but he can read them in Debates of the Senate of June 14.

I would be obliged if he would give me some idea as to whether he intends to deal with those questions and justify to this house, if he can, the actions of the government which I criticized at that time.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I am not aware of any questions asked by Senator Roblin remaining unanswered, but I shall look at Debates of the Senate for June 14, and if there is something that remains unanswered, I will ask leave later this day to reply. In the meantime, I ask leave that my statement be made an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of Proceedings to form part of the permanent records of this house, or if not I would deliver the statement this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SPORTS POOLS

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-95

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, presented the following report:

Wednesday, June 29, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare, and Science to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-95, intituled: "An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of June 27, 1983, examined the said subject-matter and now reports that it recommends that the said Bill, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL,
Chairman.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-165

Hon. C. William Doody, on behalf of Hon. Douglas D. Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

June 29, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which was referred the subject-matter of Bill C-165, intituled "An Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 28, 1983, examined the said subject-matter of the Bill and reports so doing without suggesting any amendments.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT
Chairman

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have received messages from the House of Commons with respect to four bills. I understand that it is the objective of the other place to adjourn no later than tomorrow at 6 p.m. Indeed, it is already in the air that they might adjourn this evening. In any event, I am wondering if the Deputy Leader of the Government is in a position to tell us if we are going to receive more messages from the other place regarding bills before 11 o'clock this evening.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the only other bill that we might receive is Bill C-95, respecting an act to provide for government operated pool systems. That is now under debate in the other place. I think it is the objective of the House of Commons to give that bill third reading today. I have sent a note to find out how the bill is progressing and when it might get third reading.

Senator Flynn: Then do I understand that Bill C-95 is the only bill we are giving to receive?

Senator Frith: As far as I am aware—and I have checked as recently as an hour ago—we will not receive any bills other than what we have, plus Bill C-95. At this time of the year anything can happen, but I doubt very much we will receive the freshwater fish marketing bill, the government's re-organization bill or the bill respecting the establishment of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

Senator Flynn: The bill respecting the aviation safety board will not come before the Senate?

Senator Frith: That is right, honourable senators. I believe that that bill has been referred to the Commons Standing Committee on Transport.

Senator Flynn: That would mean that when the house adjourns we could come back next week if we wanted to, but I do not know if we want to.

Senator Frith: I would say that that would be on division, probably.

Senator Flynn: Favourable division. That means that the session will continue on September 12, does it?

Senator Frith: According to the standing rules, experimental though they are, that is correct. The adjournment date is June 30, and the reconvening date is the Monday following Labour Day, which falls on September 12 in 1983.

Senator Flynn: When will the Senate reconvene, in those circumstances? If we do not pass the bills, I suppose we will have to reconvene on September 12.

Senator Frith: At the moment I am considering having the Senate return on September 20, but perhaps as early as September 13. The House of Commons will reconvene on Monday, September 12. I would say that the earliest we would reconvene would be Tuesday, September 13. However, we will see what kind of progress we have made.

[Later:]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, so that I can keep honourable senators up to date, I have received a note that we might receive Bill C-149 as well as Bill C-95.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What is Bill C-149?

Senator Frith: That is with respect to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act. The word "might" was not underlined in the bulletin, but I am now underlining it.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Are they crazy over there?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MARITIME COMMAND—SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I am glad that the long period of Canadian naval constipation has been afforded some relief after eight years of accepting the existence of a blockage that had originated seven years earlier.

Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate not think that he and his fellow ministers in this chamber should press the government on national defence to authorize and put immediately into place the design, planning, et cetera, required to be in place in 1988-89—the follow-up that would enable this relief to be continued to 1992 and 1996?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the government, and indeed the Minister of National Defence more particularly, are aware of the report that was made by the Subcommittee on National Defence. I have not heard a response from the minister as yet with respect to the particular recommendation to which Senator Lafond has referred, or indeed any other part of the report, but I know they are in possession of it.

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES LIMITED—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am not sure that my question should not more properly be addressed to the Minister of State for Social Development, who has left the chamber, but I will address it instead to the Leader of the Government. It has to do with the status of the money that was lent to the Maislin corporation.

On June 1, 1983 an official of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is quoted as saying that:

> —unless something very extraordinary happens, they—

That is, Maislin.

> —will run out [of money] in the near future—probably in June.
> Receivership is a possibility, he said.

I did not raise the point then because we were waiting to hear what the accounts of this company were and it was under pressure to produce a statement. It produced its statement on June 24, and it was not very enlightening because there was a loss of approximately $20 million in 1982 and a loss of $4.2 million in 1983. When asked about the federal government's guarantee to cover a $34 million bank loan to the company, Mr. Maislin replied: "No comment; go and ask the government." He did not make that comment to me, but it inspired me to ask the government. I would like to know if the minister can make any statement as to the status of this corporation, and, if he can, I would be pleased to hear it.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have a reply with me. I can ensure that a member of my staff makes a request immediately for a statement to either completely or partially respond to Senator Roblin's question. The reason I say that is because of the shortage of time today, but I give that undertaking. I do not believe the government has lent any money to Maislin. I think what they have provided is a loan guarantee—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What difference would it make?

Senator Olson: —and the money came from a commercial bank.

Senator Roblin: I will admit, honourable senators, that there is a difference between a loan and the guarantee of a loan, but in the case of default it is so minute as to be almost imperceptible.

Senator Olson: I was not arguing that point.

Senator Roblin: I am glad that my honourable friend recognizes the issue. If this company does go bankrupt, the government will no doubt be stuck for some portion of the $34 million guarantee.

While he is investigating the matter, could he confirm for me that at the time this original loan was approved, in June 1982, the government had a report before it that, in the opinion of the departmental officers, even with a $30 million U.S. insurance loan, which was being considered at that time, the company could only survive a year or two before it would require further substantial government support? Also, could my honourable friend give us some information about the background facts against which this loan was granted in the first instance?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it depends, I suppose, on what kind of report Senator Roblin is referring to. No doubt there will be reasonably full disclosure of the background information, but if he is asking me to give an undertaking that I will bring cabinet documents here for public disclosure, I do not think that I am authorized to do that.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate that cabinet documents are probably outside the reach of this body, but I think there is other information on file which does not come under that classification and that my honourable friend might produce.

I do not wish to be the bearer of bad news, but I have just been told that this company has been declared bankrupt as of today. Is that the case?

Senator Olson: I shall have to inquire about that. I have not heard that news today and no one has sent it to me, but I shall send for a report immediately so that I can speak with some confidence that the information I am giving is accurate.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate my honourable friend's caution. I would be cautious, too, if I were he, although I think caution would have been better exercised 12 months before now.

If the information I have given him that this company has now been declared bankrupt is accurate, what is the liability of the government under these circumstances, and how much will we be increasing the national debt, in addition to the amount of $2 billion with respect to Canadair and de Havilland which, incidentally, far outstrips any savings of the six-and-five policy with respect to the wages of civil servants? That is where that money went.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I suppose that with the wide variety of government expenditures and savings, wherever they are, you can assign one specific point on one side of the ledger to another specific point on the other side of the ledger, but I am sure that Senator Roblin knows, as well as I do, that that is only rhetoric. It does not mean very much because that is not the way accounting is done.

The actual amount that was guaranteed, as I recall it, was approximately $30 million. I think also there is the potential for some claim against assets in this case, but I also have to look into that. I do not think he should assume, whatever the loan guarantee is, that there is a 100 per cent loss, because it may be substantially less. I am very uncomfortable talking about these hypothetical situations, but I do think there are also some assets against which perhaps some of those losses could be recovered in the future.

Senator Roblin: I must remind my friend that I was careful to state that I did not know whether the full $30 million was lost. I asked him to tell us what the government liability appeared to be. Regardless of what happens to the bookkeeping, you can offset one item against the other if you want to, but the plain fact remains that the national debt has been increased by over $2 billion in the last two weeks because of these difficulties in commercial ventures in which the government has chosen to intervene.

Senator Olson: That is not the plain fact but Senator Roblin's opinion, and he is welcome to it. I do not want to get into an argument about it now, but—

Senator Flynn: Never make an admission. Ask your lawyer before you do so.

Senator Olson: If Senator Roblin had listened attentively to some comments that were made a few moments ago, we were told that a very substantial portion of what Senator Roblin has just referred to is, in fact, an accumulative indebtedness over seven years. That is why I take some objection to his saying that it was done in the last two weeks.

Senator Roblin: I certainly admit that it was done over seven years, but it was only disclosed in the last few weeks. It is only in the last few weeks that we got seven years' worth of arrears of statements and information from Canadair, when the government, as the sole shareholder, should have had the capacity to keep the public and Parliament informed as these things were going on.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: You should have let us know that when you were in power for that short while.

Hon. C. William Doody: We could not get the cover off Pandora's box.

Senator Olson: You didn't dare.

Senator Flynn: We were going to do it, but things happened on December 13.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It was going to be a part of the long-term gain.

Senator Roblin: We got the pain; you got the gain.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I notice that there are a couple of microphones in the chamber this afternoon, which appears to indicate that we will have Royal Assent. Is Royal Assent planned for today, even if we do not pass all the bills? Will we have Royal Assent both today and tomorrow, or must we pass all the bills today?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, those microphones are for Royal Assent, bearing in mind the Scouts' motto, "Be prepared!" We have not fixed a time for Royal Assent and will not do so until we see what progress we make. It may be that there will not be Royal Assent today but only tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: Do you want to have all the bills receive Royal Assent at the same time?

Senator Frith: We will have to see what progress we make.

Senator Flynn: I want to know if we shall have only one Royal Assent ceremony.

Senator Frith: At the moment we are ready to have one today and one tomorrow, but that decision will be made on the basis of the progress made today.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNITY DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—CONTROL MEASURES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question that I think is of some importance and urgency, notice of which I gave him earlier today.

• (1510)

The question is: What special measures have been taken by the federal government to help control the fatal illness called acquired immunity deficiency syndrome, the incidence of which epidemiologists have stated is now doubling every six months?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Haidasz for having given notice that he intended to ask this question today. However, since his question did not reach my office until after midday today, within that relatively short period of time I have been unable to get a precise answer to what he is asking, and that is: What special measures has the federal government taken to try to help control this disease?

However, I know that quite a lot is going on, and that there has been intensification of research to identify the cause of this disease, whether it is a virus or something else.

I do not have a precise answer about the special measures that are being taken, but an inquiry has gone forward and I shall relay the answer to Senator Haidasz as soon as I receive it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN PATROL FRIGATE PROGRAM

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I heard this morning—what, if true, is extremely good news—that the lead shipyard contract of the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program has been awarded to Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company Ltd., of Saint John, New Brunswick, which, of course, is the best shipyard in Canada.

Hon. Jack Marshall: The second best.

Senator McElman: Number one.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is number one now; that's for sure.

Senator McElman: Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate have some information in this regard?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish I had. It would be useful if I had the communiqué that was issued, but, unfortunately, I do not have it with me. However, honourable senators, I undertake to send for the communiqué so that more particular details about the announcement can be drawn to the attention of the Senate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I suppose the confirmation will not affect the people of Alberta too much.

Senator Olson: I understand that, in spite of the tremendous lobbying that I might have done, none of these frigates is going to be built in Alberta!

Senator McElman: Is it not a fact that, under the proposal put forward by the Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, benefits spin off to every province in the nation?

Senator Olson: That is true.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Saskatchewan gets the shaft.

Senator Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, that was not said facetiously because the so-called "shaft" is a very real thing. It is not what you people think it is. I was referring, of course, to the "drive" shaft.

A high-technology company in Saskatchewan, SED Systems, is absolutely delighted because this will provide a subcontract of between $10 million and $12 million and will involve the continued employment of several hundred people. This news was received with absolute delight by the people of Saskatchewan.

Senator Flynn: $10 million out of $2 billion.

Senator Frith: Some shaft!

Senator Buckwold: I can tell the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that $10 million in Saskatchewan, considering what we usually get, is considered manna from Heaven.

Senator Flynn: I agree with you.

CANADIAN SECURITY

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-157

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 4:

The Senate resumed from Monday, June 27, consideration of the motion of Senator Olson:

> That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-157 intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate;
> That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee have power to act jointly with any committee appointed by the other place to examine the subject-matter of the aforementioned Bill; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to request that House, if it deems it advisable, to appoint a committee to act jointly with that already chosen by this House.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have already indicated in a very general way the position taken by this side on the motion. We would have preferred seeing the subject of the bill referred to a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, but I understand the government has given up asking that House's agreement on the matter, and, therefore, there is no question of getting the co-operation of the other place for the setting up of a joint committee.

The second point I raised the other day was that, if we could not have a joint committee, we would have preferred, instead of a reference to the special committee mentioned in the motion, a reference to the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. If I understood correctly the Leader of the Government, he will definitely not accept the proposal because he feels that committee already has too much work to do. We could of course question that decision, but that is another matter. We could move an amendment to the motion, substituting the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for that special joint committee, but if that amendment is not agreeable to the Leader of the Government, there is no question of principle involved, so that our gesture would be useless and would have no value, however symbolic. Therefore, if the Leader of the Government tells us he stands by his proposal of a Senate special committee, under the circumstances we bow to his decision, our objection being solely for the record, and the motion may be carried on division.

There remains the matter of the date of the committee report. If I remember well, it is October 27.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): October 27.

Senator Flynn: October 27 it is, so my memory is not failing me as usual. At the time Senator Asselin was elected, and he has always held my memory in great admiration—

Hon. Martial Asselin: I rise on a question of privilege, Senator Flynn is referring to his memory with respect to birthdays, but nothing else.

Senator Flynn: I appreciate such corrections. In any event, the government leader told us he did not feel the committee should undertake anything before September. It seems to me this is leaving very little time to that committee to report on October 27. I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Government were a little more specific as to what he anticipates for that committee's program.

I have nothing further to add for the time being. I have already submitted to the Leader of the Government the names of senators on this side who could sit on that committee. As I said yesterday, there should be a procedure for ready substitution of committee members. In the case of such a small committee, this is very important. It can very easily happen that one or two members cannot attend, and there should be some means to call in a substitute without difficulty. This being said, I would be very happy to hear the response from the Leader of the Government on the points I raised.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to respond to the questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition. First, we are prepared to acquiesce to his suggestion that we pass a motion that would allow for essentially the same procedure to be followed that was used in connection with the Joint Committee on the Constitution, namely, that the Leader of the Government, or someone designated by him, and the Leader of the Opposition, or someone designated by him—I believe the whips were designated by the two leaders—be authorized to change the membership of the committee without reference to the Senate and, indeed, when the Senate is not sitting. We are prepared to move a motion that gives that authority to the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition concerning their respective nominees to the committee.

With regard to the work schedule of the committee, I believe it is necessary to have an organization meeting almost immediately—perhaps tomorrow. But it will be for the members of the committee to discuss among themselves the workload to be undertaken some time later in the summer. I cannot say what that committee, or a steering committee, would do at this point in time, although I would certainly be guided by their advice. I hope that the honourable senator understands that both he and I will be members of the committee.

Senator Asselin: Will he be the chairman?

Senator Olson: The committee will have to decide that after nominations are received. A reasonable scenario would be to have the organization meeting reasonably soon. It does not have to be tomorrow, or even next week. There should be a series of meetings, at which the committee could hear from the minister. The committee may then decide that it is not necessary to hold any further meetings until September, although the motion gives it authority to meet during adjournments of the Senate. No doubt there would be some fairly intense meetings some time in September, perhaps after September 12. However, I hope the Leader of the Opposition will agree that it would be better for the committee to determine the dates of the committee meetings. That is the work plan that I foresee for the committee.

The Leader of the Opposition suggested that the matter should be dealt with by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. However, there is a problem associated with that. I am almost certain, although not completely certain, that the invitation extended to members of the House of Commons will not be accepted. Therefore, it should be a special committee that could be turned into a joint committee if the other place decides to accept our invitation.

In addition, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs already has a heavy workload. As honourable senators know, it has to consider Bill S-31, and at the present time it is considering Bill S-33. Also there were some concerns expressed in the house yesterday regarding the amendment to the Constitution affecting aboriginal rights. Later today, when we are dealing with that motion, I will be prepared to accept a suggestion that the matter be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. The matter should be considered for a reasonable length of time. Whether that "reasonable length of time" should be between now and September, I am not prepared to say, but the committee should allow adequate time to consider the views that were expressed by honourable senators during the course of the debate yesterday. With those comments I believe I have answered the questions raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

PROCEDURE FOR CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two motions dealing with the subject matter of the motion that has just been adopted.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), I move:

> That changes in the membership of the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of the proposed Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act may be made by notification thereof, signed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or any Senator named by him, with respect to government members, and by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or any Senator named by him, with respect to opposition members, being filed with the Clerk of the Senate who shall cause the same to be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of that sitting, or of the next sitting thereafter, as the case may be.

Honourable senators, the motion is similar to the one adopted in connection with the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MEMBERS OF SENATE SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That Rule 66(1)(b) be suspended in relation to the nomination of Senators to serve on the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of the proposed Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act; and
> That the following Senators be appointed to act on the said Special Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Balfour, Buckwold, Flynn, Frith, Kelly, McIlraith, Nurgitz, Olson, Pitfield, Riel and Riley.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-GERMANY TAX AGREEMENT BILL, 1982

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-24, to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) moved that the amendments be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, we have before us an amended version of Bill S-24. It will be recalled that this house gave third reading to Bill S-24 on July 7, 1982. The Bill, introduced in the Senate on February 2, 1982, contained clauses designed to ensure that the agreement can be kept up to date as a result of changes in the tax system of Canada and that of Germany. These clauses were in line with similar clauses approved by Parliament in the past.

During the Senate proceedings a number of amendments were made to the bill. The Senate's concern was primarily with respect to the power of the government to amend the agreement by means of a supplementary agreement made by order of the Governor in Council. In order to limit the power given to the executive by the bill to modify and amend the Canada-Germany Double Taxation Agreement, the following changes were made, namely: First, amending subclause 5(1) to provide that a supplementary agreement "shall not, in any manner, impose a greater tax burden on any person than the one to which such person might be subject, but for this Act, as may be amended from time to time"; and, second, by amending the provisions in clause 6 relating to the negative resolution procedure that applied to the supplementary agreement inter alia through reducing the number of members in both the House of Commons and the Senate who could initiate the procedure.

It was mentioned in the other place yesterday that the first mentioned amendment could not be accepted in that it carried the clear implication that a double taxation treaty can impose taxes, whereas it is generally recognized and accepted by the courts that such a treaty can only reduce or relieve taxes. The other place accepted the addition of some language to subclause 5(1) that meets the concern of the Senate by qualifying the power of the executive to alter or revoke the agreement, but did not approve the specific language passed by the Senate in this respect.

With respect to the Senate amendments concerning the negative resolution procedure, the fact that they represented an improvement over the one previously agreed to by Parliament was recognized and they were accepted. However, it was felt in the other place that the reduction from 50 and 20 to 20 and 10 in the number of members or senators respectively required to file a motion was too low. Consequently, the other house agreed to increase these numbers to 30 and 15 respectively.

A third amendment was made to subclause 6(3) but it was only for correcting a translation problem in the French version of that subclause as approved by the Senate. If honourable senators would like an explanation of this amendment, I understand that Senator Frith is willing to give it in both official languages and, just so he knows what he is talking about, I will give him the music.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He had better read slowly.

Senator Olson: Germany has been ready for some time to ratify the agreement and they are anxious to put it into force. There is also considerable interest in Canada to see this agreement implemented as soon as possible. And, consequently, I believe the amendments, which secured the passage of the bill in the other place, should receive the approval of this house in order to enable the agreement to be implemented without further delay.

Although my explanation has been brief, I invite the support of honourable senators for my motion for concurrence in these amendments.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, my comments will be brief. I am sorry that Senator Godfrey is not present in the chamber because, if I remember correctly, he indicated an interest in this matter. Perhaps it was with regard to the amendment concerning the number of members of the House of Commons and the Senate who could initiate the procedure on the negative resolution. It is too bad that the honourable senator is not present because we shall never know whether what he had in mind was really of substance.

It seems to me that the first amendment is not really justified because I see no reason to contest the right to say what is said as opposed to what we said. After all, the Senate clarified the principle that we could not, according to the changes proposed, impose a greater tax burden. The minister says that it has always been interpreted that we could not take such action so the phrase is not needed in the agreement. If everybody is entirely satisfied that this interpretation is correct, then that is fine, but what the Senate proposed was not harmful in any way.

However, I do not think that this change in wording is worth engaging in battle with the other place. Therefore, we should concur in these amendments now.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Would someone explain to me the third amendment which calls for the striking out of line 8 on page 3 in the French text?

Senator Flynn: Senator Frith was supposed to speak on that.

Senator Roblin: That is right, but my copy of the bill has no French text on line 8 of page 3. Probably the line number is wrong. Which one should it be?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Leaving aside the question of lines for the moment, it seems to me quite clear, upon looking at the two versions, that the words in the English version of subclause (3), "unless a motion to the like effect has earlier been taken up and considered in the other House and adopted", appear in the French text. Senator Roblin seems to be quite right in that the words are being added rather than substituted. The amendment reads:

> jours de séance suivant sa remise, sauf si l'autre Chambre a déjà étudié et adopté une motion visant la même fin.

Those words were not in the French version, so they have been added to fit with the last three lines of subclause (3), but there may be some mistake as to the line.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: If my honourable friend will count the lines he will find that it is in fact line 8.

Senator Frith: Line 8 is struck out.

Senator Roblin: I see the point now.

Senator Frith: That is right, because you have to strike out the words:

> "jours de séance suivant sa remise".

Those words are replaced with:

> "sauf si l'autre Chambre".

Here is the explanation.

Senator Roblin: I see now: Thank you very much.

JUDGES ACT
FEDERAL COURT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-166, to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-166 provides for an increase of four judges at the level of the Federal Court of Appeal and two judges at the level of the Trial Division of the Federal Court.

Hon. Jack Marshall: What are their names?

Senator Frith: They have yet to be nominated. I guess they cannot be named until their chairs are built.

The lawyers among us will realize that there has been an increased burden on the Federal Court both at the trial level and the appeal level. The judges in both of those levels of the Federal Court travel extensively across Canada hearing both matters at first instance and appeals within their jurisdiction.

Hon. Robert Muir: Do they travel to Australia?

Senator Frith: Not as a result of this bill, Senator Muir, no. On the other hand, in fairness and to be absolutely accurate, nothing in this bill prevents them from doing so on their own.

The increase takes into account the present case-load and projected increases within the next few years and the desirability of reducing to a substantial extent the present reliance on deputy judges. That reliance has been increasing because it is necessary to have a panel of three judges to hear appeals. Consequently, often judges who have become supernumerary from some of the provincial courts fill in for Federal Court judges in the composition of appeal panels, thus helping to deal with the case-load. Obviously, their service is both valuable and highly appreciated, but the very fact that they are so often required would seem to justify the establishment of these additional judgeships.

Pursuant to the Constitution, the Parliament of Canada has the responsibility and the exclusive jurisdiction under section 96 to appoint superior court judges of the provincial courts. Because section 96 judges, as they are sometimes referred to, are superior court judges provision is also made in this bill to increase their numbers in both county courts, which are considered superior courts, and the high courts of the provinces where the two courts are not unified. Whether or not they are unified, they are still superior court judges under section 96.

Honourable senators, because the explanatory notes throughout the whole of the bill give particularly detailed explanations and descriptions of the additional appointments in various jurisdictions as well as full explanations of the consequential amendments relating to payment, to annuities for surviving spouses, et cetera, unless honourable senators wish for an explanation of a particular point, there is little I can add to what I have already said. Let me simply reiterate that the purpose of the bill is to increase the number of judges in the Federal Court at both trial and appeal levels and to increase the number of superior court judges in both county courts and supreme courts of the provinces, whether or not those courts are unified, as they are in certain provinces. Unless you wish me to focus on particular provinces or particular consequential amendments, I believe that is all I can usefully say at this stage.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Bill C-166 is the result of the splitting of Bill C-159 which included the problem contained in this bill. We will have it again later on in Bill C-167 which has to do with the establishment of the Tax Court of Canada. Both subjects were covered in Bill C-159, but the opposition took exception to that and Bill C-159 was split in two. This one deals with judges of the Federal Court and of superior or county courts. First of all, the government wants to increase the number of judges because of the larger number of cases. In every instance, this decision follows a request by provincial attorneys general, except of course in the case of the Federal Court where the Minister of Justice is in a position to appreciate the need to increase the number of judges.

The bill provides for a whole series of increases which are explained in the marginal notes of each clause, as the sponsor of the bill pointed out. There is no argument about that. There is no doubt that we need more judges and that they carry a much heavier load than in the past. Indisputably, in earlier times, when I began to exercise my profession, superior court judges had a lot more—I would not say leisure time—peace of mind than they have today. Halls of justice have become huge plants, and that creates a problem. I have no idea how we can solve it, but the fact is that the number of judges must be increased. That is the main thrust of this bill.

Second, this bill clarifies certain provisions concerning annuities by substituting the words "surviving spouse" for the word "widow". Thus, the spouse of a female judge will be entitled to an annuity. That sounds interesting to me and I do not see anything wrong there. In many cases, it will be like a bonanza. Be that as it may, since the current trend is to make both sexes equal, which means giving males the same breaks now enjoyed by females, the idea is to avoid discrimination against men. That is what is happening here—we are doing away with discrimination against men, not against women. That is the correction we are making.

With respect to the pension of judges, I should point out that the law perpetuates the system of two classes of judges—those who have been appointed before 1975 and do not contribute to their pension fund, and those who were appointed after 1975 and who contribute something like 7.5 per cent. All judges contribute 1.5 per cent for the indexation of their pension. In that connection, a few years ago, the Minister of Justice set up a task group which examined the matter and reported two years ago. The task force suggested that judges should not have to contribute to their pension scheme. Of course, when you look at the scheme, this is senseless. Up to 1975, the right to a pension was integrated, as it were, in the appointment. Consequently, a judge who became disabled two years after his appointment was entitled to a full pension. Today, the one who is on the bench longer gets less, because he may contribute for years and receive his pension for only a couple of years. It does not make much sense. The Minister of Justice should have taken into consideration the recommendations made about the cancellation of that contribution.

I would like to remind this house that during my brief stay at the Department of Justice I drafted a Bill which was to be introduced the day following December 13. That Bill would have removed that contribution to the pension fund. It would have even refunded to the judges appointed since 1975 the contributions paid until then. Such a Bill would have, in short, put all judges on the same footing. We now have two groups of judges—those who receive their full salary mentioned in the Bill and the others who receive that salary less 7.5 per cent which, just the same, comes to a rather substantial amount. Surely there is nothing pleasant in saying for instance: "I get $700 or $800 less per month than my colleague who was appointed before 1975."

Hon. Azellus Denis: And he gets the same pension.

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Flynn: You are right. Then, I understand the problem. It stems from the objections raised in the other place by NDP members who forced the government to impose these contributions. They had done exactly the same thing, when the compulsory retirement age was set at 75 in 1965. All senators who had been appointed before that period had to contribute to their retirement fund. It is the same principle or philosophy which has motivated the NDP members in this instance. The government is a prisoner of the objections of this small political entity, which I find totally unwarranted. In any case, this remains a problem.

It should be mentioned also that in connection with the senators' pension plan the government had indicated, when dealing with the House of Commons pension plan some years ago, that it would readjust the pension plan for senators, especially those appointed since 1965, at the first opportunity. It had even indicated that it would do so at the same time it would deal with the Judges Act. Once more, we have been forgotten. The government lacked the courage to settle this problem. With all due respect to the Deputy Leader of the Government, whom I do not mean to offend, I had to raise this point. The government should make a special effort to remedy this situation which results from the fact that the last time the members of the House pension legislation was amended, it stated that it would deal with the senators' problem at a later date. That was two years ago. It has as yet done nothing, although it had stated when dealing with this legislation that it would do something. I should say however that the occasion was not particularly well chosen, because it is difficult to relate the problem senators are faced with in connection with their pensions with that with which judges are faced in connection with their own pensions. Yet, if the government has found a way to introduce Bill C-166 to deal with the judges' problem, I do not see how it could not also find a way to introduce legislation to deal with our own pension problem.

Senator Frith: If we do not do anything about it, there is no problem.

Senator Flynn: That is exactly what I am complaining about. Incidentally, I also have a few comments on what is not in the Bill but should be. I mention this because it is an issue that has been discussed and has been causing considerable friction among the judiciary for many years. We had almost solved the problem.

Senator Frith: So far, I agree with you.

Senator Flynn: We were going to settle those issues in 1979. When the Trudeau Government came back to power, it appointed a task force to look into the matter, and the recommendation was to get rid of it, as was already provided in the Bill I mentioned earlier, which I was to table the day after the Government was defeated.

So the issue of pensions and salaries of judges of the Superior Court remains a source of friction. This debate may be a good opportunity to talk about a procedure for appointing judges, because there has been a vast improvement in the method used by the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister, as the case may be.

I do not think this is the right time to try and find a solution, but I do think the time has come to say that we should think about it, and that perhaps the procedure should be more institutionalized, if at all possible, to protect the Government or the Minister of Justice against unwise appointments. At the present time, the Minister of Justice or the Government or the Prime Minister consults the Canadian Bar Association and the local associations, but the fact remains that we could perhaps find a procedure that would provide even more safeguards. In any case, this is an issue that is not really related to the Bill. The others are not related either but they should have been in the Bill, and I think that in any case, it would be useless to refer the Bill to a committee. I see that in the other place they considered the Bill in Committee of the Whole, but this proved to be pretty useless. Only two amendments were proposed by the New Democratic Party and these were more propaganda than anything else. Since I do not see how we could really propose amendments or make any changes at all, since we do not have the legal expertise in the Senate, I therefore take the view that the Bill can now be given second reading, immediately followed by third reading, if that is agreeable to the Bill's sponsor.

• (1550)

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I share the views expressed by the Leader of the Opposition, a former Minister of Justice and distinguished counsel. It might have been more appropriate for Senator Flynn to sponsor this bill, but, under these circumstances, it would not have been consistent with our traditions. Concerning this bill as a whole, he has emphasized some aspects of the pension plan and elaborated on the malaise which continues to be felt concerning the various categories of judges; examples can be found in the Ontario Appeal Court or even Divisional Court where three judges are hearing a case and one might be paid at a higher rate than the other two because of these various categories, where some do not have to contribute to the pension fund.

I fully support his views, and I deplore the fact that this bill which was ready before the Clark government was defeated was never adopted or even introduced later on. As to the connection between the judges' pensions and the senators' pensions, I again fully support his views. The method for appointing judges has been improved on several occasions over the past 10 or 15 years, but there are still other alternatives.

Therefore, I move that the bill be read the second time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TAX COURT OF CANADA BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-167, respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

He said: Honourable senators, Senator Flynn and others have taught me never to introduce a bill by saying that it is a simple one. However, I think I can say that this bill is less complicated than it looks. While there are many sections making up the bill, with full explanatory notes, I suggest that what all of this black letter law seeks to accomplish is not as complicated as the method of accomplishing it might indicate.

The intention of the bill is to continue a body known as the Tax Review Board under the name of the Tax Court of Canada. The bill changes the name of that body and adds a certain feature to the old Tax Review Board by making it what is called a court of record. That means that it has certain additional powers and independence that it would not have, or was not perceived to have had, when it was called the Tax Review Board.

The problem, to an important extent, was one of perception. When the body was called the Tax Review Board, it was considered by many taxpayers to be an arm of the Department of National Revenue or of the Government of Canada. It is felt, and there is some evidence to support this feeling, that the mistaken impression that the board had a sort of interest in the outcome of the matters appearing before it was created, partly, by the fact that it was called the Tax Review Board.

Perhaps I should illustrate this point by way of example. Suppose that someone appeared before the Tax Review Board to argue that a tax assessment ought to be changed, and opposite him, was a representative of the Department of National Revenue trying to maintain the tax assessment. The taxpayer might well feel that the board he was appearing before was simply an arm of the government, and it follows that he might feel that the deck was stacked against him.

In fact, honourable senators, the Tax Review Board was not, literally, an arm of the government. Its name, however, plus the fact that it was not a court of record, did give that impression. What this bill seeks to do, therefore, is to establish the exclusively judicial nature of the tribunal now known as the Tax Court of Canada.

The conversion of the board into a court of law was recommended by many bodies that were interested in its functions, two of which are the Canadian Bar Association and the Carter Commission on Taxation. That commission, in its recommendations, gave rise to the 1972 reform.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The so-called reform.

Senator Frith: Yes, I agree with that, in view of its eventual fate. The commission proposed, however, the formation of a tax court, and I underline the word "court." The Canadian Bar Association was consulted by the Minister of Justice and it endorsed the proposal regarding the changes made and the status of the board.

In saying that the board is now a court, we may create the impression that the appearances and procedures before the court are now going to be more complicated. That is not the intention of the government. The government does not want to make access of the taxpayer to the tribunal more difficult, nor does it want to introduce more formality into the conduct of the proceedings. In fact, subclause 14(1) of the bill provides that an appeal before the Tax Court of Canada, as it is now called, does not require any special form of pleading. Clause 14(2) sets out that the court is not bound by the technical rules of evidence. The same subclause goes even further to state that all appeals are to be dealt with by the court as informally and as expeditiously as the circumstances and considerations of fairness permit. Clause 15 provides that a taxpayer may appeal to the court in person or may be represented by a lawyer, a friend, or any other person of his choice. The court cannot award costs on the disposition of an appeal, even though it is a court of record. The substance of all of these provisions is now found in the Tax Review Board Act.

To reiterate the changes, honourable senators, the first is the change of name. The second is the change of status, making it a court of record, which establishes judicial independence but does not thereby complicate the procedure.

Another change proposed by the bill has to do with certain amendments to Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. That statute, at the present time, is administered by the Department of National Revenue. Appeals under that part are now heard by umpires, as they are called, who are usually judges of the Trial Division of the Federal Court of Canada. The transfer of jurisdiction to the Tax Court of Canada that is provided for by this bill means that matters which were formerly under the jurisdiction of umpires now fall under the jurisdiction of officers of the new tax court. The latter jurisdiction is desirable because the handling of unemployment insurance appeals, with respect to coverage, does more properly fit a court such as this tribunal than it does a court of superior jurisdiction like the Federal Court of Canada.

The appeal system against a decision of the tribunal of first instance, in appeals under Part IV of the act, will be simplified, in that all decisions of the Tax Court of Canada will be the subject matter of a single review under section 28 of the Federal Court Act. Honourable senators will understand that the Federal Court is in the picture, but now for its usual review purposes rather than as the court of original jurisdiction. At the present time, the decision of an umpire with regard to an appeal under Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, can be appealed pursuant to section 86 of that act to the Pensions Appeal Board, with leave of that board in respect of a question of law involving section 3 of that act. It can also be subject to an application for review under section 28 of the Federal Court Act on all other questions involved in that decision. There is no change in the appeal system regarding benefit cases.

Also, Part III of the Judges Act is amended by this bill. The considerations that prompted the government years ago to transfer the administrative duties and functions relative to the staff of the Federal Court of Canada from the Department of Justice, where it now is, to the Commissioner for Federal Judicial Affairs are valid here also. It is done with a view to further enhancing the independence of the judiciary in Canada and ensuring, as much as possible, consistent with the principles of ministerial responsibility of a parliamentary system, that the administration of judicial affairs is to be separate and apart from the administration of the executive branch of government.

As a last change, the government proposes to change from seven to 12 the number of members of this new Tax Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, those are the provisions of the bill. I think that normally many of us, when we are sponsoring bills, like to do at least a quick walk through the bill. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that because this bill really repeats a whole lot of provisions that apply to the board that would not be a useful exercise. I have looked at the bill, and I believe I have brought forward the salient features, and that it would not be profitable for us to go through all the sections.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Senator Steuart agrees.

Senator Flynn: That is very comforting indeed. Possibly I should dispense with speaking.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Dispense.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Flynn: The agreement of Senator Steuart on the record might not mean exactly what it appears to mean between us.

[Translation]

I would now like to make a few comments on this bill which replaces the Tax Review Board by the Tax Court of Canada. As indicated by the sponsor of this bill, the Tax Review Board seemed until now to be an adjunct or an extension of the Department of National Revenue and its decisions seemed to be simply of an administrative nature rather than judicial.

Indeed, this problem has been under consideration for quite a while, as mentioned by the sponsor; even the report of the Carter Commission recommended that a court be established. There is also the fact that, being members of a board, appointees were somewhat at the mercy of the government as far as their salary was concerned; there were always problems to determine the salary of the Tax Review Board members.

I remember having looked into this matter when I was Minister of Justice. Even then, we were trying to find the best solution. In principle, under this bill, a court will be established, the salaries of its members will be transferred from the Board to the Court and the members of the Board will become judges. Their salaries will be the same as those of county court judges who are appointed in every province except Quebec.

Because of that, the Judges Act had to be amended so that the words "a judge of the Tax Court of Canada" are added every time a judge of a superior or county court is mentioned. That is why the bill is quite long, as it contains a great number of strictly housekeeping clauses. The Schedule which begins on page 25 contains 16 pages and ends on page 41. These are simply references to the acts which must be amended in consequence of all the other amendments.

The mover of the Bill has mentioned the nature of the court. As we know, the Tax Review Board had jurisdiction not only over tax matters as provided for in the Income Tax Act but also over any decision-making with respect to problems under the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Canada Pension Act. Now all those powers of the Tax Review Board are transferred to the Tax Court of Canada. The mover of the Bill has mentioned that he was pleased with the provision of Clause 14 and the following. I am not really sure whether those clauses come under the heading "Proceedings before the Court."

I will quote the whole of Clause 14(2) as follows:

> (2) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Act under which an appeal is made, the Court is not bound by any legal or technical rule of evidence in conducting a hearing for the purposes of that Act, and all appeals shall be dealt with by the court as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and considerations of fairness permit.

I would like it to be a matter of interpretation of the provisions of the Bill rather than a matter of procedure. I am concerned that the Tax Court can dispense with the rules of law in the matter of evidence. In fact, I am somewhat concerned. I do not know and I will say that I did not have enough time to check whether in the legislation now in effect the powers granted to the Tax Review Board do precisely include the same provision.

Senator Frith: In the former legislation, yes.

Senator Flynn: Of course, but in the explanatory notes there is nothing on that subject.

Anyhow, it could perhaps have been a reason why the Tax Review Board was merely considered as an instrument of the Department of National Revenue.

Senator Frith: Senator Flynn, according to my information, the subject matter of the provisions was identical. They are now to be found in the powers of the Tax Review Board but not literally. This is why Senator Flynn referred to that. My information is that they are exactly the same provisions, but they also are the same in principle or substance.

Senator Flynn: In any event, I am leary that the Court is not bound by the legal or technical rules of evidence.

As I said a while ago, if I were told: In equity you must follow the rules, or go by an equity principle to interpret the Income Tax Act, I am in agreement. But as far as evidence is concerned, I am not too anxious to give the Court that discretion not to follow the legal or technical rules.

I am not happy either with the provision to which the mover referred, Clause 18, where it is stated:

> No costs may be awarded by the Court on the disposition of an appeal.

I do not see why, if the appeal is upheld, if the taxpayer is right, he would not be entitled to some costs. If this is truly a court of justice, why should there be that provision which seems to prevent the Court altogether from granting costs, from awarding costs to the taxpayer whose appeal has been granted?

It may be an illusion to think that we could simply delete that Clause and return the Bill to the House of Commons, telling them it has been so amended. I would be very anxious to know whether the mover of the Bill really believes that such a provision is justified.

In any event, we have no problem with the substance and thrust of the Bill. Those two rules of procedure, if you like, Clause 14(12) and Clause 18 make me wonder, to say the least.

I wish the sponsor of the bill would tell me whether he is fully satisfied that we ought to keep those two provisions unchanged. I also wish he would tell me if we might even send a small message to the House of Commons to say that at least we have deleted clause 18.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator Frith takes the floor at this time, he will close the debate.

Senator Frith: As is often the case, honourable senators, I share the views of the Leader of the Opposition about this bill. I simply want to answer the question concerning clauses 14(2) and 18.

I should think that the only justification for those two provisions is the one I gave when I introduced the bill. What the government had in mind when it decided to change the terms of reference of the board was to avoid giving the impression that proceedings will be more complicated, or that the change will necessarily complicate the proceedings before the board, which will henceforth be called the court. That is the only justification. Those amendments must be seen from a certain angle with respect to the impression left by the provisions or the principles of the bill. What I mean to say is that we have the impression that the board is a tool of the government, and that is why the word "court" has been substituted for the word "board". We have changed the terms of reference and tried to reassure the user or client that, at this stage, we do not want to complicate or change the proceedings. They will not be formal, they will be the same as in the past. That being said, I agree about clause 18. That is the only justification. Besides that, in principle I cannot offer any justification to deny the court the power to award costs.

Instead of referring this bill to committee, I would suggest another alternative, which would be to take note of the reservations expressed about clause 18 and, to a certain extent, about clause 14(2), and make the Department of Justice aware of them. I am convinced that, at the first opportunity, they will take steps to correct those provisions. In the meantime, we can rest assured that, although the name and terms of reference of the court have been changed, the proceedings will be as they were before.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

• (1620)

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I am wondering if we could possibly postpone third reading of this bill until later this day, to give the sponsor of the bill an opportunity to communicate with the minister to determine whether he might be able to tell us something about clause 18. I wonder if the minister could give us the assurance that he will consider that and possibly bring in an amendment during the next session, whenever that takes place, and it may very well be only after the next general election. We have received those assurances before, and they did not mean too much, but they were better than nothing.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think that that is a reasonable request. We will have third reading later this day.

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE REPEAL BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury moved the second reading of Bill C-119, to repeal certain statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is the second part of the government's regulatory reform program; the first bill was designed to standardize and simplify federal laws that require the private sector to keep certain records. This second bill proposes to repeal 124 unused and unnecessary federal laws.

These are dead statutes, and although they remain on the books they are currently inactive and will not be required in the future.

I should like to add that, although the impetus for the bill is the regulatory reform program, the vast majority of statutes identified by ministers for repeal are not regulatory in nature; nevertheless, inclusion of old and non-regulatory statutes is desirable as legislative housecleaning is an important and necessary step in ensuring improved public administration generally.

By repealing all known obsolete statutes through this bill, demands on the limited time of Parliament will not be unnecessarily multiplied. Further work on legislative housekeeping will, of course, be necessary. This project is ongoing and most departments have already begun the task of reviewing their regulations in order to identify obsolete provisions.

Passage of the Miscellaneous Statute Repeal Bill is confirmation of the government's commitment to regulatory reform and improving communications and consultations with the private sector.

Honourable senators, the bill is before you and you will see that it contains a long list of individual statutes which are to be repealed by this bill.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, to prove a point that has bothered me for some time, this bill concerns 124 statutes that are to be repealed. I realize that the bill was sent to our offices many months ago, but it is difficult, without research assistants, to look into those which are of interest and concern. I mention Nos. 52 and 53 in this regard, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act. As far as I am concerned, those are very important pieces of legislation.

While the answer might be that they are now the responsibility of the provinces, unless I can be convinced otherwise, I feel that these bills should remain on the federal statute books.

Another statute which falls into this category is No. 124, The Veterans' Assistance Commission Act, 1936. Senator Stanbury was good enough to show me the big book he has, provided to him by the officials from the department, which sets out what that act was all about.

Another one is No. 64, the Defence Supplies Act. I am sure that Senator Lafond would agree with me that that legislation might be useful in assisting the Subcommittee on National Defence in its endeavours to have the armed forces brought up to strength and provided with modernized equipment.

Hon. C. William Doody: Bows and arrows!

Senator Marshall: At the present time the Atlantic region is in a dilemma about the reduction of freight subsidies, which is going to hurt development in that area. The point is that I would have liked to have had more time to look at some of these statutes and satisfy myself that they are obsolete and should be repealed. This is the sort of thing that happens before every long adjournment when we have a large number of bills to pass within minutes.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this bill is another one of which the subject matter was under consideration when I was the Minister of Justice. It is hard to believe that with such a short tenure I had so many problems that are being resolved more than three years later.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): You went there to prepare a place for us and now we are following your leadership.

Senator Flynn: The idea of repealing obsolete legislation was part of the reform that we were trying to initiate, and I am very happy that it is being continued by the present minister.

The point raised by Senator Marshall is a very important one in the sense that we would not want to repeal an act which still has a useful purpose. I would imagine that the Department of Justice would take the necessary precautions before recommending that Parliament repeal a certain act. I do not want to suggest that the Department of Justice never makes a mistake because perhaps they do more often than they are prepared to admit, but this is a case where the margin for error is rather minimal. This is part of a legal reform intended to eliminate obsolete legislation, acts and regulations, and to try to introduce, as often as necessary in any bill that we adopt, a sunset clause. That would mean that an act would simply be repealed if there was not a procedure for it to continue. Therefore, we would not have a lot of acts accumulating in the statutes that serve no useful purpose. I feel quite confident that all the statutes that are mentioned here—they have been checked very thoroughly—serve no useful purpose at this time. If this process were to take place every year, I think the statutes could be cleaned up to a large extent. In fact, lawyers know that when looking up the Statutes of Canada a lot of small or inconsequential acts are not included in the Revised Statutes of Canada except the most important ones. They are there and they remain on the statutes indefinitely, although oftentimes one does not know that they exist. Some of them may still be useful, but most of them die a natural death. My colleague, Perrin Beatty, who was working with me in this connection when we were the party in power, mentioned that some of these acts suggest eternal life because we find they have been in the statutes for so many years without anybody noticing that they are there and they serve no useful purpose.

Honourable senators, I recommend that the bill receive second reading.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, normally in bills the French translation appears on the opposite page, but that is not the case in this bill. For example, item No. 1 in English is item No. 8 in French. It is rather confusing and it prevails all the way through in that manner. Possibly the minister saw fit to list them alphabetically rather than numerically. Anyone reading this bill could be very confused if he was looking for the appropriate translation. I would like to know why this was not printed in the usual way.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Stanbury speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Flynn for commencing the house cleaning when he was in office and for having pointed out the importance of this being an ongoing process. Perhaps in future years if this does continue we will find a method of taking time to look more particularly at the acts which are being proposed for repeal.

I am grateful to Senator Marshall for drawing my attention to a number of the statutes. I have done some spot checking of the information I have here, and I have not found anything that seems to be amiss. I think it would be a good procedure for us to follow in the future to double check on the work of the Minister of Justice in the other place.

Insofar as Senator Guay's question is concerned, I think he put his finger on the fact that an attempt was made to list the bills alphabetically in French rather than to follow the same order in English. I am not sure what the logic was for that and whether it is a good practice, but I think it was wise of Senator Guay to raise the question in this context and to put it on the record. The references are the same, so I believe it would be easy to find your place.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: I would like to point out to Senator Guay that he is absolutely right. However, the Revised Statutes of Canada are listed in alphabetic order, but only in English. Such is not the case in the French version. There might have been an attempt to alter the system, but I have to admit that it has only created confusion.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45 (1)(b), I move that the bill be now read the third time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-165, to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before us is called the Industrial and Regional Development Bill. A copy of it is on your desks. I am also having circulated some tables you may find useful during the discussion. Normally, of course, I would move second reading and ask that the tables be appended to the Debates of the Senate. Then honourable senators would have an opportunity to read and examine the tables overnight. However, since we may have one or more interventions after my speech, I am having the tables circulated now so that they can be the subject matter of questions or other consideration.

Honourable senators, as it says, this bill is designed to provide a program of financial assistance to business and industry in all parts of Canada. The background and purpose of the bill arose from an announcement by the Prime Minister in early 1982 concerning the re-organization of economic departments of government which will result in the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The government has been examining what is needed to ensure regional and industrial development and the existing industrial support programs that have been available through DREE and IT&C.

The minister said in the other place on second reading that the reasons for this bill were the same as those that spurred the decision to re-organize. There is a need, on the one hand, to re-dedicate ourselves to combatting regional disparity in Canada, and, on the other, to ensure that industrial re-structuring support programs are actually geared to the circumstances that face Canadian industries in today's very competitive markets.

Those very circumstances demand concerted action on the part of Canadians, governments at all levels and, of course, the private sector, both management and labour. With the re-organization of federal economic departments and the introduction of programs such as that contained in this bill, the government is trying to play its part in that concerted action.

This bill has a number of features to which I would draw your attention. We will then go through an examination of the clauses of the bill.

There is a very important change in the whole principle and design of programs for such expansion, and that is that the program provides the capacity to financially assist industries in all parts of Canada, whereas, at the present time, as honourable senators well know, these programs work on the basis of designated areas. The intention is that they should apply to all parts of Canada. That is the first main feature.

The second main feature of the program is its flexibility. It is specifically designed to provide the type of assistance that is appropriate to a given industry, area or community at a given time. Honourable senators know that these needs vary greatly from region to region and also, of course, from economic sector to economic sector, and that they, of course, change in time. What, in one region, might be a situation of prosperity or lack of prosperity can change. The situation may stay the same in the region, but change in the sector. In other words, something can happen which will make the footwear industry, as an example, go through a depressed period. This is a variable.

Another variable is, of course, timing. One industry might not need help at one particular time, but might at another. Also, there are areas where there is a greater need for investment, for example, in infrastructure, roads, sewers, water and other services, in order to permit industries to establish and grow.

There are also areas where the need is for diversification. There are areas where the need is for new plants. There may be areas where the need is for the launching of new product lines. We have areas in industry where the need is for none of those things, but is for innovation to improve competitiveness.

These are all variables that ought to be taken into account by any good program. In some cases, the present programs do not have the flexibility to do so.

Of course, all of these various needs that I have described, such as diversification, new plant infrastructure, launching of new product lines, also provide great opportunities—opportunities to expand into the revolutionary growth industries of the future; and opportunities to apply the benefits of technology and innovation to virtually all of our existing industries in all parts of Canada to ensure long-term viability and growth. We also have great opportunities, through aggressive marketing techniques, to expand the international and domestic markets for Canadian goods and services. This program, as its second feature, addresses these needs and opportunities.

The third feature is what is called "tiering". It adds a powerful new weapon to the federal government's arsenal in the continuing fight against regional disparity.

The program recognizes not only the varying needs and opportunities of Canada's many regions, but also the levels of financial assistance required for effective industrial development across those regions.

The program embodied in this bill renews and, we believe, makes more effective the commitment to regional economic development that underlaid the establishment of DREE in 1969. That was the commitment and that was the philosophy. What we have in this bill is a much more sophisticated program for dealing with those very same needs and desires.

For the first time, honourable senators, the levels of financial assistance are specifically tailored to the level of disparity of the area concerned. Here we are not talking of broad geographic areas; we are talking of areas as small and as specific as can be defined using consistent, meaningful data available on a national basis.

The method of applying the data is intended to be, and we believe will be, equitable, objective and subject to automatic regular review. It will provide the first consistent measure of regional disparity in Canada. The mechanism I am referring to is the development index which uses data on employment, personal income and provincial fiscal capacity to provide a clear measure of the related need for assistance. It will be applied in areas as small and specific as a single census district.

Using the development index, areas of Canada are arranged in four levels or tiers of regional need. The tiers are meant to measure and respond to different levels of regional need. The first tier, in which the basic level of support under the program will be provided, contains the most developed 50 per cent of the population of Canada, where there is a substantial need for industrial restructuring. In that tier, financial assistance of up to 50 per cent of costs for innovation and marketing activities will be provided, and up to 25 per cent of modernization and expansion costs. So honourable senators will see the variables that are applied. The tier is different and the percentage of financial assistance is varied and measured depending on the need that is being responded to.

That is the first tier. There are three other tiers with increasing levels of support. In Tier IV areas, which contain the 5 per cent of the population living in areas of greatest need, the maximum level of support is provided under the program. Up to 60 per cent of costs for plant establishment may be provided.

There has been a refinement to the tier system since the program was first proposed. In any Tier I area—that is the 50 per cent, where there is the greatest prosperity, or perhaps I should say the least poor—where the unemployment to population ratio exceeds the national average by one per cent for any consecutive six-month period, that area will be provided with the next higher, or Tier II, level of assistance for plant establishment for one year. The reason is to make the system even more responsive by being able to respond to six-month changes rather than wait for longer changes before one can move into a qualifying tier, although at the moment one may be just outside that tier.

That is what has been called the cyclical factor. Where there is cyclical downturn affecting an area in the short term, in a way that would not immediately show up by applying the development index to which we have referred, but where short term but very real economic hardships nonetheless dictate the need for increased assistance, that is another example of the flexibility that is designed in the program.

So the industrial and regional development program has been carefully designed, and I am pleased to say that it has been designed after a great deal of consultation with the private sector. There has been much discussion in cabinet, and, as honourable senators may know, there has been a good deal of consultation with all three political parties.

Hon. Robert Muir: And the provinces?

Senator Frith: Yes, I believe so because, as Senator Muir implies, there is a major provincial factor here in terms of the index. I believe that those broad consultations may explain why there was generally a favourable response to the legislation in the other place.

The consultations were to meet the general and specific goals of regional and industrial development in all parts of Canada. The program provides for support over the whole range of industrial development needs, both industrial infrastructure and innovation. It has to be remembered that sometimes plant cannot be established because of the inability to provide water service and roads, for example. Therefore, the program deals with infrastructure and innovation in order to increase competitiveness. It can deal with the actual establishment of a plant, from the ground up. It can also deal with the modernization and expansion of a plant, and with marketing and industrial restructuring or renewal. Any of those needs can be met by application, and are met by the program set up in this bill. The objective, of course, is to provide support for those activities when and where they are needed anywhere in Canada.

The program also provides for effective regional development by instituting a strong incentive to Canadian firms to invest in those areas of Canada which have the greatest need for that investment. There has also been devised an organizational structure that will put the regional sensitivity and flexibility of the program into practice at the local level. It is the localization or decentralization of the application, granting and reviewing process. To put it in simple terms, the program has included in it a method whereby people can avoid having to come to Ottawa to make their applications. It is based on decentralized expertise, decision-making and local program delivery—the delivery of the program by way of application, grants and review. The actual putting into operation is meant to take place at the local level.

The industrial sector expertise from ITC has been combined with the regional capacity of DREE. Regional offices have been established in all provinces. Several new sub-offices have been opened, and more will be opened in future. The role of those offices will be to get to know the business community and act as its advocate with the federal government. They will take an active role in informing firms of available government support, all of which will be available locally for the first time.

As honourable senators will know, particularly those who come from regions outside the main cities, often excellent programs exist but people are not aware that they exist. So it is part of our job to ensure that people do know. The department is decentralizing not only to deliver the program, but also to ensure that people know that the program is available.

The new program, and indeed all programs, of the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion will be administered with the benefit of advice from an industrial and regional development board set up under the proposed act. The board will be co-chaired by representatives of management and labour, with membership from each group. That reflects the concept that I mentioned at the beginning, that the task of fighting the battle of regional disparity is a job for the federal government, for provincial and municipal government and also for the private sector, both labour and management. The purpose is to deliver this program through co-operation, a manifestation that is found in the establishment of the industrial and regional development board co-chaired by representatives of management and labour with membership from both. The board will have appropriate regional representation in its membership, and by advising the government on broad policy issues, the board will be an effective instrument in ensuring that the government's industrial policy and programs are based on a board consensus.

Honourable senators may know that a move has already been made, and will be continued, to establish sector specified task forces or advisory committees, again chaired by both management and labour. Four that I know of that are in effect—and there will be more—are in the automotive industry, the petro-chemical sector, forest products, and aerospace. The efforts of those task forces will be of great benefit in terms of establishing goals and strategies with regard to key industrial sectors.

Therefore, honourable senators, I believe that it is quite widely recognized that the bill is a major step forward in the rationalization, simplification and perfection of the federal government's approach—and I refer not only to the present government. I believe that the broad support for the principles contained in this bill make it clear that the present government does not own the concept any more than do the other political parties or provincial governments. I believe the program reflects a widely felt feeling that we have to have a flexible program that applies right across the country, that delivers at the local level, and is sensitive as far as possible to changes, with factors that enable us to respond much more specifically to more specific needs.

At a time when 1.5 million Canadians are unemployed a concerted effort is needed toward strengthening our industry. That need will increase as we strive for economic recovery in a world of rapid technological change and extreme competition. I thank the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion and his department for their effort in bringing together this excellent program. I can tell you also that the groundwork has been laid and that there will be no delay in getting the program going. If the bill receives the support of the Senate, the program can be off and running by July 1.

Honourable senators, I would like to take you on a very quick review of the bill. Clauses 1 and 2 deal with definitions. I point out the distinction between "commercial operations" and "eligible persons", which is essentially the difference between an actual enterprise and, say, a local government or an individual or business that is not in business to make a profit but in business for delivering, for example, infrastructure.

Clause 3 of the bill deals with the tier groups and sets out the percentages to which I have referred.

Clause 4 clarifies some provisions with regard to contribution loans and guarantees and continues to deal with the distinction between commercial operations and eligible persons.

Clause 8 deals with certain limits with regard to loans, grants or guarantees.

Clause 9 contains a provision for the minister, subject to the regulations, to acquire, exercise, assign or sell a stock option. That clause is not for the purpose of control over the board of directors but simply for the opportunity to add to the security in event of, for example, a very successful spin-off from the program of a private or commercial enterprise.

I can assure honourable senators that clause 10, dealing with authority for loan guarantees, does not give the department any additional or new loan guarantee authority that it does not already have by the acts referred to in clause 10.

Clause 11 deals with the recovery of overpayments.

Clause 13 involves the Regional Development Incentives Act rolls over those undertakings that are now under the RDIA.

Clause 15 is the result of an amendment in the other place. Because of the flexibility in the program the minister will review development indexes by July 1 each year to determine regional disparity. This amendment requires that the report of the minister be presented by June 1, before the designations and factors are put into effect in July. I think that is a very good provision.

Clause 16(a) indicates that although the minister has power subject to the regulations to make certain decisions, he must make them on the basis of the criteria that are set out in that clause.

Clause 17 is the sunset clause.

Honourable senators, I think that this bill constitutes an excellent program and a sophisticated evolution of previous programs in the fight against regional disparity commenced in 1969 and that it is time, as economic recovery takes hold, to impose an improved and sophisticated method of ensuring that our industry increases not just in some regions but in all parts of Canada.

I ask honourable senators to support the motion for the second reading of this bill. It will be remembered that earlier this day the National Finance Committee, after its study, suggested no amendments to the bill.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, clause 4 seems to deal only with commercial operations, and in no sense does it mention manufacturing and construction. Are these elements covered in the wording?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in dealing with commercial operations, clause 2 reads:

> "commercial operation" means a commercial operation as defined by the regulations and includes such class of operations within the service industry as are designated by the Minister pursuant to subsection 7(2).

So the minister has very wide powers of designation.

"Eligible persons" refers to people who carry on activities that support commercial operations and includes, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, an economic business or technological institute, a municipal corporation or a municipal industrial development corporation. So I think the intention of the bill is to make it as wide as possible for reasons of flexibility.

Senator Molson: Does that mean that we do not need the word "construction" in the bill? Clause 4 says nothing about construction.

Senator Frith: Clause 4, in part says:

> —the Minister may, in accordance with the regulations, make a grant, contribution or loan to the commercial operation in respect of a project carried out or to be carried out by the commercial operation for the purpose of
> (a) establishing . . . the commercial operation;

"Establishing a commercial operation" clearly means building a building. The builder can also expand his building, modernize it or even do something else to enhance the productivity of the commercial operation. We have a general rule in drafting contracts, and in all legal drafting, that, often, to define is to confine. In this case I think we are using the words "establishing a commercial operation" to have it as broad as possible. I do not think there would be any difficulty in including in that the building of the building.

• (1710)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have listened with interest to the Deputy Leader of the Government praising this legislation, but, to me, once again it is apparent that the question of regional disparities is not being dealt with to the satisfaction of the Atlantic region, certainly not to the satisfaction of New Brunswick.

Unfortunately, I was not able to be present at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance last night when it dealt with this bill.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It dealt with Bill C-165.

Senator Thériault: I thought that is what we were discussing, government reorganization.

Senator Frith: No, we are not dealing with Bill C-152.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government for a word of explanation on one point. If I understood him correctly, he said that the board would be comprised of representatives of labour and management, and although I think that would be a good thing and that it would certainly work out, I see nothing to that effect in the bill. Where does it indicate in the bill who will be on those boards he spoke about?

Senator Roblin: You are right on.

Senator Frith: Were you about to raise the same point?

Senator Roblin: I intend to make a speech on the subject. I am not sure whether you desire to answer questions now or would prefer to do so when you close the debate. I will abide by your wish in the matter.

Senator Frith: With respect to this particular question, so far as I am aware there is no provision in the act itself to provide for the representation from any particular group. Senator Muir is quite right in that. I can only give the assurance that the plan is to use this board in the same way as the task force study groups were used. I am sure Senator Muir knows that in those cases both management and labour were represented. In this case I don't think anything in the legislation requires that, but I will find out.

Senator Muir: I am sure we can take the word of the deputy leader and the minister responsible for the bill that that will be carried out. Certainly, the deputy leader was quite firm this afternoon in stating that that would be the case in future. However, I do think it should be in the act itself.

Senator Thériault: May I just ask the deputy leader if there is any relationship between Bill C-152 and Bill C-165? Are they related in any way?

Senator Roblin: No.

Senator Frith: They could be said to be related in the sense that, whereas Bill C-152 deals with the broad question of government reorganization, Bill C-165, as one small dimension of it, deals with the question of government reorganization. But basically, Bill C-165 does not deal with government reorganization, except in the sense that it is part of the program for a new and more responsive and sophisticated delivery of regional disparity programs.

Senator Thériault: I am sorry if I caused any confusion. The few remarks that I had intended to make with respect to Bill C-165 would seem to apply equally to Bill C-152, because in any matter of regional disparities the Atlantic provinces, and I speak for New Brunswick in particular, always seem to be the losers. For the last year there has been talk of a government reorganization and an amalgamation, at least in New Brunswick, of IT&C and DREE. At one point in time the government leader in the Senate was the minister responsible for that, if I remember correctly. The people of New Brunswick and of the Atlantic provinces generally still don't know where they stand with regard to that program, and they are concerned about it.

Does either of these bills replace in any way the legislation that was passed to establish the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in 1969?

Senator Frith: As I understand it, honourable senators, everything provided for in Bill C-165 has evolved as a development of the program begun in 1969. It is a more refined expression of the experience that resulted from the 1969 launching of DREE.

This bill has used DREE and the experiences flowing therefrom as something to start on and has built on that to create something that has a more widespread application. DREE was based on designated areas. This bill will apply all across Canada. In certain circumstances every part of Canada may qualify and the unit of application can be as small as a census unit.

Obviously, this program is much more flexible than the 1969 version. It is a growth of that as a response to the requirement for different ways of measuring the needs. Therefore, it is much more flexible and more sophisticated generally.

Senator Thériault: I am sorry if I confused Bill C-165 with Bill C-152, but it seems to me that the same principle is involved in the two bills.

Senator Roblin: Let's conduct our debate in the usual style, please, and not have this in-and-out business.

Senator Thériault: Well, I want to state for the record that I have reservations about any legislation that would give ministers the power to deal with matters of regional disparity without explicitly designating the weaker areas. That is an important point.

In looking at the various criteria, I noted that the financial capacity of a provincial government was given a weight of only 10 per cent. I guess there is no question that the people in every other part of the country but the Atlantic provinces must be happy with this legislation. As a New Brunswicker, I am concerned, and I expressed that concern and it has been reflected in the report prepared by the National Finance Committee following their study on regional disparities. Not only my views were reflected therein, but the views of other people who were involved in that study.

I am concerned because we have to deal with the political facts of life; we have to deal with the fact that from Ontario there are 95 members of Parliament, and from Quebec there are 75. Whether we like it or not, the fact of the matter is that when a party forms a government in this country, it is more than likely that it has a large number of supporters from those two major provinces, and when decisions are made they are made by politicians. Politicians are, after all, human beings who are elected; politicians know people in cabinet, the Prime Minister, and they, in turn, know where the political strength lies. Where the political strength lies is also where the financial strength lies, and in this country this is true of Ontario and the greater part of Quebec, particularly the region of Montreal and Quebec West. I can only hope that the good intentions, the pious wishes expressed by the minister and by the government deputy house leader today will bear fruit. Under this legislation, they can bear fruit but I again, as a maritimer, want to express my reservations.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I was among those who had the opportunity to hear the minister of this department explain to the Senate committee at the pre-study session what this bill was all about. He is such an engaging, open and likeable individual—

Hon. Daniel Riley: Just like yourself.

Senator Roblin: I am glad to hear you say that, although I give him the palm. However, it seems a bit churlish, under those circumstances, to find anything wrong with his beautiful bill, particularly after hearing the presentation by its sponsor this afternoon. I will start, therefore, by saying some nice things about the bill.

This bill, surely, is a technician's delight. The point that I would like to make is that this bill pulls together a multitude of programs and puts them under one common direction, providing a more convenient shopping list, for want of a better term, by which the members of the general public who wish to make use of the facilities of this bill have an opportunity to do so. In the sense that it rationalizes a multitude of programs which previously had grown up in an unorganized, ad hoc and, in my view, inefficient way, one has to be pleased that this bill brings these matters under one heading and, to that extent, I must say that I am glad to see it.

I also approve of the amendments that were made in the other place. I approve of them because they were good amendments but I also approve of them because I understand that they were made by the Progressive Conservative members of the committee.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): If they were made by the Progressive Conservatives, they were certainly good.

Senator Roblin: They must have been good, because the Grits accepted them, and that does not happen all the time.

The first of these amendments had to do with defining the term "eligible person" that was previously left to regulations. That certainly was a good thing to define in the bill. However, there were other matters in the bill that should also have been defined. My honourable friend, Senator Muir, pointed to one when he observed that the board that the mover of the bill discussed is not provided for in concrete terms; it is a conditional operation. The board may be appointed, and the selection of the members of the board is left to the discretion of the minister. I would have been happier to see those things specified in the bill, but I suppose we will have to take the word of the sponsor that there is the intention to ensure that these various interests are represented.

I also consider that the invention of this development index to decide the status of the various census groups in the country and how they fit into the proposals in this bill is an improvement over previous methods because it reduces to some extent, at any rate, the concept of ministerial discretion and puts it on a statutory basis. That, certainly, is something with which we can all agree.

I have to say, however, that in dealing with this bill in committee a number of valid points were made which will have to be considered when this bill is in operation. The first of these is a fundamental point which Senator Thériault made which should not be skipped over lightly, and that is that this bill puts the whole of the country under one aegis. That means that Tier I, which includes the whole of the province of Alberta, the cities of Toronto, Montreal and other places such as that, are covered by this bill, and in that I foresee certain practical problems.

Formerly, we designated particular areas as being worthy of assistance, and the rest were left outside that charmed circle. The result of that was that we were able to concentrate the money and the personnel that were available on the areas that needed help the most. The basis of need has always appealed to me as a sound principle, and certainly that was the underlying principle of the original Atlantic Provinces Development Fund, or whatever, which was introduced many years ago by the late lamented Prime Minister Diefenbaker. The idea was that people in need should be helped by the rest of the country.

We now find that the ambit of the bill is extended to the whole country. You may say that that is necessary since pockets of need which require some help may be found in prosperous areas. I do not dispute that, but I point out that you are introducing another principle when you make it universal, instead of limiting the requirement to one of need, and that has very practical consequences. There is only so much money to go around, and if you decide to let everyone have a chance at the funds that are available, of one thing you may be sure; that is, that the relative share that goes to the former designated areas will be less now than it would have been if we had not introduced this universal principle.

This is the point, I think, that bothered Senator Thériault and ought to bother anybody in a former designated area, that this is a problem. It seems to me that the minister ought to review that part of his bill and restrict it to those areas that are in the greatest need, however you may define those areas. Surely it must be possible to define them in some effective way so that the amounts of money that are available to assist in this respect are directed more accurately to those areas which need the help of the rest of Canada, rather than having this wider and more indiscriminate application of the impact of this bill.

The fact that we are going to universal application instead of designated areas to me is an important point. I appreciate that we have tiers and that there is that factor in this whole equation. I do not deny it, and am thankful that we do have some discrimination in this respect, but, to my mind, we should move back to focusing our available help on those who are in the greatest need and not make everyone and his brother eligible for this aid.

There is another great thing that this bill does, which is important from the point of view of a province such as New Brunswick or any province that requires infrastructure and things such as that. It is true that the arrangements that were in place and concentrated under DREE were all the services of the government that applied to disadvantaged areas, and, through DREE, we were able to get the infrastructure that my honourable friend who introduced the bill spoke of. You were then able to have people look at roads, at power facilities, at all of those multitudinous government services which are not applicable to a particular firm but which are described as "infrastructure." Now that is all gone. Under this bill, the whole idea of DREE being the focus through which we will deal with provincial infrastructure is done away with.

What happened to it? According to what we heard last night, it has been moved up one tier, to the Honourable Donald Johnston, who has the supervisory mandate over the whole of the economy. It means that Mr. Johnston, with provincial officials, may decide to deal with some item of infrastructure, but this will not be concentrated through one area. It will come down by mandate from him to the line department, such as Transport, for example. Therefore, some areas that are in economic difficulty will find themselves in stiff competition with all of the activities of the Department of Transport, let us say, for their share of the funds that the Department of Transport has available.

Honourable senators, I do not want to be too pessimistic about this, but one must not be too positive about a plan which is about to be tried rather than one with which we have had experience. I suggest that, when the question of universal application of this bill is added to the fact that the traditional concentration of infrastructure investment through DREE is now by the boards and is being done in another way through the line departments, with nobody twisting their arm, so to speak, there is the possibility that we may find that the impact of this new arrangement, with respect to the disadvantaged areas of the country, may be less than we would like to see.

We had the opportunity to discuss these matters with the minister last night, and he is aware of them. I do not know what he can do about the last point I made, namely, that to do with infrastructure, because it does not come within his mandate any more. It is certainly something that we will have to keep a close eye on, however. We have these problems, with respect to this bill, which certainly give reasonable cause for concern. We may find the government back here, before very long, to seek some amendments to this in order to make sure that this operation is really dedicated to the proper ends.

What the bill also does, of course—and we discussed this with the minister—is this: under the universal scheme we now have, we will find ourselves helping a company in point A which will have the result of putting out of business a company in point B. I refer honourable senators to this series of functions that the deputy leader has so kindly distributed. One of them is called restructuring. It involves, among other things, helping out lame ducks. In other words, it involves taking firms that are not making it, restructuring them and refinancing them, if that is necessary.

There may be circumstances under which that is a good thing, but consider this prospect: suppose that Mr. A is smart enough to keep his business solvent and afloat. Suppose that, in the next census division, Mr. B, who is in competition with Mr. A, is having difficulty and is receiving aid under this bill. Wouldn't Mr. A feel a little odd at his competitor receiving this kind of attention from the government? That is a dilemma to which I offer no easy solution. All I am saying is that it is certainly part and parcel of a situation that I think will become more troublesome as we proceed with the operation of this law.

We had the chance to discuss this frankly with the minister. He tells us that he is aware of the situation. Of course, he is going to do his best to keep out of trouble, but I predict that we will have a little problem with this sort of thing before we are through. I say that because there are two elements of this legislation which defy the wisdom of Solomon. One is that you have to pick the winners. If you do not pick the winners, then you are not going to achieve the development in the areas that you want. You have to pick the winners, and that is a hard job. The second thing you must do is resist the temptation to help the losers. Goodness knows we have just had an extraordinary example of this problem in the Maislin situation that I referred to earlier today. I had the opportunity to ask the minister about it last night, but he did not answer me at that time.

We have this problem involving helping losers, which results in no benefit, over all, to the economy or to the region. Sometimes the only result is bailing out the financial institutions. It is that kind of temptation that is politically unavoidable, but I just hope that, in the Honourable Edward Lumley, we have a man who will be able to resist those temptations.

It seems to me, honourable senators, that those are areas of concern which have presented themselves to us because of our particular interest in regional problems in the country. I do not know what else I need to say to alert the Senate to some of the problems that can be foreseen with respect to this bill.

Fortunately—and I think this is one of the desirable amendments introduced by the opposition in the other place—this bill does not go on forever. It has a sunset clause. Its sunset will take place on July 1, 1988, if my note is correct; five years from now.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: June.

Senator Roblin: Is it June? Thank you, my friend, I am glad to get it straight. If we miss sunset by a month, we will be out of luck, won't we? At any rate, that provision will provide us with an opportunity to review the operation of this bill in depth.

The point that I think is important is the agreement of the minister to the other amendment, which provides for a better opportunity for parliamentary review. I have to commend the adoption of that amendment and say that we certainly will support it.

There is another area that ought to concern the Senate, and that is the impact of this bill on the provinces. Undoubtedly, it has a direct bearing on what provincial governments are doing. If honourable senators examine this list of functions which the bill is designed to cover, they will see that it covers practically everything. It might be observed that not all of the provinces cover all of these points, and that is true, but it is also true that some of the provinces do cover all of these points.

In committee we expressed some concern that there should be a very close working relationship between the provinces and the federal government with respect to this industrial development field, which concerns everything from scientific research through to marketing, consultation studies and all of that sort of thing. It is not mentioned in the bill. I find that unfortunate. I would like to see it in the bill. The minister gave us ample assurance—he certainly seems to understand the problem very well—that he would pay particular attention to the point. It is not only necessary for the ministers and the deputy ministers to speak, but in the actual day-to-day operations it is the bureaucrats at a much lower level who need a co-operative nudge now and then, if we are to make sure that we have a reasonable meeting of minds between the actual operators of the program in the field, on both the provincial and the federal levels. I suggest that those are aspects of the administration of this law which will require the attention of Parliament over time, as this bill proceeds.

I come back to my main concern, honourable senators, which is that the bill spreads itself too thin by taking in the entire country. I think it would have been better to have focussed on the areas of need. Had that been the case, I think that money would have gone further and would have helped those who need it most. Instead, we have this universal policy that is presented here.

I reiterate that the kind offices of DREE, created to help in the development of infrastructure, are no longer there. There is a substitute for it, that is true; I do not overlook that and I hope it will work. It seems to me, however, that there is an element of risk that we are running, in that attention will not be as concentrated or as effective under this new law, with respect to infrastructure, as it was under DREE.

We think that the bill, as a whole, has merit in that it is a sensible reorganization of the delivery systems. It is a technocrat's dream, I suppose; it is a big improvement. Certainly the public will find it a lot easier than it was before to deal with the federal government. In terms of the undeveloped areas of the country, however, there are places where I am concerned that we may find we are not going to do the job we think this bill is really intended to do. I leave that warning before the Senate. I look forward to the provisions of the bill which provide for a parliamentary opportunity to examine its operations. I hope that the Senate is included in that term practically, as it is constitutionally, when this bill gets into operation. We can then see how the administration of the law goes along.

There is no doubt, honourable senators, that the problem of regional disparities will be with us for some time. It is our responsibility, especially in this chamber, to do what we can to see that any governmental action in this respect is as effective as it possibly can be.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the fact that, if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: In reply, honourable senators, I will say that I understand the concerns of Senator Thériault. They are based on his experience as a New Brunswicker. I can assure him, however, that his concerns, which he has said are reflected in the report of the committee, are also concerns that this bill is designed to respond to. I do know specifically that that report played a role in the designing of the program enshrined in this bill.

Senator Muir expressed concern about the lack of "specificity" on the representation of management and labour, which was a point shared by Senator Roblin, and expressed by Senator Roblin in the words, "I would have been happier if those provisions had been specifically in the bill." So would I.

I do draw the attention of the Senate to section 15, which requires a report. There is no question about which house, because it says, without leaving any doubt, "to each House of Parliament," so we will have a crack at it and will have a chance to remind the minister of the concerns that all three of us have, that it would be better if that principle were specifically expressed in the bill.

I treat the other points raised by Senator Roblin as I believe they were expressed, as caveats. As he said, in each case his reservations, or caveats, are known to the minister.

Reference has been made to the application to the whole of the country, and therefore spreading it too thin, and I can only say that I think that is a conscious decision.

Senator Roblin: It is wrong.

Senator Frith: It will be noticed that the 5 per cent, the small group, the Tier IV group, is the group that gets the best qualification; in other words, even included in the program there is a reflection of the desire to concentrate on the areas that need it most. It is much more difficult to qualify at the Tier I level. Even within areas such as the big cities it is possible to focus down to areas as small as census districts, so that flexibility is available. I believe the spirit of the bill is such that, rather than wanting to spread it too thin, the whole intention of having these various tiers is to make it easier to qualify, and qualify for more, in the less privileged areas, and we have a program that I think will work.

As Senator Roblin said about the infrastructure, we have a different system in that regard from what we had before. We believe—and the bill is built on the hope—that the plans for infrastructure are part of the flexibility of the bill, and that therefore the new system is better than the old. With him I can only say, as all of us can say, we will see. I share with him the feeling that there is no doubt the minister means to make the system work and to be an improvement on previous systems.

The same applies to competition and the danger of giving an inefficient operator a competitive edge that he does not deserve. It is a problem that we have always had, even with the previous systems, and it is a problem the minister is aware of.

The picking of winners and losers, as Senator Roblin said, and as I believe the minister understands, is certainly a part of the game. It is just a decision. It is the way the system has to operate. We do not win them all, but let us hope we do not lose them all.

With regard to impact on the provinces, I accept the underlining and the caveat again, that that will have an effect; it will be an impact because of the new system. My understanding is that the provinces are aware of, and are concerned with, that also, but are generally taking the view that they will give this system a chance and see how it works.

Honourable senators, what it comes down to is that we all seem to support the basic objectives of the program; we think it is an improvement; we know that there is a will, a real will, to make the system work better, and we hope that this bill will be a way of making the attack on regional disparities work better. We have all noted the caveats of Senators Muir, Thériault and Roblin.

Before I conclude, honourable senators, may I have the table to which I referred printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of today?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For table see Appendix "B", p. 5948.)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I ask you to support the motion for second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TAX COURT OF CANADA BILL

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved the third reading of Bill C-167, respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

He said: This, honourable senators, is the motion for third reading that earlier was adjourned until this time because of a concern that I shared with Senator Flynn on the subject of section 18, the section that continues in the Tax Court of Canada the provision that the Tax Board was not permitted to grant costs.

I have been in touch with the minister's office, but I am sorry to say that the best I can offer is that I have an undertaking from the minister to phone Senator Flynn directly and discuss this concern with him. That is as much as I have been able to accomplish. However, I do give that undertaking.

I underline the fact that I share Senator Flynn's concern, and I cannot see any reason, other than the continuation of the old system and the reassurance that is supposed to give the clientele for not giving the right to grant costs, particularly to a successful taxpayer. I am not so keen on the idea of the department getting costs against the taxpayer, but I do not see any reason why, considering how tough it is to succeed, the successful taxpayer should not get costs.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-95, to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), that the bill be read the second time.

● (1750)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators, we are here today to discuss Bill C-95, the Athletic Contests and Events Pools Act, and its valuable purpose, the establishment of a federal sports pool, which recognizes the need for supplementary non-tax funding of worthy projects.

We all feel great pride as Canadians when our athletes compete successfully against other countries of the world. No one can deny having felt elated and excited about the recent successes of our national teams. We also have good reason to be proud of our cultural resources, as many of our dance and theatre companies and artists have won national and international acclaim.

In the area of medical and health research, advances in the treatment of disease and the prevention of illness have improved the quality of life not only of Canadians but of people around the world.

As a federal government we are trying to do everything we can to encourage and promote such excellence, but this goal is becoming more difficult as costs in these disciplines are escalating rapidly. If we are to continue our responsibilities in these areas, it is paramount that additional non-tax revenues be found.

At the present time the federal government does not have a mechanism in place which can provide sufficient funds for this purpose. The decision of the previous government to terminate the national lottery operations was, in the view of at least some, shortsighted with respect to the support that such a program could have provided to these very worthy causes.

Loto Canada was an extremely successful operation which earned between $75 million and $80 million annually. It is significant to note that Loto Canada raised in excess of $200 million to help cover costs incurred by the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

The government of the day had intended to ensure the continuation of non-tax funding for these areas, as indicated by the introduction of Bill C-41 in February 1979, through the operation of this federally-controlled lottery. With the curtailment of Loto Canada, the amount of money available for funding such projects has been severely reduced. Also, at the present time, the government does not have in place a revenue-generating program to contribute to the funding of special programs and events of national interest.

Therefore, the objective of the sports pool program quite simply is to create a mechanism which will provide supplementary non-tax revenues for fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture, and for medical and health research. As well, special events of national importance, such as the Fifteenth Winter Olympic Games in Calgary, will benefit from sports pool revenues.

The announcement of the creation of the federal sports pool program on September 14, 1981, coincided with the presentation of Calgary's bid for the 1988 Winter Olympics. This commitment for substantial funding by the federal government was an important factor in Calgary's success in the bidding process at Baden-Baden.

Just as the federal government took great pleasure in supporting the successful Summer Olympics hosted in the east in 1976, we may now look forward with great anticipation to participating in the development and execution of the Winter Games in the west in 1988.

The staging of these games will benefit Canadians and our country in many ways. All eyes will be on Canada and we will have the opportunity to heighten our international image and project with pride the bilingual and multicultural nature of our country.

The games will promote the host community, will benefit the economy, and will have an even greater impact on making Canada a winter destination point for tourism.

The Calgary Olympics will provide strong motivation and focus for the development of amateur sports and will encourage recreation in Canada. As well, the Calgary Winter Olympics will provide the joy of participation for our athletes performing at home.

Many Canadians will be involved through business or support services or as spectators. In addition, educational and cultural programs organized around themes related to the Olympics will involve a wide range of Canadians in the so-called "Olympic spirit". The end result will be a great legacy of Canadian human and physical resources.

In choosing a non-tax source for this additional funding, we feel we are best serving the desires of the Canadian public. As consumer participation in the sports pool is strictly voluntary, it allows the public to consciously fund those activities they would like to see receive extra support. A similar type of effective program for funding non-essential but beneficial projects in the national interest, such as the Montreal Olympic Games—which were a great success—was created with the successful Montreal Olympic Lottery/Loto Canada.

It is, therefore, our intention to allow Canadians who wish to voluntarily support the Calgary Winter Olympics to do so, by participating in the federal sports pool program. The past has shown us that this was a popular and fruitful exercise, and that is why we have decided to choose a similar method of funding.

In choosing the vehicle of a sports pool, we purposely chose to enter a new field in Canada which would not contravene the 1979 letter agreement with the provinces. Just as the provinces have a non-tax source of revenue to meet certain provincial responsibilities, so the Government of Canada needs a similar source of funds for undertakings of a national scale.

Sport pools are popular worldwide and have been in existence in some nations for over 50 years. While our market research indicates there is a high degree of interest in this activity in Canada, we will be attracting a different market from lotteries and thus should not provide significant competition to the provinces.

Before establishing this program, we carefully considered the involvement of lower income groups. In a 1978 Statistics Canada study on family expenditures, the section on expenditures on lottery and raffle tickets indicates that all income groups spend approximately one-third of one per cent of annual income on lottery and raffle tickets. Public participation in a sports pool can best be described by the British Royal Commission on Gambling, of 1978, which stated that the activity of playing sports pools is "a harmless form of entertainment."

The sports pool will be a national activity which Canadians can participate in on a voluntary basis from coast to coast. The end results will provide enjoyment for the individual and promote the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in Calgary. As well, it will assist the creation of additional programs within fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture, and medical and health research which all Canadians will benefit from.

Bill C-95 provides for the sports pool to be operated by a crown corporation known as the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation. Creating a crown corporation was found to be the most practical and proficient way to operate a sports pool program, and it will be responsible to the Parliament of Canada. The legislation also provides for joint operation of the sports pool with the provinces, if an agreement can be reached between the two levels of government. We would like the provincial governments to co-operate and work with the federal government.

It is intended that throughout its entire operation the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation will conduct itself in an environment of efficiency, effectiveness and probity in all matters. For example, marketing strategies will comply with an advertising code of ethics.

The Canadian Sports Pool Corporation will not be a big bureaucracy. It will be run in a rather standard fashion by a board of directors who will report to Parliament through a designated minister. The senior working officers will be a president and an executive vice-president, who will be hired to administer the corporation under the direction of a board of directors. The corporation will manage its affairs in accordance with accepted practices.

Honourable senators will recognize that, for it to be fully effective and to achieve its objectives of generating revenue successfully, the board must have the necessary powers, but general direction may be given by the Governor in Council or the appropriate minister.

The activities of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation will be closely monitored. In each financial year the corporation will submit for approval to the minister and Governor in Council a plan of all corporate and financial activities for the three upcoming financial years. The original proposal was to have a plan of all corporate and financial activities for only two financial years, but the opposition proposal in the other place was accepted by the government.

In accordance with regular procedures, an audit of the corporation's accounts and financial transactions will take place each year. As well, the financial statement will be tabled in both houses of Parliament annually.

Clearly, I think Bill C-95 provides the necessary scope to manage and operate a sports pool effectively, while maintaining the necessary element of control by Parliament. The Canadian Sports Pool Corporation will co-operate with and use existing programs and activities of the federal government wherever appropriate.

While providing revenues for the very deserving areas that I have mentioned, the establishment of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation will produce other benefits. In the physical design of the computer system for the sports pool game, as well as in all other areas, Canadian content will be a high priority.

The sports pool will also assist in the creation of employment, so crucial at this time. At various facilities across the country, full and part-time employees will be hired and all hiring procedures will comply with government regulations, including official language considerations. Small participating retailers across Canada are going to benefit from commissions.

I should also like to draw to your attention the fact that the bill amends the Income Tax Act to allow winnings from the sports pool to be tax-free. Bill C-95 also amends the Criminal Code to permit the Government of Canada to operate a sports pool.

We have all witnessed how costs associated with Canada's advances in medical and health research have increased dramatically in recent years. As technology advances and equipment costs escalate, new personnel must be trained. Our national cultural and artistic institutions are also experiencing financial strains due to cost escalations. We have seen how the expenses for all of those activities can no longer be entirely absorbed through traditional sources.

By creating a sports pool program, it will enable us to continue to provide supplementary financial support to the areas of fitness and amateur sport, arts and culture and medical and health research. This will mean that innovative Canadian programs such as the Canada Fitness Survey—which measured the fitness level of the nation and proved that the 30-year-old Canadian is more than a match for the 60-year-old Swede—will continue to be created.

The federal government also has a responsibility to fund programs of national interest, such as the monumental 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics. This government is attempting to raise the necessary funds at a time of some economic stress without utilizing tax dollars. In establishing a sports pool program, we recognize, encourage, promote and honour Canadian achievements. The designated beneficiary groups in Bill C-95 are not the only so-called "winners" in the sports pool program. The sports pool will offer the public a fun option for its entertainment dollar. In choosing this option, all Canadians, wherever they live, will benefit from the programs which the sports pool supports.

I thank honourable senators for their attention and I urge their support for this bill.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, excuse me while I catch my breath, but I was asked to rush over to this House to speak in answer to the speech by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I thought we would have had time to look at the Bill this evening and continue the debate tomorrow. However, in view of the exigencies of the Senate, I am prepared to comment briefly on the Bill before us today.

The Bill was referred to committee for preliminary study, and when the motion was moved in this House, I put a question to the Leader of the Government. Unfortunately, I did not have time to come and listen to the Minister's explanations this afternoon, but as part of my question, I wanted to know whether the Minister had a list of the people who would become members of the corporation created by Bill C-95.

Under the provisions of this Bill, the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation is established, with a board of directors consisting of a chairman, vice-chairman, president and executive vice-president and between 5 and 15 other members. I imagine that the Minister, realizing that the Bill will be passed by Parliament, already has a list of the people who will be working on the board of directors. I think we are all very interested to know the names of these people, with their qualifications, before we reach a final decision.

The Minister will probably tell us that these people are appointed by Order in Council and that no names are available at the present time. This is one more flaw in our legislative procedure. We are being asked to approve the principle of establishing a corporation of this size, while the names of its members, who will play a major role in this corporation, will not be revealed until later on. This means that Parliament will not be able to discuss their qualifications and the extent of the powers that will be vested in them. I hope that when the minister replies after my brief intervention he will give us some details about the members who will make up this new Canadian Sports Pool Corporation.

Around 1976, the Liberal Party had promised that the federal government would get out of lotteries. As you will recall, Loto Canada had been established for a period of three years to help the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal to make up the deficit of the Montreal Olympics. I believe that, at the time, our intention was that Loto Canada would be established for that purpose for a three-year period; Mr. Chrétien, who was then President of the Treasury Board, had explained this decision very clearly and specifically in the House of Commons.

The government promised to abolish Loto Canada after three years, after it had served its purpose, which was to repay the debt of the Montreal Olympics. In fact, I believe that Loto Canada raised up to 82 per cent of the amount needed to make up the deficit of the Montreal Olympics. However, the government did not keep its promise after the first three years, and up to 1978, it had not seen fit to abolish Loto Canada. We had to wait for a Conservative government to give back this jurisdiction to the provinces in 1979 in order to help them finance the programs under their jurisdiction; the present government seems to have missed Loto Canada. In fact, everyone is aware of the scandal which fell on Loto Canada when former Minister Campagnolo, now President of the Liberal Party of Canada, had some problem in explaining what had happened to the House of Commons. We are all aware of the many defects, due to certain Liberal supporters, in the structure of Loto Canada. However, it seems that the present government missed—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It felt nostalgic.

Senator Asselin: Exactly, it felt nostalgic for the indirect benefits which Loto Canada brought its supporters. It would seem that this is a good reason in the eyes of the Minister, in addition to those he has stated, for wishing to re-establish, by way of this Bill, a new Loto Canada corporation.

The Minister suggests that one of the major reasons is to finance the Calgary Olympics. I think the Government had decided to support those games that will be held in Western Canada. The Government had a commitment to spend monies—I do not remember how many millions—drawn from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. When it was decided to fund those Olympics, there was no question of the government's establishing a lottery, a new Loto Canada, to recover the cost of those Olympics. The Minister claims that the setting up of that corporation will help the Canadian taxpayers meet the costs of those world games.

I feel this formula is wrong. The Government should support those Olympic Games in Western Canada, but by way of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and not, as the minister would have us think, by other means, by establishing a new Canadian lottery to cover the deficit, to write off the costs of those Olympics in Calgary. We did not object to those games. Quite the opposite, we supported the principle of the Canadian Government funding these Western Olympics by way of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, drawing from the general revenue. But there never was any reference, when the principle was decided upon, to the establishment of a new lottery corporation to cover the deficit of those world games.

I would like to know from the Minister when the decision was made to change plans and, instead of using the Consolidated Revenue Fund, to establish a corporation, a state lottery to cover the costs of those games.

Recently I read a speech made in the other place by Mr. Joe Reid, member for St. Catharines, who seemed to be very well informed on the matter of lotteries. He made some comments concerning the monies collected by Loto Canada. On page 20782 of the Commons Hansard, he had this to say:

> Scandals aside, Mr. Speaker, how successful was Loto Canada and how did fitness and amateur sport benefit from that lottery? From start to finish Loto Canada generated a gross total of $725 million, and a net sum of $211 million. Fitness and amateur sport received $10.6 million or an average of $2.6 million a year. Great benefit to fitness and amateur sport out of that sum of money from the taxpayers and the gamblers of Canada!
> More money was spent in one year advertising the benefits that were alleged to go to fitness and amateur sport in one year than they received in four years.

What that means is that the money collected from sales of Loto Canada tickets was not as profitable to amateur sports as the minister would have us believe or as the sponsor of the bill in the other place claimed.

I am wondering whether the government is making any money at all, whether lotteries yield as much as expected. I am wondering whether the way to finance the games or other sporting events, or to lend a hand to amateur sports is to create a lottery which amounts to indirect taxation of Canadians. People who are well off do not buy lottery tickets, they are bought by average income people. It is hard to visualize to what extent Canadians have become used to buying lottery tickets. Some of them spend money every week just in case they might get a lucky ticket. I am saying that people who are against the principle of establishing national lotteries claim that it is morally wrong because it is an indirect tax on poor people who waste their money to support some form of amateur sports or games which are to be held somewhere else in the country.

Those are the major objections I wanted to express on second reading of this bill. Basically, the purpose of the bill is to create a sports pool system so that the minister will pay the corporation, right out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, $10.5 million the first year to cover its operating expenses. This fund will make it possible for the corporation to pay the net amount due to the Receiver General every four months. Given the objective described by the minister, why should we create a new crown corporation and have it administered by people whose names and qualifications are unknown to us?

Those are the reservations I have about the bill before us. I hope the minister will give me satisfactory answers to help me decide what should be the fate of this bill.

[English]

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, like other honourable senators, I have been surprised by the short notice given us with respect to this bill. Certainly I have some thoughts to express on it. I do not like this rush at the end of the session. I wish that the late Senator Grattan O'Leary were still here; at least he had the courage to delay things at the end of a session. I admit the effect was startling when pension cheques did not get into the mail for a few days, and I would not want to do anything like that. However, I think that this rush at the end of the session is undignified, ineffective and highly undesirable.

I regret that this bill has been introduced by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, because in my view he has done a splendid job in the field of fitness and amateur sport. In fact, his own configuration would argue very strongly in favour of what he is doing for fitness, and I must congratulate him on his new form. On the other hand, despite the fact that he is sponsoring the bill, I simply cannot see it pass without expressing my disapproval of its principle.

It seems to me that it is a little like mixing oil with water to have the government encourage gambling. I do not believe that is the role of government. I did not agree with the program of lotteries that was instituted some years ago, and I cannot agree with the principle of this bill. I know that money is needed and that the purpose of the bill is excellent. I cannot disagree with that. However, so far as I am concerned, that does not make it reasonable to try to raise the money in the way proposed by the bill. I repeat that I do not think it is the role of government to encourage people to gamble. I have no objection to people gambling. That is a personal matter. I am sure that all of us have had a little fling at some time in our lives, and in my view there is nothing immoral about that. But I do believe that it is immoral for a government to encourage people to gamble. I do not say that this issue is in the same category as the problems of prostitution or pornography, which are having an impact on the social life of this country. If I may say so, I do not believe that the government has faced up to those serious issues, and I think it should, because the morality of this country is just as important as the social climate. Those issues are perhaps not as important as the present unemployment situation; nevertheless, they rank very high. Over a number of years now we have seen encouragement for the easy way of life, which has detracted from some of the more old fashioned virtues. To attempt to get rich quick through lotteries is, in my opinion, a mistake, and to try to promote sports through gambling is also a mistake. For some time now I have read the large volume of advertisements put out by governments to encourage people to gamble. I do not consider it is right for government to spend taxpayers' money in such a way, and I fail to see how that can be a proper function of government.

The argument that the money is badly needed for those causes set out in the bill is a valid one. I recognize that the money is badly needed, and I would like to see it found; but to encourage people to gamble in order to get it is, in my opinion, fundamentally unacceptable. Perhaps I am wrong in my point of view, but I am sure there are many people in this country who would agree with me that this is not a proper role for government. Many of the activities that the government finances through a variety of programs are necessary and desirable, but for it to encourage lotteries and gambling is quite wrong.

I should remind honourable senators that when we were young it was easy for Canadians to feel superior and to criticize the Latin American for sitting in the sun with his straw hat over his eyes, waiting for the lottery results to come in so that he could make a few bucks. Ridicule was heaped upon those people in Latin America who participated in lotteries by Canadians who felt themselves too superior to get involved in that activity. Now our attitude has changed, the only difference being that we do not have the sun or the straw hat. We also criticized interest rates of 10 and 11 per cent in banana republics, maintaining that such a dreadful thing could never happen in this country; yet in the last few years Canadians, although complaining little, have accepted interest rates of 18 and 20 per cent.

My point is that in many ways we have changed our values. One of these changes has been the advent of financing projects through lotteries. Statistics tell us that much of the money that goes into lotteries comes from people who earn relatively modest incomes. I am sure that most honourable senators have on occasion met people whose families have suffered through an addiction to gambling, and certainly any addiction is undesirable. Honourable senators, for those reasons, and for those reasons only, I oppose the bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Molson has expressed his dissatisfaction from a procedural view point with the way we have disposed of this bill tonight and of others this afternoon. I share his views. This problem has been with us for a long time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): You share Senator Molson's views?

Senator Flynn: Yes, concerning the way we deal with pieces of legislation when we are about to adjourn. The issue is whether, by dealing expeditiously with them as we are doing now, the end result is worse than when we proceed slowly. Towards the end of a session, the government is not inclined to tolerate delays or amendments to its bills. All we can do practically is make our remarks and leave the responsibility for the decisions to the government members in the Senate. It is in that fashion that we have been carrying out our duties these past few days. We could have adjourned at 6 o'clock, come back at 8, and perhaps continue until 2 in the morning. What more could we have accomplished? On the other hand, we could have come back tomorrow, but it was out of the question to oblige honourable senators to come back again next week. This is not good enough. This is a problem which reflects a lot more on the government majority than on the institution itself.

But getting back to the bill before us, when the committee met this morning, I indicated to the Minister our objections which Senator Asselin expressed a while ago. I should like to add this: The Minister is using the Olympic Games in Calgary as a way for the federal government to get back into gambling once again. It is but an excuse. We have been told repeatedly time and again over the past months that if we do not adopt this bill, funds for the Calgary games will be lacking. The word for this is blackmail. In fact, this bill will indefinitely perpetuate the lottery corporation, even after the Calgary games. By re-entering the field of lotteries, the federal government changes the situation which had been established in 1979 when the Clark government signed an agreement with the provinces. The minister keeps saying that it is not the same thing, that it is not the same lottery, but the fact remains that this decision which is being forced upon us through Bill C-95 goes against the spirit of the 1979 agreement.

Finally, I must say that I find it rather odious that the federal government should seek a monopoly on this type of lottery by amending the Criminal Code. Indeed, that is spelled out as follows in clause 33:

> Notwithstanding any provision of this Part relating to gaming or betting, it is lawful
> (a) for the Government of Canada to operate and manage a pool system of betting, and
> (b) where the Government of Canada and the governments of any one or more provinces have entered into an agreement or agreements jointly to operate and manage a pool system of betting—

It is covered by the amendments to the Criminal Code. I think it is obnoxious that the federal government uses the Criminal Code to create its own monopoly in this field. In my view, the pool systems ought to be transferred to the provinces, as provided for in the 1979 agreement. For those reasons and others which have been expressed in the other place, particularly with respect to the issue of morality which was raised by Senator Molson, we are opposed to this bill.

● (1830)

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a few brief comments and questions with regard to this bill. I shall not get into the morality or philosophical issues of the bill but simply the operational aspects.

I am a little concerned about how the money will be spent. Money will be spent in the fields of the arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport, medical and health research, the Winter Olympic Games to be held in Calgary and this is the part that concerns me—worthy capital projects of national interest. I am concerned about the definition of "worthy national interests". I foresee serious problems in dealing with communities which want assistance for capital projects, such as a National Hockey League team in Saskatoon and the required arena to house it. Is that in the national interest? There is a multitude of other capital projects in the sports field, the recreation field and the cultural field. Would the minister explain to me the criteria for national interests?

The other aspect I would like to draw to the attention of the minister is whether we are trying to fool the public by transferring funds from one pocket to another. At the present time funds are allocated for cultural projects, arts and science groups and so forth. Is it the intention of the government to limit funds coming from the Department of Communications and to transfer them to the sports pool fund? I am in favour of making funds available for worthy causes in the arts, cultural and sporting fields. Goodness knows, the sporting field throughout the country is in need of help, not only in operational but also in capital requirements. I am concerned about the implications of this program, and I ask the minister for an explanation on the points I have raised.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Perrault speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate the observations made by those who have contributed to the debate. Insofar as I am able, I shall attempt to answer all the questions raised without taking too long in the process, because I know that I am intruding on the dinner hour of many honourable senators.

The first question I shall deal with is, "Why has the bill arrived so late in this chamber?" Honourable senators must be aware of the fact that the bill has been making extremely slow progress in the other place. Many members spoke to the bill and objections were raised. It would have been here some time ago had it not been for the exercise by the opposition in the other place of their parliamentary rights. I must say, however, that the extent of the opposition was unanticipated because of the general support for the Calgary Olympics to be found in all ranks of parliamentarians.

With regard to the moral issues, it is only proper that Senator Molson should raise this matter. One of the main questions asked by the government was whether or not people would be done a positive service through the establishment of a sports pool. I shall repeat a part of my speech for Senator Molson, because he may not have been in the chamber at the time I made the particular remarks. Before adopting the sports pool idea, all aspects of the program were carefully considered, including the moral issues. The 1978 report of the British Royal Commission on gambling formed part of the study engaged in by the federal government before we took the decision to proceed with the lottery. It found that sports pools, which have been in existence for over 50 years, are a harmless form of entertainment. The tickets for the sports pool will cost no more than $1 or $2. It is a very low-cost type of skill game. The activity, in fact, is in the same category as bingo or raffle tickets, and it is not one that is viewed as being immoral, in the religious sense, by the majority of the religious communities. As a matter of fact, there is a very well-known clergyman on the board of directors of the Ontario Lottery Corporation. So this bill is not a safari into big time gambling. The Government of Canada will not be promoting "point spreads" across the country in an attempt to compete with Las Vegas. Sports pools are more in the category of "family entertainment."

Hon. Martial Asselin: Oh Ray!

Senator Perrault: Indeed, I know that Senator Asselin comes from a province which has two of the finest hockey teams in Canada. I am sure that Senator Asselin will have some fun this winter—

Senator Asselin: How much?

Senator Perrault: —trying to determine the scores of the Quebec Nordiques and the Montreal Canadiens.

Senator Asselin: The Nordiques are the best.

Senator Perrault: Canadians have expressed an overwhelming desire for government operation of this kind of activity. At the present time three out of four households in Canada purchase lottery tickets. Over 80 per cent of the population at all income levels support lotteries and other legal gaming activities through active participation. So the suggestion that only the so-called poor people are involved in this process is not accurate on the basis of statistics.

In our view, the sports pool is not a tax, because taxes are imposed or levied on the public, whereas consumer participation in sports pools is strictly voluntary.

In the 1978 Statistics Canada study on family expenditures, the section on expenditures on lottery and raffle tickets indicated that all income groups spend an average of only one-third of 1 per cent of annual income on lottery and raffle tickets.

In terms of the sports pool situation worldwide—and, incidentally, a sports pool is not the same thing as a lottery, because it is a game of skill, not a game of chance—Canada is virtually in its embryonic stage. By world standards, the process is only in its early stages of development.

A number of other statements have been made here today.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: You have answered them all.

Senator Perrault: Senator Flynn said that the Calgary Olympics were being used by the federal government as a means of getting back into the lottery game. Well, the commitment of the Government of Canada, given at the time Calgary went to Baden-Baden to apply for the Winter Olympics, was based on the fact that the federal government had at the time promised to provide non-tax source revenues to help Calgary and Alberta with the very heavy cost of those games. So that was desired by those who wanted the Winter Olympics to come to Canada. Indeed, the bid, I suggest, could not have been made successfully had it not been for the support expressed by the federal government.

Senator Asselin made the suggestion that the federal government wants to change the situation from what it was in 1979. Well, the federal government has specifically chosen a field not currently occupied by any provincial government in order to avoid competition. That is why the Criminal Code must be amended.

The federal government's commitment to Calgary's bid was contingent upon the establishment of a mechanism to raise non-tax revenues, as I have said. In the spirit of co-operation, Bill C-95 does allow for the joint operation of a sports pool, if an agreement can be reached between the two levels of government. It would be our active desire to achieve agreements with provincial governments, ways in which we could co-operate to help them with their lottery programs, and have them, in conjunction with the federal government and on a responsible basis, help in the implementation of a federal sports pool program.

Senator Molson made the suggestion that advertising is often very attractive for sports pools. In that connection, may I say that the commitment given today is that a strict advertising ethical code will be observed. It is part and parcel, an integral part, of the whole proposed operation of this sports pool.

A question was raised with respect to hiring practices and who will be taken on. At this particular stage the board of directors has not been selected; none of the corporate executives has been hired. I can say that the establishment of a sports pool will assist in the creation of employment, which is crucial at this time in many provinces. Up to 1,000 full and part-time jobs will be created across the country, depending on the degree of computerization. The immediate goal is to have 20,000 computer terminals in the major population centres of Canada. Ultimately, the program will be extended. The criteria for hiring will be established by the corporation and all positions will be advertised. Hiring practices will comply with all government regulations, including official language considerations.

With respect to the executive side of the corporation, the projected organizational structure will be entirely standard, with the president and the board of directors all being Governor-in-Council appointees. Qualified individuals are being sought now. Perhaps members of the Senate have suggestions they would like to pass along; they will be conscientiously pursued.

Senator Asselin: I have my list. Will you take my list?

Senator Perrault: I am sure you have a list.

Honourable senators, I hope I have answered most of the key questions posed this afternoon. If there are other questions, I will be pleased to continue my efforts.

Senator Buckwold: Well, honourable senators, I should indicate that I have had no response to the two questions I raised. It may be that the information is not available at the moment, but perhaps it could be sent to me in writing. I certainly do not intend to delay passage of the bill, but I would be interested in having answers to those questions.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I took careful note of Senator Buckwold's questions. He was interested in knowing the criteria for events of national interest and importance. Personally, I think that currently the proposed Saskatoon hockey rink could be important to Canada. He also inquired about the new sports pool funding, and spoke about the "transferring of funds from one pocket to another." I will be pleased to provide written answers to those questions.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—SUBJECT MATTER REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Frith:

That:

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof:

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the Senate of Canada resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987.

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I feel like the last speaker before the bar opens.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): In these circumstances, that is hardly even metaphorical.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, it is essential that we take our time in dealing with this important resolution. When I spoke yesterday I expressed general agreement with the idea of entrenching aboriginal rights in our Constitution, but at the same time I expressed serious concern, as I do again tonight, at the speed with which we are asked to consider this measure. This is the very first amendment to Canada's new Constitution, and we are asked to consider it, debate it and vote on it within two and a half days, and pass it in the closing minutes of this session. I do not believe that we can give it the consideration that it needs. To properly discharge our responsibilities, we need more time to look at all the aspects.

There are many people, who have not yet been heard who should be heard by a committee of the Senate on these proposed changes to the Constitution. These include native people, provincial and territorial government representatives, and many other Canadians. I am concerned with some of the proposed amendments, but first let me suggest that we would be doing less than our duty if we did not give those who want to speak a chance to be heard.

We are told that nine provinces signed the accord, and I am sure that they did. However, I am amazed that the western provinces would sign an accord giving carte blanche to an agreement between aboriginal organizations and the Government of Canada to changes in the Constitution about which they know nothing.

I mentioned my involvement with the settlements in the western Arctic, and there are things in that settlement which, if passed, would bind the hands of the Government of the Yukon and would, in fact, cede the entire land mass around the Beaufort Sea. Also, any hope of the people having billions of dollars spent there to develop oil and gas and to obtain rights to move across the land or out of the MacKenzie Delta could be seriously jeopardized. This would not take a mere Act of Parliament, which is difficult enough, but in this case it would take an amendment to the Constitution.

I understand that the House of Commons has passed this amendment, and I am amazed that the Parliament of Canada would, within two or three days, pass these amendments to the Constitution, a document which was agreed upon at a meeting of the Prime Minister of Canada and nine provincial premiers. If this is a precedent, then I wonder how seriously Parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate, will take their responsibilities in the future in regard to other amendments to the Constitution.

I would think the territories would want to be heard on this subject. Right now there are several aboriginal bodies such as the Dene Nation, at least two Inuit organizations and the Metis, all claiming an amazing percentage of the Northwest Territories. In fact, if they all get what they want, I am not sure that there will be much left for the Government of the Northwest Territories to govern.

To a lesser extent, that is also true of the Yukon. I am sure that the duly elected government of the Yukon Territory is extremely concerned about the fact that the entire North Slope of their region could be handed over to a group of people who do not even live there. I am sure that they would want to have something to say about an amendment which could end up being included in the Constitution of Canada.

We should hear also from other Canadians who may be affected, because I emphasize that this is not just a constitutional change that affects the aboriginal people alone; it affects all Canadians.

I have here a copy of a presentation to the Committee on Indian Affairs in the other place. One of the people who appeared before that committee was David Ahenakew, who was the president of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians and is now Chief of the National Indian Brotherhood. I just want to briefly quote one thing he said to that committee on Monday:

> If you stop to think of what is really happening here, Parliament has been put in a similar position to the Indians. You have a choice of rubber stamping an Accord in which you have had minimal if any participation, or you can refuse to do so and see the constitutional process fade out of existence.

We, too, are being put in exactly the same position, and I do not think that that should happen. If we slowed this up until the fall, I do not think that the constitutional process would go out of existence, but I do feel that it would give some people who have not yet been heard an opportunity to make representations. It would give the Senate and, in fact, Parliament a chance to take a second look at these amendments. At that time, if we amended it, rejected it or, as is probable, accepted it, that would still leave plenty of time to meet the deadline of December 31 that was evidently given by the First Ministers' Conference last March to the provinces and to the native people.

The Metis people themselves are not totally satisfied; David Ahenakew and the National Indian Brotherhood are not satisfied. They will support it, but they pointed out very clearly in their submission to the House of Commons committee that they were far from satisfied.

To me, this is an amazing way to proceed with the first amendment to our Constitution; to attempt to do something when the people involved say: "We are not satisfied but perhaps it is the best thing that can happen. Let us rubber stamp it and get it through."

The other serious question that was brought up in the House of Commons is the question of women's rights. It is long overdue that Indian women should have exactly the same rights as Indian men. Hitherto they have not had those rights, and there are a great many questions that have to be answered in regard to that. We should have those questions and many more answered by the people who drafted this legislation.

There is one example I wish to give you. When I was negotiating on behalf of the government the claim for the western Arctic, other negotiators and I met with people from the Department of Justice after the joint committee finished drafting the resolution of the Constitution and before it was passed. We questioned them then on what the sections that they had put in at that time regarding aboriginal rights would mean to us, the people of Canada and to the aboriginal people, and they told us that, frankly, they did not know. If they did not know then, I suggest that they still do not know. Perhaps it is like any lawyer's draft. You do not know how it will be interpreted by the courts.

As parliamentarians and as members of Parliament, I think we should have some answers from the people who drafted this legislation. My feeling is that we should not rush these amendments through, that we should take a further look at them. I am going to ask that this be sent to a committee, and then that committee can have some hearings and ask for explanations from the minister and his officials. Perhaps we can then get the answers that we need and should have. Then, if we are satisfied with those answers, we can pass the resolution next fall in plenty of time to complete the amendments and fulfill the commitment that the first ministers gave in March to the provinces and to the aboriginal people.

[Senator Steuart.]

Therefore, honourable senators, with leave, I move:

That the motion be not now adopted but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for consideration and report.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I will not detain the Senate much longer, because I think the case has been put so effectively by Senator Steuart that it is very difficult to see how one can improve on the good common sense to which he has treated us this afternoon. All I can really add is to say that I will pay him the compliment of repeating some of the arguments which he has placed before us, because they are certainly convincing, from my point of view.

The first one that really gets to the issue here is the fact that this is the first amendment to the Canadian Constitution that has ever been proposed. In other jurisdictions—the United States is an exemple—the constitution cannot be amended by reference to some legislatures or the federal congress. It has to be done by means of a popular vote, plus two-thirds of the states agreeing by way of their legislatures, and it has to carry on a popular vote.

We do not have this system here. In a sense, I regret it, because it provides a test of the desirability of constitutional amendments which is far more broadly based and far more expressive of public will than we may find in the way in which we are going to amend the Constitution; namely, by resolution of this chamber, the House of Commons, and, in this case, seven of the ten provinces or 50 per cent of our population. It bothers me that we should, at the fag end of a session, as Senator Steuart has so clearly said, be asked to deal with this matter without any further ado. I believe that referral to a committee is the very least that we ought to do in order to make sure that a matter of this importance receives the attention it deserves.

Honourable senators, I would not like anyone to think that, because this body or some members of it want to refer this constitutional amendment to a committee, in so doing we have objections to some of the principles that are contained in it. There is not a person in this chamber, to my knowledge, who does not believe that the rights of aboriginal peoples ought to be addressed. There is no question about that. There is nobody in this chamber who does not believe that some of those rights have been abridged in the past, and that something needs to be done to make sure that they receive the consideration now that is their due. There is nobody in this chamber who thinks that the question of equal rights for men and women should not apply in the general constitutional field in Canada. We are on all fours, I believe, with respect to those matters.

That is not to say, however, that the mere reference to those subjects in this resolution clearly outlines what the facts are or what is intended by those who are proposing that we should adopt this resolution. As Senator Steuart has so well said, when we deal with the question of land claims agreements that exist now, that is one thing; but when we enshrine in the Constitution those agreements that may be acquired in the future, what on earth are we talking about? We are stepping into the future, and adopting as part of the Constitution agreements which have not yet been reached. How in the name of common sense can that be considered a proper thing to do? Perhaps that is not what the drafters of this resolution intended. The plain reading of the language to my mind, however, indicates that we are being asked to enshrine in the Constitution agreements with respect to land or to other matters to which aboriginal people may have a perfect entitlement, if we only knew what it was—we are being asked to enshrine those in our Constitution. Surely that cannot make for good government or good policy. Once they are enshrined in the Constitution, there is no way of getting at these unknown agreements except by means of another constitutional amendment, and we will certainly look silly if that should happen.

Therefore, it seems to me that the part of prudence is that we should not be hasty when we look at this provision that rights that may be so acquired are to be constitutionalized. That does not make sense to me. There may be an issue here of aboriginal rights which are not expressly stated which ought to be respected. If so, let us hear about it. If a case can be made, then those rights can be included in the constitutional amendment. But the phrase that we have here now is one which no constitutional lawyer—and Heaven knows, I am not one of those; I am not even a lawyer as far as that goes—could address with an easy mind. We do not know what the future agreements are, yet we are asked to constitutionalize them, and that cannot be right.

The question of male and female persons also needs some interpretation. Which male and female persons? That is my question. Does this refer to people who are alive today? Does this refer to females who have been excluded from their rights up to the present time? What is going to happen in the future? What about rights that people would have had in the past if this kind of law had been part of our Constitution? Where does that come in? I think that question needs to be expressly dealt with. If we are dealing with a retroactive feature in this law—perhaps we are, perhaps we are not; I do not know—that opens up considerations which really ought to be studied before we decide whether it is the right thing to do.

Honourable senators, I come to the third point, which Senator Steuart said so well. It has to do with representation by people who are not members of this Parliament. Surely, as a Senate, the least we can do is to provide an opportunity for such representation. I do not know who is going to come and I do not know what they will say, but whether they be aboriginal people or other Canadians, it seems to me that we should provide that opportunity. If the House of Commons does not do it, the Senate should.

Senator Roblin: If there is a case for sober second thought, this is surely it. Sober second thought should be a principle that is applied to any proposed amendment of the Constitution.

Honourable senators, I am not going to continue any further because I am conscious that the case has been made so well already. There is really nothing more I could add to it, except to say to Senator Steuart that he has considerable support on this side of the house for his proposition. I, for one, thank him warmly for having brought this matter to our attention in the way he has. He has performed a distinguished public service.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have listened with great interest to Senator Steuart—I always listen to Senator Steuart. I have one question that is of concern to me, to which I would like to have an answer before I am prepared to vote on either his amendment or this resolution. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the deputy leader could answer my question, which was posed, briefly, by Senator Roblin. What is the meaning of the subsection which reads:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

Following that question, I should like to pose another: Has there been consultation with the various provincial governments as to whether this resolution is likely to be accepted by them?

I have been following what has been said in some of the legislatures, particularly that of New Brunswick. I understand that the Premier of New Bunswick is not satisfied with the section dealing with male and female persons and is not prepared to accept the resolution as it is. He is, however, prepared to suggest some amendments to it. If that is the case in other provinces, I think it strengthens the position of Senator Steuart, in that we may be back in the fall dealing with an amended version of this resolution if the provinces are not prepared to pass it.

I think there is great validity in that position. I do not think it is that urgent a matter to pass this resolution, and I really would hope that government leadership in the Senate would give very serious consideration to the case which Senator Steuart has made in his amendment.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): We are going to vote on this; honestly.

Senator van Roggen: I think, whether you wish to vote on it or not—

Senator Frith: I believe we are going to support it.

Senator van Roggen: That is fine, senator, but I think some points need to made, even though I commend the government leadership for supporting the motion of Senator Steuart.

Honourable senators, I rise to speak in support of Senator Steuart's motion. I think, however, that I am entitled to place on the record my views. Having been on the plane Monday night, I did not hear the motion put at that time. When I first became apprised of the fact that we in this chamber were being asked to deal with an amendment to the Constitution during the last two days of this session, without referral to committee, at least, I was speechless. "Speechless" would be one word I could use; "appalled" would be another, and "disillusioned" would be a third.

Senator Frith: That was never said in this chamber. It was said in the other place, but we have never said we wanted the resolution dealt with here without referral to a committee.

Senator Roblin: You never said you were going to, either.

Senator van Roggen: I do not wish to debate that point with the deputy leader. What I heard last night was that, unless objections had been raised, this thing was to be run through the Senate today or tomorrow.

Hon. C. William Doody: Shame!

Senator van Roggen: I think it is most unfortunate that Parliament should be treated in such a fashion, or that such a thing could even be contemplated in the most remote recesses of any minister's mind.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): There is nothing new there.

Senator van Roggen: I should like to give full credit to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who, upon seeing that there was concern about this matter, was very quick to agree that we treat it in what I consider to be a proper fashion and to forward it to committee.

Let me bring to the attention of honourable senators that if it is even suggested that we should deal with matters of this nature—I am not talking about some government bill; I am talking about amendment to the Constitution of Canada—in such an off-hand fashion, all the conversations going on at meetings of the Special Joint Committee on Reform of the Senate might as well be forgotten. If we cannot take minuscule steps like this to consider properly before our committee an amendment to the Constitution of Canada, then what are we good for? We should be abolished.

I do not want to prolong my remarks, because I know honourable senators are waiting for Royal Assent, and I will be very brief. Someone said to me recently, "You know, George, it took 750 years for the Commons in England to wrest absolute power from the monarch, and only 75 years to give it back to the executive." I suggest it is time we started to bring some of that power back from the executive, and back from dominion-provincial conferences, into the Parliament of Canada, and I support Senator Steuart's motion with all the power I have at my command.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: I think we might as well adjourn shortly and keep the debate going tomorrow.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I shall be very brief indeed.

As the seconder of Senator Steuart's motion in amendment, I simply want to say how delighted I am to support him. I say that as one whose wife five generations back on her maternal side had a MicMac princess as one of her forebears. As all honourable senators know, I am very proud of my wife and I am very proud of her heritage.

I also remember very well when the Honourable Jacques Flynn and I stood almost alone in this chamber speaking out on behalf of the aboriginal peoples when the James Bay legislation was being rushed—and I used the word repeatedly, rushed—through this chamber. The concerns we expressed on that day were not exaggerated, as we have seen in the carrying out of the James Bay agreement respecting the aboriginal people of northern Quebec. So, caution is not a bad thing.

As honourable senators know, I am one of those who has been somewhat discomfited in the last year or two in the Senate. However, in light of what Senator Steuart has offered to the Senate, and the reactions he has had to it, I am encouraged to think that this place is worth saving.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, two points were raised by Senator Thériault. I have nothing to add on the meaning of that subsection concerning men and women, other than what I said in my introduction of the bill.

As to the consent of the provinces, I do not know whether there has been any consultation in advance to see whether they will give their consent. Incidentally, it is legislatures, not premiers, according to the Constitution. However, we can find that out in committee. I think the point is well taken, and we can ask about that. It is one good reason for sending it to the committee.

The only occasion on which I mentioned anything about it being adopted quickly was when I said in my speech that the other place was going to adopt it, I understood, by house order yesterday, and I think they did.

Senator Flynn: This afternoon.

Senator Frith: I never suggested that we had to do so. Therefore, I echo what Senator McElman has said, and I am delighted to support Senator Steuart's motion in amendment.

Senator Flynn: I will make my speech when the resolution comes back from the committee.

Senator Frith: So will we all.

Motion in amendment agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motion:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 20, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Is a brief explanation required?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, we do not need it.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable W. R. McIntyre, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority

An Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada

An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (No. 2)

An Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2)

An Act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act (No. 2)

An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes

An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Federal Court Act

An Act respecting the Tax Court of Canada and to amend the Federal Court Act, the Judges Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

An Act to repeal certain Statutes that have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary

An Act to provide for financial assistance for industrial development in all regions of Canada

An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act

The Honourable Rod Blaker, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Until when?

Senator Frith: Until Tuesday, September 20, at 2 p.m.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I second the motion and I also want to add that I wish everyone a very pleasant holiday and that for the time being, I will not miss anyone!

[English]

Senator Frith: I should like to simply thank all honourable senators for their attention to the business that was before us in the past few days, and more particularly today.

I, too, wish to join with the Leader of the Opposition in wishing all honourable senators an enjoyable and nourishing summer.

• (1930)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I did not get back in time to hear the words of the Leader of the Opposition but I am sure they were very warm ones.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Not altogether.

Senator Olson: He has developed a great skill at throwing in little asides that do not quite fit in with the rest of it. In any event, I want to join with him and the deputy leader in thanking honourable senators for their co-operation, not only during the past few days but also over this part of the session, and hope they have a restful and enjoyable summer.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 20, 1983 at 2 p.m.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT ON THE TABLING OF FINANCIAL STATEMENTS COVERING PERIOD FROM MAY 26, 1982 TO MARCH 31, 1983

Honourable senators, I am pleased to table the first financial statements of Canada Development Investment Corporation. These statements cover the period from incorporation on May 26, 1982, to the end of the Company's first fiscal year on March 31, 1983.

You will recall that CDIC was established as a holding company so that its financial statements constitute a collection of the financial results of its underlying companies.

CDIC was initially established by CDC to become the vehicle for implementing the Government's decision to transform CDC into a traditional commercial corporation and, when circumstances permit, to sell the Government holding of CDC shares. In November of 1982, the Government turned to CDIC to improve its handling of its shareholder responsibilities with respect to certain of its other commercial shareholdings: Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado, Massey-Ferguson and Teleglobe. This last company not being transferable until legislatively authorized.

This transfer was effected under the statutory authority of Government to place its holdings in entities which it feels can best handle the Government's responsibilities as a shareholder. CDIC is providing a more commercial setting for the companies involved and has instituted a policy of full and timely disclosure of financial and other material business events. This approach is designed to ensure that Government, Parliament and the public have all the information which is normally available for publicly-traded private sector companies and which serve there as a basis of commercial discipline and the management accountability which is critical to such discipline. The policy of publishing quarterly financial results for CDIC and all of the underlying companies will be begun for the period ending June 30, 1983.

The companies under CDIC are intended by Government to be operated on a commercial basis looking to divestment or privatization when and where possible and profitable to the taxpaying investor. It will be apparent from the financial results reported here and from the more detailed reports made public before two Parliamentary committees over the past few weeks that some of these companies require a more active, continuous and commercially-minded representation of our shareholder interests. CDIC has begun by these reports to demonstrate the role it was created to perform.

The financial statements for CDIC which I am tabling today have been fully audited but no official audit appointment has been made by the Government to date. The Auditor General has indicated his desire to be the auditor of CDIC and this is under discussion with him. The common objective of all Parliamentarians is to ensure effective and efficient management of Government-owned entities. We also all share the conviction that a prime means of achieving this result is through the accountability which flows from the availability of information to the shareholders, namely, Government, Parliament and the public.

The questioning of management rests with Directors, Government, Parliamentary committees as well as financial experts and journalists who watch and comment on these matters. The role of the auditor is to ensure that the information is conveyed on a uniform and acceptable business basis, that the underlying systems are able to generate reliable information, and that any matters which violate laws or acceptable standards of business conduct are brought to the attention of the corporation and, if necessary to achieve proper behaviour, to Government and the public. This role in business serves the corporation and its Board as much as any other participant in the process. It is focussed on informational disclosure so that others can make the evaluative judgments.

In our Parliamentary system it is important that this review occur but the ultimate mandate and, therefore, responsibility for policy rests with those who are charged to form the Government, not with auditors. The procedures being adopted by CDIC under its mandate from the Government are providing a comprehensive business analysis of the companies and extensive information for accountability to those in Government and Parliament whose judgment must ultimately be brought to bear. I cannot imagine more thorough-going disclosure consistent with the objective of the competitive commercial operation of these companies than that which CDIC has made possible. That analysis is the fundamental role of a holding company and that disclosure is the result of the mandate to which Government has directed CDIC.

The statements of CDIC employ the equity method of accounting which is designed to give a clear financial picture of each of the operating subsidiaries of the Crown holding company.

CDIC could have presented either a consolidated financial statement or one based on equity accounting. Under the first, consolidation, the assets and liabilities of each of its underlying companies or subsidiaries would be merged for reporting purposes as if they were all part of the same corporation. Under the second, the CDIC financial statements summarize the result of each of the underlying entities and, show the aggregated total. They reveal the contribution of each component separately and show the assets and liabilities of each to be in separate legal entities—which is a fair reflection of the situation. The Board and management concluded that consolidation was less desirable for two reasons:

First, it was CDIC's belief that Parliamentarians and the public wanted to be able to review separately the financial statements of the subsidiary companies, namely, Canadair Limited, The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited and Eldorado Nuclear Limited. A consolidated statement would have lumped their activities together, denying Parliamentarians and the public the opportunity to focus on the individual holdings in the detail necessary to come to informed judgments. In other words, use of the equity method of accounting for CDIC's financial statements, supplemented by the complete financial statements of each of the subsidiaries, provides for much greater disclosure of information where it is needed, and avoids the need for the reader to have to separate the data for each underlying company.

Second, it was CDIC's belief that a consolidated financial statement could create the misleading impression that the underlying assets and liabilities of individual subsidiaries were legally available to offset one another. This is not so. The assets of one company are not available to satisfy the liabilities of another within the group.

The accounting standards of the Canadian Institute for Chartered Accountants provide for the use of the equity method of accounting where there is a persuasive case for it. CDIC believes the most persuasive case is that the Government and Parliament of Canada as the shareholder of CDIC does not want a consolidated statement—it wants to be able to examine readily the separate entities that constitute CDIC's holdings.

The consolidation and equity methods of accounting produce the same total numbers for shareholders' equity and net income of CDIC. The difference between the methods is in the way in which the details are provided. In the case of CDIC, the equity method provides a breakdown of assets, liabilities, revenues and expenses of CDIC itself as a holding company, and the attached separate financial statements of each subsidiary provide the breakdown of the assets, liabilities, revenues and expenses of each subsidiary.

In addition, the equity method of accounting, as applied by CDIC, allows the reader of the financial statements to relate directly the balance sheet and income statement of each subsidiary to the balance sheet and income statement of CDIC.

The CDIC income statement, in turn, allows the reader to see: the results of CDIC's companies, expressed as equity in the operating income or loss of each subsidiary; the obligations on CDIC's companies from the existing debt load of the subsidiaries, expressed as equity in financial expenses; and, the tax situation of CDIC and its subsidiaries, expressed as equity in tax expenses.

(in thousands of dollars)

	Operating (Income) Loss	Financial Expense	Tax Expense	Total
			(Recovery)
Canadair	1,199,419	215,477	26	1,414,922
de Havilland	230,430	35,642	(913)	265,159
Eldorado	(35,643)	27,757	3,886	(4,000)
	1,394,206	278,876	2,999	1,676,081

These elements can be traced directly to the underlying statements of each of Canadair, de Havilland and Eldorado as to their financial expense, tax expense and remaining operational loss (or income) for the period ending December 31, 1982. Adding these items of loss and expense produces a total loss for the group of companies of $1,676,081. The net expenses of CDIC were $642,000 for the period, after management fees from subsidiaries of $562,000.

CDIC, in applying the equity method of accounting, has recorded its full share of the losses of its subsidiaries against the original investment by the Government plus accumulated earnings and losses. These continue to produce a net negative investment amount of $780 million and a shareholders' deficit of $780.6 million for CDIC.

While Teleglobe is still not a subsidiary of CDIC and thus is not included in the financial statements of CDIC the statements of Teleglobe for its fiscal year ending March 31, 1983 are provided as part of CDIC's disclosure policy. The pertinent data is as follows:

(thousands of dollars)

BALANCE SHEET
—Equity of Canada	284,487
INCOME STATEMENT
Operating Income	104,572
Financial Expense	3,286
Net Income	54,603

CDIC is committed to full and timely disclosure of the true financial position of itself and each of its subsidiaries. As unpalatable as the revelations may have been, I believe all observers will agree that the recent financial statements on Canadair and de Havilland have at least provided a much clearer picture of the true financial and business condition of these enterprises. This is the first in the series of disclosures which shall continue as a matter of policy for CDIC and each of its subsidiaries on a quarterly basis.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, September 20, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE ERNEST C. MANNING, P.C.

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am sure that all, if not every, senator will realize that today, September 20, 1983, is the seventy-fifth birthday of Senator Manning.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: Therefore, under certain arrangements, Senator Manning retires from the Senate today. I know Senator Manning will not be here today, and I am aware of some of the reasons why. After one reaches the age of 75 the question arises whether or not you are legally able to enter the chamber as a senator. However, I do not intend to enter into that discussion.

I wish to pay tribute to Senator Manning for the work he has done based on his vast experience in public affairs and public administration even before he came to this house in 1970. At the time Senator Manning came to us he held the record as the longest ruling premier of a province in Canada. It is a record that he still holds today. The high offices he held both as a cabinet minister and as Premier of Alberta enabled him to make major contributions to the workings and considerations which this chamber undertakes from time to time.

When Senator Manning entered the Alberta legislature in August of 1935 he and his colleagues were in one of the most desperate and difficult financial situations which has ever confronted a Canadian province. A great many people today have either never been informed—or perhaps they have forgotten—that in 1935 Alberta was the poor sister of the Canadian provinces. I recall one of the great issues of the day concerned the fact that more than 50 per cent of the total budget was going to pay the interest on the provincial debt—52 per cent of the total budget for all government services comprised debt charges that had accumulated from the creation of the province in 1905 until 1935. Senator Manning and his colleagues attempted to rectify that situation in order that the government would have a financial base from which to pay for such essential services as those of school teachers, nurses and others in the public sector. I do not want to go into the details but I do know that as a result they were unable to borrow further funds from anyone in Canada, the New York money market, or the money markets of London, Paris or Zurich.

After coming through that period, he and his colleagues decided not to borrow any more money because of the difficulty that they had had in dealing with that situation, and, as a matter of fact, they never did. I mention that only because few people have had that experience, and it probably served Senator Manning well by enhancing his ability to function in this chamber.

I would also like to say that Senator Manning was responsible for many "firsts" when he was Premier of Alberta, notably, a gas and oil development policy that became the model for the entire world. Nigeria was just one of several countries that spent months in Canada becoming acquainted with its structure so that they could use it in their own development policy.

Lastly, I want to emphasize that Senator Manning brought to the Senate vast experience and knowledge, together with an intelligent application of that knowledge, and we are indeed richer for his presence here these past 13 years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government has indicated, today marks the end of the official career of one of the most remarkable people in the history of Canadian politics. Few are they who, having started so young in this thankless business, were so consistently successful over such a long period of time. The Leader of the Government himself knows well what happened in those days, because he too was a fervent supporter of the Social Credit doctrine and remained faithful to it until about 1965, if I am not mistaken—

Senator Olson: I still support most of that doctrine.

Senator Flynn: —in comparison with Senator Manning, who all his life remained faithful to the doctrine and sat in this chamber as the only Social Credit senator.

Ernest C. Manning, with the help of a few oil wells, led the province of Alberta from a deprived childhood to a rapidly-growing and more affluent adolescence. And, always, the firm hand of a concerned father could be seen to exercise the control required to keep in check the exuberance of youth.

Throughout his career, this remarkable man of sterling qualities has displayed erudition without pretension, conviction without bombast and determination without inflexibility. In this chamber, he spoke sparingly but always eloquently, with a great deal of genuine feeling and an equal amount of well-researched knowledge. He was effortlessly fluent and clear, this master of spoken English. He invariably put his case simply and succinctly; and such was this gifted orator's logic, analytical ability and fairness that he never failed to garner an attentive audience who admired him for his gifts and respected him for his convictions.

Ernest Manning is a humble, pleasant and sincere man; a man of great integrity who defended with fervor and intellectual acuity in this chamber those same principles of limited government which he long defended elsewhere.

• (1415)

His contribution has brought inestimable credit to this institution, and for this we particularly owe Senator Manning a debt of gratitude. Indeed, the people of Canada as a whole, especially those of Alberta whom he served nobly for so long, owe him a debt of gratitude for his having made politics his profession.

As the Leader of the Government has just said, he was elected in 1935 and served as premier of his province for 25 years, from 1943 to 1968. Men of his timber are hard to come by.

If this day brings to an end a career in active politics—and there is no guarantee of that, because Senator Manning certainly looks fit enough to seek elective office again—it is the hope of many, I am sure, that it does not mean the end of another career which has lasted still longer and has been every bit as glorious as his political career.

Many are they who, on a weekly basis over the years, have tuned in Ernest Manning to hear him preach the Word of God. They would probably tell you that God's wisdom provided the nourishment, but it was Ernest Manning who prepared the feast. The eternal verities were rarely so expertly and convincingly presented. For the sake of his regular listeners, it is to be hoped that the senator has no plans to set aside this praiseworthy activity.

To Senator Manning, we on this side of the chamber offer our most heartfelt wishes for a long, healthy and very active retirement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I wish to speak briefly on the subject of the retirement of Senator Manning.

I was for a short time the Premier of Nova Scotia when Senator Manning was the Premier of Alberta, and I first met him in that capacity. Despite the somewhat quizzical attitude we maritimers normally had in relation to the Social Credit Party of Alberta, when I first sat down with Premier Manning at the conference table, I felt the wisdom and judgment of his mind and the soundness of his personality. Indeed, he was an excellent Premier of Alberta.

As Senator Flynn quite properly said, Premier Manning was assisted by a few oil wells at a critical time, but the great thing is that that province, under his leadership, laid down a procedure for the development of crown lands insofar as the exploitation of oil resources were concerned, which, indeed, became a model for most countries in the world. Without good government, good leadership and good management, even the great riches of oil might not have brought the prosperity to the Province of Alberta which is the delight and pride—and also, perhaps, the envy—of some of the other provinces of Canada.

I am also sorry that the age-75 rule has required Senator Manning to retire from our midst. Generally speaking, I think that rule is all right, but there certainly have been some notable exceptions, and the enforced retirement of Senator Manning is one of them, as was the enforced retirement of Senator McIlraith a short time ago.

I wish to make only one correction to the remarks made by the Leader of the Government in proclaiming that Senator Manning had the longest reign as a premier of any province in Canada's history. That honour, of course, goes to the Honourable George H. Murray who was Premier of Nova Scotia from July 20, 1896 to January 24, 1923, a period of 26½ years, which is the record in the whole of the Empire and the Commonwealth. However, Premier Manning's accomplishments were considerable and we do not judge a man by the time he performs but by the quality of his performance, and in this respect Senator Manning has an A-plus rating, in my opinion.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I certainly wish to subscribe to what has been said about Senator Manning, but, as I said when Senator McIlraith retired, I shall reserve my remarks for the reception that we shall hold for Senator Manning in the near future.

• (1420)

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, September 22, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, apart from committee work, there does not appear to be much business for us this week.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Did you know that before?

Senator Frith: I was not sure. We gave the House of Commons a week's lead time so that we might have some legislation to deal with but, as yet, we have not received any bills. There is no certainty that we will receive any this week, but we ought to meet for Question Period for at least two days. Therefore, I suggest that we adjourn until Thursday at 2 o'clock.

There has been a good deal of committee activity this summer, and that is continuing. The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Reform of the Senate is holding out-of-town meetings this week. The Special Committee of the Senate on a Canadian Security Intelligence Service will be meeting tomorrow afternoon. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which is studying the amendment to the Constituiton, will be meeting tomorrow afternoon. Senator Lafond's committee will also be meeting tomorrow afternoon. The Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders will be meeting this week as well, so we do have a good deal of committee activity in the afternoons.

Therefore, I felt that it would be an appropriate week for us to follow the practice that we initiated just prior to adjourning at the end of June, that of leaving Wednesday afternoons free for committee meetings unless something comes up which requires us to change our schedule. I suggest that that is the general principle we should continue with during this fall.

I doubt that we will receive reports from any of the committees by Thursday afternoon, but we can meet on Thursday for Question Period and then adjourn until the following week.

Honourable senators, on Monday of next week there is a planned joint sitting of the Senate and the House of Commons to hear an address by Prime Minister Thatcher of Great Britain. It will take place in the House of Commons chamber.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Are all honourable senators to be included?

Senator Frith: Everyone is invited, yes.

Senator Marshall: That is just lovely.

Senator Frith: The House of Commons will make seating arrangements for honourable senators. Honourable senators are entitled to attend that sitting if they wish, and I suggest that we do not sit formally on Monday of next week. In other words, this joint sitting is not a proceeding which takes place as a result of a sitting of the Senate. Since I am sure some honourable senators will be present for that joint sitting, I propose that, next week, we repeat the schedule of this week. I propose that we sit at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, that we do not sit on Wednesday afternoon—again, to provide the committees with enough time to sit—and that we sit on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The only difference between the schedules of this week and next will be the joint sitting to hear Prime Minister Thatcher in the House of Commons chamber on Monday at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, I believe.

• (1425)

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government could tell me why honourable senators should return at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon if there is not all that much work to do in both the chamber and committees? It is much easier for some of us to get here on Tuesday evening rather than on Tuesday afternoon.

Senator Frith: Yes, I am aware of that, but I have a request to make of honourable senators. At least until the end of this year, there are no evening sittings in the other place. There are often activities which parliamentarians—members of both the House of Commons and the Senate—must do together, either by means of joint committees or parliamentary association work. Therefore, I would ask honourable senators to arrange to be present on Tuesday at 2 p.m. for the rest of this year so that evening sittings will be exceptions.

We do not know, of course, whether that arrangement will be continued in the other place. I suggest, however, that our joint work with members of the House of Commons will be more conveniently carried out if we sit at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-155

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report on the subject matter of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

[English]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): No, your Honour. Honourable senators, I would like to consider this matter. Accordingly, I would suggest that notice be given that, at the next sitting of the Senate, this motion will be put.

Senator Frith: Agreed.

• (1430)

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

DESTRUCTION OF KOREAN AIRLINES PASSENGER AIRCRAFT BY U.S.S.R.—MOTION OF CONDEMNATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to move—and I hope that the motion will be seconded by the Leader of the Opposition—a resolution related to the attack on the Korean Airlines passenger plane. It is essentially, if not exactly, the same motion that was passed in the other place a few days ago. Therefore, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move:

> That the attack on the Korean Airlines passenger plane on August 31, 1983 by Soviet military aircraft resulted directly in the loss of two hundred and sixty-nine lives including ten Canadians;
> That this utterly unjustifiable resort to the use of weapons of war in the interception of defenceless civil aircraft contravenes universally held standards of civilized international behaviour and international law governing civil aviation;

That the Soviet Government has provided neither a credible explanation of the circumstances nor any full acknowledgement of responsibility, appears unrepentant and unwilling to co-operate in international efforts to prevent a repetition of this tragedy;

Therefore the Senate:

Expresses its profound sympathy to the bereaved families of the victims;

Condemns the unwarranted attack on and destruction of the Korean airliner on the orders of Soviet authorities;

Demands a full and truthful explanation of this brutal act from the Soviet Government;

Demands that the Soviet Government co-operate fully in any impartial investigation under the auspices of the United Nations and of the International Civil Aviation Organization to prevent any repetition of such a tragedy;

Demands that the Soviet Authorities immediately offer full and generous compensation to the families of all victims including Canadians; and Directs the Speaker to convey the text of this motion to the Chairman of the Presidium of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I believe that the preamble to and the substance of the motion fully express the views of most, if not all, Canadians. We consider the action to have been severe and unjustifiable. I believe that the words contained in both the preamble and the motion fully explain the situation and, therefore, I do not intend to make any further comment in support of it. I now invite the Leader of the Opposition to second the motion and to make whatever comments he may wish.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Martial Asselin: I am prepared to grant leave, but I would first like to see the French text of the resolution. Is there a French text?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Asselin: Both the French and English texts should have been tabled at the same time.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: I have no hesitation whatsoever in seconding the motion presented by the Leader of the Government. As he has suggested, the language of the resolution is quite clear. What happened to Flight 007 of the South Korean Airlines is absolutely unforgiveable. Even if we give all possible credence to the Russian version, such a recourse to force is beyond excuse. There may have been within the lines of command of the Russian Army conflicting signals, but after such a barbarous act, it is beyond excuse that the Soviet Government did not come up with apologies, did not offer, as suggested in the motion, adequate compensation, and did not give us the assurance that such acts will not occur in the future.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before I put my question which will obviously be directed to the Leader of the Government or his deputy, I would like to comment on the changes on the front benches. I must say to Senator Perrault that as far as we are concerned, his performance as minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport was excellent. I do not know whether that rather harsh decision was taken as a result of his loyalty to the Senate or to enable Senator Austin to sit on the front benches. Senator Austin will certainly have to work very hard to deserve all the congratulations offered to Senator Perrault when he too leaves his portfolio.

In the meantime, considering that this session which began on May 3, 1980 has lasted three and a half years—Senator McElman agrees with me that I should put that question—when does the Government intend to start a new session? In other words, what bills are to be passed before a new Speech from the Throne is delivered at the beginning of what we all hope will be the last session for this Government?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the list of legislation that the government feels ought to be completed before the prorogation of this session is very short. My honourable friend will know that that list includes Bill C-155, and I believe that, by agreement in committee, some progress has been made on the modification of that bill. Bill C-152 deals with the Government Organization Act, and we would also like to see that passed because of the great investment of time in it and because some changes have been made with respect to the organization of the government and we believe the statutory arrangements should be completed. There is not much more to say than that. There is a lot more that ought to be done; it would be highly desirable to deal with many more bills in order to have them finished. A great deal of time, effort and investment of energy has gone into those bills already. I am reminded that the bill with respect to CDIC is another one, as well as Bill C-110. Another badly needed piece of legislation is that respecting the Canada Development Corporation, Bill C-158, and there are others.

My honourable friend knows better than I that the government proposes and the Opposition disposes. That is the problem we have been faced with all these months, while the requirements of the Government of Canada and the public service have continued. If we get hung up on one bill, then other bills must take priority from time to time. The government is more anxious than even the Leader of the Opposition to complete the essential public business before Parliament so that we can prorogue this session and start the next, which, although it may be the last session of this Parliament, may not be the last one for this government.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Please do not tell us that; it is a rather depressing thought.

Senator Olson: It may be for you.

Senator Flynn: Not just for me; for the people of Canada.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

NAVAL DEFENCE—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: My question is for the Leader of the Government. It has to do with the delicacy of the world situation in view of the fact that within the last few hours there has been an expression of support by all NATO countries towards increasing naval defence. Can the Leader of the Government indicate the position of the new Minister of National Defence as well as his attitude with respect to the very excellent report from the subcommittee on National Defence which recommends an expenditure of $6.5 billion toward increasing our naval forces which are so necessary to Canada's military contribution.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I will request a report from the Minister of National Defence with respect to that subject. I know that the government has looked at the excellent report of our subcommittee on National Defence. Of equal importance is the number of very significant moves and commitments that have been made by the Department of National Defence and the government since the Senate adjourned in June. That subject could also be brought up to date. I am sure my honourable friend is aware of some of these matters; perhaps he would like to have a more detailed report so he might be made fully aware of all the circumstances, including the firm orders which have been placed for frigates under the frigate program.

Senator Marshall: I take it, then, that the Leader of the Government will give us an update from the new minister.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AGING VETERANS PROGRAM

Hon. Jack Marshall: I wish to ask a question with respect to veterans affairs. During the summer recess the Minister of Veterans Affairs made several speeches across the country in which he indicated a new thrust would be taken by his department. I refer specifically to the expansion of the Aging Veterans Program, which is too restricted in its application. The minister has indicated that the average age of veterans in Canada is between 63 and 65. This creates a problem concerning the variation and proportion of pensions for widows and emphasizes the importance of enshrining the basic pension rate in the veterans' charter. These are matters which have been left undone over the years and which should be rectified at this late date. Is it possible for the Leader of the Government to obtain an answer from the minister? Can he stop the rhetoric with regard to what they will and will not do, and get some definite dates as to when legislation will be introduced to correct these inequities?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will undertake to get a report from the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Because the honourable senator has expressed such an interest in new legislation with regard to this matter, I would solicit his support—and that of his colleagues in this place and the other chamber—with regard to passing the legislation that has been introduced in order that we can bring on additional legislative matters of equal importance.

SORTING OF NEWFOUNDLAND MAIL IN NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Jack Marshall: My last question is in relation to regional interests. The government is evidently planning to construct a postal sorting station in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. I express my apologies to Senator Muir and Senator Macdonald for asking this question.

Prior to Confederation the sorting of mail for Newfoundland was done in Cape Breton in the basement of a post office. In its wisdom the government has decided to construct a new station for sorting Newfoundland mail in North Sydney at a cost of $1.2 million. What is the justification of this move, in view of the high unemployment rates in both provinces? It would seem to me to be an administrative necessity to have the bulk mail sorted in Newfoundland since it is now a province of Canada. Is there some other justification in light of the position taken between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Newfoundland?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not think that matter has anything to do with discussions between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Newfoundland. I will make an inquiry in order to answer my honourable friend's question in more detail, but I am sure he realizes that there are regional mail sorting stations in many other parts of this country that are not necessarily circumscribed by provincial boundaries. My honourable friend is as aware of that fact as I am.

MEDICARE—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION—POINT OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Before I address my question to the Leader of the Government I wish to raise a point of privilege. I do so now, because otherwise it would not seem fitting for me to take my place in this chamber.

The matter is fairly simple. On May 24, as reported in Hansard for that day at page 5633, I asked a question prefaced by two remarks which might have been unnecessary, since they were self-laudatory, but which certainly did not make any reference to the provinces or to any policy of the provinces. I would like to put my question on the record again. It reads as follows:

> I now come to the question I wanted to ask. My question is based on the speech Senator Austin made in reply to the originally framed question. He said that he was very reluctant to see people make changes in the medical insurance plan and in the hospital insurance plan. My question is an honest and very simple one. Does the federal government today pay its share of the costs of medicare and hospital insurance on exactly the same basis as it agreed to pay them when the plans began?

By this time Senator Austin may know the answer since he has had ample time to find out. However, on the day in question he could not give me the answer; it was supplied to me by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, who said that they were not paying on the—

Senator Olson: That is not a very reliable reply.

Senator Donahoe: It may not be, but it was a statement made from knowledge. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition said that he and I were both engaged on behalf of our respective provinces when the plan came into being and were both thoroughly familiar with the basis on which the federal government agreed to pay. He told me that they no longer pay on that basis; that the basis has been changed. It is true that the argument was made that the present basis is more generous than the old, but it was never suggested that it was the same basis and it never was, in fact, the same basis.

I now come to my point of privilege. I want it to be noted that that question is the only reference I have made in this chamber to hospital insurance or medicare. I would further point out that in that question there was no reference whatsoever to the action of any government of any province. I did not say that I approved or disapproved of what they were doing; I made no reference to them whatsoever.

At page 5802 of Debates of the Senate for Wednesday, June 15, 1983, are some remarks which were made in my absence. Therefore, I had no opportunity to rise in my own defence. Today is the earliest moment at which I could say anything on my own behalf.

On that day there was a discussion between Senator Murray on this side of the house and Senator Austin on the other. Senator Murray made a remark which was replied to by Senator Austin as follows:

> SENATOR AUSTIN: What I should like to hear from Senator Murray and other senators on his side is some tone of approbation with respect to medicare. What I heard in the last exchange I had with some of his colleagues was a suggestion that user-pay and extra billing were to be permitted activities under a national and universal medicare program.

Whereupon, the Leader of the Opposition asked the question:

> Who said that?

My friend, Senator Asselin, then said:

> Name him.

Senator Austin certainly named him. He named me. I had never raised my voice on the question about which he had been speaking. I had never referred to user-pay; never referred to hospital care; never referred to extra billing; never referred to any of the provinces at all, but Senator Austin attributed those remarks to me. He said:

> Senator Donahoe said it very clearly.

I am pleased to remark that Senator Asselin said:

> No, he did not say that.

Then Senator Murray said:

> The minister should read the record and should have listened more carefully when the discussion was taking place in this chamber.

Honourable senators, that is my point of privilege. I claim that remarks have been imputed to me absolutely without foundation. I am obliged to give an illustration of what I mean. When I was a law student, I studied a case where people were charged with improper conduct which was alleged to have taken place on the banks of the Red River in a tent, and when they came before the court and the evidence was given, the judge felt compelled to say that the evidence given by the witnesses was not reliable because, he said, the witnesses were more concerned by what they imagined than by what they saw or heard. That, senators, is exactly the position Senator Austin is in. He imagined; he wanted to say something derogatory about the Conservatives and about the people on this side of the house. He picked the one who was absent from the house to say it about and he named him, and, as a point of privilege, I consider that I should have an apology from Senator Austin and that he should withdraw the statement he made.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I would like to reply with clarity and brevity—

Senator Donahoe: And truth.

Senator Austin: —to Senator Donahoe. He is imputing to me motives which are contrary to the rules. He is imagining something with reference to what I am about to say, having complained that I imagined something in his questions; so I would ask him, if he wants to be a law student, to come to this issue with clean hands.

What Senator Donahoe has put to the Senate is nothing but a political quarrel with me. I did not, in the discussion quoted by Senator Donahoe in June, raise his name initially. I was asked for a name and I gave a name, and if Senator Donahoe is saying this afternoon that he is opposed to the introduction of user-pay and opposed to extra billing, then I do owe him an apology. If he is saying the opposite, then I owe him no apology.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): No, no, you were wrong and you certainly owe the senator an apology for having said something that was entirely wrong.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Be a nice man.

Senator Donahoe: I have a question to ask, but before I ask it, I merely want to say that, if Senator Austin thinks he has given an answer to the charge I made against him, he is the only one in this chamber who believes that he has done so.

Senator Austin: I do not believe that for a moment, and neither do you.

Senator Flynn: You, yourself, do not believe that.

ENERGY

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: My question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and is of vital importance to the people of the maritimes and, in particular, to the people of Nova Scotia. It was announced recently, that the Trans Quebec and Maritimes Gas Pipeline has been completed to Quebec City. Would the minister tell the Senate when the construction to the maritimes is to begin?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I take the question as notice, senator.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

STUDENTS FROM THE TERRY FOX CANADIAN YOUTH CENTRE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I bring to your attention the presence in the south gallery of almost 100 students from The Terry Fox Canadian Youth Centre.

These young men and women from every corner of this country are in Ottawa for a week of intensive study of our federal institutions, the Senate being one of them, and today marks the kick-off of the second year in which the Senate has co-operated with the centre under the Speaker's continuing student education program.

Most honourable senators have participated in discussions with these students and by next summer they will have addressed some 10,000 students in these weekly sessions, an exercise which benefits all participants and serves the Senate well.

On your behalf, honourable senators, may I then welcome these young citizens to the Senate and offer best wishes to them and to the thousands who will follow in the months to come.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I would like to say that I have great admiration for The Terry Fox Canadian Youth Centre and for the work that is carried on there. I, too, participated in addressing the young people who attended here, and I am very happy indeed that these students are spending part of their time in the Senate this afternoon.

• (1500)

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: I am prepared to yield to the Honourable Senator Austin if, having had time to reflect, he feels that I am entitled to an apology.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He needs more time than that.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): You will wait a long time.

Senator Donahoe: My supplementary question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Does the leader stand by his commitment to this chamber that the line will be completed to Halifax by the end of 1986?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there have been a number of significant developments with respect to the source of supply of gas in the maritime provinces. I am sure my honourable colleague is as keenly aware of that as I am, and perhaps even more so, since he lives in that part of Canada.

There has been a significant increase in the potential commercial volumes of gas that are being discovered off the shore of Nova Scotia, so some consideration must be given to that factor. That is being taken into account.

I am not exactly sure of the date to which this goes back, but certainly any government—whether a provincial government or a combination of the provincial governments of the maritime provinces and the federal government—ought to be flexible enough to take into account those significant changes.

I do not have at hand the amount of additional reserves that have been discovered and placed in the category of proven reserves, but I do know that there has been undertaken off Nova Scotia a massive drilling and exploration program. In fact, it is the largest that has ever taken place. That, of course, has a bearing on whether that feedstock will come from the western end of the pipeline or from the eastern end of the pipeline. Any reasonable person would take that into account.

Senator Donahoe: I have a final supplementary question. In view of the answer I have just been given, can the Leader of the Government tell us if the government intends to determine whether the gas entering the pipeline will come from the West or from Sable Island?

Senator Olson: It will take a little more time to prove up enough reserves to justify the costs involved and the time frame involved in bringing that gas onshore. It is not for me to attempt to predict with precision what the results of the exploratory program will be. I can, however, express the hope that that exploratory program will be successful and, therefore, the time frame will be short.

TRANSPORT

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—APPLICATION TO SPECIALTY GRAINS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I had a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Therefore, I regret the fact that he has obviously been called away on urgent public business.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You know the phrase.

Senator Perrault: In the absence of the minister, I shall direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

May I say at the outset how much I appreciate the kind and considerate remarks of the distinguished Leader of the Opposition. Despite our political differences from time to time in this chamber, we recognize the great virtues of our parliamentary system where one can respect one's opponents. I appreciate the quality and character of the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition. I also wish to thank honourable senators for the many kind letters and messages I have received since events of recent weeks. May I say that it has been a privilege to have served in cabinet, and I am ever mindful of the fact that there are thousands of able parliamentarians, many in this chamber, who have never been given the opportunity to serve in cabinet. Cabinet service is a privilege, not a right. I say that with the utmost sincerity.

My question is as follows: There is a large amount of concern on the west coast with reported initiatives to apply the Crow rate benefit to Canadian specialty grains shipped by land to Seattle for ocean export. In view of the fact that the proposal seems to have been accepted by all parties, as represented on a committee of the other place, is it to be understood that this represents official government policy? Is the government aware of the fact that specialty grains represent approximately 20 per cent of the total containerized exports from the Port of Vancouver, and that virtually all of this specialty cargo is taken by the Japan Six Lines, which accounts for approximately 40 per cent of the total import and export through the Port of Vancouver container facilities? The diversion to Seattle of the specialty grain cargo itself would therefore represent a very serious loss of container traffic.

The second loss, however, is even more serious in its implications. If the Japan Six Lines find that the specialty grain back-haul cargoes can be diverted to Seattle at a nominal increase in cost, the economics of their operations will likely be such as to cause them to stop calling at Vancouver. This will result in a loss of inbound Canadian cargoes as well. The loss of 40 per cent of the port's container traffic would immediately eliminate approximately 125 jobs at the terminals in the port. Additionally, it would eliminate the need for the two new container cranes, which are presently being installed at a total cost of approximately $11 million, and would result in substantial over-capacity for several years to come. The additional economic impact would include a reduction in gross revenue from the terminal operation of approximately $10 million per year.

Canadian taxpayers' funds should not be utilized for the purposes of supporting a system which would have such an adverse impact on the country's transportation system and would be contrary to the historical intent of Parliament. The Port of Vancouver is not advocating a restriction on the method of export, and the specialty grain shippers should be free to export from U.S. ports, if a benefit can be derived therefrom, paying full market transportation rates. However, where the Crow benefit is required by those shippers, such benefit should be used to the advantage of the Canadian transportation system as a whole.

Honourable senators, I intend to oppose any such reported change in the present regulations. I would appreciate an assurance from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that these reported changes do not represent government policy.

Hon. Jack Marshall: A good question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, government policy is and has been to maximize the utilization of Canadian ports and all their facilities for both inbound and outbound tonnage. There are, of course, cases where access to markets requires some exchanges between ports when the amounts or tonnage are below that which would allow for a commercially viable movement of vessels in and out. I am sure my honourable colleague would not expect us to have prohibitions that would deny access to a market of those smaller quantities simply because of restrictions on the statutory authority.

I can assure Senator Perrault that there are discussions going on, indeed, and that the government wishes to maximize the utilization of the Port of Vancouver for, as I said at the beginning of my reply, "inbound and outbound traffic."

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as I said, Canadian taxpayers' funds should not be utilized for the purpose of supporting a system that would have such an adverse impact on the country's transportation system on the west coast or on the east coast, and which would be contrary to the historical intent of Parliament.

I urge honourable senators to oppose any such change.

Senator Olson: I shall take that into account, but I hope that Senator Perrault is also cognizant of the fact that, if there are some small quantities of specialty grains, we should not go to the extreme of denying Canadian producers access to those markets because of statutory prohibitions under the Canadian Transportation Act.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

THE SHOOTING DOWN OF A SOUTH KOREAN AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL SANCTIONS AGAINST U.S.S.R.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, a short while ago, at the request of the Leader of the Government, the Senate passed a resolution condemning the Soviet Union for the incident involving a South Korean aircraft on August 31, 1983. I believe that the Leader of the Government was quite justified in presenting this resolution, which was indeed passed unanimously.

However, I would like to point out to the Leader of the Government that the condemnation which we shall convey to the Soviet Authorities has already been voiced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs as well as by several government officials. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has already demanded a complete and full explanation of this brutal act from the Soviet government.

Afterwards, we saw Mr. Gromyko in Geneva, not only forego any excuses, but also trying to play down the consequences of this brutal act against the South Korean airplane. He accused the United States of being responsible for the incident and, in our opinion, he expressed no regret for the victims of this incident. As I understand the press report, Mr. Gromyko even said that if the same situation reoccurred, the same disastrous consequences could result.

At the United Nations, the Soviet Union used its veto to block a resolution requesting an impartial investigation.

In view of these facts, of which we are all aware and which we condemn in our resolution, is the government willing to impose further sanctions against the Soviet Union? Are economic sanctions being considered by the Canadian government? Is there any question of cancelling certain cultural treaties which we have with the Soviet Union? What shall we do if the government and even the Parliament of Canada receive no satisfactory answer from the Soviet Union?

● (1510)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I said several minutes ago, both the preamble and the operative portions of the motion are self-explanatory. I think they are stated in such plain language that no one can misunderstand the meaning. If there are any additional actions to be undertaken by the government, they will be announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That may not be entirely satisfactory to my honourable friend, but he is an experienced politician, having been a member of the House of Commons and of the cabinet, and he knows that that is the proper route for that announcement.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Could he clarify the federal government's position regarding landings of aircraft of the U.S.S.R. or any of its satellite countries at Gander, Newfoundland?

Senator Olson: I can get a report on that but perhaps Senator Haidasz could send me a note indicating what he means by "clarify", because that question has been raised a number of times and the Minister of External Affairs has replied to it. I am not quite sure what, in addition to what already has been said, needs to be clarified.

TREASURY BOARD

EVALUATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a number of delayed answers and—

Hon. Jack Marshall: After four months you should have.

Senator Olson: I beg your pardon?

Senator Marshall: I said, "After four months you should have."

Senator Olson: I like to hear these jewels that Senator Marshall interjects, because sometimes I do not hear them. They do show up very accurately in Hansard, but at times their meaning becomes different from what was intended. He knows he can do that rather skilfully.

I should like to respond to a question raised by Senator Roblin on March 15, 1983, concerning evaluation studies prepared by the Treasury Board. It is a fairly long answer. May I have permission for this answer to be taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

> Neither the Treasury Board Secretariat nor the office of the Comptroller General normally carry out evaluations of government programs. The government policy on evaluation states that departments are to carry out evaluations of their programs and the studies that Senator Roblin referred to are, I assume, such evaluations. The Office of the Comptroller General which implements and monitors the policy on program evaluation, keeps records on what evaluations have been produced and are currently ongoing, and provides advice and assistance to departments in carrying out the evaluations. They do not, however, carry out evaluations themselves nor normally have copies of the completed studies. Almost every major government department now has a program evaluation unit reporting to the deputy head who is responsible for the conduct of evaluations of the departmental programs.
> Therefore, the Treasury Board has not carried out the evaluation referred to and does not have the studies in its possession. In order to obtain the evaluation studies, Senator Roblin should redirect his request to the minister responsible for each specific study.
> The President of the Treasury Board has agreed to forward a copy of the question to his colleagues to make them aware of Senator Roblin's interest in their evaluation studies.

THE BUDGET, 1983

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND—STATUS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Nurgitz on April 20, 1983, concerning the Western Development Fund. That answer is rather lengthy and I ask the permission of the Senate to have it taken as read. I note that Senator Nurgitz is not present at the moment, but I would be pleased to answer any questions about this answer at a later date.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

As you know, the Western Development Fund was established in the October 1980 budget at a level of $4 billion, with $2 billion allocated to the period ending in 1983-84 to cover initiatives in such areas as western grain handling and transportation systems and prairie water development.

Given the large sums of money flowing to producing provinces as a result of energy agreements and the need for increased fiscal restraint a review of the original plans led to a reprofiling and reallocation of the fund at the time of the November 1981 budget. That same budget also set aside $345 million from the Western Development Fund to establish the Native Economic Development Fund for programs directed toward the housing needs and economic development objectives of native peoples.

As you know, both western transportation and native economic development involved substantial consultations with various interested parties. With the June 1982 budget it appeared that there would not be a critical immediate demand for all the funds allocated, thus it was decided to defer some of the 1982-83 funds to subsequent years so money freed up could be used for immediate employment priorities.

The Finance Minister's Economic Statement of October 1982 identified an amount of up to $400 million to be added to the commitment of $1,355 million of the Western Transportation Fund to facilitate an early resolution of the Crow Rate issue. Other commitments from the Fund are:

—$82 million to compensate Western farmers for the Soviet Grain Embargo

—$60 million to the Vancouver Rapid Transit System

—$173 million for the purchase of 2,660 hopper cars to move western grain

—$313 million in interim rail payments for losses incurred by the railways in moving western grain.

Also of interest to you and supportive of the government's continued commitment to economic development in western Canada is the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program announced in the April 1983 budget.

Projects specifically directed towards western Canada total more than $300 million and include such initiatives as the Institute for Manufacturing Technology in Winnipeg ($41.4 million), the Winnipeg Core Area Development ($20 million) and the improvements to the Brandon Airport ($6.6 million) just to mention a few projects in your own region. I have attached the list of projects targeted to provinces in western Canada; this list would have to be revised in the likely event that any of the western provinces participate in any of the "national" procurement projects announced.

I hope this information is useful and I appreciate your interest and support for the government's efforts in promoting economic development in western Canada.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Sherwood on June 2, 1983, concerning activities under the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program. That answer is also fairly lengthy, and perhaps Senator Sherwood will ask for some details, if need be, after he has read it. I ask that this answer be taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Special Farm Financial Assistance Program, administered by the Farm Credit Corporation to assist farmers in financial difficulty was introduced in the November 1981 budget for the 1981-82 fiscal year. Under the program, farmers in financial distress are required to provide a plan of recovery demonstrating that with a debt consolidation loan from the FCC plus an interest rebate for two years, their farming operation will survive. The $50 million allocated to the program resulted in 382 loans for $45 million with the remaining $5 million being made available to pay a five percentage point rebate over two years. The interest on FCC loans on that time was sixteen and three-quarters per cent with the rebate reducing the interest cost to the farmer to eleven and three-quarters per cent for two years.

In the June 1982 budget, another $100 million was made available to the FCC under the program and the FCC diverted another $100 million of its regular loan funds so that $100 million in approvals could be made to farmers in financial difficulties in each of the two years following the June 1982 budget. Under this program the interest rebate was reduced to four percentage points.

Following the June budget, demand for debt consolidation loans by farmers in financial distress was so high that FCC received authority to increase loan approvals under the program in 1982-83 to $150 million rather than the $100 million initially authorized. In 1982-83, 966 loans were approved for $145.3 million leaving $54.7 million for approval under the program in 1983-84.

In the April 1983 budget, authority was given to the FCC to approve another $100 million under the program. This $100 million in approvals was diverted from the FCC regular lending program making $154.7 million available for approval in 1983-84. Since the start of the 1983-84 fiscal year, FCC's lending rate has been twelve and three-quarters per cent. The four percentage point rebate reduces the interest cost to farmers to eight and three-quarters for two years.

Demand for loans under the program was high at the start of the 1983-84 fiscal year as many farmers required debt consolidation loans before operating credit could be obtained. Addressing the needs of these farmers early in the year allowed them to go ahead with their 1983 cropping plans and enhanced their chance of recovery.

Although the funds available under the program were committed early in the year, it is unlikely that additional funds will be made available under the program. However, it must be recognized that interest rates are substantially below the high levels when the program was initiated. With the FCC lending rate on regular loans at twelve and three-quarters per cent and the chartered bank prime lending rate at eleven per cent, farmers in financial difficulty can be assisted with debt consolidation loans through either FCC regular loans and in some instances, through chartered banks' farm lending programs, as well as the Small Business Bond Program administered by the chartered banks.

In summary, the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program will result in $345 million of loan approvals to about 2,400 farmers in financial difficulty.

PARLIAMENT HILL

ROYAL VISIT—INQUIRY RE DISPLAY OF BRITISH FLAG ON COURTESY STAFF

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Macquarrie on June 21, 1983, relative to the flying of the Royal Union Flag. May this answer be taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Royal Union Flag, generally known as the Union Jack, was approved by Parliament on December 18, 1964 for continued use as a symbol of Canada's membership in the Commonwealth of Nations and of her allegiance to the Crown.

It is to conform to this decision of Parliament that the Union Jack was flown on Parliament Hill on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses The Prince and Princess of Wales, as was done in April 1982 when Her Majesty the Queen visited Ottawa for the Proclamation of the Constitution.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUBMISSION OF ANNUAL REPORTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Roblin on June 22, 1983, concerning the tabling of the Canada Post Corporation Annual Report. May I have permission for that answer to be taken as read?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The simple answer is that changing a very large government department with 62,000 people and assets of $1.5 billion to a crown corporation has proved a lot more complex than anyone expected.

There are major accounting issues that have still to be resolved among the government, the Auditor General and Canada Post.

In fact, the Auditor General himself said before the Public Accounts Committee this spring that when the law was passed a number of issues were not anticipated and these have proved extremely difficult to resolve.

Nevertheless, I would like to say that some progress has now been made. Some problems over accountability and the transfer of assets still exist, but Canada Post expects these will be resolved this summer. Reports for the stub year of October 16, 1981 to March 1982, and the full year ending in March 1983, will follow.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNITY DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—CONTROL MEASURES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to respond to a question raised by Senator Haidasz on June 29, 1983, concerning measures taken by the federal government to control acquired immunity deficiency syndrome. The reply is rather lengthy and technical and I ask the permission of the Senate to have it taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Acquired Immunity Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) is a new illness usually occurring in previously healthy young adults, but more recently has been described in the spouses, the regular sexual partners and children of persons with or at high risk of developing the disease. It was first reported in the United States in June 1981. Up to September 6 of this year, the Laboratory Centre for Disease Control (LCDC) Ottawa, has received documentary reports of 37 cases in Canada (males 33, females 4).

Surveillance of cases by the Bureau of Epidemiology, LCDC, is an ongoing activity.

The cause of AIDS has not yet been discovered despite two years of studies but is believed to be a virus transmissible by body fluids such as semen and blood. High risk groups include male homosexuals, Haitians, haemophiliacs and intravenous drug abusers.

Physicians in three main urban centres, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver who have an ongoing interest in AIDS because of local population risks have formed groups or committees for the purpose of providing information and advice and conducting research. Preliminary studies have been undertaken and applications have been forwarded to national funding agencies. In order to coordinate national activities, the Health Protection Branch called together representatives of certain groups in order to determine the direction and guidance that should be afforded this serious problem in Canada in the light of national and international knowledge of AIDS. Subsequently, a national advisory committee was formed by the department with broad geographic representation and the addition of specialists in immunology, infectious diseases and microbiology. The mandate of this committee is to review the status of AIDS in Canada and in other countries and to make recommendations to the Minister of Health and Welfare and other appropriate agencies which would lead to implementation of medical care, research and other strategies with regard to diagnosis and treatment, control and prevention of AIDS in Canada. This committee will be meeting on a regular basis.

JUSTICE

LAW FIRMS RETAINED BY GOVERNMENT, 1978-83—REPLY TABLED

Question No. 105 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What is the list of law firms hired by the Canadian Government in localities where there is no regional office of the Justice Department and what is (i) the name of the firm (ii) the amount paid in the last five years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to Order Paper Question No. 105. Due to the length of the reply, I ask leave to table it. The question is asked by Senator Marshall, and I hope he will agree to this procedure.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Then, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 20(a)(2), I table:

Reply to Question No. 105.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEWFOUNDLAND—FISHERIES COLLEGE, ST. JOHN'S—COST

Question No. 108 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

With regard to the site on which it is intended to construct the Fisheries College at St. John's Newfoundland, what was (i) the cost and (ii) the area of the site?

Reply by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion:

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion advises:

i) Land acquisition was a provincial responsibility and cost $381,400. There was no cost to the Federal Government.

ii) The area of the site is 17.15 hectares.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

BREAKDOWN OF SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS—VESSEL PROCUREMENT

Question No. 110 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What is the breakdown under Special Recovery Capital Projects—Vessel Procurement, of $630 million, with regard to (i) Navy (ii) Coast Guard (iii) Fisheries and Oceans and (iv) Public Works?

Reply by the Minister of State for Economic Development:

Insofar as the Ministry of State for Economic Development is concerned: Special Recovery Capital

Projects Program: Ship Construction

Shipbuilding projects approved under the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program (SRCPP) total $638.3 million.

The approved projects include the following:

$630.0 million Coast Guard Vessels: Construction of:

(Transport Canada)

1 Type 1200 Heavy Icebreaker

6 Type 1100 Tenders for supply of navigation aids and icebreaking

2 Type 1050 Tenders for navaid supply and icebreaking

2 Type 800 small navaid tenders and a number of small shore-based craft

Refitting of:

3 Existing icebreakers

$5.6 million Electronic Survey Vessel

(Fisheries & Oceans)

Construction of a state-of-the-art survey vessel to chart Atlantic seasonal ports.

$2.7 million "Tsekoa" Vessel Replacement

(Fisheries & Oceans)

Construction of a new vessel to serve as coastal workboat on the British Columbia Coast.

There are no projects approved under the SRCPP for the construction or refit of vessels for the Navy.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND GENERAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

RURAL DEVELOPMENT—STATUS OF SUBSIDIARY AGREEMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I received a letter from Senator Marshall concerning some questions that he had asked which he figured had become dépassé by the passage of time, but I looked into them, and it turns out that the question he asked about the Canada-Newfoundland agreement apparently is still very much alive. It has been an ongoing process and only recently has there been any indication of an end result and some development that I think we both would be satisfied with.

At the end of March the term of the agreement was extended for six months. The agreement is due to expire at the end of this month—on September 30, 1983—so the urgency is revived also. There have been some serious ongoing and highly sensitive negotiations between the federal government and the Province of Newfoundland-Labrador. We have been advised that some sort of answer will materialize within the next few days. Senator Marshall pays sufficiently close attention to what is happening in Newfoundland that he will probably hear the news before I do, but I will put it on the record when I find out about it, if he does not do so first.

The other question referring to the satellite receiving station also seemed to be obsolete, but I asked for at least the additional information that was requested. I received it shortly before we began the sitting today, but I was not satisfied that it was sufficiently additional to what we already knew. Therefore, I am asking for further information on that also.

THE BUDGET SPEECH, 1983

PROPOSALS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the proposals contained in the Budget Speech made by the Minister of Finance in the other place on 19th April, 1983.—(Honourable Senator Murray).

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I spoke to this item when it was before the Senate and moved the adjournment simply because the possibility that another honourable senator may have wished to participate in the debate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, rather than consider this matter as having been debated on the spot, senators will have an opportunity to read today's Debates of the Senate and decide, say between now and Thursday, whether they wish to make an intervention.

Order stands.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE THE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-149 – MOTION STANDS

On the motion:

By the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-149, intituled: "An Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this motion was placed on the Order Paper before we adjourned because it seemed there would be a good chance of our getting the bill from the other place before the adjournment. However, that bill is now, if I can use the term, back "in play" in the other place.

I would, therefore, ask that the motion be left as it stands because we may shortly receive the bill and at that time we can refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion stands.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, September 22, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, September 22, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

TABLED DOCUMENTS

DISTRIBUTION TO SENATORS

On the tabling of documents:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, earlier this week the Leader of the Government tabled a long list of reports and other documents, two or three of which particularly interested me since they had to do with veterans affairs. One document was the report of the Army Benevolent Fund Board, and another was the statement of operations under the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

I would ask the Leader of the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that I do get copies of these documents.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will do that. I am sure that, as a result of Senator Marshall's question, some of my staff members will make sure that he will not only receive the documents he has mentioned immediately, but, since he has raised this matter a number of times previously, will be on a mailing list to ensure that the documents are sent to his office either on the day they are tabled or immediately afterwards.

If Senator Marshall does wish to be on a mailing list in order to receive any other documents, my office will try to be helpful and make sure that happens.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 27, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

POWER OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Honorable Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), I move that the Special Committee of the Senate on the Canadian Security Intelligence Service have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the Committee.

[English]

Senator Frith: I shall explain why the motion is necessary once leave is granted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, through an oversight, when the terms of reference for this committee were established and adopted by the Senate, we did not include a clause authorizing the hiring of support personnel as thought necessary. The committee is, in fact, using Parliamentary Library staff for almost all its research, but it also needs other staff. This remedies the oversight.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

ORAL QUESTIONS—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, before the summer recess I asked some questions of Senator Perrault in his capacity as Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. In spite of the fact that I repeated my questions to the minister on one other occasion, these questions remain unanswered. He is no longer the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Who will answer my questions now?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall attempt to obtain answers to all the questions that remain unanswered. Perhaps Senator Asselin would be helpful and tell us the pages in Hansard where his questions appear, otherwise our people will have to plough through all the back Hansards. I can give him an undertaking that I will be as helpful as I can under the circumstances, but perhaps he will be a little generous—

Senator Asselin: As always.

Senator Olson: You don't want to be generous?

Senator Asselin: I said, "As always."

Senator Olson: That pleases me because we have a very competent but very new minister in the Honourable Céline Hervieux-Payette.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Oposition): She is very specialized in that field.

Senator Asselin: I prefer Senator Perrault.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Everyone is entitled to his own sexual preferences.

Senator Olson: With the help of Senator Asselin in identifying the pages in Hansard where the questions are located and with the competent help of the minister, once she has become familiar with her department, I am sure that we will have complete and satisfactory answers to all the questions.

Senator Asselin: I will do that.

TRANSPORT

RUMORED RESUMPTION OF PASSENGER RAIL SERVICE FROM HALIFAX TO MONTREAL VIA MONCTON AND SAINT JOHN

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, as you know, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications studied a reference with respect to the abolition of VIA Rail service from Halifax to Montreal via Moncton and Saint John. It held a number of hearings and heard many witnesses. It formulated a preliminary report in which it made certain recommendations. There is now a persistent rumour that VIA Rail is considering reinstating the Atlantic service from Halifax to Montreal via Moncton and Saint John on a basis of two days per week. Would the Leader of the Opposition, as soon as possible, confirm or deny—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Riley: I mean the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I may be authorized to answer you next year.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): He was not speaking in the future tense but the past tense.

Senator Riley: I may be somewhat anticipatory.

Senator Olson: It is regressive.

● (1410)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): You would not be prepared to wait that long, in any event.

Senator Olson: It is retrogressive.

Senator Riley: I would like to have an answer to that question as soon as possible.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, perhaps I should know better than to comment on rumours, whether they are described as persistent, intermittent or whatever. I am aware of what Senator Riley is talking about. I want both him and the Senate committee members to know that the recommendations they made were taken very seriously by the Minister of Transport and—

Senator Flynn: The present minister?

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: Yes. The former minister worked on it as long as he was there and the present minister is working diligently on it now.

I shall make inquiries to establish the validity of the persistent rumours and, when I have an answer for Senator Riley, I shall report it to him.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VACANCIES

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I would like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the Cape Breton Development Corporation, with specific reference to the number of members on the board. I understand there are some vacancies on that board and that there have been for a very long time. Could the Leader of the Government report back to this house on how many vacancies exist under the federal arrangement, how long they have existed, and how soon they will be filled?

I also ask the leader to advise this house if discussions are continuing between the Province of Nova Scotia and the federal government regarding the appointment made by that province. I am wondering if the provinces lagged in this situation also.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government would say what is on his mind and not what he has been told by the deputy leader.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was consulting with the deputy leader, which I find useful to do from time to time because I usually get good advice from him. In this case I was looking for a word that would describe the manifold question which Senator Muir has posed. What was the term you suggested, Senator Frith?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): "Hydra- headed."

Senator Olson: That is not a word I would use very often, but it is a multiple question and I undertake to make inquiries on all its facets

With respect to parts of it—for instance, an answer as to when someone other than myself is going to make a decision—I know better than to give an undertaking to get a positive answer to such a question. However, with respect to the factual information that Senator Muir has inquired about, I shall attempt to get it as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INDUSTRIAL ESPIONAGE—EXPULSION OF U. S. S. R. DIPLOMATS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he would kindly furnish this house with particulars of the industrial espionage activities of the U. S. S. R. diplomats recently expelled from Canada.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall refer that question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and rely on his discretion as to the degree of detail in which he will answer a question involving security matters, since that is within his jurisdiction.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The way the question was put, it does not involve security.

Senator Olson: In response to the Leader of the Opposition, I am sure that I heard Senator Haidasz use the word "espionage".

Senator Flynn: Yes, he said "industrial espionage".

LANDING RIGHTS FOR RUSSIAN AIRCRAFT AT GANDER

Hon. Stanely Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate be prepared this afternoon to inform this house of any formal or informal request from the Government of the U.S.S.R. to grant landing rights at Gander to any Russian aircraft carrying Mr. Gromyko or any other government officials from the Eastern European bloc countries to attend the United Nations special meeting in New York?

Senator Olson: I shall also take that question as notice and secure a reply from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He only goes to New York; he doesn't have to stop in Gander.

THE CABINET

LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE—COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIPS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to the answers that the Leader of the Government in the Senate gave to Senator Muir and Senator Haidasz. I am wondering why he takes all these questions as notice when he is on the following cabinet committees: Communications, Government Operations, Special Committee of Council, Treasury Board, Western Affairs, and his colleagues, Senator Austin and Senator Argue, who are not present in the chamber, are also on those committees, in addition to a Special Committee of the Senate on a Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the Committee on Economic and Regional Development. We should be able to get all the answers without his taking the questions as notice and reporting the answers in a week's time when they are out of date.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You are asking a lot.

Senator Marshall: If he attends these meetings, which take in a broad umbrella of the government's operations, why can't he give us the answers without taking them as notice, since he should have most of the information, particularly on the said subjects?

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is a very clear, succinct answer to that question, and I am sure that Senator Marshall could have it from his own leader who also has been on numerous cabinet committees from time to time. One of the most difficult problems any human being has—I am not saying everyone is like me—is to compartmentalize his mind so that he knows what he has learned in a certain place is ready for public announcement. Quite frankly, I have said in this chamber many times that I am not going to run, or appear to be running, any other minister's department, even when I was the chairman of one of the large cabinet committees, that on economic development. Quite often we have some information that has been discussed, but normally, and I think it is a good practice that every government has followed, the minister responsible for the subject matter that is under consideration makes the announcement. Therefore, at times we have to wait until it is appropriate for him or her to do so. A lot of things are recalled that we have learned in cabinet committees in filling in the details. I am sure Senator Marshall will understand that.

TREASURY BOARD

EVALUATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his reply on Tuesday to my question of March 15 of this year about evaluation studies undertaken by the Treasury Board. In his reply he told me that the studies were not done by the Treasury Board but by the departments directly. He also told me that the President of the Treasury Board had agreed to forward a copy of the question to his colleagues in order to make them aware of my interest in their evaluation studies. I want to make it clear that my interest even extends to reading the evaluations. I have had no intimation from any of these ministers approached by the President of the Treasury Board that they have any evaluation studies that they would like me to read, but I would ask my honourable friend if he could ask them, if they got the proposal of the President of the Treasury Board, what their reaction is, and whether they will , in fact, allow me to read these evaluation studies.

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I hesitate slightly in giving an affirmative reply to that question because I am not quite sure what it involves exactly, but I can give Senator Roblin the assurance that I will read very carefully what he has said, and that I will ask the President of the Treasury Board to supply him with as much material as he possibly can on the evaluations. The reason I say that is because I know that those evaluations are going on in one department or another, or several departments, almost on a continuing basis and not always in the same department, and at some stage memos are passing between officials in those departments. However, we will certainly try to make as much available as possible.

Senator Roblin: I want to be quite clear about this because I am not interested in interfering with normal departmental practice, but the point has been made that evaluations are made by the departments presumably on a formal basis. I hope that my honourable friend is not raising false hopes in my breast, because his answer clearly indicates that the President of the Treasury Board has agreed to forward a copy of my question to his colleagues to make them aware of my interest in the evaluations. It follows from that, if it just falls to the ground at that point, that I am going to be disappointed. I do want my honourable friend to tell me what the ministers intend to do about the suggestion of the President of the Treasury Board.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I want to give Senator Roblin the assurance that I will do everything in my power to lessen the level of his disappointment. I say that a bit facetiously, but, seriously, I say that we will follow through with further communications to the President of the Treasury Board requesting him to respond to the questions that have just been asked.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. I, like Senator Roblin, was mystified by the answer that was given to the question about evaluation reports. I wonder if, indeed, I could be added to the list of senators who will receive those reports when they are made available.

I must say that I am surprised that the Treasury Board is not aware of which departments are being evaluated.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would not want to leave the wrong impression. I think that the Treasury Board is aware of evaluations that are going on at the present time. Although I only read the reply once, I was left with the impression that the Treasury Board was doing all of these evaluations. It was my understanding that some of the evaluations were being carried out according to a formula that was being developed by the departments themselves. I do not think that the Treasury Board is unaware of evaluations that are going on in the various departments at this time.

In any event, I will put those questions. More specifically, in answer to Senator Everett's question, I will endeavour to make sure that he, too, will be supplied with the material that we get regarding those evaluations.

Senator Everett: I am delighted to hear that the Treasury Board is aware of the evaluations that are being made. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could provide me— and perhaps Senator Roblin, too—with a list of the evaluations that are now being made.

Senator Roblin: I should like to second the request of my honourable friend opposite. I would also like to ask the Leader of the Government to unravel another little mystery for us.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): This is a rather ecumenical performance.

Senator Roblin: If two minds agree, that cannot be all bad. We occasionally speak to one another outside the Senate, although not on this particular topic.

I want to point out to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that there has been a new development in the Treasury Board. A certain Mr. Edmund Clark has been recalled from his sojourn in Paris to become the Associate Secretary of the Treasury Board. If I read the news report correctly, he is specifically charged with the question of the efficiency of the civil service, which bears precisely on the point that my honourable friend from Winnipeg and I have been discussing.

When my honourable friend looks into this matter, then, would he clarify the position respecting the Treasury Board and the departments in this whole area of efficiency reviews? That ought to be clarified so that we know who is doing what and where we can press our points for information.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will take those comments and requests into consideration as well.

ENERGY

TAR SANDS AND HEAVY OIL UPGRADING—CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I wonder if the leader would inform the Senate as to any new developments that are taking place in the development of the oil sands in Alberta.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be very happy to respond.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Did you receive notice of this question?

Senator Olson: No, I did not receive notice of it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Were you warned?

Senator Olson: I hardly need receive notice on a question that deals with a number of things in which I am intensely interested.

Senator Asselin: Very often you take questions as notice. Why do you not take this question as notice?

Senator Olson: I do not take this question as notice because I believe that, because of my interest in the matter over the last few weeks, I carry with me the answer.

Honourable senators, I believe that an official announcement has been made on four major capital investments in tar sands and heavy oil upgrading in western Canada. That is extremely important. There are a number of others on a smaller scale than those originally planned some years ago.

A few weeks ago there was an announcement of a $1.5 billion expansion to Syncrude to be completed in a number of stages. That work is already under way. There has been an announcement of a $200 million enhanced oil recovery unit to be established at Wolf Lake. That will be the first of several stages that will be forthcoming. We have also made an important announcement regarding a medium and heavy oil upgrader in Regina, Saskatchewan, which will enhance the quality and marketability of a good deal of oil produced in that area. Furthermore, the day before yesterday the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his counterpart in Alberta announced a figure of $300 million for what is described as the second phase of the Cold Lake oil deposit enhanced recovery. That capital investment project will go ahead immediately and will provide 700 new jobs almost immediately. That is the second stage of a six-stage program in the Cold Lake area.

If we add all that together, it is clear that many of those projects which two or three years ago were massive mega-projects are now going ahead but on a scaled-down level and in stages, in order that those enormous resources can be brought on stream progressively in higher and higher quantities as we need them.

It is extremely important from another point of view. Senator Bosa no doubt realizes that our flow of conventional oil from those fields into Canadian production is decreasing year by year, and we have almost reached the point where those projects, when completed, will provide an alternative source of supply of crude oil of a grade that can be used in this country to at least substitute—if that is the correct word—for the decrease in flow from conventional oil fields.

I could say a good deal more about the drilling program in western Canada, particularly Alberta, in connection with the conventional oil fields. I am not referring to gas wells; we have to separate the two, because that activity has declined somewhat due to the fact that market demand is less than supply. However, for crude oil we are reaching a record number of completed oil wells in 1983. That is a record for the year.

That is positive news for our oil self-sufficiency and all the economic activities that go with it.

Senator Bosa: As a supplementary, it is the government's objective to reach oil self-sufficiency by the late 1980s or early 1990s.

Hon. Lowell Murray: What?

Senator Bosa: Can the Leader of the Government inform us as to whether we are proceeding on target?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is, of course, more than one way of calculating what is considered to be "on target". In some months we have almost reached self-sufficiency a long way in advance of the targets that were set out two or two-and-a-half years ago.

Senator Murray: Seasonally adjusted self-sufficiency.

• (1430)

Senator Olson: One of the reasons, of course, has been a downturn on the demand side from what was anticipated at that time. I see Senator Murray trying to—

Senator Murray: I am laughing.

Senator Olson: —throw in some facetious comments with respect to this.

We did suffer an economic downturn in Canada, as did all the countries in the western world.

To get back to Senator Bosa's question, depending on when you identify the target, on both the supply and demand sides, we are probably ahead of the target date that was projected prior to the economic downturn in the western world.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: I am glad to see that the Minister is announcing these projects with a big smile on his face. We realize that the Government side is uncomfortable about the serious economic situation that exists in Canada today. If these projects can help bring down unemployment in Alberta, we shall be delighted. Since the Minister seems to know about all the projects the Government has ready to improve the economic situation, does he have any on his list today that would improve the unemployment situation in Quebec? Does the Government intend to develop any mega-projects in Quebec in order to bring down unemployment? We all know that unemployment in Quebec is now up to 12 per cent, and in the Maritimes it is up 16 or 17 per cent. Is the Minister in a position to announce further capital projects that could bring down unemployment in the regions I have just mentioned?

[English]

Senator Olson: Yes, I can. If my honourable friend would allow me to go through—

Senator Asselin: You have done this before.

Senator Olson: Yes. However, my honourable friend cannot ask me to list all the projects which are going forward and then object when I do it.

Senator Asselin: No. You have done it before.

Senator Olson: Yes. However, I have an updated list with me, which I bring from day to day and which lists so many good projects—

Senator Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Are they mega-projects?

Senator Olson: There are so many good projects listed in there concerning various parts of Canada, and also indicators of improving economic news, that I would be glad to comply with my honourable friend's request. As soon as I start doing that, however, my honourable friend objects.

Senator Asselin: You have done it already.

Senator Olson: If my honourable friend wants me to be precise, then I will get him a list of a very large number of projects in Quebec, including a substantial—

Senator Asselin: Where are they?

Senator Olson: —undertaking for the economic enhancement of the Gaspé. That is just one example, and there are several others. I would be happy to supply my honourable friend with that list. Perhaps he would spend a few days digesting it. It is a very impressive list of projects.

Senator Asselin: Go to Quebec and speak to the people that way.

Senator Olson: We are not satisfied this is the only solution to the unemployment problem in Quebec or, for that matter, anywhere else in Canada. I can tell my honourable friend without reservation that there is a large number of projects going ahead. Perhaps I should circulate the list of projects concerning the Department of Agriculture, DREE, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and several others.

Some hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: If my honourable friend will wait until the next sitting I will provide him with a clear and succinct list; otherwise I could ramble on for a long time listing the number of projects which are going ahead.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question arising out of the reply given by the Leader of the Government to Senator Bosa's question.

I point out to the Leader of the Government that if the $300 million project to which he refers replaces two projects totaling $26 billion, about which we have heard a great deal in the past, then the project has shrunk considerably. This leaves me somewhat skeptical of the forecast projections provided by the Leader of the Government. I wonder if the National Energy Program and its tax draft have been altered in any way to allow for the project referred to to proceed, and whether Petro-Canada has participated in any way in the project.

Senator Olson: I would be very happy to. The way Senator Phillips phrased his question indicates to me that he clearly did not understand what I just said, and that is unfortunate because I will have to tell him again.

The expansion of the Syncrude plant at Fort McMurray is under way. I am not exactly sure what amount was projected for 1983 and into 1984, but it seems to me that it was something in the neighbourhood of $400 million. There is going to be a $1.5 billion expansion of that plant. I made it quite clear that that is not a complete substitute for the Alsands project, which was $14 billion or $16 billion, but what I am talking about is under way.

As far as Cold Lake is concerned, the entire development of that field by Esso Resources was projected as high as $12 billion, which included all six phases plus an oil upgrader for the bitumen. With the oil upgrader, that oil will be brought up to what is considered to be a high quality synthetic oil, as good as the highest quality oil found anywhere in the world.

The upgrader is not included in what was announced on Tuesday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but the second phase that was announced amounts to $300 million.

Phases 4 through 6 are also projected, but the minister did not announce that they were under way because the second phase has to be completed before they enter into the third, fourth, fifth and sixth phases. What is important, though, is that it is under way and the objective is for the entire project to be built over a longer period of time than was projected some time ago.

The same set of circumstances also holds true for the Wolfe Lake project. It is being done by BP, and Petro-Canada is a partial shareholder in the Syncrude consortium.

I can also say that that holds true for a number of other projects. I hope Senator Phillips understands that most of those projects are now under way, but not with the massive undertaking of capital investment that is involved with mega-projects.

I am confident that over a reasonable time span they will be completed, and perhaps up to the full size the mega-projects were projected to be two years ago.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, there used to be a list of the mega-projects. I wonder if the Leader of the Government still has a copy of that list and, if so, whether he would care to table it.

I should also like to know whether there have been any changes made to the tax arrangement. Could the leader tell us whether any of the taxes were reduced to a reasonable level to enable those projects to proceed?

Senator Olson: I can answer that question specifically. I have the list and I will have it updated as a result of the intense interest shown by honourable senators opposite.

I should advise Senator Phillips, in case he has forgotten, that a mega-project has been described by the committee comprised of representatives from business, labour and other areas as a project involving $100 million or more. That is how they have described a mega-project.

• (1440)

You can also have super-mega projects and mini-mega projects. If it is a $100 million-or-more project, I call it a mega project. They can be many multiples of $100 million. Most of those I described this afternoon are in that category. Some are twice as much, three times as much, and even more.

I do not have an old list with me because I do keep my book current. However, I will undertake to provide that to Senator Phillips.

Senator Phillips: Did you cancel the old lists with the projects?

Senator Olson: No, I did not. I tried to explain to the honourable senator that most of these projects are going ahead on a scaled-down, bought and phased-in process that will, over a reasonable time frame, perhaps lead to super-mega projects of the type we talked about some time ago.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is nostalgic to hear the "Minister of Mega-Projects," as he was a couple of years ago, conduct us through this exercise of down-sizing in which he is now obviously engaged. I have much sympathy for him.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Small is beautiful.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is very small and he is very beautiful.

We have to be grateful that the oil industry is beginning to recover from the wounds inflicted upon it by this administration, which, when combined with the declining economy, were, indeed, catastrophic. However, I do not want to get into that with my friend.

My question has to do with Cold Lake. It is true that it was a multi-billion-dollar project, and it is true that this phase is worth $300 million—still a lot of money, but nothing like the original estimate—but what bothers me is that we are going to proceed with Cold Lake to produce heavy oil and what are we going to do with it? We are going to ship it to the United States.

It seems to me important to know what plans are in place to put in an upgrader to make this heavy oil suitable for use in Canada. I am rather surprised that that is not part of the present project because I did not know it was any part of the policy of the government to provide subsidies or taxation considerations in order to export oil to the United States or anywhere else.

I thought our aim was to zero in on self-sufficiency. We cannot be self-sufficient by using heavy oil unless we have an upgrader to convert it for use in this country.

I have explained my concern and would ask my honourable friend to tell us what he can about the addition of an upgrading facility to convert not only Cold Lake heavy oil but heavy oil from other projects in the same state.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall be glad to answer that question or, at least, partly answer it, and, I hope, to the complete satisfaction of Senator Roblin.

However, with his indulgence, I would answer a part of Senator Phillips' question having to do with tax concessions respecting these projects. Yes, there have been tax concessions. In the April 22 budget the Minister of Finance announced that there would be a relief from the PGRT until the approved capital costs had been amortized from these projects. Of course, that, I think, has been involved in all of those projects that have been announced.

As far as Senator Roblin's question is concerned, I do understand the point of it and I, too, am concerned. However, I would remind him that very recently there has been a significant change in the demand for the product of asphaltic crude which is heavy oil and, in some cases, medium oil, and certainly the bitumen that comes from tar sands products. This has happened for a number of reasons. More particularly, there has been a very significant increase in demand for asphalt in the United States because of a highway improvement program resulting from the special financial arrangements made a few months ago in that country for that purpose.

One of the consequences which stems from that is that there has been a significant narrowing in the price or value of heavy oil or asphaltic crude vis-à-vis light, sweet oil. This changes the economics with respect to whether or not all of it should be diverted through an upgrader for the purpose of upgrading the oil to a synthetic crude quality.

Of course, the commercial companies involved, whether they be Petro-Canada, Esso Resources or any other company, have taken that into consideration. It was announced by Esso Resources that they are now moving on the enhanced recovery at Cold Lake because it is now economically feasible, in their view, to do at least the second phase and perhaps further phases even without an upgrader to bring the oil up to a quality that could be put into the gathering and transportation system to the refineries all across Canada. That is very important, and I think we should take advantage of that enhanced value of the asphalt produced from that oil.

Certainly, we can make exchanges by exporting heavy oil—and we do. We have done that for a long time in connection with our export to the northern tier refineries in the United States and, particularly, into the Minneapolis area. Indeed, we have imported oil into some areas where the transportation cost factors were such that it was an advantage to do so.

There will, no doubt, come a day when larger volumes of heavy oil are brought on by the enhanced recovery projects where it would be highly desirable to have an upgrader at not only Regina, but at Cold Lake and Lloydminster. There are one or two other massive deposits of heavy oil in Canada, other than the three I have mentioned, where it would be desirable to have upgraders.

We know from past experience that, when considering upgrading, it is prudent for not only commercial companies involved but for the government to look at these things in terms of economic viability which depends on the value of the various grades of oil. However, if we are going to take the production from those enhanced heavy oil tar sand recovery projects and put it into the regular refining system in all of Canada, several more upgraders will be required in the west.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend raises a number of interesting points which give rise to further questions on my part. I would like him to find out whether there is, in fact, an exchange trade-off with respect to this heavy oil which is being shipped to the United States; whether we are, in fact, being compensated by the importation of American sweet crude so that there is the balancing factor of which he spoke. I know that this has taken place in the past, but I would ask whether that is actually the case in this particular instance.

The other question I would ask him to look into is that of price because, while there can be local, commercial reasons for the movement of heavy oil to the United States—in fact, in a former activity I took some part in those sales, so that I understand something about them— if we do not upgrade this oil in Canada for use in our own refineries, then we have to import foreign oil at whatever the world price happens to be.

One of the prized policies of my friends opposite is the so-called Canadian price for oil which we know is pretty well an exploded myth at the present time. However, I would be interested to know the trade-offs with respect to buying foreign oil which we will now need because we are not upgrading that crude. I am not convinced that the government has no responsibility to balance out the pluses and minuses.

If my honourable friend has a good case to present on that and can give me the particulars and figures, I would be delighted to hear them.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have those figures with me to make the case. I am certain that Senator Roblin does not expect them either. My reply a few minutes ago was in general terms because it is only very recently that the value of heavy oil or the refining to the stage where the asphalt for highway construction can be produced has gone up rather significantly in terms of market demand, volume and price.

As to the other part of the question dealing with whether or not there have been recent formal agreements entered into with respect to an exchange, I am not entirely sure that that is the case. I shall make some inquiries. Senator Roblin will know that included in the announcement by the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources on July 7 was the subject of certain classes of oil falling within a certain time factor being upgraded to what we call the NORP. Certainly all the oil coming out of the projects I mentioned will earn the new oil reference price which is higher than that of some other classifications. I shall take the rest of the honourable senator's question as notice and obtain a more detailed answer for him.

What I have been attempting to do is outline in a very general way the fact that the Cold Lake project and other investments for enhanced recovery projects are now viable without an upgrader. That was not the case very long ago.

Senator Roblin: I am sure that my friend knows that the new oil reference price is the world price. That makes a devil of a difference.

I have to tell my honourable friend — and I shall conclude on this note — that, although he was undoubtedly trying to explain the situation to me, he has confused me. If he would give me a written statement exemplifying the facts, I would be pleased to have it.

Senator Olson: I am sorry if I have confused the honourable senator. It is clear to me that the situation is better than it was, and I wanted to give my honourable friends and Senator Phillips the reasons why it is better.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Some reason to celebrate.

Senator Olson: Yes.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON, NOVA SCOTIA -COAL DONKIN MINE AND PRINCE MINE

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I would like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would like to ask: As a minister of the Crown, does his interest lie in only one region of this country or is he interested in other parts of the country? Frankly, I was overwhelmed by his wealth of information on the subject on which he was just speaking—or verbage or whatever it is—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Oppostion): A little of both.

Senator Muir: —and his poverty of knowledge or information regarding the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which is a very important corporation that is trying to do a good job.

[Senator Olson.]

The minister does not seem to know a great deal about the corporation. He has been at cabinet committee meetings and he should have heard something about it. While he is obtaining some information for me on my previous question, will he find out—perhaps, he can tell me now— what progress is being made on the opening of the Donkin Mine which has been announced and re-announced on a number of occasions?

Would the minister also obtain any information he can on the future of the Prince Mine, which many of us, including Senator Graham, have been very concerned about, regarding safety and the possibilities of expansion? Is the development work underground improving; are the deeps coming along okay; and are they still bothered with bad roofs? Is the pavement soft; are the machines working well; and has anything developed to cause any real alarm for the future of the Prince Mine, particularly with regard to safety?

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think Senator Muir was a little unfair at the beginning of his question in accusing me of knowing certain things about some parts of the country and not other parts of the country, and asserting that it was because of a lack of interest. I can tell him that that is not the case. Senator Muir then proceeded to ask detailed technical questions which, perhaps, even the minister would not know about.

Senator Muir: You did extremely well on the previous subject and answered in detail.

Senator Olson: I did not give that kind of detail in the previous question. I am keenly interested in the economic well-being and development of other parts of the country. When I was the chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development, I spent more hours than I do now looking at economic proposals because it was my responsibility to at least appear as though I knew what I was talking about when I went to the meetings. Whether or not I did know what I was talking about is another issue, but at least I had to try, and that required many hours of background studying.

Senator Roblin: You did all right.

Senator Olson: I am not spending that kind of time now in dealing with specific subject matter, and I think that Senator Muir will understand that to answer such technical questions I have to make a reference to obtain the correct information. He would not want me to answer his questions inadequately or inappropriately. Even if that type of question were asked with regard to my home province, Alberta, I would have to make a reference to get up-to-date information.

Senator Muir: You will get the details.

AIR CANADA

FREDERICTON-OTTAWA FLIGHT—COMPLAINT

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Riley on June 20 with respect to the Fredericton-Ottawa flight. Two parliamentarians travelling on the same flight were the Honourable Robert Howie and Senator Riley. The agent confused the request for space by the former with the confirmed reservation of the latter. Senator Riley, who had boarded, was advised of the confusion and was requested by the agent to return with his companion to the desk to confirm his reservation. With the aid of the record locater number, the senator's reservation was found. The agent apologized and asked him to reboard the flight.

Air Canada reiterates the apology for any personal inconvenience, and hastens to add that no slight or disrespect was intended.

NEWFOUNDLAND—UNITED KINGDOM—FARE STRUCTURE

Hon H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question put by Senator Marshall on June 22 respecting the fare structure between Newfoundland and the United Kingdom. It is a fairly long answer and I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. The Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Air Canada's original fares to London from Gander and Halifax reflected the difference in mileage and produced a reasonable return on investment. A foreign tour operator, British Air Tours (BAT), offered the following return fares to London from Halifax only, due to the market potential it saw in that area:

Before July 1	$599
July 2	$659
July 30	$699
August 6	$719
August 27	$699
September 2	$599

This placed Air Canada in the position of either matching the fare and accepting an unsatisfactory return on investment or abandoning the market to a seasonal carrier. Air Canada chose to match the fare and maintain the service. Subsequently, BAT withdrew from the market and left Air Canada to carry abandoned passengers as well as those who had purchased Air Canada tickets at the low fare. Air fares from Gander remain at the original level of $698 before June 24, $798 from June 25, and $698 as of August 8.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE ENTITLED "THEY SERVED—WE CARE"—ADVISABILITY OF IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATION NO. 7—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the motion moved in the other place on 27th April, 1983, requesting the government to consider the advisability of implementing Recommendation Number 7 of the Standing Senate Committee on Health Welfare and Science's Report entitled: "They Served—We Care", and to certain observations regarding the proceedings of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Veterans Affairs as they pertain to the aforementioned report. — (Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deptuy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I recall I stood this matter with the view to giving other honourable senators an opportunity to speak on the report. Without wishing to be hidebound about it, I suggest that if no one else wants to speak on it by next week we consider it debated.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Oppostion): We will take a look at it over the weekend.

THE BUDGET SPEECH, 1983

PROPOSALS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Olson, P. C., calling the attention of the Senate to the proposals contained in the Budget Speech made by the Minister of Finance in the other place on 19th April, 1983—(Honourable Senator Murray).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at our last sitting Senator Murray pointed out that he had adjourned this debate for the sake of giving an opportunity to other senators to speak on the proposals in the budget that was presented last spring.

We had thought, honourable senators, that we might consider this inquiry debated. There would certainly be no problem in reintroducing the subject if someone wants to speak on the budget, but rather than have this order stand, may the inquiry be considered debated?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered debated.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-155

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), Pursuant to notice of Tuesday, September 20, 1983, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the subject matter of the Bill C-155, intituled: "An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, the information I have as of 30 minutes ago is that it is hoped that this bill will be reported to the house tomorrow, Friday, September 23, 1983. I know that the intention was to have an all-night, clause-by-clause session last night to finish the debate, and I understand that was concluded at 10.30. The other place expects that bill to be reported tomorrow and returned to the house for report stage on Tuesday.

We in the Senate had discussed the possibility of a pre-study of this bill, which is the famous Crow bill, but the feeling among the leadership here in the chamber, as I remember it, was that it would not be a good idea for us to study this bill while the other committee was studying it, particularly in view of the fact that they were travelling and hearing witnesses.

In view of the fact that debate on this bill has been concluded and the bill is now ready for the report stage, we are asking honourable senators to authorize the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, headed by Senator Langlois, to engage in a pre-study which, depending on the length of debate in the other place, may be mostly preparatory, but it will enable them at least to have an organizational meeting and to discuss how it should be handled. I know that Senator Roblin has some definite views as to some aspects of this committee's activity. I have so advised Senator Langlois, and he will be getting in touch with Senator Roblin to discuss that issue. Of course, other senators will also be in a position to attend at the meeting of the committee and give their views as to how it should proceed. This motion merely allows the committee to organize themselves for a pre-study of the bill.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if my friend could supply some further information about the progress of the bill in the other place. I gather from him that it will be in the committee stage early next week. Was Tuesday the day he stated?

Senator Frith: The bill will be in the report stage on Tuesday.

Senator Roblin: Yes, the report stage. There is a possibility of amending the bill at the report stage and there is a possibility, although not a probability, of amending it on third reading. Has my honourable friend any information as to what amendments the government is likely to introduce or to accept at the report stage?

This bill has been amended approximately 80 times so far; the amendments are many, important and involved, and it would be expedient for us to know whether we can expect any further amendments before we proceed with our pre-study on the bill.

There is another point that I would like some information on— and this is, perhaps, hard to answer. How much time will the Senate have to consider this piece of legislation? From the time we receive it from the House of Commons, how far are we then from the prorogation of the session and the start of a new session? Do we have a week, or ten days? What is the program of other business in the other place, because it is important for me, at any rate, to have some idea of how long this committee will have to look at this bill?

Senator Frith: As my honourable friend has pointed out, there have already been a number of amendments made to the bill. We can see some useful work being done for a pre-study in simply catching up with those amendments, and that is one of the reasons for this motion at this time.

I will pass the second part of my friend's question, regarding the attitude of the government respecting further amendments, over to Senator Olson.

With reference to the amount of time, I can only say that the government house leader in the other place has stated that this bill and the government organizational bill are the two major bills that the government would like to have passed before prorogation. Therefore, there is a direct relationship between prorogation and passage of this bill. The government organizational bill, I believe, is still in committee, and I do not know how soon it might be reported.

That is all the information I have at present. As the Leader of the Government in the Senate said on Tuesday, there are other bills that the government would like to have passed but, subject to his correction, those are the two which the government very much wants passed before prorogation.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): To answer the part of Senator Roblin's question which was referred to me by the house leader, I am not sure of the exact number of amendments that were accepted by the Transport Committee of the other place up to the end of their hearings, which I understand lasted until late last evening. The government will have to look at those amendments because any amendments that have a significant financial consequence obviously have to be approved and moved by a minister. I think it is fair to prognosticate that the Minister of Transport will probably give an indication of the amendments, and particularly those with significant financial implications, that will be accepted when the house begins its consideration of the bill next Tuesday. I am not absolutely certain about that, but I think that is probably when the Minister of Transport will give an indication of those amendments that the government, for financial reasons, can accept.

Senator Roblin: In that case, I will just have to wait and hear on that subject. My concern, however, arises from the fact that, if this house has any pretensions to represent regional opinion, this is the bill on which regional opinions are important and I would very much regret it if we were forced to curtail our discussions in committee because of the need to meet the government's timetable in the House of Commons. That is the reason I am raising the point now.

In order to illustrate the nature of the matters with which I would propose the committee concern itself, I will mention three matters. I do not propose that we should go travelling. There have been enough people who have testified recently. However, there are three outstanding issues which have not been well resolved in the House of Commons so far. One has to do with the Crow benefit; how much is it? I have had conflicting technical evidence about it from two people whom I know personally and whose opinions I respect, but they are 25 per cent apart, and when you are considering the impact of the Crow and all of its ramifications, it would be interesting to have an idea in your head of what the figure is. I am interested in what the real size of the Crow benefit is.

The second thing that I think our committee ought to discuss is what we mean by a contribution to constant costs. That is a concept which does not readily explain itself. It is a very significant aspect of the whole Crow arithmetic. If I am allowed to, I propose to ask for expert testimony on that point.

The final point that I think the Senate could well take an interest in has to do with who gets the Crow benefit. As we know, that is one of the main points of contention. I am of the view that the proposal made by the Manitoba Farm Bureau was the most sensible compromise that has been heard in connection with this problem. I would like the Senate to form an opinion as to the validity of that proposal.

Those are the three points I would like our committee to look at, and I hope that we would have time to enter into those discussions appropriately. I am giving notice now because if it is necessary for the committee to meet next week to line up some of these people in advance. I should like to let the chairman know that I hope he will consider favourably an examination along these lines.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think what Senator Roblin has asked is reasonable. I am sure that there are going to be several days, at least, during which the Senate committee will be able to hold hearings.

Senator Roblin wants a definitive reply in which he can have confidence as to the interpretation of what is a contribution to variable costs or constant costs. Sometimes it may be described as a contribution to capital costs. Then, of course, the next question is whether it is a contribution to profit and that sort of thing. I cannot give him any assurance that he will be any more satisfied after he has heard from the expert and competent witnesses that have been called.

We have both been involved in these hearings—at times involved directly and at other times only on the fringe—but there has always been a great debate when we get into railway cost accounting, or are providing for variable costs, and then arbitrary decisions have to be made. I have to say to Senator Roblin that he will have to rely on his own judgment in the past because the experts often do not agree. There was some evidence taken before the Commons committee in which some of the most highly recognized experts in railway cost accounting disagreed. I cannot give him any comfort that that is going to happen. I hope he is not asking for another complete in-depth, or whatever you want to call it, study of railway cost accounting for the purpose of establishing the variable costs and the contributions to capital in railway accounting. I think we will have to rely on the studies that have been done in the past.

I am glad that he gave notice now as to what his interrogation will involve. I am sure that the chairman of the committee will take that into consideration.

Senator Roblin: Without wishing to be rude to my honourable friend, I really did not expect him to satisfy me with respect to contributions to costs or capital costs.

Senator Olson: You did ask me the question.

Senator Roblin: I did not ask him the question. I simply said I hoped the committee would have a chance to look into these matters and they can make the best of it they can. He is quite right that I cut my teeth on the Crow as a member of an executive government many years ago, and I wish I could say I am that much wiser now than I was then. I really think it is up to the Senate to ensure that the important salient issues still in the realm of debate are examined with all convenient speed and not under undue pressure.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, respecting this discussion of the Crow and what is to come before the Senate, it is fairly clear that a fair amount of committee time is going to be involved in the next short while to deal with these important matters such as Bill C-154 and the constitutional amendment.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government why we are sitting at 2 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon. The indication is that we shall be sitting at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoons for the rest of the year.

I preface my remarks by saying it does not make any difference to me personally because the direct flight from Winnipeg arrives in Ottawa at 11 o'clock in the morning. I am in my office by 12.30 and certainly would be present for a sitting at 2 o'clock. That period on Tuesday afternoon has been very useful to the National Finance Committee and many other committees. If we are sitting in the chamber, we cannot use Tuesday afternoon as a time for our committees to meet unless we get permission to meet while the Senate is sitting, which I know the opposition does not like to agree to because they are short of numbers. It has not been the practice for committees to meet in the evenings, although there is nothing to prevent them from doing so, but it is often difficult to schedule witnesses for evening meetings.

I noted the deputy leader's reason for sitting on Tuesday afternoon rather than Tuesday evening, and I should like to read it to you. He said:

> —I have a request to make of honourable senators. At least until the end of this year, there are no evening sittings in the other place. There are often activities which parliamentarians—members of both the House of Commons and the Senate—must do together, either by means of joint committees or parliamentary association work. Therefore, I would ask honourable senators to arrange to be present on Tuesday at 2 p.m. for the rest of this year so that evening sittings will be exceptions.

I accept the fact that there are many activities in which members of both houses have to engage. Surely, what is more important in the context of what we face now is that the committees of the Senate meet. It is far more efficient for the committees of the Senate to meet on Tuesday afternoons and for the Senate to sit on Tuesday evenings. I am wondering whether you really have considered this fact, because if the idea is to get more legislation through, and the committees are the instruments by which we move forward, it would seem to me to make more sense to sit at 8 o'clock in the evening and have the committees meet in the afternoon.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I respect Senator Everett's opinion and the difference that he has expressed relevant to the convenience of afternoon sittings versus evening sittings. I have to say that I do not share that opinion. I think it is possible for the committees to meet in the evening as well as in the afternoon.

However, there are a couple of other factors involved in addition to what the deputy leader stated, and what Senator Everett quoted, because that is valid. There are also some cost factors in having staff and other arrangements in a standby position with respect to evening sittings that were partly in place to deal with both houses sitting in the evening. The House of Commons does not sit on Tuesday evenings; I am not saying that it is the major and only factor, but it is an important one. I believe that we should at least try to continue what is an experiment in the other place, and here as well, and that is to have Senate committee meetings held on Tuesday mornings, to sit for what is usually something less than two hours on Tuesday afternoons, and go from there to Senate committee meetings for the balance of the afternoons and, indeed, into the evenings, if the workload is such that that is the appropriate procedure to follow. In a few moments of explanation here, I do not suppose that I can convince Senator Everett that it does work better that way.

We are now trying to sit Tuesday afternoon, instead of the traditional Tuesday evening sitting. I am sure that Senator Everett would agree with me that more honourable senators are present because of the 2 o'clock requirement than used to be the case with the 8 o'clock requirement, although I make no complaint about that.

After the Tuesday afternoon sitting, we can adjourn until Thursday afternoon, as we have done this week. In that way, all of Wednesday afternoon and, if necessary, Wednesday evening, can be exclusively devoted to Senate committee meetings.

Those are some of the reasons for this proposal. As I have said, I do not expect Senator Everett to accept all of them. We have, however, examined some of these aspects of the matter. I am of the opinion that the arrangements we are now following are the least costly, and, for a large number of senators, the most convenient.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I can only refer to my own experience as a chairman. The National Finance Committee had no trouble getting a good turnout on Tuesday afternoons, but I do not know how good the turnout would have been on Tuesday evenings. Quite frankly, we never tried to sit in the evenings. I have gone on record as being in favour of the committees sitting on Wednesday evenings, but I have not been able to get that idea across. It makes me wonder, therefore—even acknowledging that the Leader of the Government has more power than I have—whether one could get that idea across with respect to Tuesday evenings. The argument against sitting on Wednesday evenings is based on our having things to do—making merry— with the House of Commons, so the same argument could be used in this case.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Did you say "make merry" with the Commons?

Senator Roblin: That is a good expression.

Senator Frith: I want to make it clear that it is your expression, not mine.

Senator Everett: It is a rough parody of what was said. Perhaps I should quote from what was said last Tuesday:

> There are often activities which parliamentarians—members of both the House of Commons and the Senate—must do together—

I suppose they could do it "happily" as opposed to "making merry."

In any event, we have never been able to get across the idea of committees sitting on Wednesday evening. That has always been turned down. Therefore, I cannot be very sanguine about the idea that committees will sit on Tuesday evenings. I think that, should we agree with this proposal, we will be losing an invaluable afternoon. Tuesday afternoon has been used successfully by many committees over the years. Furthermore, I do not think that our sitting on Tuesday evening or on Tuesday afternoon precludes any committee from sitting on Tuesday mornings. Indeed, that has been done by many committees.

I am not optimistic about changing the mind of the Leader of the Government, but I do want to go on record as saying that I think his experiment is going to fail.

Senator Roblin: Before my honourable friend replies, might I just say that I think Senator Everett is right. I think that committees can conveniently meet on Tuesday afternoons—can, do and should—and that the Senate's formal sitting, which, in many cases, will probably not be very pressing, should be conducted on Tuesday evenings. I am on his side of this argument.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I merely want to say that I and a number of other senators have looked at this situation. We propose an experiment, in terms of our schedule, to be followed until the end of this year, because that is when the experiment in the other place will also end, unless it is decided that it be extended in some modified form.

I am grateful, however, for the comments of both Senator Everett and Senator Roblin with respect to this matter. They add to the body of knowledge regarding opinions as to which is the most appropriate time.

Senator Roblin: Nicely done.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Honourable Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Before moving the adjournment, I remind honourable senators that there is a joint sitting of the Senate and the House of Commons, to be held in the Commons chamber, on Monday at 4 o'clock to hear an address by Prime Minister Thatcher. Senator Petten, the government whip, in consultation with Senator Macdonald, has received information as to who intends to attend that sitting. Seats will be available for honourable senators on the floor of the chamber of the House of Commons. Details as to attendance, including attendance of guests, can be obtained through Senator Petten's office.

Honourable Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Before my honourable friend moves the adjournment, might I ask a question? Now that the Transport and Communications Committee is authorized to study the Crow, has my honourable friend any word as to when that first committee meeting will be called?

Senator Frith: I thank Senator Roblin for his reminder. My advice is that there will be a meeting next Wednesday afternoon. I will see that that information is confirmed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 27, 1983, at 2 p.m.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, presented the following report:

Tuesday, September 27, 1983.

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its Fourth Report as follows:

Your Committee, pursuant to Rule 67(1)(e), having examined the Rules of the Senate, recommends as follows:

1. That Rule 67(1) be amended

(a) by deleting, in paragraphs (e) to (l), the words "twenty" and "five", respectively, and substituting therefor the words "twelve" and "four";

(b) by deleting subparagraph (g) (v) and renumbering the remaining subparagraph accordingly;

(c) by deleting subparagraph (i) (iv) and renumbering the remaining subparagraph accordingly;

(d) by deleting, in subparagraph (k) (v), the words "and consumer";

(e) by deleting subparagraph (k) (vii); and

(f) by deleting paragraph (m) and substituting therefor the following:

"(m) The Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to agriculture, fisheries and forestry generally, and the Canadian Wheat Board."

2. That Rule 68 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"68. The Leader of the Government in the Senate, or, in his absence, the Deputy Leader of the Government, and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or, in his absence, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, are members, ex officio, in addition to the number of appointed senators, of all select committees of the Senate and of the Committee of Selection."

3. That Rule 5 be amended

(a) by adding thereto, immediately after paragraph (c), the following new paragraph:

"(d) "Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate" and "Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate" mean the senators occupying, respectively, the recognized positions of Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate and Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate;" and

(b) by re-lettering the remaining paragraphs accordingly.

4. That Rule 70 be deleted and Rule 70A be renumbered accordingly.

5. That Rule 77 be amended

(a) by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (4), the following new subsection:

"(5) Subcommittees shall be composed of not more than half the number of members of a Select Committee, three of whom shall constitute a quorum."; and

(b) by renumbering the remaining subsections accordingly.

6. That Rule 67(1), as amended pursuant to the report of your Committee, dated December 8, 1982, and adopted by the Senate on December 9, 1982, be further amended

(a) by adding to paragraph (l), the following new subparagraphs:

"(viii) fitness and amateur sports;

(ix) employment and immigration;

(x) consumer affairs;

(xi) youth affairs."; and

(b) by deleting paragraph (n) and substituting therefor the following:

"(n) The Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to energy and natural resources generally, including:

(i) natural resources, other than fisheries and forestry, and mines;

(ii) pipelines, transmission lines and energy transportation;

(iii) environmental affairs;

(iv) other energy-related matters."

Your Committee further recommends that the amendments proposed herein come into force at the commencement of the next session of Parliament.

Respectfully submitted,

H. DE M. MOLSON,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF BOTH HOUSES

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that the address of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Honourable Margaret Thatcher, to members of both Houses of Parliament, delivered on September 26, 1983, together with the introductory speech by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada and the speeches delivered by the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of address and introductory speeches see appendix, p. 5984)

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, September 29, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Senator Frith: That is, according to our recent practice, the Senate will adjourn until Thursday at 2 o'clock.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Based on the fact that the Senate has nothing before it.

Senator Frith: Based on the fact that we have no legislation to consider, and, therefore, our activities in the chamber are few, but the committees are very busy and this motion enables them to hold meetings on Wednesday.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John M. Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Bielish be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Phillips on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT—INVOLVEMENT OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Austin in his capacity—

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: He is the only minister here.

Senator Doody: Then I have a question for all the cabinet ministers present in the chamber. I am interested in the new fisheries deal and the amalgam that has been put together to try to rescue the industry in Newfoundland. I wonder if the minister can tell me whether CDIC is going to hold the federal shares in the company that is to be created.

• (1410)

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Senator Doody, there is no decision of that kind by the government.

Senator Doody: Fishery Products Limited is one of the three local companies from the private sector which are being amalgamated. CDC owns 49 per cent of Fishery Products. What I am asking is how the CDC involvement in Fishery Products will affect the CDIC or Canadian government involvement in the new company which will be formed? Will the directors be changed or will the shares be exchanged or sold? It looks like a very interesting crossword puzzle.

Senator Austin: Senator Doody, the question is hypothetical in that the government has taken no decision with respect to the holding of shares in the new fishing company which may be established. Therefore, I cannot speculate at the moment as to what the characteristics of that future might be.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Doesn't the agreement say anything about that?

Senator Doody: Surely the government must have had some idea of what it was doing before it amalgamated these three companies and meted out the proportionate shares to the federal government, the provincial government, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the private sector and whomever. Someone must know who is going to control what and who is going to direct which.

Hon D. G. Steuart: Why?

Senator Austin: Senator Doody, clearly an entity of the Government of Canada will be the holder of shares on behalf of the Government of Canada, but the decision as to which entity has not yet been taken.

Senator Doody: Can the minister tell me what the disposition of the CDC's interest in Fishery Products will be? Fishery Products were looking for further financing through CDC, or through other possible means. Will these shares be transferred to CDIC, or will CDC continue to hold shares in the company once again under the corporate shell of the new company? As the minister responsible for these government agencies I am sure the minister has some idea how these government holdings will be protected.

Senator Austin: Inasmuch as I have often said in this house that the holding by the Government of Canada of Canada Development Corporation shares is essentially of a portfolio character, and that that company is a private company, much as Canadian Pacific or Noranda are private companies, I cannot report for it and its decisions in this house. It is not a company which is an agent of Her Majesty.

Senator Doody: Can the minister follow on his line of reasoning? If Her Majesty is the principal shareholder in that corporation and the minister represents Her Majesty's interests on the corporate board, surely he must have some interest or some say in the decisions that the board takes.

Senator Austin: It has been the policy of the government, which I have previously announced in this house, that we do not interfere in the business decisions of Canada Development Corporation. Its business is decided by its board of directors whose responsibility is to its shareholders as a whole. I have also said that the Government of Canada is seeking to divest itself of its investment in Canada Development Corporation in accordance with the agreement I announced on May 27, 1982.

Senator Doody: I know I am straying from my original interest with respect to the restructured fishing industry in Newfoundland, but on that point is there not some conflict between the minister's responsibilities to the people of Canada as a minister of the crown responsible for this agency vis-à-vis the 49 per cent, or whatever the total is, of the shares in that company? Is that company allowed to operate entirely on its own without any government supervision or direction? Does the government just supply taxpayers' money and the corporate entity goes on its own merry way? Is that what the minister is telling us?

Senator Austin: It has been, and is, the policy of the government to ensure that the investment in Canada Development Corporation is a safe and secure one. In other words, through officials and advisers I make myself aware of the nature of the business of Canada Development Corporation. However, I do not make representations to that company in a way that would be different from any representations I might make to any company in the private sector. In other words, I do not seek to interfere in its business decisions.

Fishery Products Limited, representing some tens of millions of assets of Canada Development Corporation in a portfolio of more than $7 billion of assets, is a matter that is entirely the business of the directors of CDC, and is not the subject, in my view, of an appropriate representation on behalf of the Government of Canada, qua shareholder. So far as I am concerned, it is fully appropriate for the Government of Canada to deal with any business corporation in terms of the policy of the Government of Canada but again—and I wish to repeat this—in my view, it is not appropriate for the government, qua shareholder, to seek to influence CDC's business judgments.

Senator Doody: Can the minister answer this question: As a 49 per cent shareholder in Fishery Products Limited, did CDC involve itself in the decision-making process of that company and, if so, did it do so in isolation from the other government agencies that would be involved? For instance, at one time the federal shares in that company were held by the Canadian Development Investment Corporation. On the other hand, in view of the proliferation of crown corporations and public companies, perhaps the government is planning to set up another corporation in competition with CDIC. Whether the government does or does not do so, would that entity be operating in isolation from the 49 per cent shareholding in CDC?

The minister tells us that he is kept informed of the operations of CDC through officials and others but that he does not in any way influence their decisions, despite the fact that the people of Canada are the major shareholder. Is there not some conflict there?

Senator Austin: Senator Doody, answering your question would compel me, in part, to discuss in this chamber the internal business of the Canada Development Corporation, which I am not prepared to do.

First, I have no direct knowledge of what goes on in that corporation's boardroom or in its management committees. Secondly, as Senator Roblin has so aptly reminded me during earlier discussions on Canada Development Corporation, my right is that of a shareholder, and, while entitled to information as a shareholder, the government is not entitled to the kind of information which would normally be unavailable to shareholders as a class.

With respect to the second part of your question, I can only repeat that the Government of Canada has not taken a decision as to which entity will hold any investment which may come to it as a result of the re-organization of the Newfoundland fishing industry. When such a decision is made I will be pleased to respond to your questions on the why's and wherefore's of the situation.

Senator Doody: I have one further supplementary question to ask the minister. I do not want to monopolize Question Period. I thank the minister for offering to provide us with a picture of the new structure of the industry. However, I am surprised that that is not already in place. It escapes me completely how a decision of that magnitude and importance to a part of Canada can be made without knowing what the corporate structure and control is going to be. But then, many of the policies and programs of the honourable minister's government have escaped me from time to time.

In answering the latter part of my question, the honourable minister put forward to me the shareholder information thesis; that the minister is not privileged to allow that information to be set out before the people of Canada, whose money it is that he is using. I would certainly go along with his theory if, as a shareholder, he was using his own personal funds to invest in CDC. Certainly, in that instance, that information would be his and his alone. However, it is not his money; it is money of the people of Canada that is invested in CDC and I submit that they do, indeed, have reason to ask for an accounting and should, indeed, be informed of the disposition of that money and the decisions that are made to spend it, lose it or whatever.

Senator Austin: Senator Doody, I shall certainly take your comments as a representation for a larger role on the part of the Government of Canada in terms of its portfolio of investments in the private sector.

I doubt very much whether the kind of power that the government could bring to bear, should it so act, would be desirable in terms of the development of the private sector. The government has a large financial capacity and could take an interest in a number of companies. It could act, for example, through the CN pension fund if it wished to have legislation and if that were approved by Parliament to direct the policies of any number of companies in the private sector.

However, let me say that I would oppose the government using its roll as a shareholder in non-crown corporations as a way of directing the activities of the business community.

If you are arguing to the contrary, I shall certainly take your remarks as being representations and will look at your comments carefully.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I did not understand that. Does the agreement between the federal government and the Province of Newfoundland create a new corporate entity to operate this, and if so, will this new corporate entity be established by legislation or simply by obtaining letters patent under the companies law?

Senator Austin: My understanding—and it is not a perfect one because the matter of Atlantic fisheries is not within my ministry—is that this will involve a business corporation.

Senator Flynn: It will involve one, but it has not.

Senator Austin: It will probably be incorporated under the laws of Newfoundland. The federal government may become a shareholder in that corporation and may hold a majority of the shares, but until I have seen the details of the arrangement, I cannot give you any further information. I have only seen the same reports as Senator Doody has seen, I presume.

Senator Doody: That's a great way for cabinet to make its decisions.

Senator Flynn: It was reported on television that the federal government will be represented on the board of directors by five directors, Newfoundland by three directors, the fisheries companies by one director and the Bank of Nova Scotia by one director. So, I suppose there has already been a corporate entity created, since this was made known.

Senator Austin: Apparently, there is agreement to create a corporate entity, but I am not aware that a corporate entity has been struck yet.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if the minister could elucidate on some of the connections between these various companies. Although he made a kind reference to me a minute or so ago, he has now confused me.

As I understand it, CDC is an important shareholder in one of the three fishery companies that will comprise this new consortium. That brings up the question in my mind as to the relations between the CDC and the government, as Senator Doody has referred to it, because while I admit the minister's reference with respect to shareholders, I do not admit the reference with respect to directors.

Is it not a fact that the government is represented on the board of directors of the CDC by its nominees? Are not Mr. Maurice Strong and Mr. Joel Bell directors of the CDC?

Perhaps the minister could let me know whether I am correct on that point, and then he can tell us the relationship between the government and its appointed directors.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, the government, under the Canada Development Corporation Act, is represented by two ex officio, directors, and they are the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The remaining directors are proposed by the management of the Canada Development Corporation.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Smile!

Senator Austin: It is true that from time to time the government has been consulted informally about directors, but as Senator Roblin and others are aware, every director of the Canada Development Corporation is responsible to the shareholders. The government does not have directors who are responsible only to the government.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend is gifted with a delightful sense of humour because of the way he refers to the appointments of Mr. Maurice Strong and Mr. Joel Bell as being made at the spontaneous desire, I gather, of the shareholders of the company. That will come as news to many people, because I have to take it for granted that the minister is telling us the relationship as he sees it, but, to my mind, he still leaves a nagging question. Here we have two deputy ministers on the board of this company, and here we have two other directors whose associations with the government are well known. We are unable to establish any link between those gentlemen and the government, which is a 49 per cent shareholder. We are unable to establish any responsibility link between the minister and what goes on there.

It reminds me very much of the situation in Canadair, because that situation was somewhat similar to the one we are discussing now. We had a so-called independent company, which was not a crown corporation in the usual sense, that benefited from the appearance at their directors' meeting of representatives of government and yet got into very bad trouble.

I wonder whether there should not be some thought given to this question of how the government is going to interrelate with these commercial corporations in which it is associated. I think that question has double importance because the minister is going to introduce in this chamber, one of these days, a bill covering the CDIC which will give the blessing of Parliament to this idea that the government should have a free hand, largely speaking, to go into areas where it thinks its influence would be useful in what are normally thought to be private sector operations.

Leaving aside that principle as to whether the government is doing the right thing in becoming involved—the exact expression that is popular today eludes me, but the minister will probably know what I am thinking about, the intrusive nature of the government's activities—the question is: How do we establish this link of responsibility between Parliament, which provides the money and which in some vague constitutional way is related to these people, and the ministers and the company? The way the minister tells the story now there is no link. I think that is a questionable situation. I want to ask him whether he has given any thought to this matter and how he intends to resolve what appears to be a serious gap in our system of responsibility to Parliament.

Senator Austin: I have given a good deal of thought, as I think Senator Roblin knows, to the question of crown corporations and the Crown as an investor in commercial activity. Let me sort out the two categories, because his question seems to indicate a commonality between the Canada Development Corporation and Canadair which does not exist.

Canada Development Corporation was created by Parliament and exists by virtue of an act of Parliament. Its statute declares that it shall be operated "in contemplation of profit." The intent of Parliament, under the Canada Development Corporation Act, was that it would act as a private sector corporation, although initially sponsored in its creation by Parliament, and provision was made for equity shares in Canada Development Corporation to be sold to the public, which, indeed, they have been. That company is clearly planted in the private sector, and I do not think that Senator Roblin would represent to me that the Government of Canada should treat it as if it were a crown corporation and in a way in which the Government of Canada would be, in the ordinary course, sitting in judgment on Canada Development Corporation's directors and management. That corporation has made decisions with respect to fisheries products, to go back to a question asked by Senator Doody. I have not been a party to those decisions as the shareholder in Canada Development Corporation nor do I believe I should have been a party to them. The responsibility is that of its board of directors and its management, and they will take that responsibility and be judged by the shareholders in accordance with their general management and the improvement of the affairs of Canada Development Corporation in the way that investors make judgments.

Canadair is wholly owned by the Government of Canada, and in that particular case there is none but the government to direct its affairs. As I have said in answer to previous questions by Senator Roblin, there was a time when the government took the position that it was a responsible but passive shareholder in interfering with the decisions of the directors and its management. As a result of losses occasioned by Canadair, the government has asserted itself as a controlling shareholder. In the case of Canadair, all of the directors are appointed by the Government of Canada as the single shareholder of Canadair.

In the case of Canada Development Corporation, its shareholders, as a group, vote for its directors. The Government of Canada is a 47 per cent voting shareholder and, at every annual meeting, the Government of Canada has cast its ballot for the management's proxy. I have not denied—and I said earlier—that the government has been informally consulted by management, by the board, and by an appropriate committee of the board of directors of CDC with respect to consideration of the election of new directors.

From time to time the board and management of Canada Development Corporation have included in their management circular some names which were suggested to them. Mr. Maurice Strong is vice-chairman of Canada Development Corporation and chairman of the board of Canada Development Investment Corporation. Mr. Joel Bell is a director of Canada Development Corporation and is, of course, president and chief executive officer of Canada Development Investment Corporation.

Senator Roblin: The minister has given us his version of the history surrounding these various organizations, and I will not argue with him on that subject. However, the mere recital of the connections that he has given us makes my point. Mr. Strong and Mr. Bell are officers of his own 100 per cent government owned company, CDIC, and to ask one to believe that there is no connection between all these different organizations is really asking a great deal.

There is one common thread that runs through these various organizations, and that is the investment of public funds. A lot of government money is involved; it may be 100 per cent in some instances or a substantial 47 per cent share originally in others. What machinery do you establish to secure the proper degree of public control when public funds are involved?

I suggest that the minister has not given us a satisfactory answer to the question. He will not even agree, unless he has changed his mind, that the Auditor General of Canada, who at least would have the opportunity of reporting his views to Parliament, should be involved. Maybe he and Jack Horner have got together on this point.

I am realistic enough to understand that the minister will not find it possible to give me an answer to this philosophical question I am posing. If he cannot do that now, I hope that he will think about how to solve the problem, because I want to tell him that, when his CDIC bill is being debated, I think that is one of the points on which he ought to satisfy the house.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I do not intend to extend the debate, but simply wish to say that Canada Development Investment Corporation is my thoughtful way of dealing with the question of the crown as a shareholder—either as a controlling shareholder or as a portfolio holder of certain investments. As Senator Roblin and other senators know, Bill C-158 is being debated in the other place, and I hope it will be brought forward soon. The questions Senator Roblin raises will be properly dealt with during the course of that debate.

Senator Roblin: At least dealt with.

Senator Austin: I hope that I can give to this house every ounce of my ability in terms of clarifying the CDIC. Simply put, its purpose is to manage these investments according to commercial standards and requirements. That is a novel idea within the management system of the Government of Canada, and it is one which the government has endorsed. Secondly, its purpose is to resell to the private sector holdings that are assigned by the government to the CDIC as quickly as reasonable market conditions will allow. Those are essential parts of the concept of the Canada Development Investment Corporation.

On the question of the Auditor General, I will demur from adding to the history of questions and answers between Senator Roblin and me, except to say that I am not an objector to the Auditor General's being the auditor of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. Through officials, discussions are being held—and, I hope, concluded shortly—that will lead to an arrangement between the Canada Development Investment Corporation and the Auditor General with respect to the audits of that corporation. As always, the concern is with issues relating to the comprehensive audit which the Auditor General is seeking to introduce in the Government of Canada for commercial activities and which has not been accepted by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Canada with respect to commercial activity outside the Government of Canada.

Finally, with respect to the Auditor General, the question that concerns me is the duality of his responsibilities to Parliament, on the one hand, and to the directors of a corporation, on the other. It is a point raised by Mr. Horner in an address made last week, and it is one that deserves to be considered in the conceptual way that Senator Roblin referred to in another context.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I was tempted, for a moment, to think that my honourable friend was actually going to weaken on this question of the Auditor General and consider it. I am not quite sure that he is.

He is going to have the CDIC looked at by the Auditor General, but when it comes to a comprehensive examination of these other corporations, for the erroneous reasons he has stated, I do not think he is going to take that step. I do not think the opinion of the Institute of Chartered Accountants matters in this case. It is not that I have no respect for that institute, because I do. However, in this instance, I think that what matters is the opinion of Parliament. After all, Parliament is the body which needs to be satisfied. That is the point I want my honourable friend to keep in his mind.

Senator Austin: I agree with Senator Roblin that Parliament is the body to be satisfied, but these are the issues in the parliamentary debate that will come before us.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MANITOBA—POSSIBLE JOINT RESOLUTION RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Deputy Leader of the Government.

It seems that despite the advice he received from the Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley, the Prime Minister may decide to table a resolution in the other place on the issue of bilingualism in Manitoba. Since the resolution will probably not be executory but merely a demonstration of moral support for the stand being taken by the Government of Manitoba on the bilingualism issue, will the Senate be asked to consider the same resolution?

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no information on the subject, but I think the question is very appropriate. I shall make inquiries to find out whether the Prime Minister primarily intends to have a declaration or a resolution adopted by Parliament, not just by the House of Commons. I have the impression that his intention at this time is to have a resolution supported by all parties, so as to make it unanimous.

Would it be satisfactory to Senator Asselin if I made inquiries and we could then consider the role of the Senate?

Senator Asselin: If this intention does not lead to a resolution, will the Senate no longer have to consider the matter? That is what we would like to know. If the only purpose of this resolution is to give moral support to a government in the process of passing language legislation, clearly, we ought to know whether the Senate will also be called upon to decide for or against such support. In that case, if the resolution were tabled in the Senate, I would like to know whether we would have a free vote.

Senator Frith: I feel that perhaps Senator Flynn, Senator Roblin and I could discuss the feasibility of a Senate resolution, the alterative being that the other place would ask us to support their resolution. I am going to look into this to see which procedure would be most acceptable to the Senate.

INDUSTRIAL ESPIONAGE—EXPULSION OF U.S.S.R. DIPLOMATS

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers to give on behalf of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The first is to a question by Senator Haidasz on September 22, 1983, concerning particulars of the industrial espionage activities of the U.S.S.R. diplomats recently expelled from Canada.

Honourable senators, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informs me that there has been no injury to the national interest because of this incident, but that the particulars cannot be revealed for reasons of national security.

LANDING RIGHTS FOR RUSSIAN AIRCRAFT AT GANDER

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the second delayed answer is to a question asked by Senator Haidasz on September 22, 1983, concerning landing rights for Russian aircraft at Gander, Newfoundland.

Honourable senators, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informs me that since the decision was made terminating Aeroflot flights to Montreal, there have been no flights at Gander or stop-downs at Gander with the exception of the flight which returned the circus to Moscow. Soviet authorities have not formally requested permission to come down in Gander for any flight.

Each flight will be dealt with on its own merits. Since the number of flights is so limited, that would not materially add to the action Canada has taken at the present time.

PRONOUNCEMENT OF ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 24, 1983, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the advisability of establishing alternative procedures for the pronouncement of Royal Assent to bills.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the procedure by which Royal Assent is given to bills passed by the House of Commons and the Senate has been discussed and criticized for some considerable time. It has been criticized as an awkward, old fashioned and time consuming method which is a relic, as it were, of the past; a ritual which is out of place in the modern legislative process.

Noting such criticism, Senator Frith gave a Notice of Inquiry which reads:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the advisability of establishing alternative procedures for the pronouncement of Royal Assent to bills.

When he spoke to his inquiry he gave a very comprehensive and scholarly review of the history of Royal Assent in the United Kingdom and its evolution there, over the years, to its current form which is quite different from ours. Indeed, it is interesting to note that while the practice was changed in the United Kingdom, we in Canada did not do likewise—at least, we have not done so to now. In his speech, Senator Frith gave the history of the procedure of Royal Assent in the United Kingdom. In brief, it divided itself into three periods. These were: before 1541; from 1541 to 1967; and from 1967 to the present. Until 1541, Royal Assent was given by the sovereign in person; until 1967 it was given by commissioners appointed by the sovereign, though in the traditional manner of the House of Commons being summoned, as is our practice; then, since 1967, by commissioners appointed by the sovereign, but not in the traditional manner.

I understand from Senator Frith's speech it is usually given at Buckingham Palace. I do not recall from his speech who brings the bills to the commissioners—whether it is the Clerks or someone else.

Apparently, care was taken to show that the method used between 1541 and 1967 is still valid, if used. So, as I understand it, Royal Assent in the United Kingdom can be given in three ways: by the sovereign in person; by commissioners summoning the members of the House of Commons to the House of Lords; and the giving of Royal Assent by the commissioners apart from the House of Commons and the House of Lords. Of course, notice that Royal Assent has been given to certain bills must be given in both houses.

Honourable senators, Senator Frith emphasized that any change in our procedure would be in addition to our present procedure. It would be an alternative procedure, and would in no way eliminate our traditional method, although I expect he feels it would, in practice, in time replace it.

He also outlined the method adopted in Australia whereby the practice is for the Clerk of the House which initiated the bill to bring it to the residence of the Governor General where, in an informal setting, the Governor General affixes his signature. I think it is fair to say that Senator Frith approves of the Australian method for us, with some modifications.

Honourable senators, if I may digress for a moment, I feel that the visit made by the parliamentary delegation to Australia must have been quite an adventure. Indeed, certain senators in that delegation came back convinced we should have an elected Senate, and others that our method of Royal Assent should be changed. I do not know what other ideas and convictions they acquired while there, and, indeed, I am afraid to ask.

Honourable senators, we then heard Senator LeMoyne make his first speech in the chamber. He spoke on Senator

Frith's inquiry and made a very impressive speech in a very eloquent manner. He expressed in beautiful and moving language the meaning of our traditional ritual regarding Royal Assent and the value of retaining it. At the same time, he acknowledged the validity of reasons for at least a partial relaxation of the present procedure. His words regarding the retention, at least for special occasions, deserve mention, and I should like to quote them, in part:

> However, it would be disastrous if the proposed innovation were to jeopardize the traditional ceremony in any way: it has a meaning of irreplaceable richness, its scope is such that it could not possibly be changed without being reduced, limited, diminished, belittled and robbed of its originality.

Honourable senators, for my own part, I find I agree more or less with both Senator Frith and Senator LeMoyne. I do not think procedures or rituals should be changed just for the sake of change, and if a traditional ritual such as the method of Royal Assent is to be changed, it should be for good reason, and, if a change is made, I think some pomp and ceremony should be retained or a new ritual used for a new method.

Personally, I think there are good, substantial reasons for a change in our present method of having Royal Assent. I think we must remember that sometimes a custom is retained and continued long after its value has disappeared. I think something like that has happened with our present Royal Assent procedure. I expect originally it was all that Senator LeMoyne would wish for. I imagine it was like the House of Commons coming to the Senate at the beginning of a new Parliament or a new session to hear the Speech from the Throne. As a monarchist, I like the words "Royal Assent" and "Speech from the Throne".

However, we must be realistic in these matters. I believe the present method has outlived its usefulness. It no longer has the importance or the mystical meaning it once had. Indeed, I doubt if any of the few participants in the ceremony give a thought to its meaning or origin. It has become just another ceremony—a minor hardship—something to be endured. Attendance at the ceremony by members of the Senate and of the House of Commons proves my point. During the few years I have been a senator, I have noticed a marked decline in the attendance from both houses when Royal Assent is to take place. There are usually 20 to 25 senators and 10 to 15 members of the House of Commons present, and at times even less. Therefore, honourable senators, I think we should recognize that the present system needs to be changed.

In my opinion, the question is how it can be changed without degrading the whole procedure. I do not agree that it should be the procedure suggested by Senator Frith as one alternative. That, to my mind, would be an unnecessary break with our tradition. I do not like the idea of the Clerks being entrusted to act as messengers to find the Governor General or his deputy and have either one affix his signature to the bills. As Senator Frith emphasized, whatever is decided should be an alternative method, and our present system could be used if desired on special occasions. At the same time, we should realize that a new method will, in practice, replace the present system.

Honourable senators, in order to retain the ceremonial method of Royal Assent, I have the following suggestion to make: That an alternative method be introduced which would have the Speakers of both houses with their Clerks, all attired in their robes of office, wait upon the Governor General in his official residence, or his deputy here or in the Supreme Court Building, and have him or her affix his or her signature to the bill signifying Royal Assent. By so doing, I think we would modernize the procedure and, at the same time, give it the pomp, the formality and the dignity it should have.

In putting forward this suggestion as an acceptable procedure, I am flexible on the matter. Another procedure may be suggested which is more acceptable and more in keeping with our tradition. I believe a change should be made, but Royal Assent should continue to be recognized as an important and necessary part of our law-making procedure and it should not be treated as a matter of little importance or in a casual fashion. Personally, I would be satisfied with any new procedure or ritual which retains the dignity and the formality which this part of our law-making procedure deserves.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, several references have been made to Senator Frith's association with Australia. I am wondering if he has sent a message of congratulation to the Australians on their winning the America's Cup.

Senator Frith: Yes, something is on the way.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, September 29, 1983, at 2 p.m.

ADDRESS

OF

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE MARGARET THATCHER
PRIME MINISTER OF GREAT BRITAIN

TO

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

IN THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTTAWA

ON

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1983

The Right Hon. Prime Minister was welcomed by the Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Hon. Jean Marchand, Speaker of the Senate and the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, Speaker of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Speaker of the House of Commons): May I call this session to order?

Prime Minister, it is a great honour for us to have you address this joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons. I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to introduce our distinguished guest.

[English]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Madam Speaker of the House of Commons, Madam Prime Minister and Mr. Thatcher, Hon. Members of the Senate and House of Commons: Rarely in the history of the Parliament of Canada have its Members issued an invitation to a visitor to address a joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons. Never have we had a more welcome and distinguished visitor than the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Her visit honours this institution and all of us. It calls to mind the two separate threads which have gone into the weaving of the relationship of our two countries in modern times. I am referring to Great Britain's role in the evolution of Canada as an independent parliamentary democracy, and to the growth of a partnership as strong friends and allies.

Centuries of British parliamentary achievement have fundamentally influenced the quality of Canadian life and liberty. We owe an eternal debt to those whose monumental struggles ended in victories for the British common people, victories which redounded to the advantage of Canadians with much less effort.

One need only recall that when representative Government first appeared in Nova Scotia in 1758, and responsible self-government there in 1848, it was as a direct result of parliamentary freedoms won with great difficulty by the mother of Parliaments at Westminster. Thus it was that the doctrines of parliamentary supremacy and independence took root in eastern Canada and spread across the land, and now constitute the unspoken first statement of every speech in this Parliament and in our provincial legislatures.

The symbols and the reality of Britain's influence upon the Parliament of Canada are everywhere around us. They include the rights and privileges of Members, the very design of this Chamber and the fact, as you know, Madam Speaker, that your chair was a gift to this institution from the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

It is most appropriate to pay public tribute in this place to Prime Minister Thatcher for the crucial role she played in the final achievement of Canada's complete constitutional independence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The people of Canada owe her a very heavy debt of gratitude. We presented her with an extremely difficult problem, a political and diplomatic minefield. But despite an avalanche of contrary advice from Canadian and British sources, she stood resolute in her determination that Westminster would do what this Parliament requested. Thus did she demonstrate her deep and constant respect for the Parliament of Canada as the legitimate voice of the people of Canada.

In a spirit of generosity, understanding and true friendship, she cleared the agenda at Westminster and made sure that Canada's Constitution Act passed through all legislative stages with dispatch. To the long list of the Fathers of Confederation, Madam Speaker, we must certainly now add the name of one Mother.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: The respect and admiration enjoyed by Prime Minister Thatcher in Canada and the rest of the world is essentially due to the strength of character and leadership she has shown in the course of governing her country and in conducting international affairs.

Beyond party or ideological differences, she is universally recognized as a leader whose courage and integrity are equalled only by the strength of her convictions.

Forty-two years ago, her famous predecessor, Sir Winston Churchill, spoke in this House words that inspired Canada and the free world in wartime. Today, now we are about to listen to Prime Minister Thatcher, the real challenge is to inspire the world to support the cause of peace. This, together with the need to guarantee economic recovery, is the most formidable challenge of our time. The external and defence policies of East and West will either lead us to a durable peace or a devastating war. There is no alternative.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has been the basis on which successive governments in this country have built our defence policy.

The performance of Canada and of the Atlantic Alliance as a whole has proved beyond a doubt that NATO is a sound, united and extremely effective organization, and Canada is proud to have been one of the founding members, together with Great Britain. Thanks to NATO, Europe has enjoyed 34 years of peace. Indeed, this organization offers the West the best guarantees for avoiding a terrible war and creating a durable peace.

This morning, Prime Minister Thatcher and I discussed ways of utilizing this force and solidarity, not only to safeguard our present security but also to increase future security through arms reduction.

Confident in our strength and in the enduring ties of friendship we have created in war and peace time, we must find the energy and the courage to work even harder at reducing tensions in the world and thus diminish the threat of nuclear war that haunts our nations. There is no other alternative.

Madam Prime Minister, at the Williamsburg Summit, you and I declared, together with our colleagues. And I quote:

> We undertake to devote all our political resources to reducing the threat of war. Our vision is that of a world from which the spectre of war will have disappeared for all mankind, and we are determined to see this objective become a reality.

Today, this vision seems even less attainable than it was three months ago. The threat of a nuclear holocaust which hovers over the entire world has taken increasingly frightening forms. Our nations are therefore demanding that we, their governments and leaders, honour our commitment to the cause of peace.

As far as I am concerned, no personal enterprise and no priority other than the pursuit of peace is important enough to take up all my time and energy.

Today, more than ever before in the history of mankind, the survival of our species depends on the courage and wisdom of nations and their leaders.

• (1610)

[English]

At such a time, the peoples of the NATO countries expect more than familiar nostrums from their leaders. They demand vision, resolve and greatness of spirit. It is at such a time, such a time of critical global challenges, that our most distinguished guest has honoured us with her presence. Madam Speaker, I am pleased and proud to present to the Parliament of Canada the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher (Prime Minister of Great Britain): Madam Speaker, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Prime Minister, Hon. Members of the Senate, Members of the House of Commons:

[Translation]

On this first day of my visit to Canada, it is a great honour for me to speak to you, and especially to do so in this historic Chamber.

Madam Speaker, you and my host, the Prime Minister, are both members of the Francophone community that has contributed so much towards making Canada the great country it has become today.

[English]

Half your title, Madam Speaker, has a familiar ring. If the other half does not, that is because Canada has set a trend of emancipation in Speakers which we have now established with Prime Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: The last time we met was when, as Minister of Science and Technology in Canada, you came to see me as Minister of Education and Science in Britain. That was 11 years ago. Who would have predicted then that together we would achieve this double first?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: I know that some of your parliamentary practices differ from ours. Question time is clearly a different experience for the Prime Minister of Canada if, as I believe, he can pass any question he likes to another Minister for answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: That must keep the Cabinet up to the mark. My colleagues do not even have to be in the Chamber. Last year in the British Parliament we had Canada very much on our mind and, I heard, vice versa.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Thatcher: You referred to this very generously, Prime Minister. And I am proud that my administration was so closely associated with a successful outcome to the process of patriation of the Canadian Constitution. Together we have successfully stored our last piece of colonial furniture in the museum of history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: A constitutional link has, quite properly, been severed. The effect of that is not to weaken but to strengthen our common heritage. We can look freely to the future. For there will be much for Canada and Britain to do together. We are linked in so many important ways. We believe in the same high and honourable ideals. We stand ready to defend our free and independent way of life. We agree on the great purposes which we must pursue in the wider world.

If I may say something about each of these three things, first I will speak about our common ideals. Madam Speaker, people of my generation lived through a period when the fundamental values of western civilization were questioned. The doubters sought to portray them as moribund. They claimed to find more vigorous, more progressive ideas in the communist world. Constantly seeking utopia, they fastened on one false creed after another, avoiding always that least fashionable solution, the reassertion of traditional values.

We have been told that the West has no ideology, that Britain, in a famous phrase, has lost an empire and failed to find a role, that the young lack a sense of purpose and the old cannot provide them with one.

Madam Speaker, it is not true. The ideals which our two countries share are the answer to all the doubters. For centuries we have striven first to win, then to preserve, that freedom and justice without which life has neither dignity nor meaning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: We have learned by experience that the only political system which protects and perpetuates these values is parliamentary democracy. It does so because it allows thought and expression to flower and because the good sense of a mature people is brought to bear on the excesses of governments and of individuals.

These are not the panaceas of political theorists. They are ideas that have worked. Overwhelmingly, our electorates wish to preserve them. Wherever people have been free to choose, they have chosen the path of freedom. The crowded island of Britain and the wide open spaces of Canada are traditional havens for refugees from political persecution and for those seeking a new start in a land of liberty. The number of Canadians from central Europe bear witness to Canada's generosity toward the oppressed.

The western democracies are not short of ideals. We have values and a way of life which are the envy of those who have never known them. I wonder whether we take them too much for granted. For the preservation of freedom and justice needs constant unremitting effort. As Goethe wrote in "Faust":

> He only earns his freedom and existence who daily conquers them anew.

There is a battle of ideas to be won, a battle in which we are better equipped than our adversaries, for our ideas are better. The propaganda campaign to sap the morale of the democracies is relentless. We must meet it by puncturing each spurious argument and by destroying every myth that emerges. We must constantly proclaim our ideals, to our own people at home, to young countries who have yet to choose, to those who live in the shadow of tyranny. It is time for freedom to take the offensive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Canada and Britain, Madam Speaker, share not only common ideals but also, as you have said, Prime Minister, the will and capacity to defend them. At home we recall with gratitude the valour and sacrifice of Canadian troops in two world wars; we remember their achievements and their courage with thanksgiving and admiration. We stood together. We prevailed.

Last year, during the Falkland's crisis, Canada was staunch in her support. We were deeply grateful for your resolve to uphold the rule of law, for the good wishes and encouragement which we received from so many individual Canadians, for the wonderful generosity you showed to our wounded servicemen, widows and families in your many contributions to the South Atlantic Fund.

Canada realized, as we did, that there was a fundamental principle at stake, with application far wider than the South Atlantic—that aggression must never be allowed to pay.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: It did not. And today I thank you for helping to ensure that it did not. Democracies by their nature long for peace, for a world free from conflict and threats. But the reality is that our way of life is threatened. As fellow members of NATO our clear duty is to assess that threat accurately and to ensure that we are able, if necessary, to resist it.

The threat is not one of superior ideas. We have nothing to fear from the bankrupt ideology of the Soviet Union. The combination of political repression and economic failure is plain for all the world to see. The threat comes from the proclaimed goal of Soviet communism to spread its system throughout the world, from the fact that the Soviet Union is engaged in a remorseless military build-up going far beyond the needs of defence, and from the evidence that that country is prepared to advance its aim by the use of force or by the threat of force beyond its borders, as in East Germany in 1953, in Hungary in 1956, in Czechoslovakia in 1968, and recently in Afghanistan and in Poland. More widely, it is seeking by proxy to further its aims in Africa, in the Middle East, in Asia and in Central America.

For anyone who doubted the nature of the Soviet system, its willingness to resort to force careless of the human consequences, the shooting down of the Korean airliner has come as a most terrible and tragic reminder. Our policy must be based on a clear understanding of the people we are dealing with and the system they have shaped. Otherwise, we shall get it wrong. That system was founded and sustained by force. It is structured to resist all political change. We have to live with it not as we would wish it to be but as it is. The task of members of NATO is to ensure that our way of life is never compromised.

That means that we must be strong. Strong in capacity—there must never be an imbalance in any range of armament that leads to the conclusion that aggression against us might succeed—and strong in will—the other side must never be tempted to believe that it could win a war against the West. We in NATO threaten no one. We come together not to attack others but to defend our own. We shall engage in the battle of ideas. We intend freedom and justice to conquer. Yes, we do have a creed and we wish others to share it. But it is no part of our policy to impose our beliefs by force or the threat of force. That, Madam Speaker, is the great distinction. And that is where the facile comparisons which we sometimes hear made between the two superpowers founder. There is no comparison between the United States, that great citadel of freedom and justice, and the Soviet Union.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: The United States long possessed overwhelming military superiority over its rival. History will show that no country in that position has ever used power so responsibly. Democracy itself curbs the irresponsible use of power. But, when democracy is absent, when an unfettered executive lives in isolation from the free world and from most of its own people, when this is combined with enormous military strength, there is the real danger to peace.

But, Madam Speaker, we must constantly seek ways of making the world a better and a safer place. The task of reaching genuine agreements on arms control and disarmament is long and painstaking. Nevertheless we must persevere in the hope that we can secure reductions which are balanced and can be verified. Then our defence would still be secure but at a lower level of armaments and expenditure.

In this task in which Canada and Britain are honestly engaged with our NATO allies, we are constantly faced with misleading Soviet propaganda. In the last year to two we have seen a massive attempt to bend the will of western governments by working on the minds of our electorates with bogus arguments. In country after country that attempt has failed. Yet the propaganda continues. Every few weeks there is a further statement from Moscow designed to give an appearance of flexibility. But so far, when these public statements are checked at the negotiating table—the real test of truth—flexibility disappears.

The question, Madam Speaker, is: Are the current generation of Soviet leaders ready to negotiate as earnestly as NATO to make the world a safer place? Or, are they so much the prisoners of their system and their history, so wedded to military might that they are unable to rise to the opportunity? Even now, as the moment for Cruise and Pershing deployment in Europe draws near, it is in Moscow's power to ensure, by accepting the zero option, that not a single missile of this kind is put in place. Otherwise, to restore the balance on which our security depends, deployment will begin at the end of this year. Our nerve is being tested. To falter now would be fatal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: But that is not the end of the story. NATO has made other radical proposals for reducing the number of these weapons. We await a serious Soviet response. Now, and for as far as we can see, it must be plain to Moscow that the western democracies will not be seduced by propaganda and will not be cowed by threats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Our desire for disarmament is profound. But it is matched by the unshakeable resolve that our way of life shall be secure.

In the wider world there are other great tasks for Canada and Britain in the years to come. Our shared values and traditions and the close and living links between us promise continued co-operation for our own benefit and the benefit of others.

Those living links are strong. Tens of thousands of British families have close relatives in Canada. Around a million British and Canadian visitors cross the Atlantic each year. There are Canadian assets in Britain of over a billion dollars, and Britain is the second largest investor in Canada. Canada has provided a host of distinguished names in British public life and commerce. It has sometimes seemed that half our press is run by Canadians and the other half by Australians.

I head a Government which is deeply interested in Canada. We are both open societies with a world vision born of a special historical experience. The keen interest Canada has taken in the problems of the Third World and the United Nations is proof of a nation with wide horizons.

One of the most valuable legacies of Empire to Britain has been a world-wide network of interests and of human links so that we could not, even if we wished, become an inward-looking nation preoccupied with our own problems.

At home Britain is changing. Five years ago there was a widespread feeling that our problems were insoluble. That was before we tackled them so vigourously. Now, there is a spreading sense of realism. People are beginning to lose their fear of change. British industry is more confident, more efficient and more productive. The new technologies are flourishing. Jobs have been created in industries which did not exist ten years ago. We have reason to hope that our inventive genius will increasingly be turned to industrial profit. With greater robustness, vigour and enterprise in our society we shall be an even stronger friend and ally.

As you reminded us, Prime Minister, it is over 40 years since another British Prime Minister—and I do not have to tell you which one—stood here and spoke about a chicken which refused to have its neck wrung. I am happy to report that that same chicken is alive and well and as resolved as ever to preserve inviolate that selfsame area of its anatomy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: In 1983 we are better able than we were to work with you to pursue our common aims in the wider world. As founder members of the Commonwealth we have a special opportunity to join with that unique gathering of nations to preserve and extend the heritage of ideals which are the essence of the Commonwealth—freedom based on the rule of law, always under assault somewhere, even in the Commonwealth, but essential to the survival of the civilized world.

As members of the economic Summit, to which you referred, Mr. Prime Minister, Canada and Britain again share a distinctive responsibility to apply the energy and experience of the world's most advanced and successful economies to the serious economic and financial problems which face so many countries, to preserve and extend the world's free trading system, to bring to the developing countries aid, advice and help as they tackle their own formidable difficulties.

As founder members of the United Nations—that organization which has so often disappointed expectation but without which the world would be a worse place—we shall both continue to take a special interest in world security, and in peacekeeping and the work of its specialized agencies.

You on this side of the Atlantic, we in Europe, each have our own special relationships. Just as we rejoice in and welcome the strength of the friendship between Canada and the United States, so we ask you to see the vital importance of the European Community. The process of making a community causes problems not just to its members but to its friends like Canada, and some of its policies have led to sharp disputes. But the community has an enormous contribution to make to the maintenance of international free trade and to the promotion of our common ideals. In a dangerous world it is a vital area of democracy and stability which Britain is firmly committed to maintain and extend.

Madam Speaker, Canada and Britain seek a better, safer, freer and more prosperous world. We do so because we are protagonists of the timeless values of freedom and justice, because we are both great western democracies, because we are the privileged beneficiaries of a political, social and economic system which is the best man has ever devised and which has incomparably more to offer to the human spirit than the false idealogies of the unfree world.

But let us then proclaim that truth together. Let us tell the world that freedom is on the march. The democracies have the duty to lead. We are strong in belief. We glory in our freedom. We hear the voices of the oppressed and seek for them the justice and the liberty which are our own.

Should future generations have cause to remember us, let it be not only because we helped to stop the spread of tyranny, but also because we left the human race one step closer to its greatest hope—that one day men the world over shall be free.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Speaker of the Senate): Prime Minister Thatcher, Prime Minister Trudeau, Madam Speaker: When you were first elected Prime Minister of Great Britain, I was very impressed. A mighty, powerful country like Great Britain electing a woman as Prime Minister is something which is quite new. However, I was much more impressed when you were reelected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Senator Marchand: After watching you on television this morning, after reading an interview which you gave to a Toronto newspaper and after listening to your words this afternoon, I understand why you are Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Senator Marchand: If I were a woman sitting in this Parliament, I would be very optimistic about my future because you know how closely we follow the British tradition.

Thank you for coming to our country and our Parliament. Thank you for your enlighting address and the wisdom and warmth contained therein. I am confident that your words will not quickly fade from the minds of all here assembled. I hope that others during your continuing visit will have even a brief opportunity to share our appreciation of your experience and the depth of your personality.

[Translation]

We have not forgotten that Great Britain is the world power that made it possible for us to achieve autonomy and subsequently full independence without bloodshed and without suffering the aftermath of forced or violent secession.

Some people believe that the latest step taken has isolated us once and for all from your great country. They are wrong. The heritage we have received from your country, and I am thinking of the parliamentary and legal system, and our social and even our cultural heritage, are among the values we cherish most and which are an integral part of our national fabric.

• (1640)

[English]

Few nations can wear the mantle of Mother Country as comfortably as yours. It has nurtured this nation through more than two centuries of infancy, often painful adolescence and maturity. If Canada has reached adulthood, it is because it has been given its lead by an understanding, not suffocating, parent. Even our minorities will be hard pressed to point to another nation, another system of government, which grants so much freedom to progress, freedom to dissent, and freedom to be unique.

There is no doubt in my mind that there will always be a special relationship between our two countries notwithstanding their distance and their necessary differences.

[Translation]

On behalf of the Senate of Canada, I wish to thank you, Right Hon. Lady, for accepting the invitation extended by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I hope that you will remember your visit here as one of the high points of your distinguished political career.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Prime Minister, in expressing the appreciation of Members of the House of Commons and myself for the wisdom and eloquence of your words, I feel compelled to go beyond the traditional dictums in order to reflect with greater accuracy the depth of our admiration. We are greatly honoured by your presence here today, Prime Minister, and hope that our expressions of gratitude and esteem will convey to you in some small way the warmth and sincerity of our sentiments.

You have personified, Madam Prime Minister, as I sensed very strongly when I first met you, the ideal of the rigorous, dedicated, and resolute leader. In your determination to further the collective wellbeing of those you represent, you have demonstrated only the highest degree of commitment, conviction and tenacity in the face of all adversity. You have established a standard of leadership which no doubt serves as an inspiration and example to leaders of the democratic world.

History has created strong ties between Great Britain and Canada, and although various constitutional changes may have modified the nature of such ties, they have not weakened them. With you, we have learned about democracy and tolerance. Witness our institutions, which bear the imprint of the age-old wisdom of your own, which were the result of experience and not merely a philosophical creation. It has given them a pragmatic quality that is particularly suited to moderating the enthusiasm of inexperience. Our law, for instance, at tuned to custom and usage, has in the course of time been able to adapt to the conditions created by our constantly evolving political, economic and social life.

It is part of our debt to your country, and we wish to emphasize that, since the traditions that were brought here by the two founding peoples are mutually enriching. Together with the values of our native peoples and those of our immigrants, they have created a very special attitude, philosophy and way of life. It is a heritage to which your country has contributed very generously, a heritage we cherish and of which we are proud.

[English]

We have learned many lessons from what you have told us today, Prime Minister, and we are reassured that your country is determined to safeguard the peace of all citizens who live in fear of the menaces which are upon us. It could not be otherwise since your country remains a beacon and a fortress of moral values in a world plagued by uncertainties. We stand here today with a consciousness heightened by the experiences of the past several decades, acutely aware of the need for a continued spirit of complicity among the free nations of the planet in their concern over the world's precarious balance of power.

As the prominent leader of one of the greatest of these nations, Prime Minister, with the utmost respect and the warmest affection and gratitude, we welcome you today and thank you for having addressed us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The session is now adjourned.

THE SENATE

Thursday, September 29, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

DESTRUCTION OF KOREAN AIRLINES PASSENGER AIRCRAFT BY U.S.S.R.—REFUSAL BY RUSSIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES TO ACCEPT SENATE MOTION

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have a report to make on the resolution that received the unanimous approval of the Senate, blaming the Soviet Union—to avoid using stronger terms—for the Boeing 007 incident.

As the Senate requested, I summoned the Soviet chargé d'affaires, to whom I intended to give the document, after the usual explanations. However, the chargé d'affaires, on the instructions of Moscow, refused to accept the document.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I do not know whether the Leader of the Government agrees, but I think we should consider the problem created by the attitude of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, and perhaps look at other ways of approaching the problem.

I think we should not merely accept this refusal without finding out if something else can be done.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition has expressed briefly but well the point of view that I would hold pending further consideration of what action might be taken. I am aware, as is the Leader of the Opposition, that the refusal to accept the message from the Senate applies also to the message that was sent from the other place. I appreciate the comment of the Leader of the Opposition that we should perhaps have a little time to consider the possibility of alternative action.

THE LATE HON. LIONEL CHOQUETTE

TRIBUTES

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to inform the House of the death yesterday of our former colleague, the Honourable Senator Lionel Choquette.

When Senator Choquette retired in March 1981, we spoke in this chamber of the precious services he rendered to this institution and the senator's successful career, both professional and political.

Today, I merely wish to express, and I am sure I am doing so on behalf of all senators, our feelings of sincere sympathy to the members of his family. I would also like to inform our colleagues that Senator Choquette's funeral will be at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, at the Sacred Heart Church in Ottawa, so that those who wish to attend will be able to do so.

• (1405)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I join with the Leader of the Opposition in his comments respecting Senator Choquette. We are aware that he was a distinguished member of the bar and an active and interested member of the Senate who played a particularly useful role while he was here. We join with the Leader of the Opposition in expressing our sorrow at his passing.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 4, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUBMISSION OF ANNUAL REPORTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would like to refer the Leader of the Government to the reply he was kind enough to give me recently with respect to a question I asked about the Canada Post Corporation. Last June, I drew the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that this corporation, in contravention of the Statutes of Canada, had not submitted an annual report for the last two periods, and the minister replied, giving me the reason.

He also said in his reply that the Canada Post Corporation expects that the difficulties with which they had been faced, which had prevented the tabling of these reports, would be resolved this summer. Summer is now over, and it is in order for me to ask my honourable friend if those problems have now been solved, and, if so, when this delinquent corporation will be brought to time.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I will make a further inquiry about that matter, but I do need a little time. Summer is over in some parts of Canada—as I witnessed when I was in Edmonton for the last two days or so—but it is not over in Ottawa—witness the weather. In western Canada, we always hope for what is traditionally called an Indian summer.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT—REQUESTED TABLING

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Does he intend to table the agreement made between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland respecting the new fisheries structure of that province? The agreement was signed several days ago. Some of us are anxious to see it. It was suggested that we send down to Newfoundland for a copy, but, the mails being what they are, it seems to me that that would be an unfortunate way to go about obtaining one. Would the minister undertake to get us a copy of that agreement?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I believe that something like 98 per cent of articles mailed from Newfoundland arrive in Ottawa the next day.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Don't believe it.

Senator Olson: Whatever the percentage, that is not the substance of the reply that I wanted to give. I think that the request is a perfectly reasonable one. A few more days might be required in order to put the agreement in its final order, but I will make some inquiries in that regard. I want to assure Senator Doody that he has a right to get a copy of the agreement and that I have an obligation to get it for him as soon as it is available.

Senator Doody: I thank the minister. It is my understanding from St. John's that it is a public document and that it is in distribution down there. As the minister has suggested, it might be fair to let the rest of Canada see the contents of it as well. We would certainly appreciate receipt of a copy of it. A few days ago I asked Senator Austin many questions on this subject and I may avoid having to ask him further questions, because the answers might very well be in the agreement.

Senator Olson: I appreciate that. All I am suggesting to Senator Doody is that he give me at least a few minutes, if not a few hours, to make inquiries. The rest of my reply will stand equally valid after I have received the result of those inquiries.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Many of the items contained in the agreement between the federal government and the Province of Newfoundland have been referred to vaguely in press releases emanating from both ends of the country. There are many questions concerning whether the agreement covers the inshore fishery, joint venture programs, over-the-side sales that have been going on for years and so forth. These are questions that will have to be resolved. I stress the importance of our seeing the agreement so that we can ask some pertinent questions regarding the future of the Newfoundland fishery.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I understand the point that Senator Marshall has raised. Perhaps he has answered a large part of Senator Doody's question. Perhaps the reason why the document has not been tabled in both houses has something to do with the kinds of items involved. Senator Doody has said that the agreement is already a public document in Newfoundland. I do not dispute that because I do not know whether it is. Usually we are aware that, at the time these documents are put out in great detail, we have to be prepared to deal with the sorts of issues which Senator Marshall has just drawn to my attention. Obviously, I am not going to respond to them off the top of my head; he knows that. What he also realizes, however, is that perhaps the officials, when they are writing what I suppose could be called administrative regulations, must attend to all of the other detail.

Honourable senators, I see that Senator Doody is nodding in an indication that he understands completely what I am saying. He has probably been involved in a situation where he has had to make very quick explanations. Usually one likes a few hours or days in which to work everything out.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, for the sake of the record, may I say that I was nodding my head in absolute amazement at the comments that the honourable minister was making. In effect, he was saying that they have a document which has been approved by two governments, they are reluctant to pass it out because they are not familiar with its contents, yet they will have a look at it in an effort to familiarize themselves with it, after which they will make it available. I would hate to have those who read our Hansard think that I was nodding in complete agreement and understanding of what the minister was saying. That is not the case, although I am grateful for his offer to get the document for us after he studies it, reads it and familiarizes himself with it.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is now twisting things a little, and I do not wish to pursue this argument. I know that he understands exactly what Senator Marshall has demonstrated, that there is a great deal more detail in the administration of the various sections that would come under the overall agreement. It is usually a good practice to take enough time to consider all such matters so that we can answer with the kind of clarity that this government has a reputation for.

Senator Doody: Now you have provoked Senator Marshall.

Senator Marshall: You have not provoked me, but what you have said constitutes a perfect example of the hypocrisy in talking about the responsibility of the Senate for regional interests. We know nothing about this agreement. The Province of Newfoundland has not contacted those who are supposed to take up their regional interests, and the federal government has not brought the Senate up to date on the matter.

Senator Olson: I disagree with that comment completely.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It is a good thing that you are not explaining why, because then it would be very confusing.

THE ECONOMY

REVISED FORECASTS—REQUESTED TABLING

Hon. Lowell Murray: May I ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the government has received from the Department of Finance revised forecasts for the deficit, unemployment rate, rate of growth of the economy and so on for the current fiscal year, and whether he will let the Senate have those revised forecasts within the next few days?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot answer the second part of the question, for the reason that it may be that Senator Murray is asking for communications between ministers, which, as he knows, are not available even through the Access to Information Act. He ought to know, and if he does not I want him to know it now, that there is a constant updating of information on such matters for the ministers who are involved in those areas. I can inquire of the Minister of Finance—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That's a good idea.

Senator Olson: —to find out whether or not there is a compilation of forecasts on unemployment levels, rate of growth of the economy and the other areas raised by Senator Murray. I believe that such assessments are probably put out by the Department of Finance. Honourable senators are probably aware of the forecasts by interested organizations such as the Conference Board of Canada. However, Senator Murray is asking specifically for assessments from the Department of Finance, and I will try to obtain them for him.

Senator Murray: While the Leader of the Government is obtaining that information, would he ask his colleague, the Minister of Finance, and advise the Senate whether the minister is standing by the forecasts he made in his April budget? I ask the question in view of the forecasts made within the past day or so by the Conference Board of Canada in particular reference to the budgetary deficit. The Leader of the Government will be aware that the Conference Board of Canada says, contrary to the Honourable Marc Lalonde's contention that the deficit will be reduced, that the deficit will remain in the range of 5 per cent of the gross national product for the next five years.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, whether or not it is spelled out directly on the same page, it seems to me that the reply I gave Senator Murray a moment ago will answer this question also.

Senator Murray: We shall see.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MANITOBA—POSSIBLE JOINT RESOLUTION RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to the question put by the Honourable Senator Asselin at the last sitting of the Senate. It could, perhaps, be better described as a preliminary reply about Manitoba.

The Prime Minister raised the possibility of adopting a resolution in the House of Commons, supporting the efforts of the Government of Manitoba in fulfilling effectively its constitutional obligations under Section 23 of the Manitoba Act of 1870.

The Prime Minister is pursuing the matter with Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Broadbent, and has submitted to them a draft resolution for their consideration.

I understand that it is not to be a joint resolution of Parliament.

However, there is nothing to prevent the Senate from adopting its own resolution of support, if the Senate so decides. That is why I intend to consult some of our colleagues in order to get their impressions on whether it would be a good idea to adopt our own resolution for the same purpose.

PRONOUNCEMENT OF ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURES—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the advisability of establishing alternative procedures for the pronouncement of Royal Assent to bills.—(Honourable Senator Roblin P.C.).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in my capacity as a co-operative federalist, I adjourned this motion the other day on behalf of members of the house who might be interested in continuing the debate. I have an idea that my colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, may have a word to say on this subject of Royal Assent, although I stand to be corrected. If he does have something to say, I am glad to yield my place to him.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Shall we stand it in Senator Flynn's name?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Yes.

Order stands.

CANADA-KOREA FRIENDSHIP GROUP

MEETING IN KOREA—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Leblanc calling the attention of the Senate to the Meeting of the Canada-Korea Friendship Group, held in Korea from October 2 to 8, 1982.—(Honourable Senator Charbonneau).

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have been speaking to Senator Charbonneau who informs me that he does not propose to speak to this order. I suggest that, if no other senators wish to speak to it, it be considered debated.

The Hon. the Speaker: Does any other honourable senator wish to speak on the subject?

Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered debated.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Before moving the adjournment, I would remind honourable senators that committees are meeting this afternoon and at the beginning of next week. The bill to amend the Export Development Act is on the Order Paper for second reading on Tuesday next. We are expecting a report from the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Depending on whether consideration in the other place on the Crow is suspended, we may receive other legislation. We know of one bill and perhaps we will have another, but among those bills that we might receive next week I am not including that on the Crow rate.

• (1420)

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): We shall have a very busy week.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Can my honourable friend be more specific about what other bills he expects if the procedures in the other place permit?

Senator Frith: The two bills that have been mentioned as high on the list and desirable to have are the bill concerning government organization—-

Hon. C. William Doody: Any sort of organization of the government is important.

Senator Frith: —and the bill respecting bankruptcy. I thank Senator Doody for those encouraging words.

Senator Flynn: You are badly in need of them.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 4, 1983, at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, October 6, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

If leave is granted, honourable senators, I shall add a few comments regarding our schedule.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, you may have noticed that our schedule for this week follows our very recent custom of sitting at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, keeping Wednesday for committee meetings and then sitting Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock.

Since the system seems to be working satisfactorily, we intend to keep the same schedule next week as well, even though Monday will be a holiday, because committee chairmen are now accustomed to scheduling their committee meetings accordingly. For instance, one of the committees intends to sit Tuesday evening. Therefore, as far as next week is concerned, notwithstanding the holiday, we intend to continue the same system.

I may also draw your attention to the fact that the rules at the other place provide for a fall holiday, that is, the Remembrance Day week. This year, the other House will adjourn on November 4, until November 14.

It may be useful for honourable senators who wish to make travel arrangements in the weeks to come to remember that the Senate will probably not be sitting at all during the week of November 7.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NON-DISSEMINATION OF TIDAL INFORMATION TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and has to do with the installation of a telephone service from the provinces to the Institute of Oceanography regarding tidal information. I understand that, alarmingly, the information is only available to the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and not to the Province of Newfoundland.

With the stormy weather fast approaching, I think this is of vital importance. I am wondering why, as expressed in the article that I have read, the service to Newfoundland will not go into operation for many months to come.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know off the top of my head the answer to that question because I have not been briefed on it.

If Senator Marshall agrees, I will make immediate inquiries to determine why that information is not being made available to Newfoundland.

I agree that that information ought to be made available as quickly as possible, yet I realize that there may be some technical reason why there is some validity to his preamble or the comments he made surrounding the question.

• (1410)

Senator Marshall: The tidal information service is naturally for tourists, fishermen and the general public and there have been many serious incidents that occurred. The communications director of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans indicated that the plan is to have the telephone service implemented in St. John's, Newfoundland, probably by next summer. I cannot understand why they can implement it in two provinces on this side of the water and they cannot implement it on the other. I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Government would impress upon the minister responsible the need to have the service updated.

AIR CANADA

REFUSAL TO PUBLISH AUDIT REPORT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, it is never my inclination to praise Air Canada, but I understand that an independent audit of Air Canada indicated that they had never seen a better airline. The thing that surprises me is that the President of Air Canada has indicated that they are not going to make the report public. I can understand their withholding a bad report, but I cannot understand their withholding a good one. Could the minister ascertain whether this article is exact or whether the President of Air Canada will live up to his responsibility and provide a copy of the report in order that it can be publicly examined?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first I should like to revert to the question that Senator Marshall raised respecting the telephone service. He said that he could not understand why that telephone service could not be made available quickly to the people in the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. It is unusual for him and I to agree, but I cannot understand why it is not available either. Perhaps some technical things need to be worked out, but I will try to get him a reply to that question.

Insofar as the Air Canada report is concerned, as he knows, it has never been the policy or the practice of this government to withhold reports because they may be unfavourable. The only reason I can see for their refraining to make the report available is that it may contain information that is commercially valuable and, therefore, it may change the competitive position, or that it may reveal details of the structure and other operations of the company that the competitors may wish to know about. Even though it is a highly favourable report, perhaps for those reasons they may not want to make it public.

• (1415)

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

REPORT OF SKILL DEVELOPMENT LEAVE TASK FORCE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my last question deals with the report of the Skill Development Leave Task Force which studied the need for retraining on a continuing basis. The task force was asked to examine skill development leave as a mechanism for the retraining, upgrading and updating of all working Canadians to promote widespread discussion about the necessity for life-long learning. The report pretty concisely analyzes the current economic situation and the need for retraining in new technological methods.

It is my understanding that a seven-member national advisory board is to be appointed to study the report. I would impress upon the Leader of the Government the importance of all regions of the country being represented on that board.

Would the Leader of the Government ascertain from the minister whether all provinces will be represented? I would draw particular attention to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and the other eastern provinces where unemployment is particularly high.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree that all regions of the country ought to be represented on that board. However, I will look into the matter further.

I am not quite sure whether Senator Marshall indicated that some action had already been taken and that, as far as he was concerned, some parts of the country had been left out, or whether he was promoting some parts of the country in advance. I see that he is nodding his head. I will convey his views to the appropriate minister.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

THE DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT OF CANADA LIMITED AND CANADAIR LIMITED—REPORTS

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, I notice that the Leader of the Government said that, in the ordinary course, the government does not withhold any reports. What about the report on de Havilland, which took seven years, and the report on Canadair, which took seven years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps the minister, Senator Austin, who has direct responsibility in that area, would wish to comment on that.

Quite frankly, I am not quite sure of the accuracy of the question and whether they did take seven years. In any event, Senator Walker completely missed what I said. I said that this government does not have a tradition of withholding reports simply because they are perceived to be unfavourable.

Senator Walker: You did not mention the word "tradition" at any time. The Leader of the Government, in his usual way, is just trying to pat himself on the back and praise his government. The reports on de Havilland and Canadair uncovered two of the greatest tragedies Canada has ever experienced. The government is already covering that up and is trying to make out that they are wonderful people doing a good job.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, the only reply I would make is that the government to which Senator Walker belonged destroyed the Avro Arrow and was very quick to destroy every copy of it.

Senator Walker: That is one of the cheapest comments I have ever heard. We came into office and found a bankrupt, down-and-out outfit. It had been recommended to Louis St. Laurent that it should be gotten rid of, but he did not get around to doing that because it would raise a great furore. That is one of the things that Mr. Diefenbaker took upon himself to do, and it was the proper thing to do at the proper time.

Senator Olson: In retrospect, it was an improper thing.

Senator Walker: In retrospect, it was the finest thing that ever happened, and no one has ever suggested, except those who are trying to make political capital out of it, that it would have been a good thing to have proceeded with the Avro Arrow.

• (1420)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Walker is, as usual, misinformed, and his comments are highly partisan.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NOVA SCOTIA—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT—REQUESTED TABLING

Hon. John M. Macdonald: I have one question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I understand that an agreement has been signed between the federal government and the Government of Nova Scotia in regard to the reconstruction and redevelopment of the fishing industry in that province. Would it be possible to have a copy of that agreement tabled?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have a copy of that agreement with me today but I assure Senator Macdonald that I will determine whether it is immediately available and, if so, he will have it.

As a matter of fact, on my way into the chamber this afternoon, Senator Marshall indicated to me that he had a copy of that report, so perhaps I could ask him to expedite matters.

NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in answer to a question by Senator Doody on September 29 last, I wish to table the following:

> Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador concerning the restructuring of the Newfoundland fishery dated September 26, 1983 (English text).

Hon. Jack Marshall: The Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders recently proposed the establishment of an Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee. This restructuring agreement between Newfoundland and the federal government, and also the agreement between Nova Scotia and the federal government, would be good subjects for reference to that committee for careful analysis.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to respond to that question by saying that I concur, support and expand upon the comments made by Senator Marshall respecting the good work done by the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. As a matter of fact, as soon as Question Period is over today, we will be commencing a debate on that committee's report and, should the Senate adopt this new and significantly improved committee structure, it will come into effect at the beginning of the next session. However, I would not like to leave Senator Marshall with the impression that the new structure will be effective this session.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VACANCIES—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Robert Muir: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he has, as yet, an answer to the question I posed to him some days ago regarding the composition of the Board of Directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

[Senator Olson.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The answer is: No, I do not have that reply today. However, now that it has been brought to my attention, I shall make a special effort to see if I can obtain an answer to that question for the next sitting.

• (1425)

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Peter A. Stollery moved the second reading of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill could briefly be described as a bill which updates and improves the ability of the Export Development Corporation to function. There are, therefore, three points: It increases the capitalization; it changes and improves the composition of the board and it improves the services that the corporation is able to make to the export community.

The Export Development Corporation (EDC) was established in 1969 with the passage of the Export Development Act. This crown corporation, successor to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, was created to meet the export financing and risk management needs of the many Canadian companies endeavouring to compete in foreign markets.

Under the Export Development Act, the EDC is mandated to provide export support services for the purpose of facilitating and developing Canada's export trade. Within the constraints of its legislative authority, EDC provides internationally competitive export financing, insurance and guarantee services and it does so following commercial disciplines which results, hopefully, in minimum costs to Canadian taxpayers. As the supplier of export financing and export credits insurance, the corporation plays a key role in the Canadian economy and the ability of Canadians to export.

From time to time, Parliament is called upon to review the EDC's legislative authority in light of its mandate. As the need for the EDC's financial services grows, and as the nature of the services required by Canadian business in order to remain competitive in the international market place evolve, the EDC normally returns to Parliament on a three-to-four year cycle for necessary revisions to its act. Parliament last amended the Export Development Act in 1978. Now, five years later, Parliament has again been approached for further worthwhile amendments to the act.

This bill is before the Senate today because of the EDC's strong commitment to the concept of service to exporters and responsiveness to the needs of the exporting community. The EDC strives to keep in close touch with the exporting community. Through regular dialogues with individual exporters and export interest groups and the membership of its President and Chairman on the Export Trade Development Board, the EDC maintains a sensitivity to exporter needs. This sensitivity and awareness has enabled the corporation to design programs and delivery mechanisms which are extremely responsive to the reasonable needs of the export community.

The amendments to the Export Development Act adopted by the House of Commons are required by the EDC so that it can continue to provide the volume of export support sought by Canadian companies; so that it can maintain the quality of service that it has established; and so that it can respond to the needs of exporters for new services and for refinements and improvements to existing programs in a very competitive world.

● (1430)

Honourable senators, a review of EDC's programs and their recent development clearly demonstrates the corporation's commitment to responsiveness. Therefore, I should like to provide a brief overview of the excellent services provided to exporters by EDC and to highlight how the services have been modified over the past few years in response to the expressed needs of Canadian exporters. I am sure that an appreciation of this background will assist you and clarify how the passage of the bill will facilitate further developments in this regard.

As you are undoubtedly already aware, the EDC offers a wide range of export support services under the three broad categories of export financing, insurance and guarantees. Under its financing program, the EDC assists exporters by making financial arrangements so that foreign buyers are able to purchase Canadian goods and services. EDC export financing services include direct credits to individual foreign buyers, lines of credits arranged with foreign banks, and the discounting of commercial notes received by exporters in payment for their foreign sales.

Under its insurance program, the EDC offers exporters a range of services suited to various types of business activity. The EDC provides global policies which cover an exporter's entire portfolio of foreign sales and specific contract insurance for large individual transactions. The EDC foreign investment insurance policies are available to investors wishing to make direct investments abroad. The corporation also provides performance-related insurance in the form of performance security insurance, consortium insurance and surety bond insurance.

Export Development Corporation guarantees—the corporation's third category of service—are available to exporters for performance and bid security, and to banks and other financial institutions purchasing export trade notes or extending export credits to foreign buyers.

The EDC seeks to maintain an awareness of exporter needs for the design of appropriate and responsive services. As a result, the export financing services provided by EDC have undergone many changes since Parliament last reviewed the corporation in 1978. Since 1978, the EDC has worked within the limits of its current legislative framework to develop the most responsive and complete export financing services possible.

The EDC has made great strides in establishing lines of credit as a means of providing a ready financing vehicle for Canadian goods and services in markets with high export potential. From its modest beginnings in 1978, this EDC facility has grown to the point where, at the end of 1982, 28 active lines of credit were in place in 16 different countries around the world, while 26 other lines of credit were under development.

The EDC lines of credit give foreign buyers quick and easy access to financing for their purchases of Canadian goods and services. Since the borrower is already accepted by EDC and loan documentation is in place, allocations for sales under these lines of credit can be speedily approved and the export transactions successfully concluded.

In January of 1980, the EDC announced that it would provide export financing for engineering services, project feasibility studies and management or other consulting services. These services were previously eligible for insurance cover only. This well publicized extension to the corporation's services was designed to encourage Canadian participation in this growing field of international trade.

The EDC has also concentrated on meeting exporters' needs to receive export financing committments early in commercial contract negotiation stages. To this end, the corporation recently established a framework of standardized management letters designed to let its clients know the exact status of their financial applications. Very early in the negotiation process, the EDC issues a letter of general interest so that a potential buyer is aware that financial assistance is available for his purchase of Canadian goods and services. Subsequent letters outline details of loan terms in conjunction with progression of commercial negotiations.

Another change designed to facilitate contract negotiations was the introduction of the exposure fee in January 1983. The exposure fee addressed the complaints of exporters regarding the variability of F&S charges and the difficulties posed in factoring these charges into the price. The exposure fee has been designed so that it is simple, fair, certain and competitive. It has been well received by the exporting community.

Finally, in August 1983, the corporation streamlined and expanded the forfeiting and note purchase programs to meet exporters' needs for a quick and easy short and medium term financing program. It was recognized that, although the forfeiting facility initiated in 1981 had the right ingredients for a simple and efficient mechanism, it lacked the competitiveness sought after by Canadian companies in times of high interest rates. It was further recognized that the note purchase program in its early format required detailed documentation and the fulfillment of long predisbursement conditions which were not justified, given the quality and size of some transactions.

The revised forfeiting and simplified note purchase facility, differing only in terms of security required, will feature simple documentation, non-recourse to exporters and extensive exporter pricing control. This program is aimed at the small export transaction and through this facility many Canadian companies, which are unable to bear the cost and risk of financing export sales on their own, will be able to develop their export capabilities with effective EDC support.

EDC insurance services have also been modified to be equally responsive to exporter needs. The corporation has adjusted its programs and their delivery mechanisms over the past five years to provide exporters with a wider range of services and to improve the turnaround time for credit approvals.

The EDC responded to exporters' requests for a political risk only insurance policy by introducing global and selective political insurance services. Under global political policies, EDC covers all export sales undertaken by the exporter, while under a selective political policy only, those exports to countries selected by the exporters are covered. These new policies provide exporters with flexibility in choosing the policy most suited to their particular needs and capabilities.

To facilitate exporters' domestic banking arrangements, EDC also introduced an insurance scheme for banks. EDC global comprehensive insurance protection for exporters can now be assigned by an exporter directly to the bank or financial institution which agrees to purchase his insured foreign receivables. This new program enables exporters to receive immediate cash for foreign sales, freeing up their bank lines of credit for future export endeavours.

Not only has EDC introduced new insurance programs for exporters, the corporation has also significantly reduced the turnaround time on credit approvals. In as little as three to seven days, and at times within 24 hours, the EDC is able to provide the necessary credit approval allowing exporters to proceed with shipments of goods virtually without delay.

This excellent service is the result of several refinements EDC has made to the delivery of its insurance programs.

For instance, the corporation has increased delegated authority to its four regional offices for policy liability and credit approval limits so that 90 per cent of the global policy liabilities and 80 per cent of the global credit approval activity takes place in the regional offices. The corporation's Atlantic office has also been upgraded to full regional status so that it can provide this same level of service to companies in Eastern Canada.

In addition, EDC has compiled files on over 20,000 foreign individuals, firms and governments so that it has ready access to credit information. Whenever the corporation has adequate credit information on hand, credit approvals can be given in very short order.

The EDC also enables exporters to pursue export opportunities with full insurance coverage on a timely basis through the provision of discretionary credit limits. The EDC limits are among the highest and most flexible provided by any export credits insurance institution around the world. Exporters are able to proceed with export shipments without obtaining advance approval from EDC as long as they have on hand the credit information required for coverage under their EDC policy.

To familiarize exporters with its excellent new services, EDC publishes a monthly newsletter highlighting its new programs, improved services, available lines of credits, as well as potential export opportunities. With a wide circulation among the export community, EDC Today, which replaced EDC News in May of 1983, is an outstanding example of the corporation's commitment to service delivery.

To provide exporters with the details of its services, the scope of their coverage and how they can be assessed, EDC provides information circulars on each of its services. In addition, circulars are available on more generalized topics. Also, a new publication, entitled EDC At Your Service, was introduced in May 1983, a publication which provides information on how to better use EDC services as well as a broader spectrum of hard-working information relevant to export activities. These different publications are intended to bring EDC services within easy reach of any company interested in pursuing export opportunities.

EDC is also responsive to exporters' needs in the way it administers its programs. The competitiveness of its export support programs is also of prime concern to EDC. The corporation strives to provide highly competitive support for Canadian exporters by tailoring its financing packages to suit the unique features of each transaction considered. At the same time, EDC strives to avoid providing unnecessary subsidies which, ultimately, would be a burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

Competitiveness of financing packages is not uni-dimensional. It depends on more than just the interest rate offered. By providing realistic repayment terms accommodated to the cash flow requirements of the borrower, tailoring appropriate security arrangements and providing down-payment financing, EDC is able to put together attractive financing packages. These custom-made packages have proven to be competitive with the less flexible terms offered by foreign export credit agencies even though the EDC package sometimes carries an interest rate somewhat higher than the foreign package. Recently, EDC has also introduced optional loan currencies so that borrowers may choose the currency most attractive to their needs.

EDC's recent record-setting business volumes speak clearly of the corporation's excellent record of service and responsiveness to Canadian exporters. Despite the tough economic conditions of the past few years, EDC, as a result of its determined support of exporters through the timely and effective provision of its services, has achieved record-level business volumes both in dollar amounts and number of transactions supported. I am sure that in the years ahead EDC will strive to continue this outstanding service.

Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, which we have before us for consideration, is very important to the export community of Canada and to the people who work in industries that are involved in exporting Canadian goods. The bill represents another step in EDC's ongoing maximization of service and responsiveness to exporters in the fulfillment of its mandate. The amendments proposed and adopted by the House of Commons increase EDC's legislative ceilings so that the corporation can maintain beyond 1983 continued and uninterrupted support of exports through its financial services. They also allow EDC to develop a broader range of services and to further improve existing services in its ongoing response to the needs of Canadian exporters. This has been done while providing for continued accountability to Parliament.

I think the corporation should be commended in its efforts to upgrade the services it provides to Canadian exporters in these difficult times, and for the significant successes it has achieved in facilitating Canadian trade. Canadian exporting success is one of the bright spots in the Canadian economy. It is one this government is justifiably proud of. EDC certainly deserves the full support of all honourable senators, and I ask for speedy passage of Bill C-110.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, first of all, I should like to commend Senator Stollery for making such a lucid and interesting presentation of the services that the EDC provides. Due to the fact that he has already mentioned them, I will not repeat them.

When I undertook to speak to this bill, the first thing I had to do was refresh my memory on the purpose or goal of the Export Development Corporation. In short, the purpose, as Senator Stollery says, is to facilitate and develop Canada's export trade within the framework of the Export Development Act. What does that mean in practice?

This means, honourable senators, that the Export Development Corporation provides insurance, and guarantee and loan services which, together with specialized financial and financial consulting services, help Canadian exporters of goods and services to face foreign competition.

Within the limits of its financial capabilities, the Corporation provides services at the international level in such a way that individual operations, enterprises that are competitive with respect to price, quality, delivery and service, are also able to compete favourably as far as financial services are concerned.

The objective is to enhance the economic impact of our exports and to promote Canada's interests by helping to improve its balance of payments and by maximizing and complementing this country's trade policy.

[English]

Canada is a trading nation. Thirty per cent of our GNP is earned through trade, and that figure would be much higher if Canada were still getting its former share of world trade. You must remember that in 1968 Canada's share of world trade was 5.74 per cent. By 1981, this figure had fallen to 3.8 per cent. In 1968, Canadians exported more than the Japanese; yet, today Japan's share of world trade is twice that of Canada's. Between 1970 and 1980, the average annual growth rate of Canadian exports was 4.4 per cent, the lowest of any major industrialized nation and less than half the 10 per cent growth rate that prevailed between 1960 and 1970. In contrast, during the same 1970-80 period, exports grew by an annual average of 6.7 per cent in Italy, 7.5 per cent in the United Kingdom, and 8.9 per cent in Japan.

What all this boils down to is that for a nation that depends as heavily as we do on exports for our economic survival, we are not doing that well. When one considers the link between increased trade and increased productivity, and what that means in terms of increased employment opportunities, it is, indeed, sad to contemplate all that wasted potential. Were we to be more successful in marketing Canadian goods abroad, wondrous would be the effects on our economy. For example, were we only to succeed in eliminating the $13 billion in fully-manufactured goods that we suffered last year in our trade balance, we would end up creating 250,000 new jobs.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association estimates that 2.7 million jobs could be created by simply regaining our 1970 share of world trade. The importance of trade to the economic welfare of our country is manifest. It is as manifest today as it was when the EDC was created. That is why the EDC was created—to help us secure new markets for our products and services. However, that is not what has happened over the years. Instead of growing, our share of world trade has diminished.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the fact is that our share of international trade has diminished steadily since 1970, and that about half of our present unemployment is due to the fact that we have lost our fair share of world markets. So, what kind of remedy should we be looking for? We must do everything in our power to help Canadian enterprises generally, and especially small businesses, to get their fair share of world markets. The very basic question arises whether the Export Development Corporation provides a satisfactory response to the needs of Canadians, of our businessmen and owners of small businesses, and whether it is able to help them find international export markets.

We must also ask ourselves whether Parliament has the means to examine the measures taken by the Corporation, to make suggestions and especially to find out whether results have been satisfactory. The EDC must not only do its work well, it must also be fair and strive towards one objective in particular: to recover our position on world markets.

[English]

Bill C-110, as originally introduced, had two major thrusts. The first was to expand the operational capacity of the EDC. In doing so, the government sought to expand the borrowing capacity of the corporation without further reference to Parliament and without need for further pay-in capital. The government sought as well to increase the amount of high-risk or bad business transactions that the cabinet might approve from $3.5 billion to $10 billion in the case of insurance, and from $2.5 billion to $10 billion in the case of loans and loan guarantees. Any losses made under such circumstances were to be paid from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, without future reference to Parliament.

The second major thrust of the bill was to alter the current structure and powers of the board of directors. The number of directors increases from 12 to 15, with the requirement being dropped that six of these directors be public servants.

The amendment on accountability was the subject of protracted debate. On this score, the opposition was successful in having a specific clause included in the bill, which would require the annual report and financial statements of the EDC to be referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs annually for examination.

[Translation]

In addition, the official Opposition succeeded in having the Corporation's borrowing authority restricted to ten times its paid-in capital instead of authorized capital. In addition, the authorized capital requested was cut back to $1.5 billion from $2 billion, which means that the Corporation's loan capability has been reduced to $15 billion from $20 billion.

Furthermore, the amount provided to enable the Government to grant loans and guarantees the Corporation is unwilling to provide was cut back from $20 billion to $13 billion.

In brief, these amendments, will cost us $44.5 billion, that is, $17.5 billion less than the $62 billion ceiling originally requested in the Bill.

[English]

If we were successful in bringing about major amendments to the first thrust, we were not as fortunate in the area of the restructuring of the board. So, as it comes to us, the bill, though it does change the make-up of the board, does not do enough to ensure proper and efficient participation of the private sector.

The government amendment removes the requirement that six directors be public servants. It does not, however, guarantee a certain minimum representation from the private sector. As a matter of fact, the government has indicated that there will continue to be at least six public servants on the board.

We would agree that there should probably be someone on the board from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce; someone from the Department of Finance; one or two officials of the Export Development Corporation; but, other than that, in our view, the board should be composed of representatives of the private sector. It is essential that this corporation be directed by hard-nosed businessmen in addition to the public servants mentioned.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Also hard-nosed.

Senator Charbonneau: That is the subject of another debate.

Senator Frith: We will discuss that in committee.

[Translation]

Senator Charbonneau: In its report entitled "Intervention and Efficiency", the Economic Council of Canada had the following to say on page 51:

[Senator Charbonneau.]

> Canada is perhaps the country with the least private-sector participation in export financing decisions. The governments of most other industrial nations encourage bank participation in this area, more so than does the government of Canada. In six of the industrialized countries examined, the supply of primary financing is left completely in the hands of the private sector, which may, however, resort to public rediscounting facilities (Table D-1). In most of the 17 countries studied, the negotiations for granting export credit are also left to the private sector. This is not the case in Canada, where direct negotiations take place between the EDC and the foreign buyer. When the banks are invited to participate jointly with the EDC in long-term financing, they often complain of being denied access to all the information and to the negotiations, and of being presented with ready-made proposals.

[English]

In short, the private sector must participate more fully in the decision-making process of the EDC.

Many operating expenses of the corporation could be absorbed by the private sector and a lot of duplication avoided. I know from personal experience that this certainly applies to insurance coverage. The corporation's profit of $1 million on capital of $691 million, representing a note of one-tenth of 1 per cent, would no doubt be increased, thus ensuring a better return on capital invested by the government.

[Translation]

At one time, the Corporation's role consisted mainly in insuring exporters with accounts receivable involving a foreign country or purchasers of or agents for Canadian merchandise in foreign countries. The exporter would purchase an insurance policy from the EDC to cover all export contracts concluded with various countries and agents. So until 1970, the EDC had been basically acting as an insurance company. Only subsequently did it start lending money.

It is my view that perhaps the Corporation should be mainly concerned with providing insurance. According to the Economic Council of Canada, which has looked into this side of the question, the Corporation should concentrate more on insurance and re-insurance of export credit, which was its original role.

It should insure and re-insure exporters, so that after selling goods and services on credit, they need not fear a situation where their purchasers would prove to be insolvent.

Once merchandise has been shipped abroad, it is very difficult to recover. There is also the possibility of having to sue in a foreign court. Finally, the business is obliged to seek investment capital elsewhere.

There are risks involved in selling to a foreign purchaser that are totally different from those involved in sales in one's own country. That is why exporters and financial institutions are demanding insurance policies, and thus the Corporation should be more active in this area.

The ECC recommends making more frequent use of the private sector to insure exporters and re-insure insurers, so that exporters can be certain their shipments will be paid for.

[English]

This bill indicates that the government, by giving it the proper power to do so, would like to see the EDC take to heart the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada with regard to insurance and re-insurance. It does not, however, constitute a directive to the EDC and there is, therefore, no guarantee that the EDC will get out of the area of direct insurance and leave that and much of the reinsurance to the private sector.

• (1500)

That is what we would have preferred to see because that is what we are convinced would have been better over the long haul. But time will tell whether the EDC is properly disposed to move gradually towards providing export credit reinsurance, leaving the field of insurance proper to the private sector. It may also choose to serve as insurance of last resort to close any gaps left by the private sector in the supply of export credit insurance.

As one who has for many years earned his living in the field of corporate insurance, I feel I can assert, without fear of contradiction, that the private sector can more efficiently tend to the insurance needs of exporters than the government. I would, therefore, view it as wise of the EDC to move over and let the private sector occupy this field.

This bill will not solve our trade problem, but it can serve to make the EDC a more effective tool in the recapturing of our proper share of international trade. Too many exporters have accused the EDC of being too slow and fussy, of not checking credits properly, of giving too small coverage on insurance and of being generally too difficult to get along with.

I am not sure that is going to change, but, at least, with annual accountability having been exacted from the government, Parliament will have a chance to oversee the corporation's performance.

Professor André Raynauld, a former member of the Economic Coucil of Canada, has said of the EDC that it is:

> —rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire, and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

We on this side hope that these criticisms, if valid, will be heard and corrected. We, too, want to see exports increased. We want that because we firmly believe it is the only way out of our present unemployment problem.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the Government is wrong when it claims that this bill, even in its amended form, is a panacea. Far more will be needed to make any visible improvement in our trade position. The essential thing, in my view, is that the Government will have to change its philosophy if it wants to improve our trading situation, or better still, a new Government will have to realize that the private sector is capable of creating jobs through its exports, and that no permanent jobs will be created unless Canada once more becomes a safe place to invest, to work and to do business.

Each and every one of us, whoever we are and whatever our business, must change our outlook. We must seek excellence. We must start today to conquer our markets, with the conviction that time is of the essence. Our business leaders must realize that now is the time to act.

Canadians must watch for any opportunities that come their way. Our businessmen are too patient in this respect. We must convince them that it is time to act.

[English]

Once having convinced the government of the urgency to act, it will then behoove it and all its agencies, the EDC included, to step back and allow the private sector to seek markets agressively. The government must free enterprise and where it insists upon lending a hand, it must make very sure that the bureaucratic vehicle it uses to achieve this purpose does not become a hindrance.

Senator Marshall: No truer words were ever spoken.

Senator Charbonneau: Thank you. Except for the increase in borrowing authority, and a change in the number of board members, this bill does not address itself to the fundamental role of the EDC.

Honourable senators, it would have been more useful for the government to direct its attention to the new role which the EDC has, over the years, ascribed to itself. The EDC would be a lot more useful, in my opinion, were it to restrict its operation to those which it was originally intended to carry out, namely those having to deal with reinsurance.

[Translation]

Hon. Fernand E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I would like to join Senator Charbonneau in congratulating Senator Stollery on his presentation, which was very clear and precise.

Senator Charbonneau, in referring to Mr. André Raynauld, identified him as a former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. I would like to add that he was also a member of the Legislature of Quebec. I think this fact is important enough to be mentioned here.

I now have a question for Senator Stollery concerning Clause 10 of the Bill, where it says that Section 21 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

> The accounts of the Corporation shall be audited by the Auditor General of Canada.

My question is: Who was auditing the Corporation if it was not the Auditor General of Canada?

Senator Stollery: Senator Leblanc, would you perhaps repeat the question?

Senator Leblanc: I am referring to Clause 10 of Bill C-110 which refers to the appointment of an auditor. It says in Clause 10 that Article 21 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

The accounts of the Corporation shall be audited by the Auditor General of Canada.

The question was: Who was doing the auditing before? If it was the Auditor General, I do not see why an amendment is necessary.

Senator Stollery: My answer to that is that I suppose it was the Auditor General of Canada. But this is the kind of question that can be asked in committee, because I intend to move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

[English]

It is quite possible that there is something that I am not aware of; therefore the question of who was the auditor of the EDC is an appropriate matter to be explored.

[Translation]

Senator Leblanc: Yes, I understand the situation, but unfortunately, not being on the committee, I will not be there to hear the reply.

In any case, I have another question: Will there be any statistics indicating who is benefiting from the Export Development Corporation? Which Canadians are benefiting? Is it businesses or individuals? Are small and medium-sized businesses benefiting as well? Do we have any statitistics by province, to establish which provinces are benefiting the most? Is Quebec getting any benefits out of this? Quebec has a Department of External Trade, and there is another one that overlaps, both being oriented towards external trade. I wonder whether Quebec is really benefiting from our Export Development Corporation.

Senator Stollery: Senator Leblanc, I also assume we have statistics and that they will be transmitted to the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I think that is the best place to table them. I am sure the province of Quebec, which has many exporters, benefits a great deal from the corporation but as I said before, honourable senators, I think the best place to discuss the matter is at a meeting of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Senator Charbonneau: With your leave, honourable senators, without knowing the exact figures, I think that Quebec has used the Export Development Corporation a great deal. You mentioned small and medium-sized businesses. I can say that, for instance, when you get a project that involves many different products and services and so on, even if the project is set up by an agency, as you will probably see in the statistics, the fact remains that although a fairly strong national corporation will set up the contract, with the help of the EDC, you will then find that there are still a lot of sub-contracts that are directed towards small and medium-sized businesses. Unfortunately, I do not have enough statistics in my notes to give you further information, but I can certainly state that small and medium-sized businesses do benefit to a considerable extent.

Senator Leblanc: I think the best answer was given by Senator Stollery, which is that full and detailed answers to any questions we might wish to raise here this afternoon will be given in committee. It is probably useless to pursue the matter further, since we will be able to do so in committee.

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I have a brief question for Senator Charbonneau. He invited me to ask my question at the conclusion of his speech. My intervention during that part of his speech was that he was complaining about Canada's performance in world trade, and about the fact that Canada has lost some share of the market to which he referred generally, but not precisely.

In keeping with Senator Charbonneau's reputation, if you wish, or image of being fair in these situations, I wonder if he would like to assert or at least acknowledge that since the recession began, Canada's international trade has held up better than any other country in the western world as a percentage, however you want to measure it, and that indeed our balance of payments have increased rather significantly throughout that period.

Senator Charbonneau: In answer to the Leader of the Government, first of all, I was not complaining; I was stating facts, and was trying to say that perhaps the EDC is a tool that could help us recapture the world markets, or at least the percentage of the total overall world trade that we have lost.

Senator Olson did not quote any statistics except in general terms, but I would be happy to receive those figures if he has them. I have not seen them recently.

Senator Stollery: Honourable Senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform the house that if the Honourable Senator Stollery speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Stollery: I simply wish to thank Senator Charbonneau for his informed remarks.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Senator Stollery moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders which was presented on Tuesday, September 27, 1983.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable Senators, I am afraid that once again I have a rather dull subject to bring to the attention of the Senate, but it has become necessary to carry out considerable revision of the Rules of the Senate. The Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has done just that, the result being the report which was presented on September 27 last. That report was included in Hansard for that day, and is also contained in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

I should like to go over the effect of that report with you as quickly as I can, because obviously it does need some explanation.

Paragraph 1 of the report deals with Rule 67(1)(a) and, in effect, recommends a reduction in membership from 20, with a quorum of five, to 12, with a quorum of four for the following committees: Standing Rules and Orders, Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Foreign Affairs, National Finance, Transport and Communications, Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Banking, Trade and Commerce and Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

That recommendation is in conformity with the views expressed by the leaders and was passed by the committee. Since that time, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Senator Graham, has told me that he felt that the number was too small for his Committee because he has three subcommittees. He feels that his committee membership should be 15. Senator Graham is away on official public business today, but I told him that I would bring his concern to the attention of the Senate. He feels that a membership of 15, which was also discussed during the committee, would be satisfactory to him.

In sub-paragraph (b)1 it is recommended that the word "immigration" be removed because it properly belongs under the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. You will have a little difficulty finding that committee on the list because it is not yet in the rules. Some of you will recall that there was an amendment to the rules in December of last year, which changed the name of the Committee on Health, Welfare and Science to the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. That is to be effective only at the beginning of a new session. If you look in the Rules of the Senate for that item, you will not find it. However, the word "immigration" properly belongs under the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

● (1520)

In subparagraph (c) the subjects "pipelines," "transmission lines" and "energy transmission" are deleted because they properly belong under the new Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Under subparagraph (d) "consumer affairs" is removed from Banking, Trade and Commerce because it is more properly placed under Social Affairs, as shown in paragraph 6 of this report.

With respect to subparagraph (e), "natural resources and mines" is also removed from Banking, Trading and Commerce because those subjects properly belong under Energy and Natural Resources.

In subparagraph (f) the responsibilities of the Committee on Agriculture are enlarged to include "fisheries and forestry" and, very importantly, the Canadian Wheat Board.

Paragraph 2 of the report recommends that Rule 68 be reworded to clarify the fact that both the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition or their deputies, may attend committee meetings ex officio.

Paragraph 3 of the report amends rule 5 by adding the definition of "Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate" and "Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate". According to our present rules, they do not exist.

With respect to paragraph 4, rule 70 deals with the quora of committees, and as they are already set out in the recommendation in paragraph 4, it is not necessary that that be a separate section. Rule 70 is deleted and rule 70A renumbered.

Paragraph 5 deals with the responsibilities of subcommittees and the composition thereof, and recommends the following new subsection 77(5):

> Subcommittees shall be composed of not more than half the number of members of a Select Committee, three of whom shall constitute a quorum.

Consequently, the following subsections are renumbered.

Paragraph 6 merely adds to the responsibilities of the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology the items that are listed under subparagraph (a), namely, fitness and amateur sports; employment and immigration; consumer affairs; and youth affairs.

Subparagraph (b) further amends the original amendment which set up the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources by substituting a new subparagraph (n) listing the responsibilities of that committee. The third report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, which was adopted on December 9, 1982, recommended the addition of subparagraph 67(1)(n) respecting a Senate Committee on Energy.

All these changes are lengthy but not terribly significant except for the fundamental changes in the strength of committees and of the quorum of each committee. These rules become effective only with a new session. Our committee felt, and the leaders concurred, that it would be wise to have the report presented in the chamber so that honourable senators would have a chance to look at it and, if they agree, adopt it. When a new session begins these changes will be printed in the Rules of the Senate, and they will facilitate the handling of our business in this chamber.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, since this report was, to some extent, put forward due to a motion that I put before the Senate on June 28, I should like, without debating the report, to add a few footnotes for your consideration.

In Debates of the Senate of June 28, 1983, I am reported as saying—and probably rightly so:

> The meeting was well attended and concerned itself with the problems caused by the increasing number of committees and the decreasing number of senators attending committee meetings.

If I used those words, I should have been taken to task because they could lead to misinterpretation. I probably should have said "the decreasing number of senators able to attend committee meetings."

I should like to add today that the expression "decreasing number," as honourable senators know, is exacerbated by the number of vacancies we have in this chamber, which, as of today, is, I believe, 19.

I note that there is complete silence on the second part of my motion respecting a committee on national defence. With the reduction in the number of members to 12, the Foreign Affairs Committee still being assigned the subject of defence. If there is a subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee dealing with defence, I find it extremely difficult to conceive that two major studies could be carried on simultaneously by such a committee. In addition, there is complete silence on Senator Flynn's proposal for a review of the procedure respecting the substitution of members on committees. I note as well, that Senator Marshall's proposal was considered, and the establishment of a new Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry is recommended.

The disparity between agriculture and fisheries is such, as far as personal expertise, knowledge and regional representation are concerned, that in the absence of any action on Senator Flynn's proposal to make the substitution of members easier, it might be difficult at times to find a committee that is equally capable to proceed on matters of western agriculture and matters of eastern fisheries. We may be adding to our miseries.

These are just footnotes which I would draw to the attention of the Senate.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, to lend more importance to what Senator Molson referred to as a "dull subject," I would point out that I do not think it is dull. I believe it is a good subject for debate in the chamber, and I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I would thank Senator Marshall for the postponement of his motion to adjourn this debate. I recognize that on a Tuesday afternoon attendance is not as good as it might be. I hope that will be a topic of discussion in the future.

Senator Marshall: The quality is good.

Senator Benidickson: I was particularly interested in the remarks of Senator Molson whom we all admire. We appreciate that from time to time, over a long period of time, he has given us his independent analysis of the rules of the Senate. We also appreciate his judicial outlook on aspects of our proceedings.

Honourable senators, having been in Parliament in one place or another for 38 years, I am especially and naturally interested in the management of the two houses of Parliament and particularly the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. In practical terms, it is the housekeeping committee of the Senate. It deals with our concerns for the welfare and administration of not only our little personal staff but all the general staff in the Senate section of the Centre Block of Parliament Hill. It is, therefore, a very important committee.

I regret that, for rather good reasons, I was unable to attend the last two meetings of this committee, but its importance I value.

The chairman of the committee who, Senator Molson has pointed out, is unable to be here this afternoon, has not spoken to me about comments I might make about the report this afternoon.

But having been a member of the House of Commons Management Committee, when I was a cabinet minister, and being a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, I very strongly regret the former situation in the other place where the committee was comprised only of cabinet ministers. Nowadays the situation is much more democratic. The committee membership includes members of the opposition and "backbenchers". I believe that both are having some influence over there and are coming up with ideas on Commons management.

I would hate to see a reduction in the influence numerically of senators who are members of the Internal Economy Committee. It seems incredible to me that a quorum of four should be allowed to make decisions about the management of the Senate. Like others, I deplore that our membership in the Senate is reduced by 19 vacancies. Nonetheless, four committee members, under and with the guidance of staff, should not decide the destiny of our own staffs and staffs of the Senate overall and make decisions which could influence our relationships around this gracious section of the Centre Block, the Senate of Canada. I think all of us are concerned about who works for us and the salaries paid for all categories of work around this building.

I do not think the quorum should be reduced to four, nor the membership reduced to 12. I believe Senator Molson said that the present chairman suggested that perhaps at least 15 would be a satisfactory membership. I do not think that we, as a group of 80, should ever subscribe to a quorum of four in this committee which might have a great bearing on the destiny and welfare not of ourselves, but of our staffs, who are so important to the efficiency and well-being of senators and the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at this stage, I should like to spend only a few minutes participating in the discussion about the very important change to our committee system, which has been suggested by the committee.

I would extend my congratulations to the committee and to its chairman in bringing in this report. I have looked at it in some detail. I also attended at least one very important meeting of the committee when a number of the matters just dealt with by Senators Lafond and Benidickson were discussed in great detail.

I should, perhaps, leave it to the chairman of the committee, who moved adoption of the committee's report, to deal with some of the details involved in that, based on the opinions expressed in committee with respect to, for example, the quorum and the other terms of reference of some of the committees.

With that understanding, I should like to make one or two comments about the whole general thrust of committee re-structuring. I think it is important that we perform, in a far more visible, higher profile, the duties and functions of the Senate.

The Senate came into existence in the first place in order to have a bicameral system of government where there was a balance in the event of a change in the demographic structure of Canada or in the event of there being an imbalance in the input from the various regions of this country at any time. In those circumstances, it was felt that this chamber could, in fact, perform a very useful service in providing meaningful input in the legislative process to try to ameliorate that imbalance. There is no question about that in my mind nor, I am sure, in the minds of other honourable senators.

If that is not sufficient, that having happened 116 or 117 years ago, it was indeed considered by the Supreme Court of Canada only a very short time ago and, at that time, they reiterated in their judgment that this reason was just as valid today as it was then. Indeed, if we had forgotten that part of history, it also reminded us again that, if it had not been for that provision, the Fathers of Confederation would not have reached an agreement. Therefore, it is extremely important that we raise the profile of the Senate, both in terms of visibility and in terms of those people in the country who believe that there is a disequalibrium in the route to the legislative process. This is my view and I think it is shared by the members of the committee who looked at this whole question.

From the structure that has been proposed to us by Senator Molson, I would perceive that we could enhance that function and perform it very well. Let me explain: For example, there will be questions that come up from time to time—there are some that are with us now—of a very significant regional dimension in some area of the country. In my view, the Senate would do this country a great service if it would pick up those questions as they arise and set up a special committee wherein the focus would be on the specific problem that needs to be dealt with.

Quite frankly, in my view, whenever a Senate committee takes on a specific task, they probably do a better job than any other forum in this country, including Royal Commissions, of finding solutions based on the views of the people who will be affected. We should, therefore, be prepared to accept that concept of Senate committee work in the future. While there may be disagreement or dissension as to the kind of committee structure that is most appropriate to perform the desired function, I believe from my experience and from several vantage points, including that of the Leader of the Government, that when a specific task is known and there is an indication obtained by the whips from notices sent out as to which senators wish to serve on what committees, that we should take the next step and ask for a commitment by a relatively small number of senators from both sides of the house for a priority of their time and attention to the task allotted. In that way, a better result is achieved in a much shorter time. In many cases, timing is extremely important in dealing with these problems and I hope that senators will agree, as we go into the next session that, if we approve this new structure, there will probably be a larger number of special committees set up and specific tasks assigned to those committees as they arise.

For the reasons I have just explained, I am firmly of the opinion that, if it is done in that way, then it is better done. In addition to that, when setting up the standing committees, we should ensure that not only regional and party interests are served but that the membership of a particular committee includes senators who have a specific interest in the economic or social sectors involved in the particular subject matter under discussion.

Therefore, as you contemplate passing this committee's report, I hope you will consider my remarks. I believe it is an excellent restructuring of the membership of these committees in terms of the recommendations coming forward regarding the amended terms of reference.

These recommendations, of course, do not deal with the special committees. We can, of course, agree and pass the terms of reference for any special committee. As I look into the future, if we are going to perform these tasks as I have outlined them, there will be far greater use of special committees for special tasks. I would, therefore, highly recommend that senators seriously consider this report in order that we may have it ready to become operative in the next session of this Parliament.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, just before the debate is adjourned, I would like to add that, in discussion, it was felt that, in future, the Senate would be better served to have a loose-leaf book of rules instead of having them reprinted every second year, as we have been doing. Your committee, therefore, has decided that the next issue of the rules will be in a loose-leaf form. This was not part of the report but I hope that will meet with your approval.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, if I understand correctly, at our last meeting last Thursday, the Speaker of the Senate reported on a resolution that had been adopted by the Senate and transmitted to the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires here in Ottawa, and he mentioned that the latter had refused to accept the document.

That was the information we were given Thursday. The leaders of both parties said: What are we going to do now? Well, they would decide, they would discuss it.

After a quick look at the Senate Rules, I wondered whether in the course of their discussions, the Government and Opposition Leaders could look at Rule 7(2), which says:

> (2) On the first day of each session of Parliament . . . a Committee of Privileges, consisting of all the senators present during the session, is appointed to consider the orders and customs of the Senate and privileges of Parliament.

If we agree that refusal to accept a resolution of the Upper Chamber constitutes "a breach of document", I wonder whether Rule 7(2) would not apply. Perhaps the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition could take a look at this rule.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there may be some confusion about two resolutions we discussed, one concerning the resolution transmitted by the Speaker to the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires and another resolution concerning the rights of Francophones in Manitoba. Those are the subjects we decided to discuss.

I think that the refusal to accept the resolution transmitted by the Speaker was not a topic of discussion. It was only a matter of verifying or clarifying the question.

Regarding the possibility that a committee could examine the question raised about the refusal to accept the resolution as a question of privilege is of course a point that could be considered.

First of all, regarding the fact whether or not this is a question of privilege, my feeling is that it probably is not a question of privilege, because normally a question of privilege refers to anything that prevents Members of Parliament from carrying out their duties.

I repeat, this is just my initial feeling, and I would say that Senator Deschatelets is far more experienced in this area than I am. We could discuss this matter with the Leader of the Opposition and with Senator Deschatelets.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 6, 1983, at 2 p.m.

MANITOBA

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF FRENCH-SPEAKING MINORITY—MOTION ADOPTED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask leave to move, seconded by the Honourable Duff Roblin, P.C., Acting Leader of the Opposition, a motion respecting the rights of the French-speaking minority in the province of Manitoba.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: By way of preliminary remarks, I should advise the honourable members of the Senate that a great deal of discussion, consultation and agreement has taken place with respect to the wording of this motion between the leaders of the three parties in the other place, and obviously that discussion has been far wider than simply among those particular personalities.

Therefore, I move:

That whereas a fundamental purpose of the Constitution of Canada is to protect the basic rights of all Canadians, including Aboriginal peoples, English-speaking and French-speaking minorities, religious, ethnic and other minority groups;

Whereas the Constitution contains provisions respecting the status and use of the English and French languages in Canada;

Whereas the Manitoba Act, 1870 was enacted by the Parliament of Canada to establish the province of Manitoba and is part of the Constitution;

Whereas in 1870 Parliament provided special protection for the use of the English and French languages in Manitoba under section 23 of that Act;

Whereas the Supreme Court of Canada, on December 13, 1979, reaffirmed this constitutional protection under section 23 of the Manitoba Act, 1870;

Whereas the Constitution is the supreme law of Canada and is binding upon Parliament and the legislatures of all provinces;

Whereas it is in the national interest that the language rights of the English-speaking and French-speaking minorities in Canada be respected and protected in a spirit of tolerance and civility, amity and generosity;

Whereas an agreement was reached on May 16, 1983 by the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba, with the participation of the Société Franco-Manitobaine, to modify the Manitoba Act, 1870, so that the Government and Legislative Assembly of Manitoba can fulfill effectively their constitutional obligations under section 23 of that Act;

Whereas it is in the national interest to support continued efforts by the Government and Legislative Assembly of Manitoba to fulfill effectively their constitutional obligations and protect the rights of the French-speaking minority of the province;

(1) the House endorses, on behalf of all Canadians, the essence of the agreement reached by the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba, with the participation of the Société Franco-Manitobaine, on May 16, 1983, to modify the Manitoba Act, 1870;

(2) the House invites the Government and Legislative Assembly of Manitoba to take action as expeditiously as possible in order to fulfill their constitutional obligations and protect effectively the rights of the French-speaking minority of the province.

There has been a great deal of discussion and consultation about the precise wording of this resolution, and I highly recommend it to all honourable senators. I suggest that we endorse this resolution this afternoon with minimum discussion so that this matter can be resolved to the maximum satisfaction of everyone involved.

I also believe that, although the part of the country from which I come is not directly affected by this particular resolution, there is a rather intense feeling respecting this matter all over western Canada. As all honourable senators are aware, there is some misunderstanding of what is intended by the agreement between the two levels of government, and it would be well, I think, for the unity of this country if we were to deal with this motion in the way I have suggested so that the governments involved can quietly and efficiently get on with achieving what was intended, not only in the Manitoba Act of 1870, but in the agreement that the two levels of government have subsequently reached.

I would, therefore, highly recommend that we adopt this motion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have been authorized to say that I will be the only speaker on this subject on this side of the house.

I am the senator from Red River and have no wish to stand aside from the great issues that are comprised in this resolution and which are racking public and private counsels of the people of my native province.

Briefly, by necessity and most probably inadequately, I must say something to let this chamber know and perhaps feel the depth of the sincerity and the intensity of the political and emotional struggle in which Manitoba is engaged. These calm precincts are far removed from the great debates taking place in my native province, and it would be hard to expect members of this chamber to understand the full force of what is, indeed, the most divisive issue visited upon my province in my lifetime, but, honourable senators, I hope you will approach the issue with that degree of concern and of reticence that members of a family extend to one of their own who is in turmoil.

On the surface, the issue is the issue of language rights, and we are certainly all aware of that. What we may not all understand is that underneath the debate has as much to do with process as it has to do with principle, perhaps even more. I am compelled to say with sadness and deep regret that those in Manitoba who are responsible for the process may not have helped the principle; indeed, they may have harmed it. Therein lies the tragedy.

Sincere and steadfast opinion is not to be despised, especially when you do not agree with it. It is clear that the Manitoba language question is now a matter of serious national concern, and I cannot dispute the power the federal legislature and the right of this Senate to discuss and debate the resolution that we have before us now.

The language of the resolution is qualified in a supremely significant way. It does not attempt to ordain. It expresses profound concern. It outlines a clear wish. It invites, but it does not command. Such an attitude is not only discreet and wise, but it is, indeed, the part of wisdom.

The federal Parliament, this Senate and this resolution leave the ultimate decision in these matters where it most properly belongs—in the hearts and minds of the people of Manitoba. This wise regard for the federal nature of our country and this wise regard for the feelings and responsibilities of the people of Manitoba surely broaden the support that we may expect for this resolution.

The federal Parliament offers its anxious counsel but it leaves to the people of Manitoba the responsibility to decide. Therefore, let this resolution pass.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-152

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45 (1) (e), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report the subject-matter of the Bill C-152, intituled: "An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

[Senator Roblin.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the house leader did me the courtesy of advising me of his intention to propose this resolution. I should like to have an opportunity to reflect on its advisability, so I would respectfully decline granting leave.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps this could be considered as notice for next Tuesday, if that is satisfactory to Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: Yes.

Senator Frith: It will appear under "Motions" next Tuesday.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 11, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR CANADA

REFUSAL TO PUBLISH AUDIT REPORT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order and to ask a question.

On Tuesday, October 4, subsequent to a question raised by my colleague, Senator Marshall, on the refusal of Air Canada to publish an audit report, I asked a supplementary question and was given an undertaking by the Leader of the Government that he would obtain an answer. I received some sympathy for my question and an undertaking to try to obtain an answer. I point out, honourable senators, that neither the question nor the answer appears in Hansard of that day.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not pretend to answer for the people who have responsibility for that, and, unfortunately, they do not have an opportunity to do so. Now that Senator Nurgitz has drawn this matter to the attention of the Senate, I will convey his inquiry to the people in charge of taking some remedial action, which I am sure they will do. Perhaps Senator Nurgitz would be helpful in assisting them to get the exact words in the right places.

Senator Nurgitz: I probably could not do that, but I would certainly be satisfied to have the undertaking of the Leader of the Government that he will seek an answer with respect to a revised edition of that report, one that would not disclose information commercially prejudicial to the airline.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I understood that and, while I am not ready to reveal all of the workings of my office, Senator Nurgitz will understand that people from my office heard his request for that kind of expurgated report. I believe a request went forward on Tuesday.

Notwithstanding what may or may not have appeared in Hansard, I will try to get the answer. I thought it was a reasonable question and I will get either what Senator Marshall asked for—that is, the whole report—or one with certain information withheld.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSITION OF LEGAL ADVISER TO PENSION REVIEW BOARD—VACANCY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and has to do with a complaint from many veterans and organizations across the country that the position of Legal Adviser to the Pension Review Board, which is a very important position in a very important agency having to do with the adjudication of disability pensions, was let go two years ago, and no appointment has been made since.

● (1420)

I do not know why this would happen. I wonder whether the Leader of the Government could find out from the Minister of Veterans Affairs when that appointment will be made. Perhaps he could stress the importance of the appointment, in view of the age of the veterans and the consequent need to process applications for disability pensions as quickly as possible.

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I suppose what I ought to do is take the question as notice. I will ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs for a reply so that we can get his point of view on the circumstances that led up to the situation about which Senator Marshall is complaining. Although it is sometimes dangerous to say anything in advance of getting that sort of information, by way of a preliminary comment I would say that I do not believe that the Pension Review Board would be left in any sort of disadvantageous position with respect to dealing with the applications of the veterans. In other words, some alternative service must have been provided fairly expeditiously for them. Otherwise this government—and the conscientious Minister of Veterans Affairs—would have remedied the situation a long while ago. Nevertheless, I will seek that information.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I accepted the answer of the Leader of the Government until he said that there is a reason for it. There is no reason for it.

Senator Olson: There is no reason that you know of.

Hon. David Walker: It must be a crown corporation.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I think the Leader of the Government must also remember that he cannot maintain that everything is fine. I could tell him that the turnover of positions as a result of the move to Charlottetown is causing some concern. I will, however, accept that the question is being taken as notice and hope that I get a reply.

THE CABINET

NEWFOUNDLAND REPRESENTATION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question about another important appointment in the government. As the Leader of the Government and all honourable senators are aware, there is a vacant ministerial appointment for the Province of Newfoundland. Without mentioning anything about the reasons why the minister who was appointed has resigned that position, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government can find out if the Prime Minister has decided on a replacement? I ask my question because the Leader of the Government knows the importance to Newfoundland of having a minister in the cabinet, particularly when conditions in that province are so bad economically.

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot even say that I will seek a reply to that question. All I can do is give an undertaking to Senator Marshall that I will convey his sentiments to the office of the Prime Minister.

MINISTER OF STATE FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Minister of State for Social Development. I was delighted, today, to hear about the Association of Social Sciences. Perhaps the minister is aware of this himself, but I am asking him to confirm whether it is correct that he is going to be the honoured recipient of a degree from the Association of Social Sciences.

When I first knew him, the minister was a very hearty young man and called himself Jakey. He said, "Call me Jakey"; I remember that well. Then it was "Jake"; then it was "Jack". When he receives this A.S.S. degree, he will be known as the Honourable Jack A.S.S. I think that is appropriate, under certain circumstances.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I have never heard such a vile remark in my life.

Senator Walker: What kind of remark?

Senator Austin: A vile remark—your favourite kind, Senator Walker. I put you on notice that I will henceforth treat you accordingly.

Senator Walker: Honourable senators, here is a cocky young man who can't take it; he never could and he can't now. All one has to do is prick that skin of egotism and get underneath it to find that he is just a coward and a baby.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, it is contrary to the rules to make personal references to honourable senators in this chamber. Senator Walker abuses the rules. He is an abuse of the process of this house and, quite frankly, he is an abuse of the substance of this house.

Senator Walker: Thanks for the lecture.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): You need it.

Senator Walker: There's the other one. What a government we have, honourable senators, with those two people leading it. It is a farce.

CANDIAN WHEAT BOARD

VISITS OF MINISTER OF STATE ABROAD

Hon. Joseph-Phillippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board concerning his recent visits to China and the German Democratic Republic. Could the minister explain the real purpose of those visits that necessitated his absence from this chamber? We missed his presence here. Can he also tell us whether any tangible benefits for Canada's prairie region resulted from those visits?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, in reply to the honourable senator, in recent weeks I have had the privilege, on behalf of the Canadian government, to visit Romania, the German Democratic Republic and, more recently, China. Such trips are undertaken as a means of promoting Canadian trade, recognizing the role of good customers in the grain trade in endeavouring to improve our standing in overseas markets.

Romania has not been a large purchaser of Canadian grain. Historically she has been an important agricultural country. However, from time to time she has required imports of grain, although the production of grain in that country has been increasing. We were shown their research facilities, and some of them are excellent. Their work appears to be very advanced.

In the course of our discussions we learned that there is a possibility of our obtaining a long-term grain agreement with Romania. Those discussions would be at the initial stages. However, they indicated an interest and, contrary to the belief held in many parts of the world, Romania seems to be in a stronger financial position than we had been led to believe. Interestingly enough, we recently sold approximately 100,000 tonnes of grain in that market through the private grain trade. That consisted of 70,000 tonnes of wheat and 30,000 tonnes of rye.

Romania has been successful in developing winter barley and our delegation was considerably interested in the possibilities of winter barley as a crop for western Canada. We have winter wheat, and winter barley would be something new. So far, winter barley is a crop that has been grown in climates that are warmer than Canada's, but it has interesting possibilities.

From Romania we went to the German Democratic Republic, where, on behalf of the Government of Canada, I was able to sign a joint trade agreement. During our stay in the German Democratic Republic, the representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board and the G.D.R. import agencies were able to sign a three-year grain agreement for the sale by Canada to the German Democratic Republic of one million tonnes per year of what is mainly feed grain. That is a large and important agreement which, to Canada, is worth approximately $500 million.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Argue: I might say that by signing that agreement we have obtained 50 per cent of the market for feed grains in the German Democratic Republic. That is most satisfying for any Canadian interested in the development of our export markets.

Following that visit, we were recently in China, returning on Monday of this week.

• (1430)

I have not enjoyed international travel over the years. As a member of the House of Commons I sometimes had an opportunity to travel. On those occasions I usually said to myself, "I think I have more important things to do at home, and I am not interested in travel." I think that was a mistake.

However, it was my first visit to China. We were treated very well. I can tell you that the standing of the Prime Minister of Canada, the Government of Canada and the people of Canada with the Chinese government and its people is very high indeed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: The Prime Minister of Canada has an important standing with the Chinese people. The standing of Canada with the Chinese people goes back to the days of Dr. Norman Bethune when he was with the people's army and administering medical services to the wounded combatants. Our relationship with the Chinese market began in 1961 when the Conservative government of the day made a wheat sale to that country.

Hon. Robert Muir: Which was condemned by the Liberal Party.

Senator Argue: I think it was welcomed by all Canadians and was a good move at the time. I thought I was being fair in making that comment but as soon as I start being fair, what kind of comments do I get?

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Don't be fair.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): They don't understand what "fair" is.

Senator Argue: In any event, we have been in that market since 1961. We are starting the second year of a three-year agreement with China to sell them between 3.5 and 4.2 million tonnes of grain. We have already sold them 2.1 million tonnes.

We have an excellent standing with the Chinese. In fact, we were told at two of the meetings by ministers and other authorities that it is the policy of the Government of China to come to Canada first when it is in need of grain. The Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board who was part of the delegation, Mr. Forrest Hetland, said that it was the first time that this policy had been enunciated by the Government of China and it was a very welcome statement.

Senator Olson: You can see the persuasive powers of our minister.

Senator Argue: In addition to the sale of wheat to the Chinese, we also discussed the potential sales of Canadian barley. We learned from the Chinese authorities that beer is becoming a popular drink in China, that consumption of beer is going up and that they are forecasting that they will require substantial quantities of malting barley and malt in the years ahead. Last year we sold China 82,000 tonnes of malting barley, and there is every indication that sales of that commodity to that market could increase. An encouraging prospect from our point of view and, I would think, from the point of view of China, is that through their incentive programs they have demonstrated in recent years that they are able to increase their production of grains, particularly wheat. And even as they are increasing their production of wheat, they are changing their diet somewhat and are reducing their consumption of rice.

At the same time incomes have been rising. It seems clear that, for the foreseeable future at any rate, as incomes in China increase the demand for wheat will increase. With our well-established position in that market, we believe that China will come to Canada first when it needs increased quantities of grain.

The Chinese are interested in other things produced in Canada. For example, they have an $80 million line of credit from the World Bank for the purchase of farm machinery. We put forward the advantages of the machines produced by Massey-Ferguson, Versatile and Co-Op Implements. I think it was a good visit on behalf of Canada. My belief is that it will pay dividends in the years ahead. I certainly felt it a privilege to be there representing the Government of Canada and also, I hope, the people of Canada.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, I have spent a total of 26 years in the House of Commons and in this place, and I must say that Senator Argue deserves our thanks and heartiest congratulations. We have watched his career in the last year particularly, and he has done a wonderful job.

Senator Guay: I wish to thank the minister for his answer and also to congratulate him on the successful trip he made.

My question is this: In view of the agreement with the German Democratic Republic, which will have very beneficial results to Canada, will this give us a chance to consider the possibility of improving the rail line into the port of Churchill in order that we can ship more grain out of that port?

Senator Argue: As far as I am concerned, anything we do with respect to the export market I would hope would have that very welcome result. I think that all of these increased opportunities should make it easier for everyone to maintain and, hopefully, to improve the facilities at the port of Churchill.

FEED GRAINS—INITIAL PRICES—POSSIBLE INCREASE—WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, while the minister is warmed up I would like to ask him a question about—

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: About rape?

Senator Steuart: No. I will ask you about that, doctor.

My question deals with the initial price of barley. Most producers are aware that the price for feed grain has risen sharply since the price paid in the spring. I understand it has even increased since the end of the crop year on August 1. Is there any hope for the prairie farmers that they will receive another payment with respect to barley? Speaking of cash flow, which is a big concern to the farmers in western Canada at this time, I noticed the subject of the western grain stabilization fund was raised in the other place the other day. This fund has accumulated close to $1 billion and there has not been a payment out of it for some time. I wonder if there is any contemplation of change with respect to that act which would result in money being funnelled to western farmers? They are facing a pretty serious cost price squeeze at the present time. Can the minister answer those two questions?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, with regard to the possibility of increasing initial prices for feed grains, I think there are very strong arguments in favour of such a move. The main feed grain is, of course, barley. Markets have strengthened considerably in recent weeks mainly as a result of the widespread drought over the past five or six weeks in the United States resulting in a 48 per cent reduction in the corn crop. Higher world prices for barley today warrant an increase in the initial price for barley, which is one reason why there should be one.

The second reason is that the Wheat Board needs larger supplies of barley, and in order to encourage farmers to market their barley an increase in the initial price is necessary. The Wheat Board advises me that it is in this position. It needs those increased marketings of barley to meet its export commitments. Therefore, I have recommended to my colleagues an increase in initial prices.

I find that the process of government is careful and there is a great deal of consideration given by deputy ministers and by committees—the economic committee of cabinet first and then the cabinet as a whole—before a decision is made. I am confident a favourable decision will be taken. I hope it will be made shortly; but the process of discussions at the deputy minister level and committee level must take place first. I am hopeful that within the next two or three weeks that announcement can be made.

In the meantime, I would say to grain producers on the prairies that it is in their financial interests to market through the Canadian Wheat Board system the largest quantity of grain as quickly as possible to enable the Wheat Board to meet its export commitments and to assure the producers themselves of the highest possible return.

Senator Steuart's second question concerned the western grain stabilization fund. This fund has been in effect since 1976 and has been administered over that period of time on the basis that, for every $1 contribution by the farmers, the federal treasury contributed $2, so it is a very favourable system.

There have been a couple of payouts, but the money in the system has been accumulating at a rather rapid rate and the most recent information I have is that there is over $800 million in the western grain stabilization fund at this time.

Payments, however, have not been made as quickly as the architects of the legislation initially expected, and there are a number of factors. Inflation and sales have both been important factors, together with increased costs of production. However, the calculation is based on a five-year average of income and, while one might have expected payments in recent years, one of the factors militating against those payments was the very large marketings of grain from western Canada. I am informed that if we can change the five-year basis to a three-year basis, and make the contributions on a crop-year rather than a calendar-year basis, there could be a quite substantial payment in the farmers' hands next year.

These amendments would mean more realistic payments out of the fund in the future, while at the same time making sure that it is actuarially sound. I am making these recommendations to my colleagues. I have had meetings with the WGSA administrators and with the advisory committee composed of farmers, and they are in favour of these kinds of amendments.

There are other things that should be considered, such as should a farmer be able to withdraw from the act, even though, according to present provisions, he must stay in on a permanent basis. There seems to be an agreement among the advisors that if the producers were given the option of getting out after a period of ten years, that would be acceptable. They have already been under the act for eight years, and this amendment would provide that if, after a further period of two years, they feel they would be better off financially to get out and no longer be required to pay the two per cent of their proceeds into the fund, this would be possible. The feeling among the advisors is that, at the end of ten years, it will be clear to all the producers that it has been a very excellent investment from their standpoint; that much more will have been paid out than was paid into the fund, and this makes it a most attractive proposition.

At the moment, approximately 76 per cent of the producers of western Canada belong to the western grain stabilization fund. It is a good act with a sound foundation but there are reasons to propose amendments along the lines that I have suggested. If these types of amendments are recommended to Parliament, I am sure they will be given support, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate.

[Senator Argue.]

EXPORT OF FARM MACHINERY TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I would like to commend the minister on his successful visit to the German Democratic Republic, Romania and China and for his comprehensive and informative report. Having visited China myself on a number of occasions, I do not know of a better representative that this country could send than the present minister who has been involved in this particular field for so many years. In fact, when I served with him in the House of Commons, no matter to which party he belonged, he raised the problems of wheat so frequently that we almost had wheat coming out of our ears. When I would charge him with this, he would reply that I was always raising the problems of coal and steel and fish, so it worked both ways.

However, having viewed the situation in China myself, I am sure he would agree that great progress is being made there. My question today concerns farm machinery and equipment. The minister touched a little on that matter and it seems to me, from what I saw there, that much equipment is required. Perhaps the minister could tell us whether he followed up on that matter with the trade counsellors in our embassy, and whether he could report to us on that today.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I thank Senator Muir for his question. As far as our embassy officials are concerned, they had at least one and sometimes two representatives at each of the meetings that we attended, so they had access to the same kind of information that I received.

It is true that China greatly needs advanced agricultural machinery. They are making some progress and working very hard and should be commended for the progress that they are making. Some of the machines I saw, while quite modern, are very small. There is room, I think, for the provision of larger and more efficient machines. They have this $80 million that I referred to and they are very interested in improving their agricultural machinery. They have had technological exchanges with Canada in the recent past, and there will be more in the future.

At the moment the John Deere Company is marketing its machinery in China, perhaps more successfully than other companies because they got into the market early. I am informed that they provided certain machines at no cost to the Chinese in order that those machines could be used as demonstrators and the Chinese would be able to learn how to operate them. The Chinese are expecting bids from various machinery companies with regard to the spending of that $80 million. I pointed out to them that the Massey Ferguson Company of Canada produces many lines of excellent farm machinery; that the Versatile Farm Equipment Company is a world leader in the provision of four-wheel drive tractors and that Canadian Co-operative Implements has a good line of general machinery and is able to produce machinery that would be very helpful to China.

The Chinese seem to be very interested in joint ventures, and it seems to me that the companies I have mentioned, together with any other companies that might be interested, should sit down with the Chinese authorities and with Canadian trade officials to discuss whether or not there is room for some joint venturing in the farm implement industry. I can see a lot of advantages for Canada, in that we would acquire additional capital that could be used for expansion of those implement industries and perhaps, at the same time, we would acquire almost an assured market for their production.

There is interest on the part of the Chinese in this area. They do need machinery. We have had some talks, and we are hoping that they will show an interest in the companies and in the equipment I have mentioned. However, these discussions are at an early stage and much more work will have to be done in this regard. Our country is in very good standing with the government and with the people of China. I hope that if we can get together with the people of China some very beneficial results will be achieved.

Senator Muir: I agree with the minister when he says that a great deal of work has to be done. I further agree that visits of this type are very beneficial, not only to the country visited but also to Canada.

Those so called experts in the media, both written and electronic, have to write something, but they do not dig into what is actually taking place or has taken place, or the benefits that can be derived therefrom. I repeat that visits of this nature are beneficial, particularly to China where progress is being made. They have a great difficulty to overcome, but they are going ahead, and going ahead well.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. A. Irvine Barrow, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Wednesday, October 5, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-110, intituled: "An Act to amend the Export Development Act", has, in obedience to the Order of reference of Tuesday, October 4, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

A. IRVINE BARROW,
Deputy Chairman.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Stollery, the sponsor of this measure, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 4, 1983, the debate on the motion of Senator Molson for the adoption of the fourth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders which was presented on Tuesday, September 27, 1983.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I do not think anybody has to worry about my taking up much time this afternoon, because I certainly agree with the report presented by the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

At the outset allow me to congratulate Senator Molson on the deep thought that went into the report, taking into account the changes which have taken place in the Senate with regard to membership.

I understand that we now have nineteen vacancies in the Senate, making it difficult to man all committees when the membership is set at 20, and even over 20. I agree with the recommendation that the membership requirement be dropped to 12. I do that with some qualification, however, because I understand that Senator Graham has asked that the membership of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration not be reduced. I can understand that request because there are various subcommittees of that committee that deal with important matters. At the same time, however, we must be uniform. If Senator Graham is allowed his request, I can see Senator Bonnell making the same request because of the increase in responsibilities given his committee, which will be renamed the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. For the sake of uniformity, I think we should go along with the changes as they are.

There is nothing to stop any member of the Senate attending a committee. A senator does not have to be a member of a committee to ask questions, although he does have to be a member to take part in the votes.

I think that the most difficult problem we run into is getting quorums so that committees can meet. I might suggest to the deputy leader that he get the Prime Minister to fill some of the 19 vacancies, but perhaps I should not say that because somebody else next year might be making the appointments.

However, I should like to see a more equal distribution of senators so that we can man all the committees.

I suggest that, when there is a shortage and a quorum cannot be found, the clerk of the committee be given the authority to appoint a senator to a committee. As things stand, that has to be done by the Senate. I see no reason why the clerk should not authorize a senator to become a member of a committee if the Whips so agree. If that were the case, it would be easier to find a quorum.

One thing I have promoted, which has now become a reality, is the change in the name of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology and to have added to its responsibilities consumer affairs, which I think is one of the most important subjects in this country today. Fitness and amateur sports, as well as youth affairs, have been added to that committee's responsibilities. That enlarges the scope of the committee, and I am certainly pleased that those topics have been included under its umbrella of responsibility, which also includes housing, another important problem in this country today.

I am pleased with many things, but most important, something that I have pushed for for many years, is the inclusion of a definite fisheries platform in the committees. I agree with the formation of the new Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. I foresee including "natural resources" in that because fisheries, agriculture and forestry are natural resources, so a committee on natural resources would embrace these elements of our economy.

I was a little disappointed that the recommendation that the Subcommittee on National Defence be made a standing committee was not adopted. I thought Senator Lafond, who has been pushing for that, would have been very angry, but being the man he is, I know that he agrees with whatever is best for the overall operation of the Senate. I think that that should be reconsidered, though.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): He was angry, but courteous.

Senator Marshall: Not being a chairman of a committee, I could not attend, and just as well.

In any event, I am pleased with the changes; I think they are adequate and apply to today's situation, and I shall be pleased to see the changes in operation during the new session.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

UNEMPLOYMENT

PROPOSED ALLEVIATION BY ESTABLISHMENT OF ARMED FORCES ENLISTMENT PROGRAM—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 16, 1983, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Marshall:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability of establishing an enlistment program in the Armed Forces to help solve the unemployment problem affecting young people and to teach them useful skills and to provide other training commensurate with today's needs.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, this order has been standing in my name for some considerable time, and, while there is no urgency about the matter, I should like to speak to it today.

As some time has elapsed since Senator Marshall spoke to this inquiry, I should like to restate its wording, which is as follows:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability of establishing an enlistment program in the Armed Forces to help solve the unemployment problem affecting our young people and to teach them useful skills and to provide other training commensurate with today's needs.

Honourable senators, it is well known that over many years Senator Marshall has contributed much on the subject of the welfare of our youth. It is also well known that he is greatly concerned and worried about what is happening to our young people who are unemployed and who have no hope of employment in the near future, and, indeed, in too many cases, in the foreseeable future.

Senator Marshall's concern, which is of great credit to him, was again well expressed in his eloquent and moving speech on the subject of his inquiry. He said that unemployed youth, through no fault of their own, are unable to put to work their ability, their skill, their education and their dedication. Indeed, it is evident that even highly educated young people, who have an understanding of our economic system, are just as frustrated as, and perhaps even more resentful than, those with less education and less knowledge of how the economic system works. These young people have grown up in a fairly affluent society and have no personal knowledge of the ill effects that follow economic depression.

Honourable senators, I am sure we all agree with Senator Marshall when he said:

> We need to build a true and decent society and at the same time create meaningful jobs for young Canadians.

I emphasize the word "meaningful." This is certainly our objective; it is what we all want to do.

The great problem is to find the means by which this can be accomplished. What actions by governments can bring about this much desired end if, indeed, action by governments can do so?

As a partial solution for youth unemployment, Senator Marshall suggests an enlistment program which would bring a large number of unemployed people into the armed services. These would be enlisted, I assume, into the army, navy and air force, with emphasis on the army. Senator Marshall did not commit himself to any specific number, though he mentioned, with apparent approval, the figure of between 25,000 and 50,000 which had been mentioned in the House of Commons.

I think he at least implied that he would like to go beyond the idea of a temporary measure and that he was in favour of some permanence in the program. Indeed, from his speech, I think it is fair to say that he would like to see some concept of national service made compulsory for young people. Honourable senators, I do not propose to comment on the idea of compulsory national service, except to say that I wholly disagree with it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is quite a lot.

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, before making reference to the specific benefits Senator Marshall feels would result from the enlistment policy he advocates, I think it should not be overlooked that two other policies have been suggested or advocated. Mention has been made of a speech given by Senator Olson, Honorary Colonel of the South Alberta Light Horse, as reported in the Edmonton Journal of February 27, 1983. He was speaking to 25 militia recruits: 17 men and eight women, ranging in age from 19 to 25, who had completed six weeks of basic training which was roughly equivalent to basic training in the regular forces.

From the report of that speech, I do not think the senator regarded that program as a measure for creating employment, or, if so, only indirectly. He apparently mentioned that the training they received gave these 25 unemployed youths new confidence in themselves, and that this would be well worthwhile and beneficial to them in their search for employment. He said that it would also be beneficial to the militia. However, the primary purpose was not to create jobs.

While the primary purpose of Senator Marshall's proposal is to create jobs so as to help solve the unemployment problems of young people, any resulting benefit to the militia would be a side-effect or a bonus. It should be remembered that creating jobs for young people and strengthening the militia are two separate and distinct objectives and they should not be treated as one. In my opinion, if they are treated as one, neither program will get maximum results. Militia recruitment and training should be a program in itself—one that should be financed by the Department of National Defence and not by monies allocated to create employment.

Since Senator Marshall spoke, the government has instituted a recruitment program somewhat along the lines he suggested. It is a more modest program which would enlist 5,000 unemployed youths beween the ages of 17 and 25 into the Canadian Forces for a period of one year.

As I understand it, while these recruits would be processed, trained and paid as would recruits going into the regular forces, they would officially be classifed as Class C reservists, with no pension or other benefits. I do not know whether they are to come under the Unemployment Insurance Act or the Canada Pension Plan.

I notice that a somewhat similar plan has been put into effect in Great Britain. Under their plan, 5,200 young people, aged 16 and 17, will be offered a year's engagement in the regular forces. However, they will be able to leave at any time during that year on giving two weeks' notice, and they will not be sent to any trouble spots such as Northern Ireland. Under their plan, the army will take 3,700 applicants; the air force, 1,000; and the navy, 500.

I have not seen a breakdown of the number it is proposed to enlist in each of the services in Canada. In any event, honourable senators, without knowing all the details of the plan, I concede that it will be beneficial and helpful at the present time. Apparently, there is no intention to try to pressure these young people into the forces. As I understand it, at least 5,000 positions that are to be filled in Canada will be filled from the lists of those who have already applied for admission to the regular forces and whose applications have already been approved.

Honourable senators, I would like to see implemented the recommendation of the Senate Subcommittee on National Defence that the strength of the forces be increased by 4,400. Recruits could probably be obtained from among the applicants already approved or from among those on the waiting lists. I should like to see this done as a means of providing employment, although that would be only an indirect result since the main result would be bringing the forces up to strength. We should remember that Canada's armed forces, especially the army, have a proud tradition to uphold, and they should be given the equipment and the people to do so.

It may be that some of these vacancies are in highly-skilled categories and cannot be filled from the applications on file. However, I noticed that the new Chief of the Defence Staff, General Gerard Thériault, stated in an interview that manpower is not the issue in the Canadian Armed Forces but that new equipment is. According to the interviewer, the general regards today's regulars and reservists as "adequate" for peacetime. I do not know if the recommendations of the subcommittee have been followed or whether or not the general agrees with such recommendations. In any event, I believe it would be wise to have this apparent contradiction clarified.

I think it is fair to say, from Senator Marshall's speech, that he sees these specific benefits resulting from the adoption of his proposal. The main one, of course, would be the employment factor, with a dramatic drop in unemployment among young people. The other two results, which would come about automatically, would be assistance in helping to fulfil Canada's defence commitments and the development of our youth.

In commenting only on the main purpose of the plan, to induct 25,000 to 50,000 of our youth into the forces, I do not believe that such a number could be obtained voluntarily in peacetime, and that some type of compulsion would be necessary. Indeed, even in hard times economically, with the necessity to obtain food, clothing and shelter, I do not think that such indirect pressure would be sufficient to obtain such a large number of recruits; and a draft in peacetime would be repugnant to Canadians.

Honourable senators, even if a large number of unemployed young people were persuaded to join the forces, under the proposal contained in Senator Marshall's inquiry and speech as a means of obtaining that kind of employment, I do not think it would be providing meaningful employment, as I understand that term. I believe that trying to overcome youth unemployment in that manner is a humiliating confession of failure on our part. We are telling our young people that our economic system is unable to provide them the opportunity for meaningful employment. Can we blame them if they want to try some other economic system?

I think our young people deserve something better than to be told that they cannot obtain meaningful employment in civilian life and should, therefore, join the armed forces. It is not fair either that our forces should be asked to assume that responsibility. The services have their own methods, developed over the years, of selecting promising recruits from among the applications they receive, and those services should not be pressured into accepting a large influx of persons apart from their own selection.

In any event, the inquiry actually deals with two separate and distinct matters: one is youth unemployment; the other is the benefits of training in the services. I believe they should be dealt with separately, and we should not attempt to increase and strengthen our forces under the guise of an appeal to provide employment. If we need more people in the services—and the report of the Subcommittee on National Defence indicated that we do—then let us obtain them in the regular way, dealing separately with the problem of youth unemployment as the complex, difficult and, indeed, terrible problem it is.

I regret that I am unable to agree with Senator Marshall in his very powerful and persuasive appeal to use the services even as a partial solution to this problem. I realize that he has support in high places for his point of view, particularly when he quoted from a statement made by a former Minister of National Defence. That former minister appeared to give a hint of supporting compulsory service. In my opinion, no evidence has been given that would justify the statement of that minister that participation in a military program would give our youth invaluable training and personal development.

However, I strongly support Senator Marshall's objective, as I understand it, although I disagree with the means proposed to attain it.

What is his objective? I should like to quote a sentence from his speech on February 16, 1983. He said:

> Our efforts should be directed towards extracting the multitude of talents that we know they all have in their young bodies and minds; towards giving them something meaningful to do, challenges to accept and objectives to strive for—

Those are certainly worthy objectives. I should like to add one more, which is to help provide a good society where they can live in peace, with economic security. I do not think those objectives can be achieved by the method proposed in Senator Marshall's inquiry.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, under rule 29 Senator Marshall has the right of final reply if he wishes to close the debate on this inquiry. If he does not reply, then we can consider it debated, but I do not want to make that suggestion without Senator Marshall's agreeing.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Marshall speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this inquiry.

Senator Marshall: Do I have permission to adjourn the debate?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Marshall: Then I do that, and I shall make my reply on Tuesday of next week.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 11, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 11, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, October 13, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this motion is consistent with what has recently become our custom, and that is to leave Wednesday morning open for caucus meetings, and the afternoon and, if necessary, the evening for committee meetings.

The committees are quite active this week, so the motion leaves Wednesday free for committee activity by proposing that the Senate not sit again until Thursday at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FOURTH MEETING—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday October 18, 1983, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the twenty-fourth meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group held at Minaki Lodge, Ontario, from June 16 to 20, 1983.

I have the report of this meeting in both official languages and should like to have it printed as an appendix to Debates of the Senate of this day so that senators will have an opportunity to familiarize themselves with it and to make comments on it. As the report shows, the meeting dealt with matters of great importance to both Canada and the United States.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 6025.)

THE HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.

NOTICE OF ILLNESS

The Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we begin Question Period, I wish to inform you that my friend, the Leader of the Opposition, Senator Jacques Flynn, was taken ill over the weekend and is now in intensive care. Naturally, we are optimistic about his prospects of returning to his post in the Senate in the near future, but we do not expect to see here him for the next little while. I know that members of the Senate would like to have conveyed to him and to his wife their best wishes for his early recovery.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of those on this side of the chamber—and I think it would be unanimous on both sides of the house—I should like to say how sorry and troubled we were to hear of Senator Flynn's illness. We join with the Acting Leader of the Opposition in expressing our hope, indeed, our prayers, that he will have a speedy and complete recovery. We also wish to convey those sentiments to the members of his family.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PARLIAMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, from time to time a number of bills have been mentioned that are to come before the Senate for consideration, but in the course of time they seem to have receded into the distance. Can the Leader of the Government tell us the bills that are likely to come to us from the House of Commons before this session is terminated?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can give you some indication of the bills the government considers high priority. One is Bill C-155, which is now making its way through the House of Commons. The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has begun a pre-study of the subject matter of that bill and, as I understand it, considerable progress has been made in hearing witnesses.

Bill C-110 is before the Senate for third reading later this day, and it is hoped that it can receive the attention it requires today, or, if not today, at least at some time later this week.

Bill C-152 is making some progress in the House of Commons. It is rather important, as far as the government is concerned, that this bill be dealt with as soon as possible because of the announcement on several significant parts of it made by the government on January 12, 1982. Since then some action has been taken with respect to reorganizing several departments, such action being well known to honourable senators.

I know that a number of other bills have high priority, but I do not believe that the passing of any of them would be regarded as being absolutely essential this session. Those bills, whatever they are and however important they are, can be reintroduced next session. Moreover, with the approval of the opposition in both houses, they could possibly be reintroduced at the stage they are now at or will be at before prorogation of this session, if that turns out to be the sequence of events.

I would not like what I have said to be misinterpreted; it in no way implies that there are no other important bills. To some people in Canada other bills are extremely important, but the government takes the position that Bill C-155 and perhaps Bill C-152 ought to be dealt with this session because of the lapse of time since certain action was initiated and, indeed, is under way with respect to those bills. Of course, we have Bill C-158, which is the CDIC bill, as well as Bill C-12, the bankruptcy bill. There are a number of others, but I do not think that they fall into the category of being absolutely essential before prorogation of this session.

Senator Roblin: I take it that what my honourable friend is telling us is that there are three bills which he thinks are essential to the government before prorogation, namely, Bill C-155, the Crow bill; Bill C-110, the Export Development Act amendments, which is before us now; and Bill C-152, respecting government organization for which a pre-study will be sought later today. I am not disposed to stand in the way of those three bills, but I am taking it as the minister's statement that those are the three bills we may be asked to deal with before prorogation. There is a list of others that goes on endlessly, but I am not expecting a serious effort to be made to pass those bills.

I should like to bring to the notice of the Leader of the Government the arrangements that have been made for committees. One of the reasons for sitting on Tuesday afternoon is to keep available the evening for committee meetings, which is fine. One of the reasons for not sitting on Wednesdays is to have the day open for committee meetings, which is fine. The problem I should like to deal with is that we have yet to space those committee meetings sufficiently far apart that we can deal with them adequately. This evening we have the committee on the Crow meeting at 7.30 and, unless the time has been changed, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is meeting at approximately 8 o'clock.

Senator Frith: The Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee is meeting when the Senate rises.

Senator Roblin: Then I feel a lot better about the situation.

[Senator Olson.]

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is meeting at the same time, and as we are limited in numbers on this side we therefore we cannot attend these committees in adequate numbers if they all meet at the same time.

Tomorrow afternoon a similar situation arises in that at approximately 2 o'clock three committees are meeting. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is meeting at 1.45 p.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, dealing with the Crow, is meeting at 2 p.m.; and the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages is meeting at 3.30 p.m.

Before our sitting is over this afternoon, could the leader examine this question to ascertain whether we could space these committee meetings an hour or an hour and a half apart so that they could be better attended by members of this chamber? I thought that we had an arrangement whereby this would be looked at on a consistent basis, but it seems to have fallen through. Either that is the case or committee chairmen do not pay any attention to what they are asked to do. I should like to make an urgent appeal that this matter be taken in hand and put right. Otherwise, we are not going to get the attendance at these committees which the importance of their subject matter deserves.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with respect to some of the meetings, Senator Roblin was not quite correct, although that does not in any way change how justifiable the substance of his remarks is. I believe that the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee meets this afternoon when the Senate rises. As he pointed out, the Transport and Communications Committee meets at 7.30 this evening and then at 8.15 the committee studying the security intelligence service is meeting.

Senator Roblin: That is the one I was referring to.

Senator Frith: The Foreign Affairs Committee meets at 1.45 p.m. on Wednesday, and he was quite correct in giving the times of the other committee meetings that he mentioned. That does not change the fact that I agree with him that this question of overlapping is exacerbated by the fact that we have a number of vacancies, and by the problem that we understand the opposition has in manning these committees in view of the imbalance of numbers.

● (1410)

I do believe the system, which was working quite well under the guidance of Senator Lafond, does need sprucing up. Too often committee chairmen make their decision on the basis of information given by Mr. Belzile as to the availability of rooms, clerks, and support systems. They then go ahead and call their meetings without concern for the overlap in membership and the fact that very frequently senators are required to be in two or three places at the same time. I totally agree that we must try to avoid that situation. It happened last week, and it will happen again this week.

I will confer with Senator Lafond and Mr. Belzile to deal with the problem which has been quite properly raised by the Acting Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, just to complete the record, I listened carefully to the recitation of committee meetings by the Acting Leader of the Government.

I would point out that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is meeting this afternoon at 3.30 jointly with the Committee on Foreign Affairs and National Defence of the other place in order to hear Mr. Derek Davies, Editor of the Far Eastern Economic Review. This is a further illustration of duplication of some of the activities in which honourable senators are interested, and which they can rarely attend to the extent that they would wish.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I would point out that the Special Joint Committee on the Reform of the Senate of Canada will be meeting in Quebec City tomorrow evening and on Thursday morning. Honourable senators will have to travel tomorrow afternoon and, therefore, will be unable to attend any other committee meetings this week.

Senator Roblin: I should like to offer a suggestion to the house leader, and that is, when the Director of Committees receives word from the various committees that they want to meet, and his chart indicates that they may overlap, he should be instructed to inform them at that time that they are trespassing on someone else's territory and that someone else has gotten there first.

I would make another suggestion, and that is, if after that information is digested, the situation is not improved, he be instructed to inform the house leader of the situation. That gentleman will then have an opportunity of knowing the problem and being able to do something about it before we get into a straitjacket such as we are in at the present time.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

ON-THE-JOB TRAINING

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate having to do with a very interesting article in a Toronto newspaper by the former principal secretary to the Prime Minister, Mr. Jim Coutts.

He recommended to the government that they provide 400,000 on-the-job training positions that should be created in the next 12 months for young people under age 25.

Would the Leader of the Government indicate if any progress has been made in regard to that excellent suggestion?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not quite sure what the connotation attached to "any progress" is, but whatever it means, I have not read the article. Perhaps Senator Marshall could be helpful in identifying the date so that the article can be located. I am quite sure there is a copy of it somewhere in my offices.

I will ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration for his comments about some of the methods and the process of creating that many additional jobs.

Senator Marshall will, of course, be gratified by having read the statistics for the last year concerning the very large number of jobs created in Canada, not only by the government but by private, non-government agencies as well.

Senator Marshall: I believe the article was published last June. When His Honour the Speaker asked for delayed answers, I realized I had a delayed question.

I wanted to draw some comparison with that article and the release by the Minister of the Environment indicating that 40,000 jobs would be created for youths in the environment area. Is that part of the program mentioned by Mr. Coutts, or is it 40,000 jobs instead of 400,000 jobs?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not believe we should be particularly exclusive in this area. I also believe that I should be careful not to get sucked in further than I intended to be in connection with this matter, because I have the feeling that is happening to me at this moment. I will obtain some replies from the ministers responsible and perhaps give Senator Marshall an update on the excellent improvement now being experienced in connection with job creation. The situation may not be totally satisfactory or even close to being entirely satisfactory, but the improvement has been both significant and gratifying.

Senator Marshall: I should correct myself. I mentioned a figure of 40,000; it should be only 4,000. I was getting my zeroes mixed up.

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES LIMITED—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that notices have been appearing in the press in recent days concerning the sale of the assets of Maislin Industries Limited. Can the minister give the Senate a report on the status of our loan to that company, namely, what the actual amount is now, what place it occupies in the priorities set up by the receiver for the liquidation of the debts of the company, and the government's estimate as to whether any of that sum will be recovered?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will make an inquiry of my colleague responsible for that matter. I believe it is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION FOR THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Peter A. Stollery moved the third reading of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 6, 1983, the debate on the motion of Senator Molson for the adoption of the fourth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders which was presented on Tuesday, September 27, 1983.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have not a great deal to say about this report because generally I consider it to be a progressive measure, one which should result in some improvement in the way we do business. However, there are one or two points that perhaps are worthy of mention. While the committee proposes to reduce the membership of our usual committees from 20 to 12—a reduction of 40 per cent—I would have been happier, as I said in committee, if the number had been reduced to 15 rather than 12. My reason is that it gives us a little more scope to have geographical and other representation on those committees, particularly when you recognize that the opposition will probably have four members on a 12-member committee. That does not give much scope for any sort of representational quality to a delegation from this side of the house. When the number is reduced from eight, as it is now, to four, it presents a problem for us. We will struggle with it the best way we can, but I wish to underline the situation in case at some future date I would like to have the matter reconsidered.

Among the other points that I should like to mention is the question of a quorum. The quorum on a committee of 12 is to be four, which is not very many. I understand that quorums are related to votes or decisions that the committees might make. My point is that I hope that the chairmen of committees will consider the advisability of making sure that both sides of the house are represented in such a quorum. If a committee requires only four people to form a quorum, it is desirable that not all of them represent one side of the house; there should be representation from both sides of the house. Of course, I recognize the responsibility of those on both sides of the house to get their people out so that the chairmen are not unduly handicapped by this rule. Speaking for this side of the house, I can say that we will do our best to get our people out.

If the chairmen could be asked to pay attention to the point, when we see the need for representation in a quorum, we can certainly make sure that it is met. I would not like the matter to just go by default without any statement on the subject.

Another point on which I seek clarification, although I guess the wording is clear, is the status of the Deputy Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition and their leaders as to whether or not they are ex officio members of the committee. At the committee meeting, I had the impression that both the leaders and the deputies were ex officio members of committees. However, in reading the words of the resolution, it refers to the "leader or the deputy," not to both the leader and the deputy. I want to be sure that I am quite right that it is intended to be both.

The final point that I want to make is that I hope we can not only improve the scheduling of the committees but improve the notices that are sent out. I do not know why a committee cannot give 48 hours notice of when it is going to meet. Last week I received a notice on my desk for a committee meeting which was to be held in an hour from the time I received the notice. It is not very easy to arrange one's affairs with all these committees meeting as they do without proper notice. I wish that we had a rule saying that the committee chairmen had to give at least 48 hours notice of meetings. Since it is not in the rules, I shall merely content myself with the hope that the chairmen of committees will consider the problem of attendance and give reasonable notice to committee members so that they can get there when they are supposed to be there.

Apart from those comments, honourable senators, I have nothing more to add about the changing of our rules. I hope that they will turn out to be a workable and practical experience.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the debate that has followed the presentation of this report and the introductory remarks of the chairman has, if I am summarizing correctly, indicated support for all the proposals, though some questions as to collateral matters have been raised. For example, there is the question of Senator Flynn's proposal to have the replacement of committee members follow the precedent and procedure established for special committees and particularly for special joint committees, which would have the effect of making it easier to change the membership of committees than is presently the case. Presently, changes in committee membership are made here in the chamber by order of the Senate.

There is the question of whether certain committees should be composed of 15 members rather than 12 members. There was some debate as to whether, for example, the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration would be better to have 15 members rather than 12, and the same would apply for the Standing Rules and Orders Committee as well as the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. Another point raised in the debate was the question of the status of the National Defence Subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee and whether it should be raised to the status of a standing committee.

Then there are the three points raised by Senator Roblin. There is the question of chairmen being required to note the lack of representation by either party at a committee meeting. I do not expect we would want a committee to be required to adjourn because of the absence of certain members, but I agree with Senator Roblin that it might be drawn to the attention of the committee, and it should make the decision.

Senator Roblin is quite right in saying that the original proposal before the committee was that the leaders and deputy leaders on both sides of the chamber would be ex officio members of each committee. However, the committee decided that it would prefer to make it "or," in the sense that if the leader of either side is not present then the deputy leader would be the ex officio the member.

Then we have Senator Roblin's point with respect to 48 hours' notice of committee meetings.

Honourable senators, it strikes me that it would be a good idea not to proceed with the report but, rather, refer it back to the committee to allow it to take into account these various comments which have been made, without treating them in any way as directions, and let the committee decide what it would like to do respecting the comments, suggestions and observations which have been raised here in the chamber.

I respectfully suggest to honourable senators that it would not be appropriate to try to make amendments or to be any more specific than that. Our practice has been to give the committee general directions as to what we would like it to look into, and then let it deal with the actual wording rather than tie it down with the Senate's opinion on words, punctuation and so on.

Having said that, honourable senators, I move, in amendment, that this report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders for further consideration.

Motion in amendment agreed to.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, June 15, the debate on the consideration of the second report of the Subcommittee on National Defence of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada's Maritime Defence," tabled in the Senate on June 15, 1983.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I am pleased to follow our chairman, Senator Lafond, in addressing some comments with respect to the second report of the Subcommittee on National Defence which focuses attention on Canada's maritime command. I would again like to commend him for his leadership in guiding the committee through its deliberations and his persistent determination to place before Canadians a complete picture of the state of Canada's maritime defence capability, or lack of it. He has pointed out the urgency with which the government must act in preparing a comprehensive inventory of what is required, together with the cost, in order to restore Canada's proud forces to a state of military decency.

After re-reading Senator Lafond's very precise account, which he gave on June 15 last when tabling the report, I came to the conclusion that there was nothing left to be said. This fact is strengthened by reviewing the report itself, which, indeed, is self-explanatory. However, as Senator Lafond alluded to in his remarks, we must continue to call the attention of Canadians to just how shaky our defences are, despite the fact that in the last couple of years we have seen a realization of the need for, and the production of, new material. I am referring specifically to the acquisition of the F-18s, the frigates and the tanks, which are coming into reality.

The honourable senator also alluded to the need for debate in this chamber on the substance of the report. In agreeing with him on that count I know that other senators will carry out his challenge to lend added credence to the subcommittee's call for action by our government.

• (1430)

Certainly, the report did receive widespread attention from the press, but I feel it only fair to particularly commend the Halifax Chronicle Herald for its in-depth examination and analysis of the report, which continued over a period of many weeks in editorials and columns, and for the presentation of the complete report in its August 15 edition because its editors felt it should be essential reading for all Canadians. Perhaps some of the other news media should have taken an example from the Halifax Chronicle Herald.

Some four months have elapsed since the report was tabled, and it might be worthwhile repeating what I, at least, consider its main thrust. I quote from pages 54 and 55 of the report where it refers to the desirable force level of our maritime capability and its costs.

> Canada reached the present state of continuing decline in its maritime forces because there has been no naval construction for 15 years; no construction in significant numbers for 20 years; and no adjustment in the defence budget to take account of these facts. The country is now confronted with two problems: the necessity of replacing virtually the whole fleet at once; and the need for a short-term solution to a lack of numbers, while the longer-term objective of acquiring more capable weapons-platforms is pursued.

With respect to planning for the future, the report says:

> There is no easy way out. Canada's maritime forces need substantially more money for capital acquisitions. They need it now, and it cannot be acquired at the expense of the air or land forces if the latter are not, in turn, to hit bottom. It is clear that the current formula for financing has not worked and will not work.
> Decisions need to be taken now which recognize that our maritime forces are inadequate for their intended purposes; which determine the required force levels and the desired fleet mix; which take into account the need to compensate quickly for current lack of numbers; and which set a target date for achieving these goals. Realistically, the target date cannot be nearer than a decade away, because any purchases decided upon now would not produce a lead unit in under three to five years. Next comes the problem of ordering the purchases so that, if not the desired balance, at least a tangible improvement in quality and quantity will be reached far earlier. Then the government should decide how much more money than currently projected can be realistically devoted to the defence budget and how much more the defence department can effectively absorb in the short run.

On desirable force levels and costs, the report goes on to say:

> In the sub-committee's view, the primary aim of Canadian maritime defence policy should be to create a renewed, balanced fleet within twelve years. The policy should take into account both the need for approximately twice as many major weapons-platforms as as MARCOM now possesses and the need to compensate rapidly for current lack of capabilities and numbers, while ultimately creating a balanced force . . . Costs of other items are considered to be in addition to already planned expenditures. Increased spending is necessitated by the need to rapidly rebuild a critical, perhaps the most critical, element of our national defences, which has been allowed to deteriorate to the point that it cannot fulfil its tasks.

We in the committee realize, honourable senators, that money is hard to find, but it must be found for this purpose. If I can presume to use the words of the Prime Minister, which were recently uttered in another context he said, "It is five minutes to midnight."

The committee then suggests:

> —that an extra $550 million per year . . . be dedicated to the acquisition of capital equipment for MARCOM commencing in 1984-1985 and continuing for twelve years. This would total $6.6 billion by 1996. We consider the annual amount to be affordable by the country. It is an amount that could be efficiently absorbed by DND.

It is affordable, and it is most necessary.

> It would represent a seven per cent real increase in the defence budget, an 0.64 per cent increase in the national budget, and an increase in defence expenditures as a percentage of GNP from just over two per cent to about 2.2 per cent. This would still leave Canada with the lowest defence expenditures in relation to GNP of all NATO countries—

Honourable senators, we can continue to plead and beg for what is only fair and necessary to catch up and rehabilitate our maritime forces. However, there should be an honest confession by our government that they have been negligent in keeping faith. We must have a commitment that they will maintain an adequate force for the defence of our country, to share with the U.S. for the defence of North America and to commit enough resources to maintain our NATO obligations.

Whatever our policy is for defence, it must be clearly redefined and backed by a commitment to ensure that the required manpower and matériel will be provided, in accordance with a stated timetable. To omit this would be to repeat the current situation where it is evident that we are unable to fulfil our tasks.

The committee noted with some alarm that there are no less than 56 tasks assigned by government to the military with absolutely no order of priority—tasks that cover a multitude of duties that can only be described as mind-boggling. The government keeps telling us that we cannot afford to maintain our forces to a respectable level. If that is so, then let us use some common sense. Let us combine our best efforts in Canada with a military-industrial strategy to serve our economy and well-being. Barney Danson, a former Minister of National Defence, pointed out some years ago that our defence budget, which at that time was $4.5 billion, had an economic impact out of all proportion to its size. Almost 60 per cent of that budget was payroll; some 20 per cent came back to the government in taxes; and the balance bolstered the sale of goods and services, since many of the military bases channelled their spending into areas that needed it and enabled local industry and utilities to survive. I presume these proportions are still applicable today, although on a larger scale since the budget is much larger.

Honourable senators, it is recognized that Canada is a non-military nation, but unfortunately there exists an apathy towards military preparedness. While our government is reluctant to increase vital expenditures on the scale required, it seems to me a little ingenuity would not go amiss and that some honest effort could be made to adapt our civilian capacity to war-time use. Perhaps the lessons learned by the British forces in the Falkland Islands could be useful to us in that respect, and I would like to read from the report which was prepared on that war:

> The Campaign brought home the significant contribution which civil resources can make to the nation's strength in a crisis.

And I would remind honourable senators that the war in the Falkland Islands ended not so very long ago.

> The smooth and rapid implementation of existing contingency plans to use merchant shipping in support of the Services was a major success story of the Campaign. Some 45 ships were taken up from trade, from passenger liners to trawlers. They provided vital support across the entire logistic spectrum. Tankers carried fuel for ships, aircraft and land forces. Liners, such as the QE2 and Canberra, and ferries gave service as troop carriers. Cargo ships, such as the Atlantic Conveyor, carried helicopters, Harriers, heavy equipment and stores. Other vessels were taken up as hospital ships, repair ships or tugs. All these ships were manned by volunteer, civilian crews, supplemented by small Naval or RFA parties.
> Amongst the more notable conversions made to merchantmen were:
> (a) The fitting of flight decks, which were designed and constructed in a matter of days and subsequently stood up to extremes of weather . . .
> (b) The provision and fitting of equipment to all merchant ships to enable them to replenish at sea.
> (c) The equipping of trawlers as minesweepers, which swept some ten enemy buoyant mines—

Together with other adaptations of equipment as necessary.

> Civil air carriers supplemented the efforts of the RAF Air Transport Force and between April and June transported more than 350 tons of freight, including helicopters, to Ascension Island.

The Dockyards, civilian ports, stores depots, marine services and staff in Government Departments, together with hundreds of industrial firms large and small, played a major part in despatching and sustaining the task force.

● (1440)

As a consequence of the Campaign we have decided that militarily useful features should be incorporated in the replacement for Atlantic Conveyor, involving principally a prefabricated helicopter flight deck. We also have an option to take up the ship for a period each year for exercises. For the longer term a working party of the Shipping Defence Advisory Commmittee will examine ways in which merchant ships likely to be required in any future emergency might be designed, modified or equipped for possible use in support of the Armed Forces or for self-defence.

That is an exact example—since we are so low on funds and are always crying about that—that we should follow. We should adapt merchant carriers or their counterparts for use in war.

It is interesting to note that just about one week ago the federal government gave contracts worth $340 million for icebreakers, fisheries ships and other types of craft that could be adaptable. For example, two icebreakers are being built in Vancouver and another one in Quebec. As well, three fisheries protection craft are being constructed. The committee noted that and tried to impress that on the government in our meeting, but so far to no avail.

As I travelled across the country as a member of the Subcommittee on National Defence, I had a set of blinkers on thinking that Maritime Command started and ended on the East Coast, but I was frightened and alarmed when I visited MARPAC on the West Coast to see our anti-submarine warfare capability, which has shrunk over the years.

In 1960 we had 12 ASW Neptunes and three ASW Trackers, which shrunk to four ASW Auroras in 1983. The Aurora is, of course, an excellent aircraft but is available in ridiculously low numbers. If one Aurora is grounded for whatever reason, 25 per cent of our air ASW resources on the West Coast are lost. It is a rare day, we were told, when more than two Auroras are fully mission capable.

Honourable senators, the figures I have here will give you a good idea of how negligible we have been in providing a decent force. Canada, with a coastline of 59,000 miles has 18 Aurora aircraft, four situated on the West Coast, with, if we are lucky, two operational. The Netherlands, with a coastline of only 228 miles, has 13 P3-C, which are equivalent to the Auroras. Japan has 5,500 miles of coastline and has 130 P2 and S2F aircraft, again similar to the Aurora. Japan has another 45 P3Cs on order and 40 to 50 more P3Cs planned for the future. Canada, with 59,000 miles of coastline, and which is supposed to assist the Americans on the West Coast against the Soviet threat, has four Auroras, two operational.

We were told that the operational forces require bases to operate from and that those bases must be capable of providing a full range of support. There are only two major operational bases on the West Coast, Esquimalt and Comox, with the former supporting the ships and the latter the aircraft. Comox has received some upgrading as part of the Aurora program and will receive additional assistance in connection with the CF-18 program.

Esquimalt is a different matter. The majority of buildings in the dockyard were constructed 80 to 85 years ago, and those have been supplemented by World War II frame buildings. Very little upgrading has taken place in CFB Esquimalt except for some very limited crane and jetty work and some services renewals. The Base Development Plan has been developed and is sitting on the shelf as DND resources are directed elsewhere or continually reduced by budget cuts. Our anti-submarine warfare capability is decreasing and has decreased to what is only an embarrasing level.

Again on the Falklands war, I should like to compare, for the sake of comparison, Argentina, which has a similar population to Canada, and should like to give you some figures which I have had prepared by the Library of Parliament.

The population of Agrentina, which was the enemy and put up a good fight, was 29 million against Canada's 24 million, which is now 25 million. Argentina has an area of one million square miles while Canada has almost four million square miles. Argentina has a coastline comprising 3,100 miles, and we have 14,206 miles on the Atlantic and the Pacific seaboards. Argentina's gross national product was $124.6 billion against Canada's $340 billion. Argentina's defence expenditures were $10.08 billion against Canada's $6 billion. Argentina's percentage of gross national product allocated to defence costs is 8.1 per cent and Canada's is 1.7 per cent. The defence costs per capita in Argentina are $350 compared to Canada's $238. Argentina's armed forces number 180,500, with 118,000 conscripts, compared to Canada's 82,800.

That brings me back to my plea that we should be training our youth on a rotational basis over the years so that they are prepared for emergencies.

Argentina has 250,000 reserves against Canada's 20,000, so honourable senators can see that we have not done and are not doing very well.

Honourable senators, the frightening prospects of a World War were brought back to us recently by the shooting down of a Korean Air Line aircraft. For whatever reason, whether murder or accident, too many innocent lives were wiped out unnecessarily in seconds.

So rather than argue about retaliation, Canada must take a new pledge to defend itself adequately in the future. Things have gone beyond the stage of apathy.

The formation of the Senate Subcommittee on National Defence must have been prompted by people such as Senator Lafond and his colleagues because they realized the need for the protection of our country and our citizens.

During the past three years that subcommittee has produced two comprehensive and realistic reports showing how Canada should prepare for the future at the lowest possible cost. The committee has just begun the third phase of its work, to review and assess Canada's Air Command capability, and time is precious. Unfortunately, our visit to air bases in Western Canada was cancelled today, and more time will be lost.

As a member of the committee—and I say this with due respect to my colleagues—I feel that the Minister of National Defence has insulted us and owes us an explanation for not having approved the visit.

Senator Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Who cancelled the trip?

Senator Marshall: The Minister of National Defence would not approve it, for some reason or other, and Senator Lafond, in his wisdom, cancelled it. The kindest words I can use are that the minister should apologize, and, in spite of himself, let us help him instead of listening to someone who has given him bad advice.

Honourable senators, I look forward to continuing with our work on this important and worthwhile effort. It is my hope that at least one recommendation which the committee made will be implemented, and that is that the public be educated in what we are doing and what we need. That recommendation states:

> In order to enhance public understanding of defence requirements and to strengthen parliamentary control over defence expenditures, the sub-committee recommends that the Description of Military Tasks in its new and more comprehensive form be revised at the beginning of each new parliament—

I should like to change that to "each month".

> —and tabled for reference to the relevant committees of both Houses.

I thank honourable senators for their attention.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-152

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on Thursday, October 6, 1983, I gave notice of the following motion:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon the subject-matter of the Bill C-152, intituled: "An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

Honourable senators, I think it would be more appropriate for the pre-study of Bill C-152 to be undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Although there are some parts of the mandate of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee that also fit, I think that the National Finance Committee is the more appropriate committee to deal with this bill. As honourable senators will recall, in recent years the National Finance Committee has undertaken a study of the organization of government departments.

Before I say a few words about the reasons for the motion, I ask leave to modify the motion to replace the words "That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs" with the words "That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance".

Honourable senators, accordingly, with leave of the Senate and pursuant to rule 23, I move that the motion be modified to read as follows:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the subject-matter of the Bill C-152, intituled: "An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, in answer to a question by the Acting Leader of the Opposition, outlined the legislation that the government would like to see adopted before prorogation. Included in that list were Bill C-155, the Crow bill; Bill C-110, which is before us for third reading; and Bill C-152, on government organization. Senator Olson explained why it is of some importance to the government. That is why I am asking honourable senators to support the motion to have a pre-study undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Then, in the event that we receive the bill, we will have had a head start on it with the pre-study and, perhaps, if circumstances unfold in that way, there will be an opportunity to have prorogation at an early date after both the Crow bill and this bill have been passed.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in view of the explanation given by the Leader of the Government earlier this afternoon, I do not propose to oppose this modified motion.

Motion, as modified, agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 13, 1983 at 2 p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FOURTH MEETING, MINAKI LODGE, ONTARIO
JUNE 16-20, 1983
REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

The 24th annual meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group was held at Minaki Lodge near Kenora, Ontario with delegations from the Canadian Parliament and the U.S. Congress. Discussions took place in three Committees:

Committee I: Trade and Economic Questions
Committee II: Defence and Energy Questions
Committee III: Environment and Multilateral Issues

At the conclusion of Committee discussions, the Group met in plenary session to hear an account from the Canadian side of the recent Progressive Conservative political convention in Ottawa and to permit participants in all three Committees to discuss a topic of widespread interest originally on Committee III's agenda, namely the problem of Central America and the Caribbean.

COMMITTEE I: TRADE AND ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

AGENDA

1. Introductory roundtable discussion:

Theme: International economic and trade prospects as a setting for discussions of bilateral trade issues. This examination could touch on national pressures for protectionist measures; bilateral reciprocity vs. multilateralism; the evolving role of GATT; export credits.

2. Bilateral policy issues effecting trade and investment: a) "Buy America" rules and legislation (including the Surface Transportation Assistance Act—cement, steel, specialty metals, etc.); b) Communications policies (including border broadcasting, trans-border data flows; proposed Telidon restrictions); c) FIRA and NEP; d) U.S. Export Administration Act (extraterritoriality).

3. Special trans-border trade problems: a) U.S. auto content bill; b) implications for Canada and the U.S. of the international grain marketing situation; c) airline routes and fares; d) agricultural products (potatoes, sugar, eggs).

4. Concluding roundtable discussion:

Theme: Possible methods of settling bilateral trade disputes.

Summary of discussions

This year a number of suggestions and proposals emerged from the discussion by Committee I of bilateral trade problems.

1. U.S. House members of the Ways and Means Committee suggested that the possibility of excluding Canada on a bilateral basis from various U.S. 'buy national' provisions should be looked into.

2. It was agreed to put on the agenda for next year's meeting the subject of a possible bilateral free trade arrangement between Canada and the United States.

3. In respect to bilateral communications relations it was proposed that a joint working group or commission should be established by the two governments. This joint commission would work collegially along the lines of the International Joint Commission to keep abreast of the bilateral problems created by the fast-developing communications technology and to monitor the situation.

4. In the area of grain marketing, members on both sides agreed to try to set up a joint legislative committee to pursue the objective of establishing a floor price for grain.

Introductory roundtable discussion on international economic and trade prospects and an overview of bilateral trade relations.

Exchanging views on the current international economic situation, members of Committee I assessed the factors considered to be affecting economic recovery including interest rates, the money supply, government deficits, tax rates and expenditure levels. In respect to trade questions, delegates discussed barriers to trade including agricultural subsidies and special bilateral 'deals'; the role of GATT; Canada-U.S. free trade; the plight of developing countries in financing trade; and competitive export financing.

There was recognition that economic recovery was underway although uncertainty was expressed as to how to sustain it. A Canadian spokesman remarked that Canada's recovery was probably quite fragile; the forestry industry which had an enormous economic impact in Canada was vulnerable, the mining industry was a "basket case", while the outlook for the Canadian manufacturing sector was still chancy. Surveying the U.S. situation, a Republican Senator said inflation was easing, consumer confidence was increasing and interest rates were declining. How to achieve a permanent recovery was the problem. Both tax levels, which the Administration had sought not to raise, and the size of the deficit were relevant to recovery. It was important to control the growth of government spending which should be reduced from 15% to 6% and to reduce the growth of the entitlement program especially medicare. It was also necessary to maintain a favourable climate for the private sector in order to stimulate economic growth.

A Democratic Senator argued that tax breaks had done nothing to help the economy and the heavy defence spending appeared to be sacrosanct to the Administration. A Democratic Congressman said the two driving forces at the moment were the deficit and the money supply. The Administration's priorities for defence spending defied its planned reduction of the deficit. Nor was there likely to be an easy compromise in Congress on the defence - entitlements question in the near term. But money supply is where the action really is. If Volcker was reappointed to the Federal Reserve Board, as most U.S. delegates appeared to think likely, he would keep the money supply very restricted as sustained higher interest rates could reverse the recovery. "Keep your eye on the Fed, not on Congress", advised this speaker. Another U.S. delegate added that if interest rates do go up, there would be pressure by Volcker to reduce the deficit.

In discussing why the level of interest rates had not gone up at present, a Republican noted that while the recovery was being fuelled by renewed consumer demand, the business sector was not borrowing heavily. When or if this happened, this could lead to upward pressure on interest rates. A Democratic Senator wondered if savings rates needed to be as high as they were. In the United States, they were 5 to 6%, in Canada 13%. He wondered if a slimmer margin between consumption and savings might move Canada and the United States toward increased consumption especially if associated with tax incentives and looser credit.

A Canadian delegate questioned what kind of a recovery it was when it was accompanied by such a high unemployment rate. But a U.S. delegate responded that, in view of the global economic adjustments taking place, it would be unlikely that unemployment levels would decline much lower than the 9 1/2% level. A Democratic Senator argued that because of the huge number of unemployed (12 million), it was impossible to cut back on the entitlements program but a Republican Senator responded that the upper and middle income groups were also benefitting from the entitlements.

There was an exchange of views on the incentive value of tax cuts with a Canadian delegate maintaining that this could be a helpful technique in stimulating consumption and in bringing lower wage demands thereby reducing inflationary pressures. A Democratic Congressman disagreed with an earlier U.S. participant who had argued for a more favourable tax climate for the corporate sector. Instead he argued for a new industrial policy planned co-operatively by government and industry. It might even be important to import foreign managers to change the outmoded management patterns of U.S. enterprises he said. A Canadian member warned that Canadian attempts to define a national industrial policy had not met with much success and a Canadian Senator also doubted that an industrial strategy was the answer. What was needed was increased productivity and a continuation of the transfer of jobs from the old smoke-stack variety to more advanced technology systems.

A Republican Senator emphasized that in his view by far the most important factor in getting the U.S. economy back on the rails was international trade. He himself had found the conclusions of the recent Summit disappointing. The bills related to the IMF, the Export-Import Bank and the Export Administration Act which had been dealt with in the Senate recently were all geared to trade. In answer to an earlier statement by a Canadian Senator that Canada was a small country and had to rely on the GATT for fair trading arrangements as it could be squeezed out by 'bilateral deals', this participant said that he was not a great supporter of the GATT. He thought bilateral deals were the way to go, although via 'fair' trade methods not by protectionism. The Canadian Senator said Canada hoped Congress would resist protectionist measures and move closer to the Administration's espousal of 'freer trade'.

Several Canadians raised the question of U.S. contributions to the International Development Association (IDA), the soft loan affiliate of the World Bank. Concern was expressed that Congress might not vote funds necessary for scheduled replenishment (IDA VI) and would delay the funding for the seventh replenishment, an action which would affect the poorest developing countries most severely. It was pointed out that the United States did not have, at $700 million, a disporportionate share of the sixth replenishment. Further it was in the U.S. best interest to allocate this funding since 40% of U.S. exports go to Third World countries. Without IDA and other assistance these countries would have no money for trade.

A Congressman recognized the U.S. interest involved in IDA funding but he judged it would be difficult to get it through the House appropriations unless the President himself made it the focus of a major effort. A U.S. Senator explained that even the recent IMF vote of $8.4 billion was very close in the Senate with difficult questions being posed repeatedly as to whether such funding would create more jobs. This bill was being amended somewhat to help its passage through the House.

There was a brief discussion of the international debt crisis, the role of the banks and the plight of many developing countries some of which used 75% of their export revenues just to finance their debts. It was noted that the big banks had little alternative but to continue financing these countries' debts. One Congressman wondered if the large banks should be restricted in their international lending but other delegates doubted that this would be feasible.

Of more immediate concern to Canada-U.S. trade were the reciprocity or protectionist bills before Congress, a matter raised by a Canadian delegate. While he recognized that Canada also had considerable protectionist pressures particularly in the textile, clothing and footware sectors, he cited specifically the Danforth Bill, the House Reciprocity Bill and the Auto Content Bill as disturbing U.S. protectionist developments. It was emphasized that of all the U.S. trading partners, Canada would be hit hardest by such legislation.

Justifying the recent U.S. action of reciprocity in agricultural trade, a U.S. delegate explained that the United States, in response to U.S. farm pressure, had felt it had to get tough with the European Community (EC). The recent U.S. credit sale of wheat flour to Egypt was aimed directly at the French, he said, although another U.S. delegate commented wryly that the action had, in fact, actually hit the Germans. This delegate admitted that in trying to force EC recognition of the U.S. opposition to their agricultural subsidies, the United States had been forced to use the worst aspects of the Community Agricultural Policy (CAP). He viewed this as a dangerous precedent which would only spark increasing domestic demands from all sectors for similar actions. As for the Danforth Bill, this Congressman said that while it had passed the Senate, the House version would be a 'defanged' version, a benign trade bill. The Auto Content Bill he said, was very unlikely to become law as it could lose 30,000 U.S. jobs while trying to preserve 10,000.

In the multilateral trade area, continued this delegate, the United States continued to look for support from Canada, for example, at the GATT Ministerial meeting. The anti-protectionist statements made at the Summit were good but it was doubtful they would be adhered to closely despite the rhetoric. In fact, he warned the Canadians, the next two years in Congress were going to be very difficult in terms of protectionist trade measures.

A Canadian Senator introduced the subject of the bilateral trade relationship and pointed to the relatively major role (15%) which Canada played in the overall U.S. trade picture. In 1982 Canada had had a large merchandise trade balance of $11 billion with the United States but the huge Canadian deficit in invisibles had meant that Canada had a current account deficit of $1 billion with the United States. He noted the concentration of Canada's trade with the United States (70%) and the high proportion of Canadian exports in manufactured form to the United States.

The Senator continued that when the terms of the GATT MTN agreement took full effect, 95% of tariffs on trade between Canada and the United States would be at levels of 5% or below creating a de facto free trade area. Non-tariff barriers were the problem now and any deals which the United States made bilaterally with other countries left Canada at a great disadvantage. With only a small internal market, it had to depend on the GATT system. There were a growing number of Canadians in both the private sector and the political arena who were looking seriously at the possibility of a bilateral free trade arrangement with the United States.

Recognizing the disadvantageous impact on Canada of U.S. "bilateral deals" and what he termed an "almost common market" existing between Canada and the United States, a Congressman agreed that this problem should be looked at carefully in his House committee, the Ways and Means Committee. Another Congressman inquired whether a proposed bilateral free trade area would have a common export policy but the Canadian spokesman explained that the proposal envisaged an arrangement not like the European Community's common market with its common external tariff but an arrangement similar to the free trade accords which the EC had with Norway or Sweden.

The question of competitive export financing to spur exports was raised by a Canadian delegate who noted that Canada hoped for an international agreement at the OECD on this issue. Canada gave export credits only reluctantly and in order to maintain a position against the aggressive financing of the UK, Germany, Japan and France. The OECD had estimated that over $6 billion was spent last year in this way. Nor could it be thought of as development assistance as such since it was not being applied intelligently. The United States was not the villain in this problem. It was very important to Canada that the OECD Consensus on Export Credits be successfully negotiated.

Bilateral policy issues affecting trade and investment

Delegates discussed the bilateral implications of some U.S. 'buy national' legislation and how Canada might be excluded from such U.S. non-tariff barriers on a bilateral basis. In dealing with communications issues, U.S. delegates warned the Canadians that retaliatory legislation was likely if progress were not made on the border broadcasting problem. The U.S. delegation reflected continued unhappiness with certain aspects of both FIRA and the NEP. It was predicted that the bill to extend the Export Administration Act would prove to be controversial in Congress and differences on the subject were evident among the U.S. delegates during the Committee discussion.

"Buy America"

Commenting on the serious impact of U.S. 'Buy America' legislation a Canadian member referred to the restrictive sourcing measures incorporated into the Surface Transportation Assistance Act (STAA) amendments in 1982. The restrictions involving steel and cement which ranged as high as a 25% margin of preference for U.S. firms had a particularly adverse impact on some Canadian firms, he stated.

An American Congressman, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, responded that many of these 'buy national' restrictions were added as riders to legislation when the Committee was not looking. The Committee was now conducting an oversight review on every piece of 'Buy America' legislation to try to maintain some sort of control. The United States had agreed not to impose such restrictions at the GATT MTN in 1979 and had reiterated the same thing at Williamsburg. The only way to prevent an international mess in this issue was by international negotiation. Government procurement was becoming increasingly important and price hurdles were being erected that no one could get over. Another Ways and Means Committee member added that cement and steel were included in the STAA legislation because roads and the mass transit sector were involved and the unions had pressed hard. The first Ways and Means spokesman agreed with the suggestion of a Republican Senator that the Congress should look into excluding Canada from U.S. non-tariff barrier restrictions on a bilateral basis, particularly the 'Buy America' restrictions. How would Canada react to such a proposal, he inquired.

A Canadian Senator responded enthusiastically to the American suggestion but warned that under GATT rules it would be difficult for the United States to exempt only Canada. After considerable study his Committee had concluded that under GATT rules the only way to get around the problem would be to conclude a bilateral free trade agreement on an across-the-board basis rather than a sectoral basis. Then teams of officials could negotiate the necessary adjustments to each country's non-tariff barriers in order to respect the special interests of either country. These might relate to the U.S. small business set-asides or the protection for minorities or the Canadian requirements for some protection from foreign investment such as Sweden had retained in its free trade agreement. This delegate underlined the fact that the private sector in Canada was increasingly looking at bilateral free trade as the answer.

A Canadian member warned that there would be serious fears in Canada that the American elephant would be in a terrifyingly dominant position vis-à-vis the Canadian chickens. The NDP, he said, was a proponent of economic nationalism, whereas the Liberals were split between continentalists and nationalists. Another Canadian participant added that there was increasing recognition that economic nationalism was not the answer and that what Canadian industry needed was free access to the larger market to permit economies of scale. But he warned that the initiative for bilateral free trade would have to be seen to come from Canada, a point recognized by U.S. delegates.

A Ways and Means Committee member agreed with the reminder by the Canadian Senator that the Congress in its Trade Agreements Act of 1979 had given the President a mandate to negotiate a free trade agreement with Canada but he thought this delegation of trade treaty-making had expired. In 1979, the United States had got the signal that Canada was not ready. However, he agreed Congress should now look into this question again. A U.S. Senator suggested that, in addition, private sector groups on both sides should be asked to have an input on this subject either to this group of legislators or to the officials.

There was general agreement to the suggestion that the subject of a bilateral free trade arrangement should be put on next year's agenda for discussion.

Communications

The question of bilateral communications was raised by an American Congressman who stated that given the extensive telecommunication links between the two countries, the relationship was generally very good. Canada and the United States were working well together on domestic satellite problems and cross-border data flows. The two countries were discussing a joint mobile satellite system. In contrast to these positive elements, however, the border broadcasting issue constituted a minus element. Currently, it was the U.S. perception that, while some progress had been made on this issue up to about six months ago, Canada now appeared to be drawing back. The United States had demonstrated its flexibility on border broadcasting and had proposed some revenue sharing but Canada looked as if it was no longer as willing to seek a resolution of the problem. Moreover, Canada has changed its position in respect to copyright and retransmission. The retransmission issue should be linked to border broadcasting. Certainly border broadcasting was not going to remain on "the back burner" in the United States any longer and all the related issues needed to be looked at.

The Canadian spokesman countered that for Canadians the border broadcasting was a cultural and political issue not an economic one. Extremely vulnerable to American cultural imports, Canada needed a distinctive broadcasting system to maintain a Canadian identity. Independent broadcasters considered the C-58 provisions to be beneficial, he said. Moreover he pointed out that the United States was deregulating while Canada was increasing its regulatory purview. He stated that the CRTC could decide not to take programs from Bellingham and Buffalo which had been the cause of the major irritants and take them instead from Detroit and other centres. However he hoped there would be no further escalation in this crisis. He inquired how serious were the threats of U.S. retaliatory legislation including the mirror legislation or the Telidon-linked Senate bill.

U.S. Congressmen and Senators were vocal in their warning that if there were not some resolution to the problem, there would certainly be retaliatory legislation. The proposed "mirror" legislation was recognized as not being strong enough.

A Canadian spokesman countered the impression of Canadian inflexibility by pointing out that Canada had agreed to examine the recent U.S. proposal for some type of revenue sharing. As a first step it had decided to study the economic effects of the C-58 provisions on the Canadian broadcast industry. This study would be completed by September and then talks on the U.S. proposal could go forward. This spokesman undertook to send the interested U.S. delegates a copy of the report. Another Canadian doubted that there was much chance of Canada amending the legislation in the coming pre-electoral period.

In terms of the economic effect of the border broadcasting legislation, a Canadian Senator remarked that the increased revenue to the Canadian industry was estimated at from $10 to $20 million a year but the loss to Canada by the retaliatory U.S. Convention tax had cost Canada about $100 million a year. He referred to this problem as a "terrible ongoing irritant" which was not even doing what it was supposed to.

Participants noted the 1982 bilateral agreement on transborder communications via satellite, the concerns related to sovereignty and privacy raised by transborder data flows as well as the problems facing governments of maintaining any sort of regulatory control let alone cultural boundaries in the area of communications in the face of such a rapidly expanding technology. One Canadian commented that in a number of problem areas, the United States tended to treat the Canadian market as part of their own.

A Canadian delegate noted that the U.S. Administration was now saying that there should be payment made for copyright for U.S. material taken by receiving dishes. A U.S. Congressman pointed to the problem the United States was having with the Jamaican government which had built a receiving dish and was taking broadcasting material off U.S. satellites and not paying copyright. In effect, the Jamaican government was sanctioning the piracy of copyright. In other Caribbean countries, individuals were putting their dishes up and doing the same thing.

A Canadian Senator proposed that Committee I of the Canada-United States Inter-parliamentary Group make a recommendation that an IJC-type of joint commission or joint working group be established by the two countries to monitor bilateral communications relations, to work collegially and to keep abreast of the bilateral implications of the communications developments. It was considered that technology was changing so rapidly that governments were finding it difficult to assess the bilateral implications of their regulatory and legislative measures. In many cases these measures were being overtaken by technology. While there were some additional comments indicating this initiative might be seen as a holding operation to stem U.S. retaliatory legislative action, there was general agreement to the proposal by Committee members on both sides.

FIRA and NEP

The U.S. delegation noted with satisfaction the recent improvements Canada had made in its FIRA procedures; there had been positive developments in the trucking sector and recent administrative changes were also good. However, the reasons for disapprovals of applications by foreign companies were still not 'transparent' and the procedures imposed a hardship involving time and money particularly for smaller companies. More importantly, there were still aspects contrary to the GATT including the performance requirements that commit companies to buy locally and to export as well as certain extraterritoriality problems.

In reply a Canadian member reminded the Americans that one-quarter of all Canadian industry is foreign-controlled and he cited the very high percentages in specific sectors including the mining (34%), oil and gas (59%), chemical (77%) and electrical products (59%) industries. If the United States were faced with such high percentages instead of its low overall rate of 4% there was no doubt that it also would have restrictions of some kind. In fact, Canada's record on applications for acquisitions or for new business was very good. In the past 7 years

FIRA had allowed 2500 out of a total of 2700 applications. He admitted that the process might cause some discouragement to some small firms. He noted that the industry in his constituency was almost entirely foreign-controlled and there were some problems in their attitude to sovereignty and the loss of freedom to export by the Canadian subsidiary. Nonetheless he said that Canada's overall review process was minimal. The United States also imposed restrictions on foreign investment in certain sectors and he listed some of these. This delegate doubted that the Canadian government would forego the FIRA screening process although Canada clearly wishes to encourage investment.

A Ways and Means Committee member said that the United States had taken Canada to the GATT because it considered an infringement of GATT rules the FIRA performance requirements imposed on a company such as the Apple Computer Company to buy locally and to export a certain percent of its production.

In response, a Canadian delegate was critical of the U.S. multinationals which imposed restrictions on exporting by their Canadian subsidiaries, limiting them to producing for the domestic market. Several members of the Ways and Means Committee admitted this was the case and were critical of the practice. As for 'buy local' requirements, the Canadian spokesman continued, Canadian producers frequently did not have even an opportunity to bid on purchases by large U.S.-owned companies in Canada since they automatically sourced in the more familiar U.S. market. The FIRA requirement was only to give Canadian producers a chance to compete on equal terms. Another Canadian mentioned that an indication that a foreign firm would undertake significant research and development work in Canada would be viewed as a benefit to Canada. Attention was also drawn to transfer pricing by multinationals, a problem which was extremely difficult to monitor.

A U.S. Senator said that what Canada and the United States needed was a common set of guidelines respecting the behaviour of foreign investment firms and he suggested that the U.S. Trade Representative might be asked to establish private sector groups from both countries to work together in drawing up the guidelines.

As for Canada's National Energy Program (NEP), a Congressman said the two aspects which were still irritants for United States were the 'back in' and the petroleum incentive program (PIP). The PIP did not accord national treatment as laid down in the OECD guidelines and was discriminatory in favour of Canadian firms. Further, Canada was imposing taxes and duties on exploratory oil rigs on the continental shelf.

In replying at some length to the criticism of the 'back in' provisions in the Canada Lands, a Canadian Senator was himself critical that the Canadian government had not adequately explained the background. It was important to be aware of the different system under which Canada had traditionally regulated exploration and development on Canada Lands he said. Whereas in the United States, exploration rights are auctioned off, in Canada permits had been granted for no payment but on the condition that the permit holder, before production, surrender one half of the acreage to the Crown. This was called the "checkerboard" system and was in force during the 1960's. Subsequently several other systems were tried which the companies did not particularly like. Finally in 1982 the present legislation settled on the Crown Interest provisions which reserve a 25% interest in the Canada Lands for the Crown. They apply to both Canadian and foreign-owned firms alike. While the spokesman considered that the new policy had been clumsily handled by the government, he emphasized that it was not a radical departure from traditional Canadian practice of regulating oil and gas leases on the northern lands under federal jurisdiction.

Export Administration Act

A Canadian member raised Canadian difficulties with the U.S. Export Administration Act by which the U.S. government tries to control exports in an extraterritorial manner. Canada had various problems with the legislation including with jurisdiction, the interpretation of national security controls, extension of foreign policy controls and attempts to control products made from U.S. technology. It became a matter of political concern to Canada particularly when it became a lever of U.S. foreign policy. The spokesman asked if the current proposals to extend the existing legislation were likely to pass Congress.

A U.S. Congressman replied that the issue had been generating a great deal of debate in Congress, with three different bills involved. There were emerging conflicts between those who were concerned with trade and those who emphasized national security points of view. The U.S. is faced with a dilemma on this issue. Where there is no extraterritorial application of U.S. law, then U.S. multinationals flout the law and shift jobs abroad; where it is applied, there are inevitably conflicts with the laws and policies of other countries. The House Foreign Affairs Committee removed from the bill, the authority of the Administration to impose restrictions on imports from offending firms. It also limited the application of foreign policy controls to U.S.-based companies. However, this spokesman thought the present U.S. Administration will press hard for extension of extraterritoriality as a foreign policy lever in order to reduce East-West trade.

A U.S. Senator said the Senate Banking Committee was particularly opposed to the violation of contract sanctity in the proposed extensions of the 1979 Act. He thought the Senate would be likely to defuse the bill. But a House Ways and Means Committee member predicted that the bill would be one of the real battles shaping up in Congress. He referred to the Senate version of the bill as "pernicious", giving the Administration everything it wanted except contract sanctity. The House bill was clearly an improvement but it also was in for a rough passage.

Specific trans-border trade problems

U.S. Auto Content Bill and Canadian Automotive Task Force

A brief exchange took place over the prospects for U.S. domestic content legislation and the report of the Canadian Task Force recommending a requirement that all vehicle manufacturers be committed to the content/production ratio in effect under the Auto Pact. The central question a Canadian delegate said he wished to ask the Americans was how they had managed to get the Japanese to build cars in the United States and how Canada could do the same.

Congressmen said Japan recognized it was in its own interest to install production facilities in the United States in view of its trade deficit with the United States. Also, the Japanese parts replacement system was inadequate and needed to be drastically improved in any case. Members of the U.S. side were of the opinion that the U.S. auto content bill would not become law.

Grain Marketing

On grain marketing problems, delegates discussed the Canadian fears of an international trade war in grains, the possibility of a grain producers' marketing agreement to establish a floor price, the U.S. system to cut back acreage and the U.S. determination to recapture its traditional markets. A proposal to establish a joint legislative committee on grain marketing problems was made.

Opening the discussion a Canadian member described the current difficult market situation for North American producers which included overproduction in 1982 and 1983, a lower rate of compensation because of the recession and the continued expanding role of the European Community as a major exporter of grain. He noted that the United States had moved to reduce acreage by its payment-in-kind (PIK) program. Canada was also moving more gradually in this direction. Further there were lower initial payments being made by the Canadian Wheat Board and the proposed changes in the statutory low Crow freight rate. For the American delegates he explained the Canadian system whereby the Wheat Board projects the export market demand, then proposes a quota of production based on a volume/consumption ratio which permits an acreage control over time. The price paid by the Board follows the Chicago futures price although initially it pays a somewhat lower price than the Chicago price. A final payment is made to the farmer when the Pool account is balanced. The Board in effect takes the risk out of marketing for farmers.

A U.S. delegate explained the considerable reduction in wheat acreage in the United States this year as a result of the Reduced Acreage Program (25%) and the PIK program (25%). But he said the U.S. farmers were complaining that the funds for the interest rate 'buy-down' were being withheld by the Secretary of Agriculture instead of being used. Nonetheless, asserted another Congressman, the United States was determined to get into traditional or new markets and would take whatever steps were needed in this "hard game". The PIK program was costing $16 billion out of a total $30 billion for agricultural programs. A third Congressman added that the U.S. Administration was not happy about the export subsidies which it used in the sale of wheat flour to Egypt (and which cost the U.S. consumer $100 million) because it was concerned that U.S. farmers would become dependent on subsidies. Nevertheless it was determined to ensure the Community recognized the United States meant to compete.

The Canadian spokesman reiterated the serious Canadian concerns over the risk of a trade war given the enormous economic importance of agricultural exports to both economies. Canada feared the U.S. intentions of getting into markets at any cost and he warned that even if a little more grain were sold, it would be sold at a lower price. Describing the mid-term outlook, he said stocks were likely to decline and consumption to increase while acreage was already decreasing in the United States and also in Canada, though not as quickly. He was of the opinion that the market place would work out the problem. He and other Canadians urged that the United States inform Canada if it were going to challenge Europe.

The U.S. spokesman agreed with the Canadian spokesman that there was a real danger of an escalating trade war and said that agriculture could become the worst problem in international trade. A Canadian member wondered if the United States could work on the divisiveness among member states within the Community on the question of subsidies, but a U.S. delegate said that even the German and the UK farmers were now, to an increasing extent, relying on the subsidy.

The Canadian spokesman mentioned the recent meeting of major wheat exporting countries in Mississippi. He suggested that parallel to official-level meetings there should be meetings of legislators to try to prevent a price-cutting situation arising and to provide more leadership and co-ordination among producers. He said there had already been some inter-legislative meetings exploring the idea of a grain 'cartel'-type arrangement. The objective was not a traditional cartel which seeks to sell at what the market will bear but rather to establish a floor price and not sell below this when there is a market surplus. It might be more appropriate to call it a Food Bank rather than a cartel, interjected another member. At the 1981 Ottawa meeting, the Canadian spokesman continued, it was found that Canadian and U.S. cost-of-production figures could be established for hard wheat but there had been a lack of interest on the part of the U.S. Administration. He said such a joint committee of legislators could open a dialogue on this subject and try to establish a co-ordinated approach. While there was general Commitee agreement to this proposal, one Congressman suggested the group should not only include producer nations but all OECD member countries and that discussions should eventually include consumers as well as producers, perhaps through a working committee of the GATT. Further, he suggested if a floor price were successfully established this would only result in the price of land and fertilizer going up.

Agricultural products

A number of issues were raised concerning trans-border agricultural trade of which the most prominent was in respect to New Brunswick and P.E.I. potato exports to the United States. At present a U.S. anti-dumping action instigated by Maine potato growers is currently underway and the U.S.

International Trade Commisssion has made a preliminary determination of injury.

A Canadian spokesman distributed statistical tables showing Canadian horticultural trade patterns, including one for potatoes, over a period from 1970 to 1982. He drew the attention of the American participants particularly to the cyclical patterns of Canada's potato exports and imports as well as the cross border trade for other vegetables and fruits. The United States, he pointed out, represents over 60% of Canada's imports of fruit and nuts and 75% of its vegetable imports. Moreover, the point was made that the United States is the source of almost all Canadian potato imports, and that until recently Canada was a net importer of potatoes. Canada does not have the same legal instruments as the United States that would allow it to restrain trade, the spokesman said.

In reply to an inquiry by a Congressman the Canadian delegate agreed that the Canadian government granted potato producers some assistance in the form of storage capacity, but on a very limited basis. Another Congressman said he understood that the Maine producers were no longer as productive as previously but he urged that the case be allowed to run its course through the U.S. process. A U.S. delegate remarked that Canadian seed potatoes were being shipped and used as table potatoes. A member of the House Ways and Means Committee remarked that the final determination of injury required to prove dumping under U.S. laws was very difficult to prove.

The U.S. side then raised the issue of Canada's "fast-track" system for horticultural products under which a surtax can be temporarily imposed by the Canadian Agriculture Minister if the price of the imported fruit or vegetable falls below a certain 'bench mark' level.

The Canadian side explained Canada's particular problem stemming, all along the border, from a later growing season than U.S. producers. This situation frequently results in U.S. products having reached their harvest peak before Canadian products come on the market with a resulting difficult competition for domestic producers. The example was given of southwestern Ontario grape growers where early competition from low-priced, cross-border competitors could wipe out the industry. Moreover one Canadian delegate said the U.S. duty was ad valorem while the Canadian duty was specific. The Canadian horticultural industry needed the 'fast-track' system, it was claimed.

Airline routes and fares

The Canadian side set forth Canadian concerns related to bilateral air relations. The 1974 agreement provided for 44 routes by U.S. airlines and 28 routes by Canadian airlines, said the spokesman. There had been seven negotiating meetings since 1979 aimed at settling the differences arising since the conclusion of the agreement. The first problem emerged when the U.S. airlines designated to carry traffic from Canadian centres to U.S. 'gateway' points combine their designated route with the preclearance facilities provided at major Canadian airports. This gives U.S. carriers an enormous advantage in "behind the gateway" routes since they, unlike Canadian carriers, can then fly anywhere in the United States from this 'hub'. In practice this prevents Canadian carriers from competing in growing markets such as Toronto-Atlanta, Winnipeg-Denver or Calgary-Phoenix. Since the important Canadian markets coincide all along the border with the Canadian 'gateway', U.S. airlines do not have the same problem in reverse. The solution from the Canadian point of view would be more long-haul routes into the United States. The Canadian delegate acknowledged that while the U.S. has captured about 80% of the scheduled market in North America, Canadian airlines have about 90% of the charter market.

A second irritant for Canada is related to the U.S. policy of deregulation which U.S. negotiators appear to be pressing on Canada, continued the Canadian delegate. In contrast, the Canadian situation is quite highly structured with subsidization to provide services in some far-flung areas which would otherwise have none. Finally, the United States is asking for the right to designate two or more carriers to one route. This would increase Canadian difficulties in competing.

U.S. participants noted the problems described by the Canadian side. A Congressman commented that airline industries were currently fragile everywhere since the air travelling traffic was down and it was difficult to know what would happen. Certainly competition in the United States was producing some "wild pricing". Examples were cited of bargain prices for much-travelled major routes while shorter, less-frequented destinations had much higher fares.

Upcoming U.S. trade legislation

Two members of the House Ways and Means Committee said the sub-committee on trade was currently drafting new trade legislation. It would be "within the letter and spirit of GATT" and was designed to make the U.S. anti-dumping and countervail laws more efficient, faster and less expensive to invoke. The number of U.S. complainants continually seeking redress and who were frustrated by the process had caused the Committee to conclude that the existing U.S. trade remedy laws were not a sufficient mechanism. The target of the draft bill would be other countries' subsidized or dumped exports. The problem was to define a subsidy and it would include below-market-rate loans, tax advantages, preferential purchases. Also targeted were Japanese government procurement arrangements which effectively closed-off the internal market. It could even be directed against financial assistance designed to improve efficiency of production for export.

As examples of what type of subsidies would be focussed on the Congressmen mentioned those accorded earlier to the Michelin plant in Nova Scotia, and the European Community subsidies in the petrochemical and textile industries.

When asked if cheap energy would be considered a subsidy, a Congressman responded that it was important to distinguish between a subsidy and a comparative advantage a country may have in a commodity such as gas. Of course the export price would need to be the same as the domestic price he added.

In reply to a Canadian member who asked what the Administration's reaction to the draft legislation was, a Ways and Means member responded that the Committee had the impression that if it were in accord with GATT, the Administration would go along with it. However he acknowledged that it would take some time before all the agencies and departments which would be involved in reviewing the bill would complete their assessments.

Note: The last item on the agenda for Committee I, 'Possible methods of settling bilateral disputes' was not discussed during the Committee sessions.

COMMITTEE II: DEFENCE AND ENERGY QUESTIONS

1. Defence a) Introductory roundtable discussion:
Theme: Public attitudes and the nuclear arms debate.
b) Bilateral defence issues:
(i) missile testing and deployment (including cruise missile testing in Canada);
(ii) air defence modernization;
(iii) defence spending levels.

2. Energy a) Introductory roundtable discussion:
Theme: World oil supply, pricing and markets; role of OPEC; impact of lower prices and energy development. b) Bilateral energy issues:
(i) Canadian natural gas exports to U.S. markets; levels; pricing;
(ii) prospects for the Alaska Gas Pipeline project;
(iii) impact of the NEP;
(iv) electricity.

Committee II has in recent years dealt exclusively with energy questions. Last year it became evident that the subject no longer required a committee to itself. It was decided this year that combining energy and defence questions would provide a more balanced workload between the three committees.

For Committee II the result was most satisfactory. Discussion proceeded vigorously during all three sessions. On some issues where policies followed by the two countries are in conflict, dialogue occurred principally between the two delegations. On other issues, and principally in the defence field, debate also occurred within delegations. In all instances, discussion was spirited and friendly.

Public Attitudes and the Nuclear Arms Debate

Scheduling this item at the beginning of the meeting was intended to stimulate dialogue and it had the desired effect. Discussion was introduced by a Canadian member who acknowledged her strong belief in arms reductions. She reported on the growth of public concern in Canada, as reflected in increased participation year over year in peace marches in Vancouver—in 1978-8,000; 1981-35,000; and in 1983-80,000.

The speaker suggested that the increased concern which these figures revealed was due to two factors: a) the collapse of Soviet American arms negotiations, which had eliminated the main hope of many concerned people; and b) the election of President Reagan, with his emphasis on "cold war rhetoric".

Canadians traditionally adopted U.S. causes. But the decision of the Canadian government to entertain a request from the United States to test the air launched cruise missile (ALCM) over Canadian terrain because it was similar to that which prevailed in large parts of Russia had generated a uniquely Canadian problem. The issue had first surfaced when two Canadian journalists had reported in the spring of 1982 that the two governments were negotiating an agreement to provide for mutual testing of weapons systems, including the cruise missile. The question had since gained national attention. Earlier in the year a poll on the question of testing had generated a 52 per cent negative response. It was her opinion that most of those who were opposed to testing were not in favour of unilateral disarmament. At this point another Canadian delegate observed that a recent vote of confidence in the House of Commons on the same question had produced a large majority in support of testing the cruise missile.

The American side responded with comments by several delegates on studies which had been made of local votes on the nuclear freeze issue. A Senator from Alaska reported that referenda had recently been held on the question in most Alaskan municipalities and all but one had recorded support for a reduction in nuclear arms. But on closer analysis it had emerged that they had supported verifiable and mutually balanced reductions. A Congressman from Texas said that opinion in his state took a similar position. Few among those supporting the reduction of nuclear weapons favoured a unilateral freeze and even fewer advocated unilateral reduction by the United States.

American speakers were agreed that the main purpose of most supporters of the nuclear freeze in the House had been to put pressure on the President to negotiate more seriously with the Russians and it seemed to be accepted that this aim had been realized. There was no support for a unilateralist nuclear disarmament policy in the House of Representatives.

This exchange led another U.S. delegate to express his concern that the United States' posture toward the U.S.S.R. was no longer balanced as between political, military and economic factors, but was skewed toward a military response. The result had been to weaken the political coherence of the NATO alliance, because for the first time political parties in several European states were profoundly divided over how the West should deal with the Soviet Union. He noted in particular Germany and the United Kingdom. With regard to the United States, he felt the statement of the Catholic Bishops had great significance because it would become a teaching document among the faithful and would also influence members of other Churches.

There was a brief exchange regarding the efficacy of nuclear weapons. A Canadian observed that some NATO military leaders had questioned their military value and had showed a preference for conventional arms. A U.S. delegate responded by noting their devastating potential in use against a naval task force. In another American delegate's opinion, some military leaders questioned their value as a battlefield weapon because they need political release. Nuclear weapons had military value, but their use was constrained by politicians.

A Canadian delegate provoked another discussion when he stated that in his opinion a majority of Canadians do not believe that the United States is at this time negotiating with the Russians in good faith. Several Americans responded to this argument with two points. First, that the depth of suspicion of Russians towards Americans was enormous and they mentioned personal experiences of how this mistrust was manifested toward them personally. They also noted numerous known examples of Soviet violations of arms control agreements with regard to SALT I and II, the test ban agreement, and agreements relating to biological and chemical weapons. Secondly, that there was no alternative to negotiations and the prospect for talks was improving. One U.S. delegate noted that President Reagan, having had some success in gaining Congressional support for the MX, now felt more confident and could afford to be more flexible.

A U.S. participant expressed concern over the growing number of Western Europeans who equate the two superpowers. They used to be only a tiny minority. Several Canadian delegates responded by making points which confirmed this view: that President Reagan and Secretary Weinberger are seen to be confrontationists, that U.S. government rhetoric has been daunting and that U.S. efforts to promote negotiations are perceived to be "cosmetic, while the mad race goes on". However, it was admitted on the Canadian side that, with the exception of the New Democratic Party, political parties tend to avoid foreign and defence questions.

Against this background, the Committee turned to the question of cruise missile testing in Canada.

Cruise Missile Testing in Canada

A U.S. delegate commented that until coming to the meeting he had not been aware that cruise missile testing was an issue in Canada. In the United States the cruise missile was a peripheral weapons system which had been around in one form or other since World War II. Political controversy there had focussed on the MX missile and B-1 bomber and he wanted to know more about the politics of the problem in Canada.

A Canadian delegate responded by noting that no one was concerned for their personal security as a result of testing. In her opinion many Canadians were concerned about the nuclear arms race. Canadians normally made common cause with Americans on such questions. But, since Canada had no nuclear weapons, Canadians could not meaningfully engage in the nuclear freeze debate. The request to test the cruise missile had faced the Canadian government with a decision, and many Canadians were of the opinion that agreeing to test the cruise missile in Canada could constitute a contribution to the further escalation of the nuclear arms race. So for the first time in many years in the nuclear field, Canadians had an opportunity to take a stand. In this speaker's opinion Prime Minister Trudeau in 1978 had advocated a policy of nuclear freeze and suffocation and this approach underlay the thinking of those opposed to missile testing.

Canadians delegates all seemed to be agreed that the Canadian government had contributed to the turmoil on the subject, using words such as secrecy, confusion and lack of candour to describe the government's approach. The prevailing view was that the government would be supported in agreeing to testing, although in fact parliamentary approval was not required. Several references were made to a recent vote in the House of Commons which had produced a large majority in favour of testing, although it was noted that the vote had occured on an NDP non-confidence motion and was not therefore a free test of opinion. One speaker wondered why the issue had only surfaced recently, even though it had been known for several years that the missile guidance system was being built in Canada.

There was some discussion among Canadians as to how to read the polls. One member reported that his constituents had responded to a questionaire which he had sent out 3 to 1 in favour of testing. A West Coast member observed that the situation in Vancouver was certainly different and reminded the meeting that the poll conducted by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion had shown 52 per cent opposed to testing. A third speaker reminded the group that in 1937 there had been in Great Britain a massive vote for peace, yet the country had within two years voluntarily gone to war. In his view the public were concerned about the nuclear arms race but they also feared the Russians. In the longer term his preferred solution was to increase conventional arms.

Air Defence Modernization

Discussion on this topic was brief and focussed mainly on developments on the Soviet side which were generating a U.S. response. An American reported that U.S. air defence capability in Alaska was being upgraded; the DEW line was also being modernized and AWACS and F-15s were being provided. There had been some question of subordinating the Alaskan air command to Hawaii, but the decision had finally been taken not to do so. A Canadian spokesman reported that the Canadian defence authorities recognized the need to upgrade the North American air defence system and were now negotiating with the United States as to what should be done. No questions were asked about Canadians plans.

U.S. delegates reminded the meeting that the Soviet Union had now located the Backfire bomber in the Kamchatka peninsula, from where it could make return trips to western Canada. It would require refueling to reach California, but with air launched cruise missiles, these bombers had become a formidable threat to western North America. Reference was also made to modifications in Soviet nuclear submarines, which were now capable of operating in arctic waters, including firing missiles.

There was some discussion as to the advisability of making information on these developments and the threat they posed more widely available. An American delegate cautioned that such information has to be given carefully. There is always the risk of pumping up information "to boost the defence budget."

Defence Spending Levels

This item, which began with a brief survey of levels of defence spending in Canada and the United States, generated an intensive and broad discussion of U.S. defence strategies.

A U.S. spokesman opened with a brief report on U.S. defence expenditure, which was increasing at 5 per cent real growth each year. He did not expect manpower to be increased, although the armed forces wanted it; it was already the principal item of expenditure. Even so, defence had fallen as a percentage of the total U.S. federal budget. In the Kennedy era he asserted it had been 48 per cent of the budget; now it was only 27 per cent. Within the U.S. defence budget, expenditure on NATO-related items had reached a ceiling of $130 billion, although in previous years it had risen fast to accomplish a modernization of U.S. forces in Europe. Canadian speakers reported that the defence authorities had in recent years begun to re-equip the armed forces with modern weapons and defence expenditure was increasing at 3 per cent real growth per year. However, the base was very low and for many years equipment had not been replaced.

The thrust of the afternoon's discussion was given by an American delegate who noted that defence expenditure was growing faster than the GNP and the defence budget had for the first time surpassed $250 billion. This left very little latitude to the U.S. government to adjust non-military expenditure. In his opinion the U.S.S.R. and the United States of America each had more than they needed to defend themselves. Recognizing that each might be frightened by fear of the other, he wondered whether there might be some way to agree on a cut back.

Another U.S. delegate expressed the view that no cut back was possible until 1986, when the United States would have caught up to the Russians and could afford to allow defence expenditure to level off. This prompted a Canadian to suggest that the escalation might never end because the Russians could be expected to respond by increasing their expenditures. And another Canadian delegate asked rhetorically if the Americans could not understand that the Russians were afraid of them.

At this stage a dialogue developed among U.S. participants, some of whom felt that the Russians have never been satisfied with any given level of expenditure and that instead of limiting their increases when the U.S. relaxed, they exploited the opportunity to pull ahead. Other U.S. speakers suggested that the United States stood to benefit from a verifiable arms reduction agreement and should work to that end. Canadian speakers encouraged this debate by asking whether the level of defence expenditure did not endanger the U.S. recovery by adding to the deficit and whether the U.S. economy was not losing out to Japan whose defence effort was very low. It was also suggested by Canadian participants that the United States was inevitably, as the most powerful member of the Western alliance, a source of suspicion and it was therefore necessary to act with circumspection and sensitivity.

The dialogue within the U.S. delegation continued. When one American delegate commented that Canadians should be aware that these matters were hotly debated within the United States, another asked if the disagreement was limited to means. For example, he assumed a Democratic president would support the goals of deployment of the MX and construction of the B-1 bomber. The first speaker said that he doubted whether a Democratic president would have supported MX deployment. He added that he felt President Reagan's rhetoric had reopened the China problem unnecessarily and was partly responsible for the strength of feeling on the nuclear freeze issue. This comment generated the rejoinder that times are perilous, because the United States had allowed its forces to decline and little was known about the Soviet leader Andropov other than that he had been head of the secret police.

A Canadian participant responded to this discussion with an expression of concern about the approach manifested by U.S. supporters of the Reagan Administration. She preferred the approach of the Western Europeans, typified by the Ostpolitik and an effort to find accommodations with the Russians. An American delegate reminded her that it had been the Europeans who had in the late 1970s urged the United States to deploy the Pershing and cruise missiles in Europe, to which the Canadian delegate responded by reminding him that this was predicated on a two track policy-negotiations and disarmament only if negotiations failed.

Another U.S. delegate suggested that President Reagan was well placed politically to take a personal peace initiative. He would like to see an offer that each side cut back defence expenditure by 10 per cent, with the savings put into a fund to be used to help third world countries. Such an offer would strengthen the position of the United States with its allies and with the world in general. This proposal aroused strong reactions from several other U.S. participants, who were afraid such an approach "would let the Russians off the hook" and that it would weaken support for defence expenditure in the United States, but not in the Soviet Union.

At this inconclusive point it was decided to end the afternoon session and to turn the following morning to energy questions.

World Oil Supply

This topic generated only a short discussion. A Canadian spokesman made an opening comment, noting the difficulty of making predictions. In his opinion, the combination of conservation measures and reduced demand, partly as a result of the recession, had caused prices to fall and he did not expect a price rise in the near future. In Canada this situation had lead to diminished exploration and development activity in the frontier areas.

The U.S. lead-off speaker predicted a major interruption of supply within the decade. There had been 13 interruptions in the last 30 years and he expected the pattern to repeat itself. He also felt OPEC's continuing strength had been underestimated. While the press had focussed on the decline in the price of oil, he thought it significant that OPEC had succeeded in cutting back quotas and control would be easier in a period of rising prices. The situation, he felt, was not dissimilar to 1978.

By 1979, an increase in demand of only 5 million barrels a day had caused the world price to double.

Another Canadian delegate adopted the same view. While there had been some increased conservation, no one knew how much reduced demand owed to the recession. The prospects for the future were uncertain. Soviet production was falling and they would be hard put to maintain exports of 1.5 million barrels a day. North Sea reserves were good for only 9 to 10 years. The United States minimum import requirements were 4.5 million barrels a day. He anticipated Canadian import requirements by the end of the decade of 1 million barrels a day. In this situation a shut down of the Persian Gulf would undoubtedly produce a crisis.

Natural Gas Exports

This subject was introduced by a U.S. speaker who explained that the U.S. Administration was seeking to reform gas pricing, regulation and distribution and had prepared a proposal to this effect. The Senate Committee on Energy was in the final stages of reviewing this legislation. The speaker, who was chairman of the Energy Committee, was anxious to bring more competition into this complex and somewhat stratified system. While he personally was opposed to placing restrictions on the price or access of Canadian gas, two of his colleagues on the Committee, Senators Melcher and Domenici, have made restrictions on Canadian gas a condition of their support of the bill. It might therefore be necessary to limit the price and conditions of entry of Canadian gas in order to get approval of the bill. In considering this step the attitude toward Canada was further coloured by two unpopular Canadian policies: some features of the National Energy Policy and the decision to charge 20 per cent duties on supplies required by off-shore oil drilling rigs operating on the continental shelf beyond the 12 mile territorial sea. He noted that Canadian gas was priced at the border, not at the wellhead, and that there was a single price for delivery to any point in the United States, a situation which he understood had been asked for by the United States negotiating authorities in the past, but which he did not think made sense when the market was depressed.

These latter remarks were briefly supported by U.S. delegates from Montana and New York State who raised objections to the single border price. In Montana the public utility had decided to stop buying Canadian gas and the transmission company would have to consider breaking the take or pay clause if it could not sell the gas elsewhere. The Chairman of the Senate Energy Committee told the meeting that since January within the United States there had been wholesale abrogations of contracts with high priced U.S. suppliers, either through bankruptcy or to avoid bankruptcy. Until now the existence of the border had protected contracts with Canadian suppliers, but he expected very soon to see these contracts also breached.

Canadian speakers mentioned that priority was being given in Canada to negotiating an agreement with Alberta over the future price of oil and gas. The 1981 agreement had wrongly assumed a continually rising price for oil and gas, and substantial revenues were at stake for both governments. The Canadian government hoped to have an agreement completed by July 1. Only then would it be possible to consider the export price to the United States. The government did not feel it could reduce the price of gas for export below that charged at the Toronto city gate, which was about $3.37 U.S. a thousand cubic feet (mcf). The government had moved at the beginning of the year to cut the border export price from $4.94 mcf to $4.40 mcf. It had suggested that a further price reduction might be tied to a volume discount.

The single border price led to some discussion. The meeting was told that an average well-head price in Canada at this time might amount to $3.30 U.S. mcf. This meant slightly over one U.S. dollar to move gas on average from the well-head to the border, a substantial distance in the case of eastern U.S. markets. If true costs were charged, the cost to deliver gas to the Montana border might be 50 cents mcf and to New York State $2.50 mcf. This information came as a surprise to those delegates from eastern U.S. states who had earlier in the discussion objected to the single price at the U.S. border. It became evident that even with a lower well head price the net border price for their states might be higher. The present system involved some subsidy of eastern U.S. consumers by western consumers.

There was also some discussion of future U.S. gas supplies and what types of fuels were competing in the United States with natural gas. In Canada the benchmark since 1977 has been a substitution price in relation to imported oil and the prime market is seen as home heating oil. U.S. speakers suggested that in the United States the competition came from residual oil, say number 6, used for industrial purposes. It was assumed that the United States had 15 to 20 years supply of natural gas and that the Fuel Use Act would be repealed. There was a brief discussion of the prospects for coal gasification, which were viewed optimistically at about $7.00 mcf.

Canadian speakers ended their remarks by indicating how important the U.S. natural gas market was to Canada, stressing how reliable Canada was as a supplier and how the regulations had been bent when necessary to help out the United States when it had faced shortages. Canada would not undertake the cost of developing gas fields and distribution systems without long-term contracts and, if the present contracts were breached, Canadians would be wary of making agreements in future. It was also reasonable to pay a premium for an assured foreign supply. All this having been said, Canadian speakers acknowledged that price adjustments would have to be made and expressed the hope after July 1 the way would be opened by an agreement between Ottawa and Alberta.

For his part, the Chairman of the Energy Committee warned of the need to move speedily. He expected the U.S. domestic price to fall as the industry was deregulated, which would put further pressure on Canada. He reminded the meeting of the pressure to control imports of natural gas and read a possible provision: "Prices paid for imports could not exceed prices paid for domestic production. Transportation prices would be an add on." He spoke again of strong feelings about the NEP and the new duty on supplies for off-shore drilling rigs. And he warned for a second time of the risk of contracts being broken by U.S. carriers.

One Canadian participant asked why it was in Canada's interest to export gas rather than to store it in the ground. He considered that it was in the interest of the United States to import modestly priced Canadian gas and to wait until later to bring in the more expensive Alaskan gas. While none of his Canadian colleagues shared his support for keeping the gas in the ground, the remarks did lead into a discussion of prospects for the Alaska gas pipeline.

Alaska Gas Pipeline

U.S. delegates were all agreed that there was no current prospect of building the Alaska gas pipeline. The main problem was still the lack of up-front financing, and the current gas bubble had only accentuated the difficulties. However, there were 26 trillion cubic feet of gas in Prudhoe Bay, representing one twelfth of U.S. reserves and that gas would eventually be needed. In the interval, the gas was being reinjected into the ground as it was separated from oil. While this added to the cost, since the gas would have to be lifted twice, there was relatively little loss and the system worked better than was first considered possible.

In answer to a question, American participants were not prepared to speculate whether the pipeline would be built by the end of the decade. There was some suggestion that Dome's exploration of the possibility of shipping LNG to Japan was a complicating factor. A U.S. speaker said that Japan had not been prepared to finance a pipeline across Alaska to tidewater and he doubted whether they would put money up for a similar project in Canada. A Canadian participant agreed with him and claimed that the Dome proposition was not viable. Moreover, an American participant noted that under current legislation Alaskan gas could not be sold to Japan. The impression was left that the Japanese option was not in fact a serious alternative for Alaskan gas.

Alaskan representatives at the meeting were agreed that Alaska was suffering economically because of the delay in construction of the pipeline. Since there was already a huge overhang of unsold gas, there was no incentive in the state to drill for oil, since oil and gas were usually found together and the gas could not be flared. Furthermore, the construction of the pre-build section of the line to Alberta put Alaskan gas at an additional disadvantage, because it was expensive gas (potentially $12.00 mcf). In one Alaskan senator's view, the line would not be built so long as Canadian gas was available at a lower price.

U.S. delegates insisted that they had not reneged on any undertakings relating to the pipeline. The special provisions asked of the Congress had been passed. But without necessary private financing, the line could not be built. This led a couple of U.S. participants to argue that the U.S. Administration should be authorized to guarantee the financing and thereby ensure construction. But this opinion was clearly a minority view among U.S. delegates, even though there was a general perception that the line might be needed suddenly in the future and that it would protect the United States from OPEC blackmail and be good for U.S.-Canada relations.

National Energy Policy

An American speaker opened this discussion, claiming that U.S. complaints centred on the Canadianization features of the NEP and on the recent decision to apply a 20 per cent duty on supplies for oil rigs operating on the continental shelf beyond the 12 mile territorial sea. He feared that the result would be retaliatory action and instanced particularly the application of the Minerals Leasing Act to exclude Canadian owned companies from exploiting U.S. lands.

Canadian participants described the extent of foreign and U.S. ownership in the hydrocarbon area to explain why some Canadian action had been necessary. The question was specifically asked whether the United States would have agreed that a field the size of Hibernia should be foreign owned. A U.S. Senator responded that much of the action at Prudhoe Bay had been foreign owned. In his view what mattered was control and jobs, not ownership. He found the difference in atmosphere between Prudhoe Bay and the Beaufort Sea quite remarkable and a striking comment on the different bureaucratic environments in the two countries.

A Canadian delegate suggested that Canada and the United States had different traditions. The United States sold sub-surface rights by auction. Canada for many years had used the checkerboard system, which had ensured a crown interest. There has been a period in which no rules applied in Northern Canada, but everyone knew that rules would eventually be applied. He asked, since Canada did not use the auction price approach, why the Crown's interest should not be assured by another approach. This prompted an American delegate to retort that auctions brought in only 2 to 3 per cent of U.S. revenue from hydrocarbon development. Most of the government's revenue came from royalties.

Canadian participants were agreed that some modification of the NEP was required and that the NEP was only one factor which had limited recent oil development activity in Canada. There was an assumption that some elements of the NEP would be changed following agreement with Alberta on price, but nothing was said as to how the system might be modified. The duty on off-shore oil rig supplies was not pursued by either side.

Electricity

The third session ended at this point. There was no time to take up the question of electricity exports, which had been included on the agenda at the suggestion of the U.S. side. No U.S. participant seemed anxious to take up the subject.

I. Environment and Fishery Issues

Introductory Roundtable Discussion

This discussion consisted of an overview of environmental issues in Canada-U.S. relations and a discussion of the relationship between employment and environmental clean up measures.

The subject was introduced by a Democratic Congressman who briefly reviewed a number of bilateral environmental concerns. He observed that acid rain was certainly the most intensive issue and that Congress was moving very slowly on corrective measures. He commented that the matter would have to be confronted in this Congress but that there will be a "hell of a fight" because solutions demand a lot of money. He noted that he himself had introduced legislation in the Committee on Energy and Commerce. He went on to say that unlike water pollution, where it was necessary to undo damage already done, we can see the tragedy of acid rain coming and must act now.

He then touched briefly on the matter of the Garrison project which he explained was dealt with in Congress through Appropriations Bills. He felt that funding would be blocked in the House of Representatives but might be restored in the Senate. Concerning the Great Lakes, the Congressman observed that there was a wide variety of emerging issues of concern. He noted that new polluting substances were being formed by synergisms between a whole host of chemical products and that these were having damaging effects on fish eggs. He suggested that this was a highly dangerous long-term threat because the "flushing rate" (the period it takes for the waters of the Great Lakes to be renewed) was approximately 500 years. He pointed as well to the consumptive use of Great Lakes water as an issue of emerging importance by noting the estimate that use would rise from the current rate of 4700 cubic ft./second to 31,000 by the year 2025. In his view U.S. clean water legislation would have to be rewritten. Finally, the Congressman commented briefly on the appointment of William Ruckelshaus as Director of the Environmental Protection Agency. He welcomed the appointment and remarked that the new director was a solid, scholarly man who would restore balance to the EPA.

A Canadian Senator then joined the roundtable discussion by turning to the subject of environment versus jobs. She presented the Canadian view that job losses from environmental clean up had been exaggerated and the economic benefits of environmental protection understated. She noted, for example, that the forest products industry in Canada, which is threatened by acid rain, contributes in a major way to the Canadian economy. She went on to say that, while it is not possible to establish the precise size of the pollution control industry in Canada it may sustain in excess of 50,000 jobs. The recycling of waste materials is becoming more attractive in Canada as new materials are becoming scarce and more expensive and energy costs are rising. Concerning possible job loss from environmental clean up, she reported research that showed such considerations are generally not the overriding factor in plant closing decisions. She noted several examples where companies had turned environmental requirements into profitable investments. Finally, the Canadian spokesman observed that Canadian governments are sensitive to the burden placed on companies by environmental requirements and noted several types of public assistance, including the Accelerated Capital Cost Allowance Program.

An American Senator then joined the discussion by noting that political harm had been done to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency but that a sincere effort was now underway to correct this situation. He observed that Mr. Ruckelshaus would do anything that is "fiscally practical" and predicted that progress would be made on acid rain. Another U.S. Senator, from a northeastern State, said that the "key issue" was acid rain and while there had been glaring ignorance in Washington of Canada's concerns this situation was now improving. Unfortunately, he observed, there is still debate about the causes of acid rain.

Two Canadian delegates responded by turning the subject again to environment and jobs. The first delegate reported that Canada was now satisfied that job gains and losses are balanced, an important political argument. He then went on to identify chemical wastes and long-term health hazards as a very important issue. A second Canadian delegate emphasized the importance of abating the fears of business if environmental clean up was to proceed. She observed that we must present the case that jobs are not the problem, capital costs are the problem.

Acid Rain

An intense discussion of acid rain was introduced by a Canadian Member of Parliament. He began by observing that while we don't know everything about acid rain we know enough to justify action now. He noted the urgency of action by observing that once waterways are destroyed, the damage is irreversible in the short and medium term. Techniques such as liming are just not practical on the vast scale required. He went on to say that U.S. scientists are among those who think we know enough to act. Canada has committed itself to a 50 per cent reduction in its contribution to the problem and the hope is that the U.S. will match that target.

This participant went on to say that the issue which must now be confronted is that of the effect of environmental clean up on the economy. The real crunch, he observed, is costs and jobs. He observed that corrective measures will cost a lot in Canada and that the matter had not been entirely thought through. However, he remarked that Canada has the political support to do it whereas perhaps U.S. politicians do not as yet. He went on to say that Canada is not pointing the finger at the U.S. because "our own hands are not entirely clean". While total U.S. pollutants are far greater, acid rain is a problem that must be solved together. He concluded by observing that acid rain put a serious strain on Canada-U.S. relations but that it was not just a bilateral issue. "It is a problem facing large areas of the United States as well."

A Republican Congressman responded by observing that the District he represented in New York State had as serious an acid rain problem "as any place on earth". He suggested that the issue required political finesse because the issue still lacks sufficient support in Congress. He expressed concern that the political support needed would be frightened by possible job loss, an especially severe concern right now. In particular, he expressed concern about the reaction among mid-western Congressmen. Nevertheless, he was encouraged by growth in understanding of acid rain and felt that in the past three months "the issue has been going our way".

A Canadian delegate joined the discussion by drawing a parallel between the problem of acid rain and the clean up of the St. John river in the Maritimes. He argued that the issue was not job loss but rather dislocation of jobs and cited the example of a pulp and paper company which preferred to move its operation rather than clean up its existing plant. Such a decision, he observed, is especially hard on one-industry towns. He went on to say that too often the public attitude is that industry pollutes so industry should clean it up but he suggested that such an approach would not work. What was needed was government assistance to keep the jobs in place.

Another Canadian participant introduced himself as coming from the region in Canada hardest hit by acid rain. It is a vacation area which attracts many Americans as cottagers. He remarked that he advised these American visitors to "spread the word at home". He drew the American delegates attention to the Parliamentary Committee Report "Still Waters" which was excellent and noted that the Committee had been brought back into operation and would be visiting Washington in late June.

This delegate went on to say that Canada is not lily-white where acid rain is concerned. Two of the "bad boys" are in Ontario, with INCO being the worst acid rain producer in the world. At the same time, he noted company claims that they are improving and have a target of reducing sulphur emissions from 1900 tons/day to 950 tons/day. It is estimated that this will cost $400 million but would result in efficiency gains of $30 million/year. He remarked that these measures were hard to introduce in the current depressed nickel market when INCO was currently losing $1 million/day.

The Canadian delegate continued his remarks by noting that 70 per cent of acid rain causing pollution in Canada comes from the United States. However, he observed, we are fortunate to have only one border and two countries involved. He noted that acid rain was a world wide problem, including Europe and the Soviet Union and that the large number of countries and borders in Europe will make it a much more difficult problem to solve. He concluded by saying that in North America the problem should be solved amicably.

A Democratic Congressman noted that there was considerable discussion in Congress about the acid rain problem and that he believed there was a good chance of legislation being reported to the House. In particular, he drew attention to one piece of legislation covering 31 states that would create a superfund based on a charge of 3 cents per kilowatt/hour applied against the 50 largest electric generating producers of acid rain pollutants. The target is a 6 to 7 million ton reduction in sulphur emissions from electric utilities with an additional 1.3 million ton reduction for chemical and mining companies. The superfund is intended to provide 90 per cent of capital costs with the rest being written off for income tax purposes.

The Congressman remarked that while he did not want to get Canadian hopes too high, this legislation might succeed for political reasons. New Hampshire, he pointed out, is the first Presidential primary and acid rain is a major issue in New England. He said that while he would be surprised if such legislation "would go all the way", it might at least get to the floor of the House.

Another Democratic Congressman remarked that this was a billion dollar issue with total cost estimated in the $10-20 billion range. He observed that there were very powerful industry and labour coalitions against doing anything but that in his judgement it was time to get on with the clean up. "We don't need to sit around and study anymore". The evidence is clear, he remarked, that some 200 companies in 31 states produce 90 per cent of sulphur and nitrous oxide pollutants. He argued that building high stacks does nothing to solve the problem by just depositing it elsewhere. "Stopping it at the source is the solution." He then commented that Canada "lectures us a lot but what are you doing?"

The Canadian delegate who had opened the discussion replied that Canadian emissions have been reduced by 25 per cent and that more would be done. The problem, he noted was that further Canadian actions had been suspended because of ongoing negotiations with the United States. "Canadian action must be related to U.S. action". He suggested that what was required was an international political mechanism with perhaps a mediator to establish the facts and areas of agreement between the two sides. He remarked that negotiation is still the best route at the moment. He went on to say that powerful Canadian support exists for dealing with the problem. For example, when Ontario Hydro was given approval by the Ontario government to expand electricity exports to the U.S.A.—a move that would have increased sulphur pollutions—the Canadian Minister of the Environment, strongly supported by all federal political parties, intervened before the National Energy Board to block approval.

Toxic Wastes

A Canadian Senator opened this discussion by saying that in some ways she was more afraid of toxic wastes than of acid rain because of its terrible health hazards. She then inquired whether there was any political will in the U.S. to deal with the problem and whether it was true, as reported, that organized crime is heavily involved.

A Democratic Congressman replied that there were certainly operators who go to businesses and offer to dump wastes in abandoned farm land for a price. He noted that to apprehend someone with a truckload of these wastes is hard because it requires sophisticated chemical analysis to determine the contents. A Republican Congressman added that it is an enormous problem because there are literally thousands of polluters and huge dumps. The only way to solve it is at the source. A Canadian delegate observed that Canada has trucked a lot of its wastes to the United States.

Noting the related problem of nuclear wastes, a U.S. participant reported that a lot of this material is trucked through his district to the main disposal sites in South Carolina. He reported that there is a new French product consisting of special ceramic containers to store this waste. A Canadian Member of Parliament observed that the Canadian government believes that the nuclear waste disposal problem is solvable at reasonable cost and that these concerns should be put to rest.

Sage Creek Coal Development

The State of Montana has requested the Canadian and British Columbia governments to delay the proposed Sage Creek Coal Mine in southeastern B.C. until it is proven the mine will not harm the Flathead River in Montana and the Waterlon-Glacier International Peace Park. The Democratic Senator from Montana raised the issue with the remark: "I am with you on acid rain and Garrison but we have a big problem - the Flathead River. We have to solve this problem". A Canadian Member of Parliament from British Columbia replied by saying that the company and B.C. government have tried to cooperate in supplying information. He went on to say there is no doubt the province and the company know that the project must be environmentally safe if it is to go ahead. He added the caveat that "what we think is environmentally safe and what you think may be different". The Canadian Member ended his remarks by assuring the Senator that he would assist in any way he could.

Garrison

The discussion was begun by a Canadian MP who observed that this issue had been on the agenda for many years and that he understood the continuous pressure on Congress to approve this project. The problem is especially acute now because of a proposed $22 million appropriation to start on the Lone Tree Reservoir which is on the Hudson's Bay side of the watershed. He went on to say that the concern is not so much over pollution, which can be corrected, but rather over possible biota transfer. While some believe that recent research on fish screens shows they can solve the problem, he remarked "we are not convinced".

The participant went on to say that the ultimate Canadian objective is redesign of the project so that the whole system would be contained in the United States. The fear, he said, is that having spent 17 per cent of the estimated $1 billion cost, momentum is building to complete the entire project.

A Republican Congressman from the mid-west began his reply by expressing surprise that this item was still on the agenda. In his view it was "whipping a dead horse" because the U.S. had repeatedly given assurances that the project would not violate the Boundary Waters Treaty. Specifically, he said that it has been guaranteed that the Lone Tree Reservoir would not violate the treaty and that the Souris River dam would stay sealed until agreement is reached with Canada. He added that the tests of fish screens had shown that all the species trapped were already present in Manitoba waters. He concluded his remarks by stating that the bottom line was that the U.S. would not violate the treaty and that he was a bit concerned about the actions of environmentalists.

A Canadian participant responded that he had recently been part of the group that makes an annual pilgrimage to Washington on the Garrison. He suggested that this issue was not so much a case of Canada versus the U.S. as a question of good neighbours. "We have no right to tell states adjoining North Dakota what to do but my impression is that local political priorities are taking precedence over good neighbours."

He went on to say that Canada remains concerned that the IJC report is being ignored and that the "jigsaw puzzle is being fitted together one piece at a time". He stressed the point that all parts of the project are going ahead as originally envisaged and expressed the Canadian fear that because Phase I is not cost effective on its own, Phase II will be proceeded with. He noted the claims that the fish screens would solve the problem but said there were reports of such screens failing in California and that "they only need to fail once." He described the sizeable Canadian industry, both fishing and tourism, that could be severely hurt by new species getting into the Manitoba water system. He concluded by remarking that every year during the visit to Washington "we get sympathy from lots of Congressmen but do not get the assurances we need".

An American Congressman then commented that it was hard to defend "the turkey" (the Garrison) but that his Congressional colleague had done a good job. He said that Canada should be concerned about the current appropriation because it is part of a phasing-in strategy to disarm the opposition. He urged his colleagues to remember the Welland Canal which introduced the lamprey eel into the Great Lakes and, with it, tremendous damage and costs. He noted that fish screens are ineffective in controlling the lamprey and so poisons have to be put in the lakes forever. He concluded by remarking that "we just don't know enough to justify projects like Garrison."

The Canadian MP who introduced the Garrison discussion now wrapped it up by saying there should be a mechanism for direct talks between Manitoba and North Dakota because, if the project proceeds tensions between Canada and the U.S. will worsen. This item will be on the agenda, he concluded, until all levels of government can sit down together and redraw the project.

East Coast Fishery

A Canadian participant introduced the subject of the east coast fishery by noting that although the Gulf of Maine case was before the International Court, the entire issue was an example of a failed agreement. She expressed the opinion that there were going to be serious fish-management problems, perhaps even a fish war, well before the International Court renders its decision. She felt, in particular, that the experience of signing an agreement which the U.S. then backs out of had damaged the faith in Canada-U.S. relations. "Canadians find it very hard to understand your system." An American Senator remarked that "the Mexicans say the same thing in Spanish" and explained that the problem arises from the fact that the U.S. Administration conducts a lot of negotiations without consulting the Senate along the way.

A Canadian delegate then remarked that fish stocks are being very seriously depleted at the present time. He reported that management violations were currently being ignored and warned that if there is not enforcement, there are not going to be any fish. He suggested that a management system had to be put in place before the International Court's decision. A U.S. participant who serves on the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee replied that a method had to be found for establishing the scientific facts in such cases. "If we could establish facts on such things like the stocks then perhaps we could get behind the smoke screens of scientific argument."

Skagit

A Canadian Member of Parliament reported that, happily, this issue was one that was being solved. On April 14, 1983, he reported, British Columbia and Seattle announced a framework agreement for resolution of the 40 year old dispute. Under the terms of the agreement flooding of the Skagit Valley will be prevented in return for a guarantee by B.C. to supply the power which would have been generated by raising the Ross Dam. Seattle will pay B.C. amounts reflecting the capital cost and annual operating and maintenance costs it would have incurred if it had raised the dam. In addition, the agreement will provide for establishment of an Environmental Endowment Fund. The Canadian Member said that the issue was now before the Canadian and U.S. governments to prepare a treaty and that he could foresee no problems on either side.

Ontario Sport Fishing

A Canadian delegate reported that as a result of a drastic decline of fish populations in Ontario, the provincial government was putting increasing restrictions on the number of fish allowed and issuance of licences. He noted that the government had already been taking Canadian commercial fishermen to court and was now putting pressure on Americans. He remarked that Ontario faced a problem, namely that it had built up a big tourist trade based on fishing and now the fish are not there.

A U.S. delegate responded that tourist operators in Minnesota also want to maintain the fish stocks but they find the Ontario action too restrictive. In place of such drastic action, he described a longer range U.S. proposal to rebuild stocks consisting of a) buffer zone and joint commission representing Minnesota, Ontario and Manitoba b) a slow reduction of commercial fishing until it is phased out entirely c) reduced catch limits. He went on to warn that the present action could have a bad public relations effect on Ontario. Because of declining "walleyes", Minnesota is losing tourists to other states and is very anxious to cooperate in developing the fish stocks.

A second U.S. Congressman from Minnesota said that the U.S. believed that the restrictions were put in to keep business in Ontario. He observed that it was the attitude of harassment that angers people. A Congressman from the Lake Ontario region strongly supported this point by saying that the Ontario measures had created enormous anger among Americans who use the lake and the Niagara River. He reminded delegates that there had been a long history of cooperative two-way traffic in these waters. He commented that he had been told that the new Ontario rules would not apply to the lower Great Lakes for the time being.

The Canadian participant replied that the anger was not confined to Americans and that there was plenty of anger in Ontario too. At the same time, he noted, something had to be done about declining stocks.

Pacific Salmon

One of the U.S. Senators from Alaska began the discussion of Pacific Salmon by saying this was a very difficult problem for Alaska. The area affected in south-east Alaska, he noted, has a very poor economy and depends on forestry and fishing. Alaska, he added, had reduced quotas because fish stocks had declined and had asked Canada to join in management of the stocks. A Draft Treaty was drawn up but then changes were proposed to acknowledge past Alaskan policy and practice.

The Senator emphasized that the State of Alaska opposes the treaty as it stands. Alaskans are particularly upset, he said, by the fact that historically there had been no salmon fishery on the Canadian side of the Taku River but that a subsidized commercial fishery had now been established. He said that Alaskans want bilateral discussions on several matters: a) the fact that previous Alaskan cuts in quotas were not reflected in quotas under the treaty, b) the operations of Canadian commercial fishermen, c) the subsidization of the Canadian commercial fisheries.

The other U.S. Senator from Alaska joined the discussion by saying that the subsidy was the key issue. He noted Alaskan feelings that the treaty made no acknowledgement of Alaskan enhancement efforts. He further noted the feeling that Canadians were saying, "You had better make an agreement or we will increase the catch downstream". He added that it was in everyone's interests to jointly manage the resource.

A Canadian participant replied that this was a far easier matter to resolve than the East Coast Treaty because there is no question of boundaries to settle and the issues are fewer in number. He suggested that the treaty was just a common sense management plan and that Alaska was complaining only about its end of the deal. The gist of the situation was that while Alaska takes many of the salmon, about 80 per cent of the fish spawn in Canadian waters and so a lot of the enhancement program rests with Canada.

He went on to argue that the treaty had a few problems to be worked out but was not in a hopeless state. In particular, there was need to increase the total catch and to come to an agreement concerning the Canadian fishery on the Taku. He remarked that both sides were in dire straits over sadly depleted stocks, largely because of Japanese high seas fishing.

A United States participant responded that the issue was very acute and that the U.S. Coast Guard believes there may well be violence. He suggested that there had to be greater Canadian acknowledgement of past Alaskan contributions to enhancement. He warned that this trouble is "the tip of the iceberg" and that if the treaty is not changed there will be U.S. retaliation on halibut.

Another U.S. delegate noted that part of the problem was the slowness of Canadian information on the stock being made available. A Canadian delegate acknowledged that was a problem.

Another Canadian participant then commented on the fact that the treaty had been carefully negotiated and, at the last minute, U.S. pressure groups held it up as they had held up the East Coast treaty. He commented that this was wonderful for the U.S. Senate because Canada puts everything on the table and then the Senate gets its "final kick at the can". He suggested that it was time for the U.S. to get its act together or Canada would stop negotiating in good faith.

II Multilateral Issues

Law of the Sea

A U.S. Senator introduced this discussion by noting that the Senate had supported the Administration's approach to Law of the Sea until the negotiators "went off on their own". He remarked that President Reagan had no choice but not to sign the treaty because there is an obligation to protect the U.S. mining industry. In particular, he said, the transfer of technology provisions are completely unacceptable and he warned that Canada would come to regret them. He then went on to say that the treaty process is a problem and breaks down if the Senate is not informed and involved as things proceed. He noted that there was a tremendous backlog of treaties before the Senate for this very reason. A Canadian participant remarked that the first time this process adversely affected Canada was the East Coast Fishing Treaty but that the U.S. was now causing great trouble by its practice of rejecting treaties negotiated by the Administration.

The U.S. delegate replied that the Senate is part of the process and must be recognized as such. He then went on to say that so far as the Law of the Sea is concerned, the U.S. would agree to a treaty only with changes that would be unacceptable to others. In response to a remark by a Canadian delegate that the U.S. would not be able to insulate itself against the treaty forever, the U.S. delegate replied that "we are not going to support a process that subverts U.S. free enterprise". He warned that Canada would discover the problems of the treaty when it is sued by one of its own corporations.

International Debt Crisis

An American Congressman opened this discussion by remarking that the debt problem is reaching a very critical stage. Much of the debt, he noted, has gone to finance enterprises in competition with U.S. enterprises and, as a result, there is increased U.S. resistance to lending. He remarked that "U.S. banks thought they had a good deal but now the bottom has dropped out and the banks are saying you must support us, you must support the price of oil, you must support the World Bank and the IMF, all to save their own skins. There is not much sympathy in the U.S. for the banks."

A U.S. Senator agreed that there was little sympathy for the banks but it should be remembered that in the 1970s they were encouraged by developed countries to get involved with third world. This was seen as an alternative to more aid. At the same time, he remarked that he had opposed the increase in IMF quotas which, in effect, "monetizes bad debts". He expressed the opinion that the banks would not go bankrupt but that they had to swallow their bitter medicine.

A Canadian Member of Parliament suggested that the U.S. would have to reschedule much of this debt whether the U.S. liked it or not. He noted that total debt was about $620 billion and that some 25 per cent of New York bank assets were represented by loans to Mexico and Brazil alone. He argued that such major creditors would be rescheduled because otherwise a major crisis would result. But he expressed concern for some of the poorer and smaller countries which were hurting the most but have little bargaining leverage with the international financial system. He warned that if onerous conditions were imposed on them they would have no choice but to further restrict imports which would be an additional threat to international economic recovery. To a U.S. delegate's comment that IMF conditions often reduce imports anyway, the Canadian participant replied that the quicker and more easily adjustments occurred, the sooner imports and exports would pick up again. He noted that between 30 and 40 per cent of U.S. exports go to the third world and, if these countries can't afford to buy, the whole recovery process would be stalled.

The Canadian delegate went on to say that the major debt problem concerned about 40 countries. He argued that if the IMF and World Bank did not have the resources for adjustment there would be an economic crisis. He expressed the hope that the U.S. Senate would support the required replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA) which, studies showed, had a better economic return on its loans than did the commercial banks.

Another Canadian delegate expressed some sympathy for the U.S. concern, observing that the industrialized countries cannot afford to spend much more on aid. He agreed that the private banks must accept responsibility for their own lending though government has a responsibility where its policies have encouraged or directed the banks. He acknowledged the fact that nobody knew what was going to happen to the economy and expressed regret for "the Mexicos of the world". But, he added, he was also sorry for the little guys in Canada who spent beyond their means. He concluded by saying that what was required was international cooperation, not the placing of blame.

A U.S. Senator then joined the discussion by reporting his participation in a recent IMF sponsored delegation to discuss these questions in Mexico, Peru and Brazil. He remarked that many officials with whom they met said that "the IMF is telling us to tighten our belts and most of our people don't have any belts to tighten." He warned that if the price of oil drops much further, there may be a revolution in Mexico "or ten million Mexicans in the U.S.A".

The Senator then went on to say that his personal view was that it is bad management to give people money you know they can't pay back. "I think the banks are entitled to go broke". He then commented on his visit to Brazil where huge factories paying wages of $140 month are being built to send exports to the U.S. "We are going to make them healthy so they can compete with us and put our people out of work." He argued that if banks want to continue operating abroad, the rules of the game must be changed to require disclosure of information, larger reserves and an international banking system. If the banks don't follow these rules then they should go broke.

In response to a Canadian delegate's remark that the U.S. would have greater problems with third world countries if it did not provide the IMF with needed funds, the Senator replied that a long history had shown the U.S. that money does not buy friends. "We give money, money, money and what do we get? Every time you create a competitor, you do a disservice to yourself." He concluded by saying that we are in the midst of agonizing change and are forced to ask, "What can we afford to do?".

The Middle East

A Canadian Member of Parliament began the discussion by noting two points on which all participants might agree: that Israel sees itself surrounded by hostile Arabs and that the Arabs regard Israelis as intruders. He went on to express his personal view that the Arabs had taken an enormous step forward with the Fez Declaration. Among its provisions was a call for withdrawal of Israel from all territory occupied in 1967 which implied recognition of Israeli claims prior to that. Similarly the document called for the dismantling of Israeli settlements established only after 1967. In addition the declaration calls upon the Security Council to guarantee the recognition of all states, including Israel and an independent Palestine.

The Member went on to say that, despite this progress in the Arab position, it was hard to have negotiations so long as Israel won't talk to the Palestinians and dismisses them as a bunch of terrorists. He noted that Israel had suffered 250 casualties as a result of terrorism but had created many more victims by its invasion of Lebanon. He suggested that terrorism was the tactic of the weak, just as it has been for Begin and the Stern gang in the 1940s.

The Canadian delegate then expressed the view that the PLO was moving away from terrorism. He offered as evidence the 1973 PLO agreement with the U.S. that El Fatah would not harm Americans, the PLO agreement in 1977 to discuss recognition of Israel and other indications of Arafat's moderation in the period 1980-82. He suggested that there is a "window of opportunity" which may close with further Israeli annexation of the West Bank and asked why the U.S. chose to put all its eggs in the Israeli basket? He described the Reagan Plan as a significant step forward but observed that it was not supported by Congress. "On the contrary, Congress is giving more aid to Israel." He concluded by saying that the Arabs are naturally pro-American but are so frustrated by lack of U.S. understanding that they would turn to the Russian side for support. He called upon the United States to press harder for negotiations.

A Senator from the north-eastern United States replied that he had recently been to Lebanon on a fact-finding trip and it was his strong opinion that a sovereign Lebanon would never have emerged had it not been for Israeli action. He noted in particular that the quantity of arms captured was staggering.

The Senator went on to make two fundamental points about U.S. understanding of the region. 1) Israel has a justifiable case of paranoia, having been through 5 wars in 35 years. Despite this, Begin signed a peace treaty with Egypt and returned territory on schedule. Until the PLO abandons the desire to destroy Israel, nothing can be accomplished. 2) Israel is democratic. It was the Jerusalem Post that reported the massacres and an independent commission severely criticized the government. The American people deeply respect these remarkable qualities.

The Senator warned that people are sometimes inclined to give the Arabs more credit than they deserve. The U.S. has been willing to cooperate over the years but it has been very hard to get Arab help. "Even Begin has been willing to do so." He concluded his remarks by saying that Begin will be tough on the issue of the West Bank settlements, "as any Prime Minister of Israel would be".

A second U.S. Senator joined the discussion to comment on U.S. aid to Israel. He remarked that Israel does not get much more money than Egypt but the difference is that Israel repays at the rate of $900 million/year. He stated that the bottom line of U.S. policy in the Middle East is deterrence of the Soviet Union. "We spend $30 billion/year on NATO, $2.6 billion on Israel. Aid to Israel is a much better deal." He went on to say that the U.S. wants the Israeli army to stay in Lebanon or there will be a massacre of the Lebanese army. The Senator concluded by remarking that not all U.S. eggs are in one basket but Israel is dependable. "We cannot in any way jeopardize a sure relationship."

The Senator who had opened the discussion for the U.S. delegation joined again to say that the basic U.S. mistake was to move away from the Camp David accords and that a year had now been lost. He acknowledged that Congress had been remarkably silent but disputed that it was due to the Jewish lobby whose power, he suggested, had been greatly exaggerated.

The Canadian participant who opened the discussion repeated his call for greater U.S. initiative and pressure to encourage Israel to negotiate "before it is too late". He noted in particular that a point of no-return was fast approaching on the West Bank, after which Israel would never abandon her settlements. That would constitute a permanent, major obstacle to peace in the region. A second Canadian delegate observed that he was a bit inclined toward the other side of the argument. He noted in particular the Arab spirit of animosity towards Israel and that if he were responsible for Israeli policy he would never give up the Golan Heights. He concluded the discussion by asking whether Canada was prepared to accept some responsibility for a settlement? "The answer is, we are not. Until we are, we have not earned the right to criticize."

Plenary Session

Central America

A Republican Senator began the discussion by commenting that current U.S. policy faces four or five bad choices and must consider which is the least bad. He said there is no doubt that infiltration of arms and support is being masterminded by the U.S.S.R. and that the U.S. was being forced to escalate as a counter-measure. The danger, he suggested, was of further deterioration and even the fall of Mexico. The question is how to de-escalate through agreement on mutual reduction of outside arms? There are many loopholes through which arms can slip into the region. The U.S. hope is that its assistance will support democratic government "so that finally the good guys will win and the bad guys will lose."

A Democratic Senator began his remarks by noting the major disagreements in Congress with the Administration over its Central American policy. However, he suggested that everyone agreed that there should not be a Marxist state in El Salvador. The question is how to minimize that threat with the support of U.S. allies in the region. He commented that far too often the U.S. acts unilaterally. The Senator went on to say that the U.S. has the greatest difficulty in accepting that there are freedom fighters in the western hemisphere. In eastern Europe the U.S. supports the struggle for liberation but in Latin America they are seen as created wholly by the U.S.S.R.

Turning specifically to El Salvador, the Senator began by stating that the Administration has never been able to establish the quantities of arms from Nicaragua. The assumption that the war in El Salvador is dependant on outside help is just an assumption, nothing more. He went on to say that it is now generally agreed that the war is stalemated and the U.S. has three options. 1) send in the marines. The danger of this course is that no one knows where it will lead. 2) status quo. The problem here, noted the Senator, is lack of motivation in the El Salvador Army. The Senator commented that some 85% of troops trained in 1980 have now left the military and that without motivation to defend their own country, there can be only one outcome - a guerillas victory. 3) negotiate. The Senator remarked that this was risky but might work by elevating the political moderates on both sides of the conflict. He noted many Latin American allies of the U.S. as well as the Catholic church recommended negotiation. He concluded by warning that while this option exists now, it would not for much longer. "If a region-wide war breaks out the problems will be far worse."

A Canadian MP spoke briefly and remarked that Canada's role is substantially different than that of the U.S. He reported on the two year Parliamentary investigation of Canada's relations with Latin America which concluded that we should establish closer ties. During the course of the Committee study, he noted, members had been exposed to the thinking of many countries, including Cuba. He suggested that if Canada has a role to play it would be to act as a bridge to facilitate negotiations. Canada has a good reputation in the region and relations with all countries. He concluded by saying that Canada's good offices are open to assisting in a political settlement.

A Democratic Congressman began his remarks by saying what the U.S. seeks to achieve in Central America is infinitely more difficult than the Marshall Plan, because it is an attempt to build from the ground up, overcoming five centuries of history. He argued that the U.S. must not just be against communism but must stand for two things. 1) Free elections so as to demonstrate that it is possible to change democratically. The U.S. had upheld this principle in the Dominican Republic and Peru but lost respect when it undermined Allende in Chile. 2) Non-intervention. The Rio Treaty, the Congressman pointed out, guarantees the sanctity of borders. On that basis the U.S. opposes outside intervention in El Salvador. But, he argued, the U.S. cannot condemn Nicaragua for intervention and then turn around and sponsor the overthrow of the Sandinista government, no matter how badly it had betrayed the 1979 revolution. The Congressman went on to say that El Salvador was a testing ground of democracy. In the 1982 elections, the people of El Salvador demonstrated their civic determination to elect their government. The United States must support that determination.

A Member of Parliament described the Canadian position as leaving it to the people of a country to determine the government they want and then respecting the people's choice. At the same time, he said that Canada realizes the U.S. has a security problem in the region and for that reason Canada avoids getting involved in rhetoric. He went on to say that Canada was most concerned to know if the U.S. objective is to overthrow the government of Nicaragua? If so, he argued, Canada would disagree but if the sole purpose of policy is to stop the flow of arms to El Salvador then Canada supports the policy.

A U.S. Congressman commented that a recent Congressional resolution specifically prohibits the use of arms to overthrow the Nicaraguan government. He went on to say that the need was for a long-range plan launched by a hemispheric conference on security matters. It might establish an international peacekeeping force in Central America and then draw up plans for reform and development. Another Congressman said that efforts were underway to launch the Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI) but that this region had a long history to overcome and an explosive birth rate. He expressed the hope that the CBI legislation establishing a one way free trade zone would get through Congress.

In response to a comment by a Canadian delegate that the U.S. should stand for change in Latin America, a U.S. Senator replied that he was provoked to reply "Vive le Québec Libre." A Republican Senator then concluded the discussion by remarking that Administration policy had not been adequately defended. He noted that there were large arms shipments into El Salvador and that the U.S. would never countenance this violation of the Monroe Doctrine. He noted that Costa Rica had no army because the U.S. had guaranteed its security. Simularly, he argued, the U.S. must keep its word to El Salvador. The U.S. should not escalate the conflict but it must stand behind the government of El Salvador as long as its people do.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS ON SUBJECT MATTER TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the subject matter of the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "A", p. 6055.)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): May I ask when this item will be taken into consideration by the Senate? I believe some of us would like to debate it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-155 TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on the subject matter of Bill C-155. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "B", p. 6059.)

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 18, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to enquire of the government with respect to some aspects of their economic policy. My question arises from the fact that the projections of that policy, which were outlined by the Minister of Finance when he presented his budget last April, have now been subject to some re-examination after a lapse of six months. We note that several bodies that are entitled to some public credence have produced figures with respect to economic forecasts which vary markedly from those the minister laid down last April, in that they are a good deal less optimistic than the minister was and, I believe, still is with respect to such items as increase in the gross national product, the reduction in the rate of inflation, and the reduction of unemployment in the country.

I would like the government to tell us whether they are now prepared to re-examine the forecast laid down by the minister last April, and whether they are prepared to produce measures to adjust their economic and budgetary policies accordingly.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there can be an honest and sincere difference of opinion with respect to the conclusions Senator Roblin has attempted to express in the preamble to his question. I must say that I disagree with him. All ministers in the cabinet examine the various economic indicators and compare them with the projections made by the Minister of Finance in his budget prognostications of last April, and those economic indicators are very close to the forecasts made at that time. In fact, in several areas—and I do not recall them because I do not have the numbers in front of me right now—the economy has performed somewhat better than the forecasts.

Senator Roblin has pointed to unemployment, but the Minister of Finance stated that unemployment levels were unacceptably high at that time and that they would remain unacceptably high to this date. The unemployment level is doing a little better than he forecast at that time. It is now one- or two-tenths of a percentage point better than forecast.

Of course, there are indicators one can look to, such as housing starts, real GNE, motor vehicle sales, and so forth. The results of a survey of senior business executives show investment intentions. All those indicators are doing somewhat better than forecast. Canada's current account surplus has reached record levels, levels even higher than the optimistic levels forecast by the Minister of Finance.

In response to the preamble to Senator Roblin's question, I must say that I fail to understand the logic used in reaching the conclusion that the economic indicators are so far out of line that they now need to be re-examined, perhaps readjusted and, indeed, restated.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have no interest in trying to belittle any positive results that we observe in the economy today. If we see any, that has to be a cause for satisfaction. If we complain that the forecasts are not sufficiently buoyant to meet the needs of the country, that is something else again. I think that is the point the minister has failed to deal with.

The real gross national product forecasts by the minister—and it is the forecasts we find bothersome—are substantially higher than either the Conference Board of Canada or the Economic Council of Canada are willing to grant. It seems to me that that leaves a wide area of doubt and uncertainty, so much so that we cannot afford to take a stand-pat attitude and say that things are going all right and if we leave them alone they will work out.

That is the clear warning that has been given to us by these impartial, credible outside authorities. They say that the minister's forecasts are too optimistic. They warn us that the probabilities are that things will not turn out to be as promising as the minister hopes.

Whether you take the gross national product, the rate of inflation, or the most important of all, in my opinion, the rate of unemployment, both the Economic Council of Canada and the Conference Board of Canada have raised a clear warning flag that those indicators are liable to fail to perform in the way that the Minister of Finance hopes they will. It seems to me to be ill-advised to rather blithely—I suppose that is not a good word—to rather stubbornly insist that things are all right and these things do not matter.

I am saying to the government that it would be a good thing for them to review their economic policy with a view to dealing with these unsatisfactory forecasts, which are substantially less promising for the country than the ones the Minister of Finance has given us.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am not going to be drawn into a discussion that challenges the opinions reached by the Conference Board of Canada or the Economic Council of Canada. The original preamble was that the minister's forecasts in his budget speech were very far from what has actually happened and forecasting, at the best of times, is risky. I think it is fair to say that the performance of the economy, measured by several of the most important indicators, is very close, in fact, closer than usual, from some forecasts made by governments in the past year or two, or several years. There are several indicators showing the Canadian economy has performed somewhat better. I have said that already.

What I think is important is that, however he tries, Senator Roblin cannot get us to say that the unemployment level is satisfactory and that, therefore, it does not matter. It does matter a great deal that it is at the level it is, and the Minister of Finance never said, to my knowledge, that it is acceptable at that level. That was the reason for his fiscal stance and the fiscal framework he announced at that time, which was going to pump additional billions of dollars into the economy, which, of course, shows up in the deficit. It is not a question of whether or not it is satisfactory. I believe it was a very sincere and objective analysis.

I do not expect Senator Roblin to agree with me, but in looking at those numbers and making comparisons between past forecasts and what actually happened six months later, the forecasts and the actual are probably closer than any I have seen in recent years. There may be good reasons for that because it often happens when such a thing as inflation is declining and is stable. There are some surprisingly good results in terms of, for example, our balance of payments and housing starts. For a while, at least in the third quarter, there was an unexpected upswing in consumer spending. That is very hard to forecast, but it is welcome.

The basic reason for Senator Roblin's asking the question as to whether or not we are going to have a statement on the economy is that the performance is significantly different from the forecasts. In my view, that is simply not the case. It is much closer to the forecasts than any budget forecasts I have seen for many years.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to debate with my honourable friend about progress that has been made, because we are in favour of that and we are pleased with it. What my honourable friend is still dodging is the fact that the warning signals that have been given to us by non-governmental authorities indicate that there is trouble ahead. When you get a clear warning that there is trouble ahead, you should do something about it. What bothers me is the attitude of the minister. He is as bad as the Minister of Finance, and I quote—

Senator Olson: Or as good.

Senator Roblin: Well, it depends on which side of your mouth you are talking out of, doesn't it?

Senator Olson: Only out of the front.

Senator Roblin: If I could rely on my honourable friend to do that, perhaps he could answer some of my questions instead of talking all around the field the way he does.

The Minister of Finance claimed credit for—and I am quoting him:

> —the largest turnaround of any large, industrial country and the largest decline in inflation and the largest rate of job creation—

Those are the points that my honourable friend has been talking about.

Senator Olson: They are all true.

Senator Roblin: If you compare them with the 12 leading industrial nations in the world, they are not all true. As far as inflation is concerned, there are seven countries that are doing better than we are— including the United Kingdom. In terms of job creation, we have the third highest unemployment of the 12 countries being examined, and, as for "the largest turnaround" that is boasted about, ours is about half of what it is in the United States.

I am not going to fault the good things that have happened, but there is no room for complacency. He talks about the balance of payments. Anyone who has looked at the balance of payments knows what has happened. It is not that our exports are so marvellous; it is that our imports are so terrible, and, therefore, the gap is large. The reason the balance of payments sounds so good is because imports have declined rather than exports having been increased. It seems to me that my honourable friend ought to do a little better.

I want to put some specific questions to him to see if we can get away from generalities. Will he revise the targets for unemployment, for example? The Economic Council of Canada, in its report, stated that an unemployment target of 6 to 8 per cent was within the capacity of the country to achieve. Yet, the forecast of the minister shows that it is going to be more than that, according to his figures, and a very good deal more than that according to the Conference Board of Canada and the Economic Council of Canada. Is the government prepared to accept new targets for unemployment?

They declare that they are not satisfied with 11 per cent, but I want to know whether the Minister of Finance is prepared to re-examine his policy and whether the suggestions of the Economic Council of Canada will get the figure down by 3 or 4 per cent and come within the government's scope of ambition.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we always consider the forecasts made by the Economic Council of Canada, the Conference Board, of Canada, the C. D. Howe Institute, and several other bodies because they are in the business of examining statistics and making forecasts. That does not mean that they are any better equipped to do so than the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada. Sometimes there is disagreement.

What I do know is that the Minister of Finance is very wise, in that he does not panic because of someone making a forecast. If he did so, then you would have a situation where the action taken could, in fact, contribute to the problem rather than help to solve it.

I think it extremely important that Senator Roblin understand that the Minister of Finance is a very objective, honest and reliable forecaster. He does not put out unrealistic forecasts, however optimistic he may be. It is a very realistic forecasting attempt, and the results have proven that to be the case.

I am sure Senator Roblin would not like the Minister of Finance or the government to take an unrealistic look at what the economy might do and make forecasts on that basis. I would suggest to him that then he would really have something to complain about.

I am convinced that the Minister of Finance is also looking at the indicators available to him, which are, in some cases, even more credible than some of the statistics gathered by others because they are obviously more involved. I fail to see the reasoning that we should revise the figures on that basis. If there is some real reason why they should be revised, that is another matter.

Senator Roblin appears to be suggesting that the Minister of Finance has said that everything is satisfactory. If I had the budget speech before me, I could find several passages in it where, being realistic, it was not reaching satisfactory levels of unemployment. We would certainly like it to be better; there is no question about that. That is really not the question.

The question is whether or not you are going to get figures, again from the Minister of Finance, that are probably the most reliable ones obtainable anywhere in Canada, which were the result of the forecasts he made in his budget speech.

• (1420)

Senator Roblin: I wonder if my honourable friend would like to hear some more figures from his own government.

Senator Olson: I would not mind hearing some more figures, but perhaps we will reach the point where I can read to you some indicators that are right on target. It will take quite a while to do so, but there are a dozen or so indicators which compare to the budget forecasts quite well.

Senator Roblin: I should like to ask my honourable friend whether the Minister of Finance is in close communication with the Minister of Regional Industrial and Economic Expansion, because that ministry has an entirely different view of the future prospects for the country.

Senator Olson: Perhaps that is so according to your interpretation.

Senator Roblin: No, not according to my interpretation. My honourable friend can refer to the paper, if he likes. It is called "Strategic Overview for the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion, 1984-85 to 1987-88." In that document, if my friend will look at the first page of it where the national outlook is set forth, it says that during the period of 1987 to 1988 the rate of 3 per cent per annum will be the average for the early stages of recovery; a rate below this average will apply in the first stages, and a rate above it will apply in the latter stages. That does not correspond with what the Minister of Finance is telling us. If his own government departments are producing figures which, to all intents and purposes, are more closely to be compared with those of the Conference Board and the Economic Council, there must be something to them.

I say to my honourable friend that he has not convinced me, when he has important departments in his own government making forecasts for the future which are substantially on all fours with those of the Conference Board and the Economic Council of Canada, and not with those of the Minister of Finance. Regardless, it seems to me that it will be the part of wisdom that the government revise its policy.

I have asked about unemployment targets and have received no response.

Senator Olson: Oh, but you did.

Senator Roblin: Is the government going to go for the six-and-eight policy suggested by the Economic Council of Canada, with the measures that are necessary to support it?

Senator Olson: The government will go for what the Minister of Finance has said in his forecast, until he comes forward with a new forecast.

Senator Roblin: That is certainly nothing like what the Economic Council has suggested. The same applies to the inflation rate.

Perhaps I could ask my honourable friend a few more specific questions. The Economic Council of Canada made an important reference to the policy of the Bank of Canada. The Economic Council claims that that policy concentrates on inflation, rather than a judicious mixture of other factors such as lower interest rates and so forth, as the sole target. Does the government intend to pay any attention to that piece of important advice offered by the Economic Council?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we seem to be entering into a debate. Perhaps we could dredge up from the order paper an order under which we could debate this, because I have a number of things I would be glad to contribute that would help Senator Roblin in his search for some comfort with respect to the Canadian economy. I am not under any illusion, however, that I will succeed in convincing him of anything. Perhaps that is not my job; my job is to give him the facts.

If my honourable friend would like to know some of the facts, I could begin by naming just a few: the real gross national product increased 1.8 per cent in both the first and second quarters of 1983, after having declined for six quarters prior to that time. Housing starts have increased substantially since the low of an 88,000 unit rate in September of 1982. In the first seven months of 1983, housing starts averaged 191,-000. These figures were calculated on a seasonally adjusted basis. We posted the largest monthly advance in more than two years. Retail sales increased 4.1 per cent in June, or 11.7 per cent from the level of a year ago, and that increase was higher than the minister forecast. Motor vehicle dealer sales increased 10 per cent in June, or 22.6 per cent from what they were a year ago. That is the largest gain since March 1979.

The Conference Board of Canada's index of consumer confidence soared to an 18-year high in the second quarter of 1983 to reach 123.3. Another particularly encouraging statistic indicates that consumers are showing more confidence in the current and future health of local businesses. A Gallup Poll opinion that came in on August 18 shows that the results compare with 40 per cent who offered the same opinion one year ago, but do not match the two-thirds level found in polls conducted in 1980 and 1981. Looking ahead for a period of six months, 57 per cent of the sample in July said that business conditions would be good or very good. Senior business executives have been more optimistic about the near-term prospects for the Canadian economy. That is according to the Conference Board survey of business attitudes. The list goes on.

The honourable senator does not want me to talk about Canada's balance of payments. He may not think it is important, but it is, because it also reflects the fact that our export of manufactured goods particularly, which is a high job-related industrial activity, held up better than that of any other country in the western world. Corporate profits have now increased for three consecutive quarters, at the rate of 15.1 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982, 23.5 per cent in the first quarter of 1983, and 9.9 per cent in the second quarter of 1983. Those are pretty optimistic and encouraging statistics.

I should remind Senator Roblin that the OECD has projected that our economic recovery will be strong and that inflation will decline further. Canadian growth is expected to be about the average of all of the OECD countries in 1982, and will show the highest growth of the seven largest countries in 1984. Inflation is expected to fall to 5.5 per cent. I am not sure why the honourable senator did not quote that statistic, as I am sure he has it available. He should also know that the U.S. Conference Board reported that Canada has jumped from a minus-eight annual percentage change in economic output to a plus one during the past six months—the largest spread of any of the seven countries that the board surveyed. The list goes on and on.

The picture that Senator Roblin is trying to paint of the Canadian economy is neither accurate nor objective. He does a disservice to our country by being a purveyor of doom and gloom when that is not the reality.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend considers it a disservice to the country to be dissatisfied with the present administration—

Senator Olson: I did not say that.

Senator Roblin: —then he had better talk to the 62 per cent of the population that would like to see a change. If he wants to talk about statistics, what about the 23 per cent of the Canadian population who think that my honourable friend is all right? What about those on the unemployment lists, which are almost as long as they have been for the past 12 months? What about the fact that the Canadian economy declined during this depression period further than that of any other country in the industrial world that my honourable friend can mention. No wonder we see some come-back—and thank God for it. Where would we be if there was not some come-back? But we have yet to reach the levels that we reached in 1981. The United States economy has recovered. They are now in a growth period, and we are not.

Senator Olson: That is not true; they are not in a growth period.

Senator Roblin: All right, I will make my honourable friend an offer, because he does not like my figures. I suggest to him that he convene the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. I suggest that he refer this discussion to that committee, and let us do our best to get into a non-controversial atmosphere to establish the facts, so that we may have a proper basis for policy development. That is what I would ask my honourable friend to do. If he will give me an undertaking that he will refer this problem to the National Finance Committee for study, I will be happy with that, because I have confidence that the committee will examine the whole problem from a much broader and less partisan point of view than either my honourable friend or I might attach to it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in order to accomplish what Senator Roblin has suggested, no doubt the matter could be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, but, on a point of order, the Question Period is not really the proper place to discuss it. That does not change what Senator Roblin has said because he would like the matter referred. Perhaps we could confer with the committee to determine whether it could be done through an inquiry which could be referred to the committee. I do not think that we can refer a question to a committee, but I am sure that we can find a way to get the matter before it, if it is decided that it is a good idea.

Senator Olson: That is one suggestion. We could also introduce an inquiry and have the debate on the floor of the Senate, where all honourable senators could participate. I followed the same procedure after the budget speech. I cannot recall whether Senator Roblin participated in that debate that I provided for him. I know that Senator Murray made a speech, and shortly thereafter the debate ended. So why don't we have a debate here in the chamber, and I can then lay it all out for the record, as it is, without any glorification or optimism, just the facts. Then Senator Roblin will have an opportunity to say whatever he likes.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not think that the facts, as my honourable friend describes them, will be improved by debate in this house prior to taking an opportunity to examine the people who prepare these statistics and facts. The point of a committee review is to make sure that the Economic Council of Canada, the Conference Board of Canada, if they will come, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and Development, or whatever its name is, and all the people who are concerned with these matters, have a chance to come forward and defend their figures, and then the minister can come forward and defend his figures. When we have examined the facts as best we can, we can have a debate as to what conclusions we should draw from them. But to draw the conclusions before we have the facts as established by the committee seems to me to be the wrong way around.

Senator Olson: I disagree with Senator Roblin. I think we should establish what it is we want to debate. The normal way of doing things is to have an inquiry and a debate on the matter. In that way, Senator Roblin, I and any other honourable senators who wish to can participate in the debate. If we decide at some point during the debate that we want to get more deeply into the matter, then we can refer it to a committee. However, we are dealing with a very general topic, so let us determine, here on the floor, the parameters of what we will ask of the committee, rather than going on a fishing expedition for statistics that are not satisfactory. At the end of the debate we can draw our conclusions. But I can tell you right now that those who participate in the debate will put their views forward and then, after hearing those views, we can determine whether we should send the matter to committee.

Senator Roblin: If we do not draw conclusions, how much further ahead are we? I can tell my honourable friend that I do not care whether or not he refers this matter to the National Finance Committee because, being a member of that committee, I can do it.

Senator Frith: Exactly.

Senator Roblin: I shall tell the committee at the first opportunity to take the matter of the whole economic policy of the government under consideration, particularly as it focuses on the problems we have with unemployment, inflation, the Bank of Canada and the gross national product. My honourable friend can sit in his seat or make any speech he likes, but I think that I will exercise what initiative I can to ask that committee to look into the matter directly. So I shall not ask my honourable friend to do it because he is not willing to do anything. I shall do what I can myself.

Senator Frith: That is exactly what we suggested.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Isn't it necessary that the honourable senator first ask the Senate to make a reference to that committee?

Senator Olson: Of course it is, but he wants to circumvent that procedure.

Senator Roblin: I am certainly going to find out the best way to do this thing, but it seems to me that on the initiative of a member of the Senate the National Finance Committee can do it, if it wishes to take the matter under consideration. Since the chairman is not here today, I cannot ask him about it.

Senator McElman: You must have a reference from the Senate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we shall have to look into the matter. However, it is my impression that only the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders can, of its own motion, study a matter. But I cannot imagine Senator Roblin having any difficulty if he proposes a resolution for some form of reference. I would be very surprised if the Senate were to block such a resolution.

Senator Roblin: I am not interested in the point of order. Whatever the order is, it will be complied with by members of the Senate. However, I think that you will find that the terms of reference of the National Finance Committee, as they currently exist, are sufficiently broad to encompass the kind of study I have in mind. I would not like to say that I am certain, because I do not have those terms of reference before me now, but I know that they are extremely broad and I would be surprised if they do not provide me with ample room to develop my thesis.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, to close this mini-debate, I think that what Senator Roblin has said is great, but let us follow the proper procedure of debating the matter here and referring it to the committee afterwards.

Senator Roblin: I have had my debate with you.

Senator Olson: You don't have all the facts yet.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

KOREAN WAR—COMMEMORATION OF THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF CESSATION OF HOSTILITIES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government which has to do with the visit to Korea to commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the end of the Korean conflict. At one time it was proposed that parliamentarians accompany the delegation, which proposal was later altered. I am wondering if the Leader of the Government could ascertain why parliamentarians who represent Korean veterans across the country were not represented in the delegation. Why was that changed?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I did not quite understand the purport of Senator Marshall's question. The delegation is to represent the armed forces which served in Korea, is it not?

Senator Marshall: As a matter of fact, the delegation is in Vancouver today. When the trip was originally planned it was proposed that representatives from both the Senate and the House of Commons would accompany the delegation. Their names were later removed from the list. The delegation has left, and I am wondering why representatives of the people of Canada were not included.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice. I think Senator Marshall probably knows as much as or more than I do about what should be contained in the answer.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AGING VETERANS PROGRAM

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, it is 30 years since the Korean conflict, which means that another group of veterans is falling into the category of veterans who require more care. I relate this to the Aging Veterans Program which would be beneficial and, in fact, is beneficial to older veterans today. However, that program is restricted to those veterans who receive disability pensions. There are many veterans receiving the war veterans allowance who do not qualify for this program, particularly the Aging Veterans Program, which is a very good one. It provides medical care in the home, as opposed to having veterans who live alone travelling miles to a hospital.

After 30 years it makes one ponder the urgency of the situation. While we have heard over the past many months that further amendments would be made in veterans legislation to deal with better care for veterans who are getting older, nothing is happening. Perhaps the minister could make a statement on behalf of the Minister of Veterans Affairs in order to give us an indication of what will happen with regard to changes in the legislation, particularly dealing with proportionate pensions for widows, the Aging Veterans Program and other matters which have been left unattended.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the honourable senator's question as notice. I will ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs for a reply insofar as he is able to supply one. I say that because I suppose there is the possibility that his proposals for changes to the legislation are either complete or are in an advanced stage. I do not know this for sure, but I will ask him, in any event.

Senator Marshall: Would the Leader of the Government take this matter as one of urgency, since about a month or two months ago I asked him a question with regard to developments concerning veterans legislation and I do not have an answer yet?

Senator Olson: I will check into this matter. I am not sure if the honourable senator is referring to a direct question, since sometimes he only implies in his comments that he is asking a question. If he could identify the page in Hansard where he raised the question, I will be glad to look into it.

Senator Marshall: It seems to me that Senator Austin, the Minister of State for Social Development, has under his umbrella of responsibilities veterans affairs. Since this is the case, I can understand why the Leader of the Government does not know everything. He knows everything about finance, but there are a great many other subjects about which he is probably not aware. Can the honourable senator advise me if Senator Austin will take responsibility for veterans affairs in order that I can put my questions to him?

Senator Olson: I imagine he could answer your questions. However, he is not in the chamber at the moment. If the honourable senator would rather have Senator Austin reply to his question, I would be happy to send that message to Senator Austin's office.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VACANCIES—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Robert Muir: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he is yet prepared to answer that short, simple question regarding the composition of the board of directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation which he took as notice some days ago. At that time I asked why the vacancies on that board were not being filled. In fact, recent press reports say that new directors have been appointed.

If the leader would like to give me a confidential, for your-eyes-only letter, I shall take it this weekend to the President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and, after he has perused it, I can then return it to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, in chambers.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The short answer to Senator Muir's question is: Not yet; I do not have it with me today.

THE ECONOMY

QUEBEC—JOB CREATION PROJECTS—DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question raised by Senator Asselin on September 22 last. At that time, he asked for a list of the federal job creation projects in the province of Quebec. I now have a kit in which this subject is fully explained in both official languages and, rather than printing it in Debates of the Senate in the normal way, I propose to table it. It has a great many pages and the expense of printing it is beyond reason. I believe that, in any case, every senator has a copy of this kit in his office.

Therefore, if the Senate is agreeable, I will table this document.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Then, I table:

> Document issued by the Special Recovery Capital Projects Board concerning federal job creation projects in the Province of Quebec, being a reply to Senator Asselin's question of September 22, 1983.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 11, 1983, the debate on the motion of Senator Stollery for third reading of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I raise a less contentious matter than the last one. I am to say a few words about Bill C-110 which has to do with the Export Development Corporation and the provision of more funds for that body.

This is probably one of the most important areas of government policy, because it has to do with the export of Canadian products. As we all know, this country has not been doing as well as we might have wished in the export field. There are many areas of export possibilities which we are not exploiting to the full. Anyone who attended the recent seminars on the Pacific Rim must have received an eye-opener as to the failure of the Canadian export machine, if I may put it that way, to maximize the possibilities of doing business in that part of the world.

Anything that is connected with the improvement of our posture as exporters is, in my opinion, a good thing, and it is a particularly good thing that the Export Development Corporation can help to improve the competitive position of Canadian exporters in the world. As we all know, the export business today does not operate under the rules of free trade; it does not operate under the rules of GATT, in a metaphorical sense. There are many non-tariff barriers to exports that any exporting country has to overcome.

Unfortunately for me, due to a misunderstanding, I did not speak on second reading, nor was I able to attend the committee meeting, which I had hoped to do. However, I was able to read the speech of Senator Charbonneau which I thought was an excellent critique of the export situation in Canada. I also noted the observations of Senator Stollery, Senator Frith, Senator Walker and Senator Lafond in committee, and I am grateful to them for ventilating many of the issues that I would, perhaps, have liked to talk about.

When a bill of this sort comes before us, we have the opportunity to emphasize the importance of exports and to satisfy ourselves that the EDC is maximizing the contribution it makes to the Canadian export industry. We can examine whether or not it is sufficiently entrepreneurial; whether it is sufficiently innovative in the assistance that it offers. We can ask ourselves whether it is performing the right functions with respect to insurance and financing. We can ask ourselves whether the relationship between this body and the private sector is as productive as it might be; we can ask ourselves whether the best and highest use of the funds available is actually being achieved. There are a number of questions which obviously arise. For instance, does the Export Development Corporation identify, in an adequate way, the export opportunities, as well as performing other functions which fall within its scope? I do not really know the answers to those questions, but I suspect that there is much good going on there.

The Economic Council of Canada, which came in for so much attention a short time ago, has also studied the Export Development Corporation, and they had a few observations to make on how it could be improved. The corporation has now responded to those observations and, after reading both sides of the story, I am not quite certain what should now be done. It would have been interesting to have had the Economic Council of Canada before the committee as well as the Export Development Corporation to review these matters.

I would also have been pleased if some of the customers could have been there, particularly the small business sector whose export problems are sometimes particularly difficult. It would have been fruitful, perhaps, to hear what they had to say, and whether they had any suggestions as to whether the service could be improved. It would also have been of interest to invite the institutions in the private sector who are in the same field—the insurance companies, the finance companies; to hear from them whether they feel that the co-operative work they are engaged in with the Export Development Corporation is as fruitful as it could be. I regret that the Senate did not avail itself of the opportunity to cast the net a little wider than the precise details of this bill and make use of the opportunity to submit the concept of the Export Development Corporation to wider review.

However, I am not able to say to this body that there are glaring defects to which I would like to draw attention. I have to say that I do not know enough about the matter to make such a statement. It seems to me quite likely that, if we had had the kind of non-partisan and informed review that we usually manage to achieve in Senate committee examinations, it might have been possible for us to offer some constructive ideas for improvement. However, since that is not to be, perhaps my favourite committee, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, could consider this subject in the future and conduct the kind of examination that I have been suggesting.

All in all, honourable senators, I certainly approve of expanding these facilities and the capacity of the Export Development Corporation. I have no reason to vote against this bill. I like the work they are doing. I hope they are doing the best job possible, and that one of these days the Senate will take upon itself the responsibility to monitor the operations of this body to ensure that it makes the maximum contribution to the export trade in Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the observations made by Senator Roblin could be summarized, I suppose, as "half a loaf is better than none." In fact, perhaps a good part of the remainder of the loaf we could have had furnished to us by answers. However, honourable senators may have noted that the Export Development Corporation, according to the information we have received, regularly indulges in self-examination and review, and this bill is the result of such examination and review.

Also, as Senator Roblin has pointed out, the Economic Council of Canada did make reference to this body, and when Senator Roblin is drawing up his resolution to refer the matter to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance—which he and Senator Olson were recently discussing—this subject might be something that would attract their interest.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE SENATE

MOTION RE SUSPENSION OF RECORDING OF DAILY ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator McElman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P. C.:

That the practice of recording the daily attendance of Senators in the Senate be suspended effective April 14, 1981, and remain suspended until the beginning of a new session of the 32nd Parliament, or the first session of the next succeeding Parliament, whichever may first occur.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, with the concurrence of my seconder, and with the permission of the Senate, I should like this motion to be withdrawn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I am curious enough to ask why.

Senator McElman: There has been an amazing lack of interest in the subject and no debate on it, so I thought that, since it has been many weeks since this matter was brought before the Senate, the only sensible and honourable thing to do was to bring about its demise.

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, after a session of Parliament which has lasted over three years, I think there is plenty for the Senate to discuss without having to discuss this motion. Let me say that it is too bad for those who would have benefited from the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FOURTH MEETING—CORRECTION TO REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I should like to make a small correction to the appendix to Debates of the Senate of Tuesday, October 11, 1983.

At page 6025 the Canadian delegation to the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group is listed. I am identified as a senator from Nova Scotia. I should state that I am happy to have been born in that province, but I moved to Ontario 22 years ago and have spent most of my time since then in this province. I am a senator from Ontario.

I should also state that, although I was a member of the delegation and attended the briefings, for various personal reasons I could not, in fact, attend the meeting at Minaki Lodge.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I suppose sports people would designate Senator Murray as "a senator out of Nova Scotia".

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 18, 1983 at 2 p.m.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF THE CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION, 1983

Thursday, October 13, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of June 29, 1983, examined the said subject-matter and now submits its report.

Your Committee invited comments from the national groups representing the native people, from the provincial premiers and from the government leaders in the two territories. Both the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development appeared before your Committee and gave evidence. A number of native groups requested to appear and subsequently testified while some forwarded written submissions. A list of witnesses and others who submitted briefs and letters commenting on the substance of the proposed Amendment is attached as an appendix to this report.

The Assembly of First Nations did not take the opportunity afforded it to appear, although it did submit a written brief. Some of the native groups who are members of the Assembly did appear before your Committee and the Committee believes that these groups expressed generally the views of their colleagues.

Honourable Senators are aware that the proposed Amendment is a result of an Accord signed at a First Ministers' conference held on March 15-16, 1983, in Ottawa. It was executed by the Prime Minister of Canada and all the provincial premiers with the exception of the Premier of the Province of Quebec. The government leaders of the two territories and certain native groups signified their participation in the discussions leading up to the Accord by also signing it. The native groups which did so were The Assembly of First Nations, Inuit Committee on National Issues, Métis National Council and the Native Council of Canada.

The proposed Amendment to the Constitution which the Senate is now considering flows from that Constitutional Accord.

It should be noted that, contrary to the impression which was left with your Committee by some witnesses that the proposed Amendment must be passed by the government signatories prior to December 31, 1983, the Accord only requires that the proposed Amendment be laid before the applicable legislative bodies prior to December 31, 1983, since the First Ministers cannot bind Parliament or their legislatures to any Accord or agreement which requires legislative sanction.

Your Committee has ascertained that, to date, the following legislatures have passed the proposed Amendment: Nova Scotia on May 31, 1983; Alberta on June 3, 1983, Prince Edward Island on June 16, 1983; New Brunswick on June 28, 1983; and Manitoba on August 18, 1983.

Your Committee reports that, with the exception of the Coalition of First Nations, all witnesses and all correspondence directed to your Committee urged speedy approval, even though most native groups expressed concern as to the meaning of the two substantive sections of the proposed Amendment. Their insistence on its passage stems from the inclusion within the proposed Amendment of the requirement to hold two further Constitutional Conferences which the native people regard as being vital since they commit governments to negotiate aboriginal issues within a definite time frame. The Coalition of First Nations representing approximately 70,000 people from bands in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces object to it on the principle that discussions relating to aboriginal and treaty rights should occur only between the Government of Canada and the First Nations.

The Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983

The proposed Amendment deals with two specific matters of substance in addition to the procedural requirements to hold future constitutional conferences. In the first place, there is the broadening of the meaning of the phrase "existing treaty rights" to include existing or future land claims agreements. The second substantive amendment guarantees those existing aboriginal and treaty rights equally to male and female persons.

Definition of Existing Rights

The definition of "treaty rights" highlights a problem resulting from the use of the word "existing" to modify both aboriginal and treaty rights in section 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982. Neither the representatives of the native groups nor the two Ministers appearing before your Committee could agree on the meaning of "existing". Because they were unable or unwilling to attach a specific meaning to the word and were concerned that governments might attach a restrictive interpretation to it, all the native groups who addressed this issue would simply prefer to see the word removed. On the other hand, the federal government took the position that what this word encompasses should be defined at future constitutional conferences.

Land Claims Agreements

Your Committee heard evidence which indicated differences of opinion or at least confusion as to the effect of the clause through which the meaning of treaty rights is enlarged to include "rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired".

The Minister of Justice, in evidence before your Committee has confirmed that it was "impossible to be precise" about the effect of this section. In addition a letter received by your Committee from the Government Leader of the Yukon suggested there might eventually be a conflict between entrenched aboriginal rights and entrenched rights under a land claims agreement.

Equality Clause

The other major clause in the proposed Amendment is the so-called "equality section" which states:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons."

Your Committee heard some evidence to the effect that this clause was not in fact the one to which the various native signatories to the Accord had agreed and that it apparently was changed to its present wording just prior to the signing of the Accord. This view appeared to support a statement made by Premier Richard Hatfield of the Province of New Brunswick when he introduced the proposed Amendment in the New Brunswick legislature. However, your Committee did not receive any material which would confirm this statement. On the contrary, the Office of Aboriginal Constitutional Affairs provided copies of each of the four drafts which were considered by the parties at the conference. The drafts indicate that there was a change in the "equality clause" after the first draft but that all three succeeding drafts contain the precise wording of the subsection as in the proposed Amendment.

As your Committee discussed the substance of this section with various witnesses it became clear that there was no unanimity regarding its possible effect.

The view of the Minister of Justice, as stated to your Committee and concurred in by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, was that the equality clause "will not reach" section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act which provides that an Indian woman who marries a non-Indian automatically loses her Indian status. On the other hand, the official response from the Government of Alberta which has already approved the resolution, was to the effect that this section of the proposed Amendment "will override subsection 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act".

Your Committee heard a variety of opinions from native groups on the effect of this section. It was obvious that some Indian witnesses did not wish to deal with the "equality clause" only as it relates to section 12(1)(b) but rather in the broader context of band membership. Most argued that the individual groups be allowed to determine their membership which would address both the issue of female equality and the readmission of others to the band who had lost their status due to the application or interpretation of other sections of the Indian Act.

Consent Clause

Another matter of substance raised by the native witnesses was that both the Constitution as it is presently worded and the proposed Amendment require only that the representatives of the aboriginal groups be invited to participate in discussions concerning possible amendments to the Constitution relating to aboriginal rights. Almost all native witnesses were adamant that constitutional amendments affecting their rights should be accomplished only with the consent of the aboriginal people affected. They stated that a consent clause should be entrenched in the Constitution, but were unable to specify how and by whom consent would be exercised.

Self-government

Many native groups claimed a right to self-government or self-administration, but the range of powers which they felt they should exercise varied widely. Your Committee is aware that this subject is presently being dealt with by a Special Committee of the House of Commons and will be debated fully after its report is tabled.

Conclusions and Recommendations

The series of hearings conducted by your Committee provided a forum for all parties to express views and to expose areas of misunderstanding, lack of consensus and possible conflict in the interpretation of the proposed Amendment. Nevertheless, all witnesses except one urged its speedy passage as it would provide the parties with a vehicle for the continuation of negotiations.

Your Committee therefore recommends that the Senate approve the Resolution proposing the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983.

On the basis of the evidence presented at the hearings, your Committee makes the following recommendations to the parties involved in the constitutional negotiations:

—that as a first priority, they reach agreement on the definition of certain terms which are the foundation stones upon which any future agreements must be built; that is, they should agree on the meaning and scope of such fundamental terms as "existing treaty rights", "aboriginal rights" and "land claims agreements".

—that they should also reach a clear understanding of what portions of treaties, land claims agreements and aboriginal rights would be entrenched in the Constitution and which parts would be simply ancillary and capable of change by bilateral agreement.

—that, since the impact of the "equality clause" is unclear and the question of equality of the sexes is closely connected with the determination of membership within each aboriginal group, they, as another early priority, resolve the issues of equality and membership.

Finally, your Committee is of the opinion that, when amendments to the Constitution are being proposed it is extremely important that the authorized representatives of the people in both the federal and provincial spheres have the time to consider and debate fully the implications of any change. Your Committee therefore recommends to the governments involved that such proposed amendments be tabled before the appropriate legislative bodies at the earliest possible moment in order to give them the consideration they require.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN,
Chairman.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-155

Thursday, October 13, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to which was referred the subject-matter of Bill C-155, intituled: "An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, September 22, 1983, examined the subject-matter of the said Bill.

Your Committee also wishes to report that the Minister of Transport, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, appeared before the Committee and responded extensively to a substantial number of questions.

Your Committee received submissions from Alberta Cattle Commission, Alberta Feed Grain Users Association and from Karen Chase, Willowfern Farms, Alberta, has held five meetings and has heard evidence from the following witnesses: from R.L. "Banks & Associates, Inc." Washington, D.C., U.S.A., Mr. R. L. Banks; from "Travacon Research Limited" Washington, D.C., U.S.A., Mr. John Edsforth, President; from "Snavely, Kings & Associates" Washington, D.C., U.S.A. Mr. Carl Snavely, President; from the Canadian Transport Commission, Mr. Keith Thompson, Senior Counsel; from the Ministry of State for Economic Development, Mr. Arthur Kroeger, Secretary; from the Department of Transport, Mr. Mike Farquhar, Director General, Railways & Grain Transportation; Mr. Denis Lefebvre, General Counsel.

Your Committee therefore proposes to resume its study as soon as the Bill has been given second reading in the Senate and referred to this Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

LÉOPOLD LANGLOIS,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 18, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

SIR ARTHUR HOCKADAY, DIRECTOR-GENERAL, COMMONWEALTH WAR GRAVES COMMISSION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to call to your attention the presence of a distinguished visitor in the gallery, Sir Arthur Hockaday, Director-General, Commonwealth War Graves Commission.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Tuesday, October 18, 1983

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its Fifth Report as follows:

Your Committee, pursuant to its Order of Reference of Tuesday, October 11, 1983, has further considered its Fourth Report and recommends as follows:

1. That Rule 5 be amended

(a) by adding thereto, immediately after paragraph (c) the following new paragraph:

"(d) "Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate" and "Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate" mean the senators occupying, respectively, the recognized positions of Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate and Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate;"; and

(b) by re-lettering the remaining paragraphs accordingly.

2. That Rule 66 be amended

(a) by deleting subsection (3) and substituting therefor the following:

"(3) Subject to subsection (4), the senators nominated under this Rule shall, when their appointments are confirmed by the Senate, serve for the duration of the session for which they are appointed." ; and

(b) by adding thereto the following new subsections:

"(4) Subject to subsection (5), a change in the membership of a committee may be made by a notice filed with the Clerk of the Senate who shall cause such change to be recorded in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

"(5) The notice referred to in subsection (4) shall be signed

(a) with respect to Government members, by the Leader of the Government in the Senate or any senator named by him, and

(b) with respect to Opposition members, by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate or any senator named by him."

3. That Rule 67(1) be amended

(a) by deleting, in paragraphs (e) and (f), the words "twenty" and "five", respectively, and substituting therefor the words "fifteen" and "four";

(b) by deleting, in paragraphs (g) to (l), the words "twenty" and "five", respectively, and substituting therefor the words "twelve" and "four";

(c) by deleting subparagraph (g)(v) and renumbering the remaining subparagraph accordingly;

(d) by deleting subparagraph (i)(iv) and renumbering the remaining subparagraph accordingly;

(e) by deleting, in subparagraph (k)(v), the words "and consumer";

(f) by deleting subparagraph (k)(vii); and

(g) by deleting paragraph (m) and substituting therefor the following:

"(m) The Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to agriculture, fisheries and forestry generally, and the Canadian Wheat Board."

4. That Rule 67(l), as amended pursuant to your Committee's Third Report, dated December 8, 1982 and adopted by the Senate on December 9, 1982, be further amended

(a) by adding to paragraph (l), the following new sub-paragraphs:

"(viii) fitness and amateur sports;

(ix) employment and immigration;

(x) consumer affairs;

(xi) youth affairs." ; and

(b) by deleting paragraph (n) and substituting therefor the following:

"(n) The Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, on order of the Senate, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to energy and natural resources generally, including:

(i) natural resources, other than fisheries and forestry, and mines;

(ii) pipelines, transmission lines and energy transportation;

(iii) environmental affairs;

(iv) other energy-related matters."

5. That Rule 68 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"68. The Leader of the Government in the Senate, or, in his absence, the Deputy Leader of the Government, and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or, in his absence, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, are members, ex officio, in addition to the number of appointed members, of the Committee of Selection and all select committees of the Senate."

6. That Rule 70 be deleted and Rule 70A be renumbered as Rule 70.

7. That Rule 77 be amended

(a) by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (4), the following new subsection:

"(5) Subcommittees shall be composed of not more than half the number of members of a select committee, three of whom shall constitute a quorum." ; and

(b) by renumbering the remaining subsections accordingly.

8. That the amendments proposed herein come into force at the commencement of the next Session of Parliament.

9. That consideration be given, in the next Session of Parliament, to the establishment of a Special Committee on National Defence.

Respectfully submitted,

H. DE M. MOLSON,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Molson: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as a rule, I take the stand that committee reports should be available to honourable senators to study before discussion commences, for the obvious reason that not all honourable senators are members of the committee. Those who are members of the committee naturally understand what has taken place and are able to follow the proceedings with some care. Those who are not members of the committee must have an opportunity to read the proceedings of the committee before we are asked to discuss them. I understand that the changes proposed are not significantly different from those offered to the chamber the other day when the report was sent back for further consideration, but there are some differences. Indeed, one of my colleagues asked me a question about it which I could not answer, so it is obvious that at least one person who is supposed to be familiar with the report needs a little brushing up.

● (1410)

I would propose that we not give leave this afternoon, in view of the fact that two days' notice is required, but, if the house would like to proceed to consider this report on Wednesday instead of Thursday, I think we would be disposed to give leave for that because we would have overnight to read the report.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe the Senate will be sitting tomorrow for another reason. We have followed the practice of leaving all of Wednesday afternoon for committee meetings, but, as is known, there is another reason that the Senate should sit tomorrow. Under the circumstances, it is a reasonable suggestion that we meet a few minutes earlier than we normally would. I hope the chairman of the committee agrees that that would be an appropriate time to consider the report and deal with it.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am prepared to move an amendment to the motion, if that is required, that the report be taken into consideration tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave.

Senator Olson: Perhaps I can suggest that Senator Molson's request, whether it was a motion or not, be amended to accommodate that result.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I am perfectly happy to have it dealt with tomorrow, since I am in no rush myself.

I would call the attention of the Acting Leader of the Opposition to the fact that only one day's notice is required for consideration of a report from a standing committee, not two days. Nevertheless, I am perfectly happy to proceed with its consideration tomorrow if that is the wish of the house.

Senator Frith: Rule 44 states that two days' notice is required of a motion to make a new rule. I suppose there may be a question whether we will simply be considering a report or whether the motion to adopt the report thereby makes a new rule and amends existing rules. However, since we are in agreement, we agree that this matter stand as the first order of business under Orders of the Day for the next sitting, which, as I will explain in a moment, will be tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

HON. NEVILLE LEWIS, MINISTER OF SOCIAL SERVICES, JAMAICA, AND JAMAICAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the house to the welcome presence in our gallery of the Honourable Neville Lewis, Minister of Social Services of the sister Commonwealth state of Jamaica, who is accompanied inter alia by His Excellency Leslie Wilson, High Commissioner of Jamaica to Canada and Dean of the Commonwealth Diplomatic Corps.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, October 19, 1983, at five o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Last week we completed third reading of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, and now, for what I feel are very good reasons, the Government would like to have Royal Assent tomorrow instead of Thursday, if possible, because it would be easier for Members of the House of Commons to attend in that case. That is why we move that the Senate sit tomorrow at 5 p.m., so that we can then have royal assent at 5:45 p.m.

As honourable senators have probably realized, we shall be starting at 5 p.m., with a question period and a debate on the report of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE HON. LEON MERCIER GOUIN

NOTICE OF DEATH

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that the Hon. Leon Mercier Gouin, a former senator, passed away yesterday. Although I was not a member of the Senate when he was, I intend to attend his funeral in Montreal tomorrow. I shall try to return to the Senate by 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

THE HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C

PROGRESS OF RECOVERY FROM ILLNESS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I am sure that honourable senators will be happy to know that this afternoon I spoke on the telephone to my leader, Senator Flynn, and learned from him that he expects to return to his home from the hospital later this week, probably on Thursday.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I am sure that Senator Flynn will be delighted to know that the news of his recovery was so warmly received on all sides of this house. I shall make sure that he is so informed. We expect that before too long we will see him back in the chamber.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to join with Senator Roblin in saying how delighted all honourable senators are to hear that Senator Flynn's recovery is progressing well. I, too, express the hope that we will see him back in this chamber as soon as he is able to return.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

PROPOSED JOINT CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING SHARED WATER—GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate respecting the meeting over the weekend of Mr. Caccia, the Minister of the Environment, with Mr. Ruckelshaus, his opposite number in the United States. It appears they agreed that there should be a common effort, and that Canadian officials will be allowed to participate, in the design of plans to study hazardous sites affecting shared waters, in the interpretation and evaluation of data, in final decisions on clean-up strategies and so forth.

When I read that statement of the minister, I naturally thought of the Garrison diversion project in North Dakota. I should like to know whether the Garrison diversion is one of the problem areas included in this offer of the United States for joint consultation.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I take as notice the question that Senator Roblin has raised because it concerns a number of issues. I give an undertaking to send a request to the Honourable Charles Caccia for a more detailed explanation of what is contained in the agreement, and, in particular, whether there was specific identity of waters that will be taken under consideration.

Senator Roblin: If I may pursue the matter a little further, I should tell my honourable friend that I should also like to know if the subject of the Garrison dam was on the table at all during those discussions. I will add some further information about the Garrison diversion in this respect.

According to newspaper reports that I have seen, the United States authorities have already invited the Government of Canada to participate in studying certain measures that the Americans already have on the drawing board respecting the Garrison dam. As far as I am aware, no response has been made by the Government of Canada to the effect that it will take part in those joint discussions on the Garrison diversion. Perhaps the minister could find out whether my information is correct, and, if it is, perhaps he will provide me with an explanation as to why, while we now find it all right, in Halifax, to enter into joint discussions, we have declined the opportunity offered to us last July.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can do that. I am not sure that I can agree, at this point, with Senator Roblin's interpretation of what the United States has offered by way of an invitation to participate, nor am I sure whether I can agree with his interpretation of what the response of the Government of Canada has been. I do know, however, that Senator Roblin's representation and, perhaps more forcibly, that of Senator Guay, on behalf of those who are affected by this development, have been conveyed to the ministers responsible on a number of occasions. I am sure that representation has been extremely useful in terms of drawing to the attention of the authorities in the United States the fact that we are greatly concerned about this matter.

Senator Roblin: I shall be able to form some opinion as to the efficacy of the minister's recommendations to the Honourable Charles Caccia, and others responsible, when I see the kind of answer he gives to the questions I have already put, because it would seem to me that, if his advice had been taken seriously by members of the Cabinet, it would have been included in the discussions held in Halifax over the past weekend.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government make an inquiry concerning future federal government representation at the invitation of the Americans, to discuss the matter of the Garrison Dam project, as suggested by Senator Roblin; and, in so doing, could he ensure that a member of the federal Cabinet will be present at the meeting in the United States?

I ask that question because on the last two occasions when we made representations to members of the American Senate and others in Washington, a minister of the Canadian government was not present. The delegation comprised members of the Manitoba government and only two members of Parliament; no federal minister was present.

On such an important matter, a member of the Canadian Cabinet should be present, and if Mr. Caccia is unable to attend, perhaps another minister could attend in his place.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, from my usually extremely efficient staff I have received a reply to both questions, particularly the latter question asked by Senator Guay. That question was asked in the other place and the minister concerned, the Honourable Charles Caccia, responded by saying that he and the Secretary of State for External Affairs made representations to the American government in connection with both phase one and phase two of the Garrison Dam proposal. He went on to say that Canada's concern was once again registered strongly and firmly. That obviously means that concern had been expressed before, as I have mentioned to both Senator Roblin and Senator Guay on many occasions in the past.

The Honourable Charles Caccia further reported that the representations were well received and that there had been a worthwhile exchange of views which may lead to an improvement in mutual understanding of the proposal in the long term. The minister went on to say that they had agreed to a meeting of Canadian and American officials to be held in Washington in November. He pointed out that if that meeting is successful it is hoped that some of the concerns that have been expressed will be met.

I believe that answers Senator Guay's question, and part of Senator Roblin's, although I do not expect him to acknowledge it. There have been significant representations made by the Canadian government, and meetings, including the most recent one in Halifax, have been held at which both phase one and phase two of the Garrison Dam project were discussed. I have already explained what Mr. Caccia has said on that subject, and therefore I believe I have answered, at least in part, the honourable senator's question.

• (1425)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am quite prepared to express my pleasure to the minister that it was not forgotten in Halifax and that, if what he says is correct, it is a good thing, and I give him full credit for it.

Senator Olson: Good.

Senator Roblin: Now, if he will just tell me that the Garrison project is to be included in the basket of projects that will be subject to bipartisan scrutiny by the two governments, I will be even more appreciative of him. So I urge him to go ahead and get the answer to that question.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have already undertaken to seek that answer. The question arises about whether at this stage there is in existence an agreed agenda for the meeting. However, I shall convey that matter to the minister as well. Perhaps Senator Guay and Senator Roblin would like me to urge that the matter be on the agenda.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RELOCATION OF DEPARTMENT TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development.

Hon. David Walker: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: It has to do with the various portfolios for which the minister is responsible. I appreciate that there are 14 of them, which must be quite a workload. The portfolio that I am interested in deals with the minister's responsibility for veterans affairs. In view of the state of the move of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Prince Edward Island, which is now taking place and which is due for completion by 1984, I am hoping that the minister will answer questions arising from the vast turnover of staff, which might have the effect of diminishing the capability and efficiency of the department until new people are trained. Will the minister tell us whether he is following this move, which is so important and which, I understand, is being monitored by a task force? Can the minister give us some details about the move, as to when exactly it will take place, whether he has been made aware of the concerns with regard to the vast turnover of staff, and what steps are being taken to make sure that it does not destroy the efficiency of the Canadian Pension Commission and the other agencies which look after veterans' benefits?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, Senator Marshall has invited me to make a speech on matters concerning veterans affairs but I think I shall decline and take his questions as notice. I shall provide him with an answer in the form of a letter, which could be followed by specific questioning in the Senate.

Senator Marshall: That is exactly what I hoped the minister would say because the Leader of the Government, as I indicated last week, cannot look after all the departments to which we address questions. I also understand that many of the 14 portfolios, whose subject matter the minister is responsible for, will come under the authority of the new committee on social affairs, science and technology, when the new rules come into effect. Perhaps the minister should take the opportunity to appear before this new committee to give us an overview of his responsibilities so that we may direct to him only questions concerning the regions for which we are responsible, thereby helping us to receive answers a little quicker than we do now.

Senator Austin: Of course, honourable senators, I would be pleased to respond to an invitation from the chairman of any committee of this house to appear before it to give an explanation with respect to the appropriate work of that committee.

Senator Marshall: Would the minister also be prepared to make a statement on motions in the chamber or, perhaps, give us the information that will help us in directing our questions?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, it is perfectly satisfactory to me that questions from Senator Marshall be directed to the Leader of the Government and, where appropriate, in assistance to the leader, I would respond to them. It is also perfectly satisfactory to me that questions pertaining to the social development envelope be directed to me.

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

VISIT TO CANADA—QUESTION NO. 59 ON ORDER PAPER WITHDRAWN

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, perhaps I should bring this matter up in delayed answers, but I would like to deal with a question I asked in April 1981 with respect to the visit to Canada by the President of the United States. At that time he had been in office for two years and I was wondering how long he would last. I am heartened by the fact that the President has indicated that he will run again, which will give me another few years to wait for my answer. However, in the meantime I took advantage of the new access-to-information legislation, sent a cheque for $5 to the department responsible, and received an answer in letter form. I even received my $5 back. That was because the party who answered the letter said the question was such a good one.

In order to assist with restraint in spending I am wondering if question No. 59 could be removed from the Order Paper, since it takes up a fair amount of space. I have the answer, which might be the subject of a notice of inquiry in the future, since I am not too satisfied with it.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I take it, honourable senators, that this is notice to the officers of this house that Senator Marshall's question can be removed. I thank the honourable senator for being concerned with respect to federal expenditures.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

CANADAIR LTD.—REVIEW OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development. Several months have elapsed since he commenced a review with respect to the operations of Canadair. Is the honourable minister now in a position to report to this house on the review of that corporation and to inform honourable senators of the anticipated profit for the balance of the year?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): I should like to thank Senator Phillips for his continued interest in Canadair. I am preparing a report to Parliament on the affairs of Canadair which I hope to be able to make within the next few weeks. In the meantime, I have authorized the release of a statement by Canadair today regarding a restructuring of the management of the company and with respect to other steps to strengthen the competitiveness of the company. It is a statement which I will send to Senator Phillips within the next few minutes.

Senator Phillips: I thank the minister for saying that he has authorized the release of a statement. He has now aroused my curiosity about the tabling of that statement in this chamber and the other chamber. Have the papers been tabled in either house? Did that form of courtesy occur to the honourable minister?

Senator Austin: It is not my statement, but a statement of the chief executive officer of Canadair combined with a statement of the chief executive officer of Canada Development Investment Corporation. It is for that reason I can make the statement available to Senator Phillips. I do not propose to make it my own statement, in any parliamentary sense.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have supplementary questions with respect to this matter which I will save until I receive the statement from the honourable minister. I will take my questions up then.

Senator Austin: Senator Phillips, you shall have it this afternoon. If other honourable senators would like to see a copy of it, then I would be pleased to send it to them as well.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to ask a few questions with respect to this matter. First, I should like to say to the minister that when he replies to questions on this side of the house I hope he will keep in mind that the questions are of interest to a great number of senators. While it is in order for him to send a letter to Senator Marshall if he wishes to do so, the letter ought to be presented to Parliament if it is in response to a parliamentary question. I am sure the minister will keep that in mind. Also, when he distributes statements to senators I hope he will include all senators in the distribution. These are parliamentary matters and any material distributed should be sent to all members of the house.

With those cautionary words having been said, which the minister could probably do without, I should like to ask a question or two about this issue with respect to Canadair. When the minister makes his statement, will he include in it some comments with respect to the social benefits he perceives will accrue to these particular corporations which are losing so much money? I notice he made a statement last summer saying that there was a point beyond which the social benefits were not worth the losses that were being incurred. I think that is a sound position to take, if there are any social benefits, but it lacks something as a statement of policy because, unless the minister defines the parameters he has in mind in terms of dollars in considering this matter, he really has not presented the policy of the government.

In view of the fact that this corporation has lost more money than any other public corporation that I know of, it seems to me that the minister would be doing a service to this house if he would explain what he means by the social discount or the social benefits that accrue to these crown corporations, and define his terms so that the house and the public at large will have an opportunity to measure the success or failure of these policies.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Roblin for his remarks. At the time I issue my statement, I hope that I will be able to satisfy him.

Senator Roblin: May I ask my honourable friend whether he intends to make a statement about the role of the Auditor General in connection with both Canadair and the CDIC? Although I think I understand his role in connection with CDIC, I do not know the Auditor General's role in connection with Canadair. Would that be included in the minister's statement?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, discussions are continuing with the Auditor General with respect to an appropriate role in the affairs of CDIC and its family of corporations, and I shall certainly have something to say once those discussions are completed.

Senator Roblin: I ask my honourable friend to consider another matter. When the subject of Canadair was first discussed in this chamber, my friend made a statement concerning the board of directors of that corporation which led me to believe that the minister did not entirely approve of what they were doing. In fact, the minister went much further than that and expressed a very keen sense of anxiety about the way in which the members of that board had been operating. However, I find that during the summer the entire board was re-appointed.

When the minister makes his statement, perhaps he will tell us exactly how his mental processes work, in that at one period of time he finds it possible to be rather scathing of this board's activities and yet, shortly thereafter, he re-appoints the entire board. There probably is a good reason for this action on the part of the minister, and perhaps he will provide it to us.

Senator Austin: I shall endeavour to do so, honourable senators.

Senator Roblin: I have a final question on the point. When will we get this statement of the minister?

Senator Austin: Analytical data is now being processed by Canadair and, as soon as that is completed and delivered to me for my own perusual and appraisal, which I think will be within the next three or four weeks, I shall be able to make a statement to this house.

Senator Roblin: That is none too soon. However, the minister triggered another thought in my mind when he was responding to Senator Phillips and said that he was presenting a report from Canadair and CDIC but was not making it his own, in the parliamentary sense. How can the minister do that? He is responsible for these corporations and, if he presents a report to this house, he has to take responsibility for what is in that report. If he does not wish to do that, he has to inform this house of the parts of the report for which he is not accepting responsibility.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, what I said was that I had authorized the making of a statement by the chief executive officer of Canadair, associated with the chief executive officer of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. I am not proposing to present that statement as a parliamentary document but, as a corporate document, I am willing to send it to Senator Phillips and anyone else who is interested.

I want to be very clear that I endorse what is found in this corporate statement. I am not in any way denying my support of what is said therein. However, I am not proposing to table it as a document or speak to it in this house at this time.

Senator Roblin: I object to that, honourable senators. While I am pleased to hear that my honourable friend does not disown what is in the report and that he makes it his own, the fact that he presents it here and speaks about it makes it a parliamentary document. Therefore, my honourable friend must table it, and I suggest that he do so without any further hesitation.

● (1440)

Senator Austin: I said that I had a document in my possession which I would make available to Senator Phillips. I do not think that that makes it a parliamentary document. I am also prepared to let other senators have it on request, and I do not think that that would make it a parliamentary document, yet it is not a secret document but a public document, as of today. I am not sure what it is Senator Roblin is complaining about.

Senator Roblin: My complaint is that I do not want the minister passing notes around to senators in answer to particular questions. If the minister has something to say in this chamber about a document, as he did, then the document ought to be tabled, and I think that the minister should table it.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I will confer with the Deputy Leader of the Government and ask his advice. If it is decided that it should be tabled, I will be pleased to do so.

GRAIN

UNITED STATES MARKETING POLICY

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Did Mr. MacEachen and Secretary Shultz discuss the grain marketing policy of the United States insofar as it affects world market conditions?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I do not have any knowledge, at the present time , as to whether that was discussed with Secretary Shultz.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

SALARY OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, since the Minister of State for Social Development has a huge debt of $2.5 billion hanging around his neck, will he, when he reports, be good enough to tell us what salary he has allocated to Mr. Strong, the new chairman?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I wish to advise the Senate that I do not propose to answer questions from Senator Walker. He well appreciates the reason for that, I hope.

Senator Walker: Little boy blue is mad today. You will learn, sonny boy, that you will not go far by taking that attitude.

I then ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether it would be proper to ask him to instruct the recalcitrant minister to let us know the salary of his great friend, Mr. Maurice Strong, the chairman of the board of the Canada Development Investment Corporation.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Goverment): The answer is very simple; no, it would not be proper.

[Senator Austin.]

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which relates to a subject that was thoroughly discussed and debated in this chamber and in the other place last week.

My question pertains to the 11 Canadians who were denied the most basic right of all, the right to freedom, by an illegal decision of the National Parole Board. Has the government resolved that an ex gratia payment will be paid to those 11 Canadians who were denied their freedom for periods of up to two months?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall refer that question to the Solicitor General of Canada.

Senator Hastings: When bringing this matter to the attention of the Solicitor General of Canada, would he suggest that an $800 per day payment be an equitable payment to those Canadians?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Where did you get that figure from?

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VACANCIES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Muir on September 22 concerning the appointment of members to the board of directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Honourable senators, I have made enquiries of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and I can inform Senator Muir that, as of yesterday, no appointments had been made to fill the vacancies on the board of directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

When an appointment is made, I will ensure that Senator Muir receives that information.

TRANSPORT

RUMOURED RESUMPTION OF PASSENGER RAIL SERVICE FROM HALIFAX TO MONTREAL VIA MONCTON AND SAINT JOHN

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised by Senator Riley on September 22 concerning VIA Rail service to the Maritimes.

The minister has received copies of the report "A proposal for the implementation of direct VIA Rail service linking central Canada and the Maritimes: a cost effective solution" dated June 8, 1983, prepared by the Coalition for Improved Rail Passenger Service (CIRPS). In their report, CIRPS presents a plan for the restructuring of maritime rail services to restore a daily train between Halifax and Montreal via Saint John, Fredericton Junction and Sherbrooke.

VIA Rail officials are reviewing these proposals and are impressed by the amount of time and effort devoted by CIRPS to the formulation of these recommendations. VIA Rail officials have contacted CIRPS to obtain additional technical information used by CIRPS in order to analyse the merits of the proposal.

Once VIA Rail has completed its detailed technical evaluation of the CIRPS proposal, the government will be in a better position to respond to the proposal.

AIR CANADA

REFUSAL TO PUBLISH AUDIT REPORT

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on October 4 concerning the Air Canada audit.

The answer is: The recent Air Canada audit has not been made public because it is an internal working paper. A copy has been made available to Transport Canada to assist them in their official audit which the minister may make public.

The final answer I have today relates to the same subject. My notes indicate that Senator Nurgitz raised his question as a partial modification of Senator Marshall's question of October 4.

The answer is: The report, or audit, has been submitted to Transport Canada in its entirety to assist the ministry in its official audit of Air Canada operations. Portions not deemed proprietary may be included in Transport Canada's report, at the discretion of the minister; and parts pertinent to aviation safety may be used by Transport Canada for the benefit of aviation in general. The Air Canada audit was commissioned as an internal working document and it should be recognized that none of the internal working papers of the company's domestic or international competitiors are published, either in their entirety or in part.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the subject matter of the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983, which was tabled on Thursday, October 13, 1983.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I should like to make some comments with respect to the proposed Consititution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 with respect to aboriginal rights and which was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs just before the Senate adjourned for the summer.

As honourable senators are aware, a couple of special committees of the Senate also met during the summer and fall on matters considered by the government to be of equal importance and priority, and they siphoned off some colleagues who are usually of great assistance and support. Fortunately, we still had a competent nucleus, very ably supplemented by two non-members, Senators Steuart and McElman. They attended almost every one of the 13 committee hearings, which began before the Senate reconvened in September, and they were of tremendous assistance not only during the hearings but also in preparing the report you are considering. All our committee members—and, in particular, myself— are indebted to them for their assistance.

Because we are considering the first amendment to the Constitution of Canada and also because it touches on an area which is of vital importance not only to our native people but also to all governments and the people of Canada, your committee felt it should report in some detail both the evidence it heard and the conclusions which could be drawn from that evidence. I am sure that the views which will be expressed by other honourable senators who attended the hearings will assist this chamber in its consideration of the proposed amendment. However, I believe that I can say on their behalf that your committee concluded that the only part of the proposed amendment on which there was unequivocal endorsement was that which sets out the timetable for future constitutional conferences with the native groups. Personally, I regret that the native groups feel so little confidence in— and indeed are mistrustful of—our good faith and the determination of our governments to proceed as quickly as possible to a resolution and recognition of their claims that they can be reassured only by having agenda items incorporated into the Constitution. I believe that detracts from our written Constitution which I think should express only the highest principles of a country and the rules by which it governs itself.

I hope that our native groups will take some comfort and encouragement from what our Prime Minister said when he spoke recently on the historic occasion of the Joint Resolutions of Parliament respecting language rights in Manitoba. At one point in his address he said that, although we cannot undo the past, we can be just in our time. Later in his address he observed in referring to small minorities:

> —I think it is fundamental to our existence as a people and, indeed, to our survival as a nation that we say no matter how small the minority, if they have rights, those rights will be respected.

While I do not fault the native groups for insisting on the inclusion of an amended timetable in the Constitution, I suggest that they share some of the responsibility for there being no clear consensus amongst the witnesses, many of whom will be charged with the duty of negotiating their constitutional rights as to what the two substantive sections of the proposed amendment actually mean and encompass. All parties to future negotiations must prepare themselves to lay on the table "in the sunlight," to use the words of the distinguished Leader of the Opposition in the other place, in clear terms their claims, their offers and their counteroffers. Until that is done, no meaningful progress can take place. Honourable senators know that the financial and social costs flowing from uncertainties and delays, not only to the native peoples but also to all the people of Canada who pay for interim and patchwork solutions, have been enormous and will continue to escalate. Therefore, I urge all parties to these constitutional negotiations to get on with the job of finding the solutions and reaching the agreements which are so urgently required.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I wish to move that we adjourn debate on this report, but I should like to explain why. Since I shall be attending two sittings of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, starting tomorrow afternoon, I shall be unable to take part in the present debate either tomorrow or Thursday. I therefore wish to move adjournment of the debate until Tuesday. However, if meanwhile another senator—I am thinking for instance, of Senator Steuart, who also took part in the committee's proceedings—should wish to speak, I shall, of course, have no objection. In my absence, another senator from our side, could, on my behalf, move adjournment of the debate until next Tuesday.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, regarding the adjournment motion and the reason given by Senator Tremblay for requesting adjournment of debate until next week, I simply wish to second his invitation to any other senator who may wish to take advantage of this opportunity to speak in the debate.

[English]

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to intervene briefly in the debate in order to support the recommendations of the committee and to agree with this resolution. When the resolution was proposed to the Senate, I questioned a number of points. The first was the speed with which we were asked to pass this resolution. Approximately three months intervened between the time the Accord was agreed upon by the participants—the federal government, the provincial governments and the aboriginal peoples—and when it was presented to us in the dying days before the adjournment. The Leader of the Government concurred that there was no demand by the government that we pass it, but the feeling still remained that we were not given ample time to have the hearings. For that reason we put it off, and as a result were accused by some people of holding up the process. I think that the report makes it clear that, in fact, we did not hold up the process but carried out the responsibility that is rightfully ours.

The other questions I raised, to which some answers were obtained in the hearings, dealt with equal rights for males and females, and specifically with what aboriginal rights meant; in fact, I wanted to know for whom the Assembly of First Nations was speaking.

[Senator Neiman.]

I was also concerned, as we all were, that everyone involved, including the general public, who, at that time I was convinced, and still am, were a forgotten party in this whole process of the first amendment to Canada's Constitution should be given ample opportunity to be heard. The one-day hearings held by the other place had not afforded ample time for them to be heard. People told us that they desired to put forth presentations, but were either not invited to do so or did not feel that they had ample time to do so.

Consequently, the resolution was referred to committee. We had some excellent hearings and my congratulations go to the chairman. I think the report reflected precisely the reactions of those who attended the committee hearings.

• (1500)

In supporting the report, I would again emphasize one or two points. In future, the Senate should urge all those taking part—the federal government, provincial governments and the aboriginal peoples in this case, or anyone else involved in the future—to give their legislatures, their Parliament and their constituents ample time to consider important amendments to Canada's Constitution. If we do not do this, surely we are making a mockery of the very idea that a constitution should consist of entrenched laws that are over and above ordinary laws. We should call on people to take time and give serious consideration before these laws are changed.

I should like to stress another point which I found remarkable, and I am sure other members of the committee also did, the fact that certainly the federal government—and possibly the provincial governments—has not really given enough thought to what it has embarked on. We asked the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development what they meant by aboriginal or native rights. Their answer—and it was a fair answer, I suppose, up to a point—was that it would take a great deal of time to delineate these rights. In fact, a special committee is already considering that question. The native people have laid before this committee something like 90 different subjects that they want to discuss as rights.

We tend to think of rights as being land rights, mineral rights, hunting rights, fishing rights and educational rights, but, when they are talking of something like 90 different rights, we realize that we have not gotten down to serious business yet. We now have some idea of the breadth of this whole subject.

We should also be considering the question of a land base. We heard representations from not only the status and non-status Indians but the Métis organization. Although I have dealt with the Métis organization for many years, I was somewhat surprised to hear that this organization represents only those Métis living in the western provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and a few in British Columbia—and that they do not represent people of mixed blood who live in other parts of Canada. I was surprised to hear them say that they represented 400,000 people but I think that is probably true. In Saskatchewan alone I believe there are as many as 90,000 or 100,000 people of mixed blood who are neither status or non-status Indians; they are Métis and they are demanding all these rights and a land base.

As an example, the status Indians in Saskatchewan, who number about 70,000, have a land base. They have been before the courts, and it is agreed by the federal government and by the provincial Government of Saskatchewan that they are entitled to at least one million acres more. These Indians are also claiming another 600,000 or 700,000 acres of land which they feel were taken away from them illegally. Even the million acres which has been agreed to by both the federal and provincial governments and which has been in the process of being handed over in the last six or seven years is indicative that only a small start has been made. Almost every time an acre of land is transferred, either from the Crown in the right of the federal government or the Crown in the right of the provincial government or from a private entity, it brings on a crisis in the province of Saskatchewan. This painful process on all sides has dragged on for years.

I mention this because we are now talking of a very large land base for a group of people who number far more than the status Indians. They are now claiming a serious land base in the province of Saskatchewan as well as in the other provinces of western Canada, and I am sure they will eventually make the same claim in provinces of eastern Canada as well.

I point these things out to demonstrate that the gap between what I feel the federal government is talking about, what I feel the provincial government is talking about, and what I believe the public is thinking about, and what the native people are asking for is tremendous. The longer it takes to settle this matter, the greater will be the expectation of the native people because they are being funded by the federal government and by some provincial governments to carry out their studies; this lends a certain legitimacy to their claims, and I think rightfully so. The longer these things are allowed to drag on, the greater will be the gap and the more serious could be the confrontation, if the final settlement offered by both levels of government to all aboriginal groups falls far short of what they expect. In that event, I think we could be in for a very serious confrontation.

I do not have any answers. All I am saying is that we should urge the federal government and the provinces to settle these outstanding issues as quickly as possible, because this is, in my opinion, a time bomb.

The government implied that the question of who is a Métis and who is a non-status Indian would be settled as between the government and the native people. The native people told us very clearly that they would settle it; that it was their business. They also told us that they would settle the question of male and female equality and that it was literally none of the federal or provincial governments' business. The question of whose business it is needs to be settled.

The fact that our special Senate committee held hearings on this resolution proves that we, in the Senate, intend to take our full and rightful responsibility with regard not just to this amendment but to future amendments to the Constitution. The hearings have proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that what we did was right and necessary. This should be a clear signal to the federal government that in future negotiations they had better not pass over the Senate lightly, as I think they were tempted to do in this instance, but that we have a role to play and that we intend to play that role very seriously.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, concerning the adjourned motion, as Senator Tremblay suggested, other senators could speak tomorrow and Thursday in any case. If I understood correctly, even if Senator Tremblay continues to move for adjournment, he is willing to let others speak in the meantime.

Perhaps another senator could adjourn the debate on his own behalf, until tomorrow or Thursday. Otherwise, I simply want to point out that it would be desirable to continue debate tomorrow or Thursday and then next Tuesday.

[English]

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, as a reasonably active participant of the committee, I should like to say a word or two about this first amendment to the Canadian Constitution.

I should like to emphasize the feeling expressed by Senators Neiman and Steuart. I find it shocking to believe that, if the Senate committee had not held reasonably extensive hearings, the first amendment to the Constitution of Canada would have taken place with almost no participation from representatives other than those in Cabinet.

I would express the hope that in the future, when the Constitution is amended again as it inevitably will be, the process will not be conducted by just a few people in the country and without the involvement of the Canadian public. I emphasize that I consider that to be wrong.

Again I express my support for the fine work that has been done by Senator Neiman, but I should like to emphasize that, when there is another amendment to our Constitution, it should not come to this chamber without the Canadian public having been given at least some idea that the Canadian Constitution is being amended and that that could have an important meaning to them.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Hon. Senator Tremblay, seconded by the Hon. Senator Murray, that this debate be adjourned until the next sitting and automatically adjourned, if no one should speak, until next Tuesday, to give Senator Tremblay an opportunity to speak. Is that the gist of the resolution?

Senator Frith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: Thus, if no one speaks tomorrow or Thursday, the order will automatically stand on the order paper for next week.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we still have the option of speaking tomorrow or Thursday, but it is understood that if no one intervenes, in the meantime, the order will stand in Senator Tremblay's name. I think that in that case, Mr. Speaker, if everyone agrees, it is preferable to adjourn until the next sitting of the Senate and thus give all senators an opportunity to intervene, it being understood that Senator Tremblay will be unable to do so until next Tuesday.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do the mover, the seconder and honourable senators agree with the suggestion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Tremblay, debate adjourned.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE ENTITLED "THEY SERVED—WE CARE"—ADVISABILITY OF IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATION NO. 7—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the motion moved in the other place on 27th April, 1983, requesting the government to consider the advisability of implementing Recommendation No. 7 of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science's Report entitled: "They Served—We Care", and to certain observations regarding the proceedings of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Veterans Affairs as they pertain to the aforementioned report.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, order No. 8 has been adjourned in my name to give any honourable senator the opportunity to speak to it. If no one wishes to do so, then I suggest that we consider this order debated.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

CONSIDERATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

> Consideration of the Fifth Report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, tabled in the Senate on 21st April, 1983.—(Honourable Senator Murray).

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, this order stands in the name of Senator Murray, the joint chairman of the committee. I am most grateful to him for allowing me to speak at this time. With leave of the Senate, I should like to proceed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I wish to address myself briefly to the section entitled "Safeguard for Other Languages" of the Fifth Report to Parliament of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages, which report was tabled in both houses on April 21, 1983.

It is stated in that section that the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Maxwell Yalden, feels that the present wording of section 38 of the Official Languages Act is too negative. Section 38 of that act reads as follows:

> Nothing in this Act shall be construed as derogating from or diminishing in any way any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the 7th day of September, 1969, with respect to any language that is not an official language.

The committee found that the legal formulation of this section was, indeed, negative. Furthermore, the committee felt that:

> —this section refers specifically to rights or privileges and, in this sense, it is an important section since it safeguards all present and future rights or privileges.

Moreover, the committee noted that section 22 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms of the new Canadian Constitution provides the same safeguards in almost the same words.

The committee also took into consideration section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which reads as follows:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

To make the legislation consistent with the spirit of section 27 of the Charter, the committee agreed that a new section might be added to the Official Languages Act. It recognizes that:

> —this could have a positive psychological value and would, to some extent, acknowledge Canada's cultural diversity within the context of its status as an officially bilingual nation.

After consultation with various legal authorities, the committee decided:

> —that a negative formulation of this positive concept is the most appropriate.

The following recommendation was submitted:

> That a new section be added to the Official Languages Act to stipulate that nothing in this Act shall be interpreted so as to affect adversely the use, preservation and enhancement of any other language in use by Canadians.

This new wording is not as negative as the wording of section 38 of the present act. It is, however, still negative and a "nothing" clause. I propose a more positive formulation by adding to the above recommendation the following paragraph:

> Wherever and whenever feasible, any of the third languages, sometimes referred to as the heritage languages, may be taught in the public and secondary schools of the provinces and at universities, with possible funding from the federal and provincial governments; they may be used in the courts, in government services at all levels, in CBC radio and television at the national, regional and local levels, and in the federal Parliament, provincial legislatures and city and municipal councils.

Honourable senators, I am not proposing anything new. This was recommended by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada in its report that was tabled in both chambers on March 16, 1972. It is important to note that, in its two years of intensive effort, that committee, composed of 24 MPs and senators of the four federal parties, held 145 public meetings, including 72 sessions in 47 cities and towns located in all of the provinces and territories. The 1,486 witnesses who appeared before the committee ranged from acknowledged experts, leaders in various walks of life, representatives of various institutions and organizations, to students and ordinary people such as labourers, farmers, trappers, housewives, and so on. The evidence was published fully in both official languages in the records of Parliament—93 volumes—and is available to all who may wish to study this important material. In my opinion, the report reflected a fair cross-section of the Canadian population.

Giving recognition to the multicultural reality of Canada and the fact that nearly one-third of the population of our country is comprised of ethnocultural groups and languages of non-British, non-French origin, this joint committee, over 10 years ago, stated in its report:

> The Constitution should explicitly recognize the right of Provincial Legislatures to confer equivalent status with the English and French languages on other languages. Federal financial assistance to support the teaching or use of other languages would be appropriate.

In the same chapter of this report, the committee advises that:

> The Constitution should therefore provide in its section on languages rights that Provincial Legislatures may confer rights on other language groups with respect to use in the Legislatures themselves, or in government administration, the courts and education in publicly-supported schools.

My addition to the proposed amendment to section 38 of the Official Languages Act is fully in conformity with the recommendations in the report of the special joint committee that was tabled in 1972. It is apparent that subsequent committees dealing with the Canadian Constitution have paid no attention to the early recommendations.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms recognizes that Canada is a bilingual and multicultural nation. Canada is a nation of minorities. If there are safeguards for the English and French languages, it follows that there should be safeguards for the other lanugages, which are also Canadian.

My proposed amendment of section 38 of the Official Languages Act, which applies equally to section 22 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, is practical and timely. Compulsion is not even implied, nor is the prohibition of any language. In the field of education there would have to be a demand, and sufficient numbers must warrant such classes. Its psychological value is inherent. Much of this is now practised in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario, and satisfactory progress is reported.

Honourable senators, I recently discussed this amendment with Premier Howard Pawley of Manitoba for over an hour. I assured him of my support for the guarantee of the rights of the French in Manitoba and that it was absolutely necessary to redress the wrongs of the past but, at the same time, to accept the partnership of the present. He was aware that most of the other ethnic groups were sympathetic and supportive but asked for some guarantee of their rights, as several greatly outnumbered the French in the province.

Premier Pawley studied my proposed amendment, which appealed to him. He stated that he would like to see it incorporated in the Official Languages Act and also the federal Constitution. The premier undertook to have this amendment discussed in his caucus, where it would be modified and adapted to the provincial jurisdiction. This would greatly help to arrive at a reasonable and acceptable solution of the Manitoba language question and the implementation of cultural rights. I understand that the Franco-Manitoban Society, which speaks on behalf of the French population of the province, endorses the idea of a clause in the resolution that would guarantee the rights of other languages. This is proof that partnership of all the ethnocultural groups is the essence of the true spirit of Canadianism.

Honourable senators, I move:

> That the Fifth Report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages be referred back to the committee with instructions to consider the following as an addition to recommendation No. 11:
> "Wherever and whenever feasible, any of the third languages, sometimes referred to as the heritage languages, may be taught in the public and secondary schools of the provinces and at universities, with possible funding from the federal and provincial governments; they may be used in the courts, in government services at all levels, in CBC radio and television at the national, regional and local levels, and in the federal Parliament, provincial legislatures and city and municipal councils."; and
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this house in the aforementioned action.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Yuzyk, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald:

> That the Fifth Report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages—

Honourable senators, shall I dispense?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): No, Your Honour; please continue.

The Hon. the Speaker:

—be referred back to the committee with instructions to consider the following as an addition to recommendation No. 11:

Senator Frith: You may dispense with the rest, Your Honour.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: No, Your Honour.

Honourable senators, I should like to move that the debate on this motion be adjourned. I take it that debate has already commenced.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FOURTH MEETING—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION—DEBATE CONCLUDED

Hon. Henry D. Hicks rose pursuant to notice of October 11, 1983:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-fourth Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, held at Minaki Lodge, Ontario, from 16th to 20th June, 1983.

He said: Honourable senators, this year the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group met from June 16 to 20 at Minaki Lodge. Minaki Lodge is a newly refurbished lodge near Kenora, Ontario in which the Government of Ontario has invested a good deal of money belonging to the taxpayers of that province. I must say that it is a marvellous setting and it provided an excellent meeting place for members of the Congress of the United States and of the Parliament of Canada. It is sufficiently remote that we were not distracted and could work hard for the relatively short time in which these meetings were held.

The previous meeting was held at Key Largo, Florida in March 1982. Those are the only two meetings of this organization I have had the privilege to attend. I would say generally that this year's meeting was held in an atmosphere of more friendliness, more understanding and more compromise than was the case even the year before.

As some honourable senators who have attended these meetings will know, the work of the parliamentarians centres around three committees. The first committee deals with trade and economic questions. The Senate was represented on that committee by Senator van Roggen. A feature this year, which had not obtained in Key Largo, Florida in 1982, was an introductory roundtable discussion in each of the committees. That served the purpose of letting congressmen and senators from the United States and members of the House of Commons and Senate of Canada become acquainted with one another so that the subsequent, more specific discussions could take place more expeditiously and in a very good atmosphere indeed.

The full report was tabled and appended to Hansard on October 11, 1983 and commences at page 6025. I shall not, as I did last year, go through all the items on the agenda and make comments on each of them. Senators who are interested can review the report.

After the introductory roundtable discussion in Committee I, there was a discussion on bilateral policy issues affecting trade and investment. In this respect I should point out that our American friends were much less unhappy—perhaps I should put it that way—about the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the National Energy Policy of Canada than they were a year ago. They seemed to appreciate the modifications that had been made to both those policies and frankly admitted that they were not as concerned as before. The next item was specific trans-border trade problems, which dealt with the U.S. Auto Content Bill implications for Canada and the United States regarding the international grain marketing situation, airline routes and fares, agricultural products and so forth, after which there was a concluding roundtable discussion.

Committee II dealt generally with defence and energy questions. One of the co-chairmen on that committee was Senator Roblin and two of its members were Senators Doody and Lafond. That committee report commences on page 6033 of the October 11 Hansard. After an introductory roundtable discussion having to do largely with public attitudes in the nuclear arms debate, various questions were touched upon such as missile testing, air defence modernization and defence spending levels. Here, of course, our American friends, no matter how politely they go about it, are critical of the relatively low defence spending levels on the part of Canada in comparison with other NATO countries. I think I have said in this chamber before, and probably most honourable senators know, that the proportion of our gross national product spent on defence is lower than that of any other NATO country save Luxembourg and Iceland which do not maintain any armed forces. But here again there was tacit acknowledgement on the improvement in Canada's defence effort over the past three years. I certainly hope that trend continues, and I am sure our American friends do also.

Committee II also dealt with energy problems: world oil supply, pricing and markets; the role of OPEC; the impact of lower prices on energy development and certain bilateral energy issues; Canada's natural gas exports to U.S. markets; the prospects for the Alaska Gas Pipeline, the impact of the National Energy Policy, and electricity. Again, considerable discussion on public attitudes toward the nuclear arms debate did not see our American friends and our Canadian delegates differing too much, although a number of the Americans were frankly surprised at the resistance in Canada to the testing of the Cruise Missile, saying that they had not anticipated it and were not expecting Canadians to be as concerned and antagonistic as they are.

Finally, Committee III dealt with environmental and multilateral problems. Its report commences on page 6037. I was the Canadian co-chairman of that committee and was ably supported from the Senate by my seat-mate and colleague, Senator Lapointe. After the roundtable discussion the committee dealt with environmental and fishing issues, such as acid rain and the law of the sea. Here I should say that our American friends were much more hopeful and agreeable to doing something about the acid rain problem than they had been in Florida only a year and a half ago. There was some optimism that we would take significant steps forward in dealing with acid rain. Events subsequent to June, with the intervention of the United States executive, have perhaps dashed some cold water on the hopes raised by the attitude of our American friends. We dealt also with toxic wastes, and, indeed, a good many of the delegates on both sides of the table felt that in many areas the disposition of toxic wastes posed and even greater threat to health and the environment than acid rain, though I suspect that in the long run that will not turn out to be true because the toxic-waste problem is probably susceptible of solution in much less time and much more effectively than is the problem of acid rain. We then dealt with the question of multilateral issues, the Law of the Sea, the international debt crisis and the Middle East.

In the final plenary session of the meeting we dealt—perhaps not at as great length as we should have—with the problems of Central America. The discussion largely consisted of our American delegates explaining their point of view and emphasizing the difficulties in policy they face in dealing with the tremendously difficult problems of Central America. I think one could only say that, while the Canadian delegates were sympathetic to the American point of view, we felt more strongly than our American friends that, generally speaking, a country should be allowed to determine its own form of government and to run its own affairs. Having said that, we acknowledged quite openly the great security problems which the United States encounters as a result of what is going on in Central America.

I have already said, honourable senators, that to me the general atmosphere of friendship and understanding this year seemed to exceed that of only a year or so ago. I would not like you to infer from that, however, that the American congressmen are not firm advocates of policies that are of concern to their own government and their own people. Indeed, they are very firm advocates. I do not think I could overstate the quality of the interventions by most of the American delegates. They were well prepared and they put forth their case strongly. At the same time they were willing to listen to the Canadian case as well.

I cannot compliment the quality of the American delegates without complimenting that of the Canadian delegates. In Committee III I was pleased with the contributions which were made, not only by my colleague, Senator Lapointe, but by members of the other place as well. I believe that the senators who sat on the other two committees would say the same thing.

Sometimes we are apt to complain that Americans do not know very much about Canada and are not very interested in our problems. That may be true with respect to a great many of our friends south of the border, but it certainly is not true of the congressmen who participated in the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. Those American delegates were very well informed about the situation in Canada and the relationships which exist between Canada and the United States. It is a pleasure to know that there are members of the United States Congress who are so knowledgeable about Canada and her problems, even though they do not always agree with the point of view.

Honourable senators, before closing my remarks, may I mention that we have just received an invitation from the two American co-chairmen to meet next year in Puerto Rico from March 8 to March 12. The Canadian executive of the Canada-United States group has sent off an acceptance of that invitation this afternoon.

This organization which has been active for more than 20 years, provides a forum for informal discussion between United States congressmen and Canadian parliamentarians—without authority to make decisions, of course. In my view it is an extremely useful organization. Having attended the meeting in Florida in 1982 and the meeting held at the Minaki Lodge in June of 1983 I can attest to the benefits of these kinds of exchanges. Correspondence with the American co-chairmen on a number of vital matters affecting Canada and her relations with the United States has taken place in an atmosphere which I believe would not have been possible had we not met and discussed matters beforehand. As a result of that correspondence a great deal more attention has been given to Canada's attitudes than would have been the case, had the correspondence taken place along official lines, coldly, as between people who do not know one another.

This is a valuable institution. I hope it continues to be as effective in the future as I believe it has been in the past.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 5 p.m.

QUESTION PERIOD

YUKON TERRITORY

GULF OIL DEVELOPMENT ON NORTH SLOPE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, in posing my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the proposed development by Gulf Oil at Stokes Point on the Yukon North Slope, I appreciate that the minister will have to take it as notice. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received a report from the Yukon North Slope Project Review Group; and, if so, would he undertake to table it in the Senate in the interest of enlightened debate and discussion on this subject?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall ask the minister, first, if he has received that report, and then, whether or not it ought to be tabled.

AIR CANADA

REFUSAL TO PUBLISH AUDIT REPORT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In giving a delayed answer yesterday dealing with the audit report of Air Canada, the Leader of the Government read into the record a response, which I took to be Air Canada's, saying that the audit report has now been filed with the Minister of Transport and that it is now up to that minister to decide whether or not that report should be published.

I appreciate that my question is a slightly different one, but I ask the Leader of the Government to enquire of his colleague, the Minister of Transport, whether those portions of the audit report that concern safety on Air Canada could be disclosed to the public. Obviously, the purpose of obtaining such a report was to satisfy Canadians that air travel on their national carrier in this country is now safe, and to keep it secret seems foolhardy.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall certainly make that request of the Minister of Transport. However, I think it was clear in the response that was given yesterday that this report is regarded by both Air Canada and the Department of Transport as an internal working document of Air Canada for the purposes that they set out to investigate and, therefore, no doubt a report will be made to the public. However, what Senator Nurgitz is asking now is for a complete or partial tabling of that report, and the reply given yesterday was fairly firm on that.

Senator Nurgitz: I would like to point out to the Leader of the Government that Air Canada, which at one time had an unusual and outstanding safety record, has, in recent years, had a series of what its president calls "incidents" which are all directly related to safety. In the past several months, there was the aircraft which skidded off the runway in Regina; there was the Gimli incident; there was the Cincinnati incident. It was for the purpose of satisfying Canadians that our national carrier is safe that the audit report was conducted, and whether or not that report is internal, Canadians are concerned about safety. If we are to be confident about flying on our national carrier, surely to goodness the Minister of Transport has an obligation to tell Canadians that that carrier has a clean bill of health. Perhaps that raises the burning question of whether, indeed, it has a clean bill of health and, consequently, the report cannot be released for other reasons.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would not like Senator Nurgitz or anyone else to cast doubt on the safety of Air Canada's maintenance procedures or any of the other things that go into the running of a safe airline. As Senator Nurgitz pointed out, until these recent incidents, Air Canada had been one of the best airlines in the world, if not the best, and I am sure that they want to maintain that standard. However, if for any reason it has slipped, they would want to re-establish it. Doing an investigation and making a report is not in the same category as the request he is making now for the release and tabling of internal working documents while they are carrying on the investigation. Nevertheless, I will make the request that Senator Nurgitz has asked for, and perhaps I regret that I put a qualification on it.

GRAIN

CANOLA—PROPOSED FREIGHT RATES

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board concerning a matter of significant importance to the prairie grain growers, and that is freight rates on canola, which is rapeseed. It has been announced that the Government of Canada intends to impose a commercial freight rate structure on canola products east of Thunder Bay. I suggest to the minister that that is hardly in keeping with the federal government's stated objective of establishing parity in freight rates from origin to destination. As I said, this is a matter of crucial concern to the oilseed industry, especially in the province of Saskatchewan. I hope I shall get an answer from the minister that will reassure us that additional burdens will not be imposed on canola growers in the prairie provinces.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, Senator Buckwold certainly has raised an important issue. Canola refined products have been moving east of Thunder Bay in recent years under a special rate regime—a minimal compensatory rate. The proposition has been put forward that if you were moving on a regular rate, on the Crow rate, or something closer to compensatory rates, that was also the way to go with regard to the rates on refined products east of Thunder Bay. Any major change from those minimal compensatory rates to rates that are relatively compensatory would be a very substantial increase indeed. I do not think there is any doubt about the foundation of Senator Buckwold's question, namely, that it would make it more difficult for the oil-crushing industry on the prairies, which industry has seen some very difficult times in recent months. A lot of discussion has been going on with regard to this question. Of course, there are different points of view. I consider the statement made by Senator Buckwold important and pertinent, and in the ongoing discussions it will be noted.

Senator Buckwold: I have a supplementary question. I am pleased to hear that I have made an important statement, but I did not get much reassurance from the minister. At a time when we are going through the problems of the Crow rate and the additional costs that could be imposed on prairie farmers, with some benefit, I might say, for them, to have this added to the burden which is being considered is something that I hope will be carefully reviewed. I am not sure where it stands, and perhaps the minister can tell us whether it is a fait accompli or that somebody just made an announcement. Certainly, the Government of Saskatchewan has protested, as will all the farm organizations. I feel it important that we get a substantive statement from the minister to the effect that this is going to be at least delayed.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, there are ongoing discussions, and I have participated in them for many months. I may say to Senator Buckwold that there have been proposed amendments to the legislation to extend the existing rate beyond the commodity to which it has been applied. In response to the honourable senator, I repeat that these discussions are ongoing. His point of view has been well stated, but I am not able to give a definitive answer at this time.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

CANADAIR LTD.—REVIEW OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the Minister of State for Social Development a question concerning Canadair. He was kind enough to offer to provide me with a copy of a statement issued that day. Much to my surprise, I did receive a copy of the statement in the afternoon. I should like to thank him and to point out that we, on this side, are unaccustomed to those on the other side making a statement and keeping their word. That is the sort of action I would commend to the Leader, and Deputy Leader, of the Government.

The statement itself does not contain very much that is new. Apparently, the number of positions has been reduced by 25 per cent. It is most interesting, honourable senators, to note that the number of vice-presidents has been reduced from 22 to 12. I did a quick calculation on the loss per vice-president, and it works out to approximately $115 million. I wish the company had reduced the number of vice-presidents to one some time ago, before it ran up this horrendous loss. Be that as it may, according to the Canadair news release, the total saving from all of the reductions will be approximately $27.5 million.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): "And my question is—"?

Senator Phillips: I am doubtful, honourable senators, if this saving is large enough to place us in the profit column. In looking over the minister's reply of yesterday, I notice that he avoided my question.

Senator Frith: "Which leads us to the following question:—"!

Senator Phillips: If the deputy leader could just contain himself for a minute, I should like to repeat my question to the minister. What is the anticipated profit of Canadair for the balance of this year? I feel that, because the minister is an astute businessman and an astute politician, the news must be good. As an astute businessman, the minister would not have associated himself with this statement unless the news was good. As an astute politician, he is not going to put his neck on the chopping block again for a record corporate loss in Canada. Therefore, I come to the logical conclusion that Canadair will make a profit, and I ask him what is the anticipated profit for 1983.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): To go directly to Senator Phillips' question, I must advise honourable senators that I do not have an anticipated profit figure to give to the Senate at this time. I have said before two committees of the other place that I would bring forward, in the fall, an analytical statement and a financial forecast and proposal as soon as I had the information available to me. This, I said in answer to Senator Roblin, I expected would be three or four weeks from now. At that time I hope to give honourable senators an answer with respect to profitability or non-profitability.

To avoid ambiguities, however, I would like to say that I put on the record in June, and I repeat now, that the investment of some $1.350 billion will not be recovered from the ongoing program of Canadair, or, indeed, from the ongoing program relating to the Canadair Challenger. My proposal will relate to recovery of the incremental financing to produce and sell 15 Challengers annually. I want to be very clear that that will be the scope of my proposal.

I am prepared to defend the desirability of Canadair's continuing to produce Challengers. They are highly successful technically, and I believe that they will be highly successful in marketing terms. They are a very important part of Canada's manufacturing technology and of our ability to offset our foreign purchases in the aerospace industry. I note with approval that the Leader of the Opposition in the other place, during the course of his questioning earlier today, accepted the premise that Canadair and the Challenger should be continued.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am rather pleased that the minister is paying attention to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition in the other place, and I hope that he will give all his remarks the same diligent attention he gave to the remark to which he just referred. I am intrigued by a sentence in the news release which states that the company is lowering the volume of sales necessary to realise a profit on Canadair operations. Ordinarily, we think of increased volume and increased sales as producing a higher profit, but this company is going the other way; it is reducing its sales in order to make a profit. Can the minister give us some figures on the number of aircraft on order, with firm commitments? I am sure that he will understand my skepticism concerning information supplied by that company with regard to their orders. I would also like to know the number of aircraft produced this year and the number scheduled to be completed in 1983.

Senator Austin: I am happy to assist Senator Phillips in reading the news release of Canadair. The sentence to which he has referred says:

> —significant progress has been made in reducing costs and lowering the volume of sales necessary to realize a profit on all Canadair operations.

By lowering the cost side, Canadair will be able to produce fewer aircraft and still recover its incremental costs of production. I believe that Senator Phillips is aware that 84 challengers have been delivered to customers to date. In the past five or six weeks we have been able to conclude sales of five Challengers. With respect to the long-term forecasts for orders and the financial data Senator Phillips is pursuing, I believe that answers to those questions will be most appropriately given in a statement which I will be making in committees in the other place within three or four weeks. I want to be very clear with Senator Phillips that I want to be quick to complete any undertakings and to say that the character of the information for which he is asking has a commercial quality which is proprietary in nature, and that if responses of that kind are to be given I will only give them in camera in committees of the other place, or of this chamber, with the usual undertakings with respect to confidentiality.

Senator Phillips: Perhaps I misunderstood the minister's reply, but did he say that the appropriate place to give the information I have requested is a committee of the other place?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): And here.

[Senator Austin.]

Senator Phillips: Surely, this chamber has the same right to that information as the other place? Why does the minister have this reservation for the other place in three weeks? The minister merely has to dial 183-9 and seven digits to phone Montreal to obtain the information. The exercise should not require three or four weeks and the reservation to retain the information for committees of the other place.

Senator Austin: If Senator Phillips will examine my answer in today's Debates of the Senate, he will see that I previously said that there are two committees of the other place before which I have appeared that have terms of reference which include the Canada Development Investment Corporation and Canadair, and before which I said I would re-appear to provide the appropriate information with respect to the financial program of Canadair and the Challenger.

Of course, if a committee of the Senate wishes to proceed and is properly seized with such process, I will always be willing to respond to the due process of this chamber. I indicated such in the latter part of my answer just given, when I said that were I to respond in the other place, or here, to questions you were asking, I would want to do so in camera because of the commerciality of the information being requested.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a couple of questions with respect to the finances of Canadair in order to be sure that we have an understanding of the matter. The minister said that the $1.4 billion would not be recoverable from this organization. I understand that, in addition to that sum, an amount of some $400 million will be required for the further financing of Canadair to the end of 1984, though it might have been 1983. Is that correct?

Senator Austin: To the end of December 1984, it is estimated that some additional $400 million will be required by Canadair, of which approximately half will be required to pay interest costs on the debt now being carried by Canadair; but those numbers are not final.

Senator Roblin: The minister said that the $1.4 billion that we disposed of a short while ago is not recoverable through the commercial operations of Canadair. Does he estimate that the additional $400 million will be recovered from Canadair in its commercial operations, or does he not think so?

Senator Austin: I have not sufficent information to advise this chamber how much of the additional financing will be recoverable or how much will not be. Therefore, Senator Roblin, I will have to ask you to wait until such time as I have the information and can provide it to Parliament.

Senator Roblin: Leaving that, then, for a later date, I come back to the $1.4 billion we have been discussing. I would assume that, as a general statement, the interest charges per year on that are approximately $140 million. How much of that $140 million is now being charged to Canadair to be met from its cost structure?

Senator Austin: All of the interest on Canadair's debt is being charged to Canadair, but I do not have the precise annual amount. One of the reasons the debt of Canadair is as large as it is, and the reason that permits you to say it is the largest corporate loss in Canadian history—I am not sure of the accuracy of that statement, but certainly it is one of the larger losses—is that the Challenger program has been financed largely from debt rather than from equity. That was based on the original estimations of Canadair's management as to the size of the investment required to put the Challenger into production and sale.

The second reason—and I thank you for the opportunity to explain the size of the debt—is that I decided to take it all in one year. Normally—and this is my personal opinion—if I had been running Canadair I would have taken losses in some of the previous years as well. So, if we look at a time frame for writing off some of these losses, we might find that it is not as sizeable in historic corporate loss terms.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate the minister's statement about the write-off. I imagine that if he were dealing with an ordinary supplier of capital, such as a commercial bank or the financial market, he would have written off the whole company long before now. It is only because he has an understanding friend in the person of the Minister of Finance that the company is still there. I think that is a clear fact.

What I am trying to get from the minister is a statement about who is paying the interest on this $1.4 billion we are talking about. Is it being charged to the firm? If I understand him correctly, he tells me that it is. If it is being charged to the firm, then what are we to make of the statement issued yesterday about its profitability? Does the statement mean that the profitability of the firm is such that it is covering the interest charges on this debt as well as other expenses of running the company, or, in fact, is that debt being supported from some other source? Would the minister clarify that for me?

Hon. David Walker: He doesn't know.

Senator Austin: What we are saying is that if we did not have to carry the interest costs we believe the operations of Canadair would be placed on a profitable basis.

Senator Roblin: Some of my colleagues seem to know the answer already. I would like to be sure what this statement of profitability means. The statement of profitability issued on October 18, which I have in my hand, means that profitability is being calculated or referred to without reference to the interest owing on that debt, and that if we are talking about the profitability of this firm, it is really after it has received a gift of free capital of $1.4 billion. I take it that is what the statement is based on. Really, to say it is profitable, without any reference to return on capital invested, either dividends or debt, strikes me as not giving the full story.

I want the minister to confirm for me, if he will, whether the statments about profits, in this document I have here, comprehend the interest on the debt, or whether they do not.

Senator Austin: I have said repeatedly, from the beginning of this Canadair story, that we would not recover, from any operations of Canadair, the capital of approximately $1.4 billion sunk in the development of the Challenger.

This statement is very clear. It talks about "incrementally profitable," and what is meant is that Canadair can be placed on a basis of profitable operation provided it does not have to carry the $1.4 billion in debt.

I have said repeatedly, in this chamber and elsewhere, that that debt is not recoverable, and it may serve Senator Roblin's interests and, perhaps, the interests of the Leader of the Opposition in the other place to misunderstand what we are about in endeavouring to save the Canadair operation, but, frankly, the Acting Leader of the Opposition's line of questioning is a mystery to me.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Roblin would let me intervene for a moment.

Senator Roblin: I should like to reply to a statement which I regard as—

Senator Walker: Insolent.

Senator Roblin: No, not insolent; I would not say that. I would not accuse anyone on the other side of being insolent. The minister is obviously a little nettled. I have not said anything this afternoon that I think entitles him to be nettled; I merely asked for clarification.

After many exchanges here, he has clarified the matter and he makes it quite clear that the $1.4 billion is to one side, and the interest required to support that will not come from Canadair; it will come from the Consolidated Revenue Fund—in other words, from the taxpayers of Canada. That is clear, and that is what we have to know.

It seems to me, if one is talking about the operation of a company, it should at least be clear that it is profitable if one takes no account of the cost of capital that is already sunk into its business. I think the statement would have been more enlightening to the people of Canada had it been clear on that point.

The minister has been perfectly clear this afternoon; I now understand him. I only hope that this $410 million, which will be required to the end of 1984, will be worked into the cost structure for that period. We will certainly find that the sale of 18 of these units per year will not cover the cost of that investment of capital.

Although I will reserve my judgment until the minister gives me what he thinks are the facts, I suspect that the overall cost to the public in this matter will be close to $2 billion. When we talk about the profitability of this corporation, we should always remember that it got its capital for nothing.

Senator Austin: We will come back to this exchange between Senator Roblin and me. I simply want to say that I have always made it clear that any proposal that we make will not recover the $1.4 billion in debt. I wish also to say to the honourable senator that I have not been nettled in any way by his remarks. I always enjoy his questions.

Senator Roblin: I always enjoy the answers, because they provide me with plenty of ammunition.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if there is to be debate on the consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, that will have to stand. However, it may be felt that we have had sufficient debate on the subject and that we are ready to complete our consideration of it. If that is so, we could do that, and then immediately adjourn to await the arrival of the Deputy Governor General.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I wish to speak on it.

Senator Frith: Then I suggest that all remaining orders stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

October 19, 1983

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 19th day of October, 1983, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a certain bill.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the Export Development Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am wondering how long Senator Godfrey proposes to be in debating Senator Molson's motion on the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. Since we still have a few minutes left, I wonder if His Honour would consent not to pay too close attention to the clock. May I have the consent of the Senate to have Senator Molson deal with the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Frith: Then, there being no consent, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 20, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE BUDGETS TABLED

Hon. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled reports approving budgets and/or supplementary budgets of the following committees:

Special Committee of the Senate on Canadian Security Intelligence Service

Standing Senate Committee on National Finance

(For text of reports see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

[Translation]

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, October 25, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR CANADA

REFUSAL TO PUBLISH AUDIT REPORT—OPERATIONAL SAFETY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to follow up on a question asked yesterday by Senator Nurgitz about Air Canada. The Leader of the Government will recall that the question at issue was the report made by outside experts about Air Canada's safety record, which report apparently gave it a clean bill of health—and that is most gratifying. The request was that the report be made public. The minister said that he did not think that was likely, but that he would look into it.

On the same day as my colleague asked the question, a report was carried in the press in which a representative of Air Canada made a statement about the flight to Gimli. It was to the effect that the flight should never have taken off from Montreal because the aircraft was not airworthy at that time. It was also mentioned that in investigating this matter there was a standing dispute between the men in charge of flying the aircraft and those in charge of maintenance on the ground as to who was responsible for that condition whereby the aircraft was not airworthy. That statement cuts right through the report which states that the Air Canada operation is indeed a safe one. To me, at least, it suggests that there is a problem. I would not like this matter to be left hanging like this, because many people fly with this airline, and if we have been comforted by the clearance report on its safety procedures, and we then read this subsequent statement from airline representatives to the effect that the Gimli aircraft was, in fact, not airworthy and that there was a dispute, which apparently remained unresolved, as to who was responsible for it, that leaves us with a most unsatisfactory situation.

I realize that the Leader of the Government does not hold the portfolio of Minister of Transport and I can hardly expect him to deal with this question now. I suggest to him that, in the interests of reassuring the public with respect to the methods of operation of Air Canada, he take that apparent conflict under advisement in order to see whether we could get a clear statement from the Department of Transport or from Air Canada that would put the matter to rest.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, several interesting questions arise as a result of the comments that have been made and the question that has now been asked by Senator Roblin, together with the questions asked earlier by Senator Nurgitz and Senator Marshall, I believe it was, about the so-called Air Canada audit.

Air Canada is concerned about their reputation as a result of the three significant incidents that occurred recently. That is why they are having this internal audit respecting safety procedures including anything else that may be relevant to restoring the confidence of the public in Air Canada's safety record. I hope that that will be the result of the internal audit of this matter.

The next question that comes up, however, is whether or not the minister and the company should release internal working papers, which is the proper description of what is being asked for. There is no question in my mind that there will be a report made public after they have completed the investigation, and there are probably additional working papers to the one that has been identified. Therefore, as I tried to explain yesterday, the Minister of Transport has acknowledged that he has received a copy of this internal audit, and I conveyed that information to Senator Nurgitz.

As the minister stated in the reply I was authorized by him to make in this chamber, he believes that it was an internal working document for a number of reasons I will not repeat now. Certainly, that, in addition to other internal working papers, and perhaps a number of other significant matters that are involved in this safety audit, will lead to a report that will be made by Air Canada to the general public but, more particularly, to the Minister of Transport in order that he will be able to advise the general public on the consequences of this audit. I think we should leave it at that until they have completed the report. Quite frankly, that is what I said yesterday, and that is what the minister indicated was appropriate for me to say in reply to that question.

Senator Roblin also raised the point that some unnamed person—and I do not question that it was reported in the press—apparently an employee or official of Air Canada, has said something about a number of unsatisfactory procedures, whatever they may be, having to do with the unfortunate emergency landing at Gimli and whatever else. I do not think that I or the Minister of Transport can be held responsible for that matter. I do not believe that the Minister of Transport or Air Canada has authorized someone to express an opinion with respect to this matter while the review is under way. I hope that Senator Roblin will not give a great deal of weight to that statement, when he is already aware of the fact that Air Canada is doing its very best to conduct a thorough and complete safety audit of all these concerns, in a proper manner, to maintain the safety record of Air Canada and to reassure Canadians in general. The audit may take two or three days, or two or three weeks, to complete. If they find certain things that are below the very high standards of Air Canada, I am absolutely certain that they will indicate those problems and suggest remedies.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I agree with a good deal of what the minister has said and I do not think that there is any disposition on our part to create undue alarm or to say things about Air Canada which would in any way detract from their splendid record. That is really not the point of this exercise. However, Air Canada placed the matter in the public domain, not I. The person from Air Canada who did so is named in the newspaper report, and my friend can look it up. Furthermore, the person is described as the public relations spokesman for Air Canada, and it is this spokesman, as far as one can tell, who has officially responded to press inquiries about the Gimli situation. So, immediately one has to ask oneself, "Did the clearance that we are talking about, that was given just a few days ago, include the Gimli situation or did it not?"

It is people at Air Canada who brought this matter into the public domain. I did not, nor did the government, but the government is responsible. I simply say to the minister that I hope he can persuade someone in authority, either in Air Canada or the Department of Transport, to deal with this specific point which has been placed in the public domain by the airline itself, so that those who fly Air Canada—and that includes a great many people in this country—can be assured that the bare facts that were disclosed in the newspaper statement do not reflect any danger to the travelling public.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I accept Senator Roblin's comments and question, which I will refer to the Minister of Transport. I now understand somewhat better than I did a few minutes ago the reason for this matter being pressed, and I can assure all three honourable senators who have asked questions, as well as anyone else who is interested, that we are concerned about the matter of confidence in the airline. Furthermore, if there are contradictory statements coming from people who may be authorized, such as the statement identified by Senator Roblin, I think the matter should be cleared up.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

CANADAIR LIMITED—REVIEW OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development with regard to the Canadair issue and the report of employees of the crown corporation leasing their private aircraft to the company. Will the minister confirm whether Mr. James B. Taylor, who was recently appointed chairman of the board of Canadair Inc., the marketing wing of the corporation, is one of the three persons who have been found to have leased jet aircraft back to the company?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): I will take the honourable senator's question as notice.

Senator Nurgitz: Perhaps the minister could tell us whether Canadair is contemplating some plan to review this question of unjust enrichment—for lack of a better term. Is a plan being contemplated to recover those moneys which employees have wrongly earned interest on or made a profit from as a result of these transactions?

Senator Austin: I shall endeavour to obtain that information with respect to adjustments which have been announced by the president of Canadair, and report again next week.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GRENADA—SLAYING OF PRIME MINISTER AND MEMBERS OF CABINET

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. It is in reference to the truly shocking incident which took place in Grenada not long ago. Is the minister in a position to give the Senate any information with respect to that tragic situation?

I recall that our high commissioner in Bridgetown is responsible for Grenada, and I do not know whether or not the new high commissioner has taken over his duties. Has the government given any indication of its view in this regard? Has there been time to consider recognition of the new regime, if we may call it that? In general, can the minister bring us up to date with respect to the terrible situation in a sister Commonwealth state and part of the world in which Canada is rightly considered a very important country?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is fair to say that I anticipated a question being asked this afternoon with respect to the unfortunate situation in Grenada. Perhaps because of the insufficiency of time and because there is not a completely clear picture of what is transpiring in that country, the government is not yet in a position to move forward in order to recognize whatever form of government is in place there now.

Senator Macquarrie, all I can say is that we must wait a few more hours, perhaps even days, until the situation is clarified.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ALLOCATION OF PRODUCER CARS FOR OFF-BOARD SALES

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. I have some matters I would like the minister to look into, and perhaps he can provide an answer next week. My question is with regard to the allocation of producer cars.

As a result of the sharp increase in the price of feed grain, some farmers have contacted me to say that they have the opportunity to sell feed grain at a very advantageous price outside the system. As the minister knows these farmers are entitled to cars in order to carry this out. However, it is one thing to be entitled to cars and another thing to obtain them. They have suggested that there may be undue pressure brought to bear from all elevator companies in order to place a block in the road to prevent their obtaining the cars. Can the minister look into the situation to ascertain if there is any justification for their claim, or if the requirements for producer cars are being looked after the way it was intended they should be under the legislation?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I would be very happy to look into the situation. The whole question with respect to the number of producer cars and the proportion of them in the system has been something which has received a great deal of study in recent months and years. As far as the opportunity to market barley outside of the Wheat Board system is concerned, the quotas are larger. That has been the practice for off-board barley as opposed to Wheat Board barley.

In that way, the private sector is given a greater opportunity for access to barley than is enjoyed by the Canadian Wheat Board. That has been the pattern for a long time, and it continues to be the pattern today.

● (1420)

Recently, I announced an increase in the initial price of barley available to producers who sell to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Wheat Board's export price exceeds by a very considerable amount the prices obtained off-board. Therefore, it is beyond question that it is in the financial interests of the producers of western Canada to market their barley through the Wheat Board system. However, they do have the right under the current arrangement to have access to the off-board market. As I say, the whole question of the proportion of producer cars in the system is something that has received a lot of attention. I shall be very happy to look into the prevailing situation and report on it and any other particulars that might be of interest to Senator Steuart.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION

BILL S-31—STATUS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for either the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the deputy leader. My question arises from statements attributed to a Liberal member of the other place, Mr. Loiselle, in today's Le Devoir concerning the fate of Bill S-31. Mr. Loiselle purports to be announcing in Quebec what the intentions of the government are with regard to possible amendments to Bill S-31.

First, may I ask the Leader of the Government or the deputy leader whether Mr. Loiselle was speaking for the government in making those statements?

And, secondly, I ask the Leader of the Government or the deputy leader whether the Senate could be informed of the intentions of the government in regard to this bill.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall not comment on the statements made by a member of the House of Commons with respect to this matter, since I am at this time unaware of what he is reported to have said. I shall look into the matter and find out whether Mr. Loiselle was enunciating the government's position on this bill.

Insofar as Bill S-31 is concerned, however, I believe that the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is studying the government's position with respect to whatever amendments came forward in the discussions that took place during the pre-study sessions on the bill in the Senate, and I understand that she will soon be in a position to appear before that Senate committee.

Senator Murray: I do not mean to be offensive, but one could almost learn more from reading Le Devoir than from listening to the minister. His colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Madame Erola, is quoted in that same article as having also said that the government was disposed to accept some of the amendments that were suggested by honourable senators in committee.

Senator Olson: That is right.

Senator Murray: My question to the leader is whether the minister's appearance before the committee and the proposed legislative action on the bill will take place before prorogation of the current session.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I thought that was what I said. If I did not, I certainly express the hope that that will happen. I suggest it was qualified very realistically by my saying I am not sure on which date the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is prepared to come back to the Senate.

I have known for some time, as have other honourable senators and the present minister and the former minister, that a number of good and useful suggestions were made in the Senate committee. We have to wait until she is prepared to come before us, as Senator Murray knows, because, as he would want, we have to be exact and precise about the amendments that will be made. I am sure he would rather have that than have further speculation. However, he does not need to be patient for very long; in just a few more days I think the minister will be prepared to tell the Senate committee completely and precisely what the amendments are that she is prepared to accept on behalf of the government.

Senator Murray: Is it the intention of the government to have this matter disposed of by both houses before prorogation?

Senator Olson: I never predict what the other house will do, but once the government has put forward a piece of legislation that satisfies the members of this house and the other house, we like to have it passed into law as soon as possible.

Whatever answer I give must be somewhat less than complete because I have no way of influencing the speed of the passage of legislation through the other place, much as I would like to. By the way, Senator Murray knows where the blocks are.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

1984 PREMIUM

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Social Development a question relating to the unemployment insurance premium, and I use the word "premium" rather loosely, because everybody knows it has ceased being a premium and is now a wage tax. Can the minister tell the Senate what premium rate has been set by the Unemployment Insurance Commission for the coming year?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): I will take the question as notice.

Senator Roblin: I should like to go a little further and ask the minister when he thinks he will make his reply. If he is going to give it on Tuesday, I will refrain from making further comment on this matter until that time, but if it is going to be much beyond that, I might make my comment now.

Senator Austin: I cannot see any reason for not replying on Tuesday.

SPORT

OLYMPIC STADIUM, MONTREAL—COMPLETION OF ROOF

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Asselin on April 20, 1983, concerning the completion of the Olympic Stadium roof in Montreal.

I can assure Senator Asselin that the federal government has no plans whatsoever to pay for, or to contribute to, the completion of the roof of the Olympic Stadium in Montreal.

ENERGY

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Donahoe on September 20, 1983, relating to when the construction of the Trans Quebec and Maritimes Gas Pipeline to the Maritimes is to begin.

Because of its length, I ask that the answer be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

> Trans Québec and Maritimes (TQM) presently holds a National Energy Board (NEB) certificate of Public Convenience and Necessity (GC68) to construct a gas pipeline to carry Alberta gas from Québec City to the Atlantic Coast. However, the company and its parent sponsors—TransCanada PipeLines (TCPL) and NOVA, an Alberta corporation—have stopped planning and design work on the pipeline inasmuch as it now may be more feasible to serve the Maritimes with natural gas from the Venture gas field near Sable Island, off the coast of Nova Scotia.
> Mobil Oil Company and other exploration companies have intensified their exploration and gas field development efforts in the last year with the objective of bringing Sable natural gas to market as early as 1987.
> Pipeline sponsors including TCPL and possibly NOVA have shown an interest in transporting Venture gas to the domestic and export markets. It could be expected that a pipeline facilities application will be submitted to the NEB in 1984. Construction of the appropriate pipeline could start in 1985, two years before gas deliveries would begin.

TAR SANDS AND HEAVY OIL UPGRADING—CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Roblin during a discussion of the Esso Resources Cold Lake project. Senator Roblin asked whether the heavy oil from that project was being shipped to the United States under exchange arrangements. That discussion can be found on pages 5969 and 5970 of Debates of the Senate of September 22, 1983.

The answer is fairly long, and, therefore, if Senator Roblin is satisfied that it be taken as read, I will be happy to follow that procedure.

• (1430)

Senator Roblin: I am happy to have it taken as read.

(The answer follows:)

While a small volume of Canadian oil is being exported to the U.S. under exchange arrangements, currently it is all light crude oil. No heavy crude is involved. There are two forms of exchanges: U.S.-based crude is returned to Ontario via the Interprovincial pipeline system as part of a mid-continent exchange, and foreign crude is delivered to Quebec or Atlantic refineries via tanker, as part of an east coast exchange. In both cases, light crude oil is exported from western Canada to either the U.S. mid-continent or the Pacific coast to complete the exchanges.

All heavy crude oil surplus to domestic refinery requirements, currently about 70 per cent of Canadian output, is being exported to the U.S. At present most of Esso's Cold Lake heavy crude production is used at its Edmonton refinery to manufacture asphalt while a smaller portion is exported to Koch Oil in Minnesota.

While current plans for bitumen projects such as Cold Lake or Wolf Lake (BP/Petro-Canada) involve the export of the production, there is nothing preventing these exports being converted to exchanges involving light crude imports in the event this proves advantageous in commercial and supply terms to the participants. Further, it could be noted that these export projects provide interim investment and foreign exchange benefits, and help to develop the resource base which, when economic and market circumstances permit, will serve as a feedstock to heavy crude upgraders in Canada.

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES LIMITED—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I was rather disappointed that the minister did not have another reply for me, because I asked about the Maislin Trucking Company situation a few weeks ago. My question had to do with what the government loss would be as a result of the expected bankruptcy. According to the news of today, that company is now bankrupt. I am wondering when the minister will give me an answer.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not giving an answer because of the way the question was put. I have to explain that; because Senator Roblin has asked what the loss is, that is, what the Government of Canada will be expected to pay, I cannot answer because that is not known at the moment.

The Government of Canada has given some guarantees or undertakings. I believe the maximum of that amount is $34 million, but, until the accounting and the rest of the procedures required under the bankruptcy are completed, we will not know what the amount is.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate that, but the minister could surely give us a figure which indicates the order of magnitude; after all, a few months ago the Receiver in Bankruptcy issued a figure as to the total assets and liabilities of the company, and they do not match; there is a considerable discrepancy. The receiver can give my friend a very good idea of how close they are to the final figure. I ask my honourable friend to consult the receiver and get his estimate. I would be satisfied with that.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin is asking me or the minister responsible to do something to which he would take very severe objection, and that is to speculate on these kinds of things.

I have given him the maximum figure for which underwriting was provided, but there were obviously some terms and conditions attached to the guarantees, and until the necessary procedures have been followed and those terms and conditions have been applied, it would be, in my view at least, irresponsible to speculate whether it is 10 per cent or 90 per cent.

I think Senator Roblin would severely criticize me, or the minister directly responsible, if we started to speculate while the receiver was doing an audit and providing for the rest of the terms and conditions applicable not only to the guarantees but also to a bankruptcy of this nature.

Senator Roblin: I do not think I would be quite as severe on my friend as he anticipates. I would probably find it in my heart not to be quite so harsh. However, I would point out to my friend that the terms of the bankruptcy are now settled. The receiver's report was in the paper this morning.

If my friend does not want to report on it right now, I cannot make him do so. All I can say is that one of these days he is going to have to face up to it.

Senator Olson: Not one of these days; we are doing it right now.

Senator Roblin: You won't tell us.

CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW

ARTICLE ENTITLED: "THIRTY YEARS A SENATOR" BY THE LATE HON. JOHN J. CONNOLLY

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I draw your attention to an excellent article in the current issue of the Canadian Parliamentary Review. I believe it is one which, if you have not already read it, you will enjoy reading. The article which appears at page 20 is by our esteemed late colleague, Senator John J. Connolly, and is entitled: "Thirty Years a Senator."

Please read it, if you have not already done so. It will bring him to life for you. It is a most interesting and delightful article.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, which was presented on Tuesday, October 18, 1983.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. Hartland de M. Molson, moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, for the record I believe that Senator Molson has let it be understood—at least, he has certainly said so to me—that he would be glad to yield to Senator Godfrey respecting this order. After Senator Godfrey has spoken, the debate can be adjourned in Senator Molson's name.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I think honourable senators would be delighted to hear from Senator Godfrey.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I am speaking today on the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. On October 4 of this year, when Senator Molson spoke to the fourth report of the committee, he made the statement that all of these changes are lengthy but not terribly significant. I agree entirely with that statement. It is because I do not consider this report to be terribly significant that I want to speak today. I should like to refer particularly to the Report on Certain Aspects of the Canadian Constitution, which is a report that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs brought out in November 1980. Senator Stanbury was the chairman of a subcommittee that studied the subject. The report is divided into two parts, the second of which concerns reform of the Senate.

That report contains several recommendations which are relevant to what I am saying today, and one of them is that there should be a standing Senate committee on regional affairs. Another of the recommendations is that there should be a standing Senate committee on human rights. Honourable senators have already heard me speak at length on this subject, so I shall not repeat what I have said.

On April 29, 1982, I gave notice of a motion concerning this idea of establishing a committee on human rights, and it was to the effect that the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be empowered to look at bills with a view to alerting committees to possible infringements of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I moved the motion on February 9, 1983, and spoke to it again the next day. After that speech I was told that my motion would have a much better chance of being adopted if the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs rather than the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments were to be given this additional power. I spoke to Senator Neiman about this matter. I must say that she was very enthusiastic about the idea. Senator Neiman gave notice of a motion on May 24, 1983, which was really in substitution of my motion. At that time I tried to withdraw my motion. Senator Flynn had some technical objection to my doing so, which is the reason for its remaining on the order paper at the present time.

When I discovered that the Standing Senate Committee on Rules and Orders was considering the question of committees, I spoke to Senator Molson. He had had conversations with Senator Olson as to what should be happening. I asked him whether he was considering the Report on Certain Aspects of the Canadian Constitution, which is three years old but nothing has resulted from it. I mentioned, in particular, this question of a standing Senate committee on human rights. Senator Molson replied that the matter had never been raised, which rather surprised me. I asked him if he would bring it up at a meeting of the committee. It so happened that I was able to attend the meeting, so I raised the question myself.

At the committee meeting there was general conversation which really came down to the suggestion that there should be added to the powers of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee another subparagraph, "Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms." Some members pointed out that that is already included in the word "constitutional." If that is so, I ask: Why can it not be put in specifically? As I have said, there was discussion in the committee, the end result of which was that Senator Molson sort of said, "Don't muddy the waters."

● (1440)

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I draw the attention of the honourable senator to the fact that there are rules that apply to the discussion that is now taking place. One is that those meetings are held in camera. There is also a prohibition in our rules against discussions in this chamber of committee proceedings. Therefore, I would ask the honourable senator to observe those rules.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I humbly apologize. I had completely overlooked that. I agree that I should not have repeated what was said in committee. I tender my apologies.

The end result is that we have this report. There is no mention of human rights, or of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee being specifically charged with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In that connection I should like to describe what has been done in Australia, because the same subject came up in the Australian Senate. It does not matter whether the Senate is elected or appointed. So far as this subject is concerned, there is no reason why we cannot do the same as has been done in Australia.

The Second Commonwealth Conference on Delegated Legislation was held in Ottawa in April of this year, at which a paper was presented by Senator Michael Tate of the Australian Senate. In that country they have what is called a Scrutiny Committee, which more or less does what we suggested in our report on human rights. Before that Scrutiny Committee was finally appointed, they first had a trial period during which the Australian Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee operated with those powers.

In his paper presented to the conference, Senator Tate made reference to Senator Missen, who was really the spark plug of the whole idea in Australia. Before the Scrutiny Committee was appointed, Senator Missen produced a document listing provisions and bills in that year which should have been examined by such a committee. The report on the paper presented to the conference states:

> The document contained 79 examples of clauses in bills to which the Senate should have been alerted . . . The issue was not that these provisions should not have been passed, but rather that the Senate should have been made aware of the presence of the provisions, and a deliberate decision made about them. (In defence of his motion, Senator Missen circulated generally a "Memorandum to Government Senators" which summarized most of the then-current issues surrounding the proposal . . .). The central idea, as Senator Michael Tate put it, was that as a result of regular committee monitoring, the Senate would be legislating "with open eyes".

That is the proposal I have made, that the Senate should be alerted and should legislate "with open eyes".

> There would be proper debate as to the conflicting considerations, and this would help minimize any inadvertent infringements of civil liberties.

The Australian government was opposed to the formation of that committee in the Senate. However, ten government senators crossed the floor and voted for the proposal. After the trial period:

> The Minister argued that the Committee had contributed to improving the legislative process without inconveniencing the Government's legislative program. He stated that many of the Committee's "recommendations" had been readily accepted by the Government. Of course, the Scrutiny of Bills Committee operates by drawing attention to matters or possible problems worthy of closer consideration, and never actually recommends solutions or proposes draft amendments. The Minister was referring to instances of the Government acknowledging, after considering the Committee's comments, that a problem did in fact exist in legislation, and proposing an amendment as a solution.
> Of no less importance was the Minister's statement that "there has been a hidden flow-through effect into the Departments":
> > The very existence of the Committee is causing officials to think more closely about provisions in legislation concerning personal liberties and the delegation of legislative power and parliamentary scrutiny.

The last paragraph of the report says:

> The Senate Standing Committee for the Scrutiny of Bills is an important buttress strengthening the legislative process and protecting the civil liberties of Australians. The Committee is the most recent addition to the Senate's committee system, and as such it contributes to the success of the Senate as a constructive house of review.

I mentioned to Senator Molson that I would not cause any difficulty in having the report adopted. I merely wanted to draw these facts to the attention of the Senate. The reason I have been unable to get the concurrence of my fellow senators on this matter is because, obviously, I am much less effective than was Senator Missen in the Australian Senate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, so far those who have spoken are not opposed to it but have simply wished to use the occasion to express their views on relevant aspects of this subject. If no one else wishes to speak to this order, I propose to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Apparently, Senator Haidasz intends to adjourn the debate. Before he does so, I should like briefly to raise a point. I wish, first, to thank Senator Molson for his understanding in agreeing to hold the matter over for a few days in order that we might read the proceedings of the committee.

I should like to be reassured of the interpretation of recommendation 5, dealing with rule 68, which appears at page 6061 of Debates of the Senate. I refer to the Leader of the Government, or his deputy, and the Leader of the Opposition, or his deputy, being members ex officio. The recommendation is that:

> —the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or, in his absence, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition,—

Which is my case. Presumably, the words "in his absence" mean absence from that committee and not absence from the Senate. If that is so, then I am satisfied.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that is the intention behind that wording. It will be recalled that at one stage there was a suggestion to use the word "and"; that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Deputy Leader of the Government, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition should all be ex officio members. The wording is meant to make clear that it is "or" and only in the case of absence from the committee.

On motion of Senator Haidasz, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 11, 1983, the debate on the consideration of the second report of the Subcommittee on National Defence of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada's Maritime Defence," tabled in the Senate on June 15, 1983.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, this report, in itself and in what it has to say about the state of Maritime Command in Canada's defence forces, has been adequately dealt with by Senators Lafond and Marshall.

I do not find it necessary, therefore, to comment on the contents of the report, except to refer, as I shall do a little later, to two of its final conclusions.

● (1450)

In general, honourable senators know that the Subcommittee on National Defence has been meeting over a period of the last three years. We have filed a report on manpower in Canada's armed forces. We hope that it has had some useful influence in affecting government policy, albeit not as significantly as many of us on the committee would have wished. We have now completed our report on Canada's Maritime Defence, making recommendations which are, indeed, very expensive for Canada but which we obviously felt were necessary, under the circumstances. We are now in the process of commencing a study of air defence which will, no doubt, add other areas of necessary expenditure, capital and current, to Canada's defence budget.

I should like to pay tribute to those who assisted us in making this report. The witnesses were of uniformly high quality and, particularly, I must say that the serving personnel, officers of high rank and others, who came before us seemed to impress us all as being men of extreme dedication, of great competence and of a quality which Canada scarcely deserves, considering the shabby way we have treated our armed forces during the past two decades and, particularly, during the past decade.

The one expression of fear that I have about this report is that we may have gone too far in our recommendations. I remember, when I first came to this chamber 11 years ago, that the then Lamontagne Committee on a Science Policy for Canada had just completed its main body of reports and had recommended that we should increase our expenditures on research and development to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product. At that time our R&D expenditures in Canada were, if my memory serves me correctly, something under 1 per cent of the GNP. I think we watched the government with regret do absolutely nothing about that recommendation. When we made a supplementary report a little later, we lowered our sights and said that they should try to achieve an expenditure of 1.5 per cent of GNP by the mid-1980s. The government adopted that as a target, and has been moving towards it, again, I think, at a rate which will scarcely achieve the full 1.5 per cent in the time that we on the Lamontagne committee would have wished.

By the same token, in making the very large recommendations that we have made—capital expenditures over a 12-year period of $550 million constant 1983 dollars per year in order to bring Maritime Command's equipment up to scratch—have we recommended more than we can expect the government to adopt? My only comment on that is that we found the circumstances and the needs so urgent that we felt it would not have been honest for us to have made any other recommendation. Therefore, we have made substantial recommendations concerning defence expenditures in relation to Maritime Command in this report.

[Senator Hicks.]

It may well be that Canada was justified—it certainly was in the eyes of some—in allowing its armed forces to run down in the 1960s and, particularly, the 1970s. We had hopes that the détente with the Warsaw Pact countries would justify a decreased expenditure on defence, and so we let our own defence expenditures deteriorate substantially as did our great neighbour to the south, the United States of America. Unfortunately, and to our dismay and disappointment, our Russian friends took advantage of our marking-time period to accelerate the provision of weapons in all forms to their armed forces—nuclear, tactical and strategic. And I should like to refer particularly to the buildup of Soviet naval forces.

At the beginning of the 1970s—that is only 12 or, at the most, 14 years ago—the Soviet navy was probably the kind of navy that you would have said could perform a limited sea-denial role along her own coast. In less than 15 years, the Soviet buildup has been such that her navy can now maintain a sea-control role, or a near sea-control role, in every ocean on this planet. This is the situation which confronts us, and that is why we made the recommendations in detail which have been referred to, as I said, by the two preceding speakers, Senator Lafond and Senator Marshall.

I want to underline, once more, for honourable senators and the general public the two general conclusions that we reached.

At page 97 the report states:

> The sub-committee is fully conscious that the implications of the recommendations contained in this report involve increases in defence expenditures. Pains have been taken to spell out these costs. The report argues that, to rebuild Canada's maritime forces an additional $550 million a year in constant 1983 dollars must be added to the capital budget of the Department of National Defence over the next twelve years and earmarked for this purpose.

That is over and above the cost of the Canadian patrol frigate program which is going to add six new frigates to Maritime Command.

It goes on to state:

> The ongoing costs for personnel, operations and maintenance of implementing the recommendations would be approximately $80 million a year (in constant 1983 dollars). In the sub-committee's first study, Manpower In Canada's Armed Forces, the cost implications of the recommendations amounted to $350 million a year (approximately $400 million in 1983 dollars). Taken together, these recommendations of the two reports would see defence expenditures mount, in relation to Canada's GNP, from about 2 per cent to about 2.3 per cent.

We would still be the lowest of the NATO powers except for Luxembourg and Iceland.

The report continues:

> The sub-committee has not completed its studies of Canada's armed forces. As it looks at other commands, such as Mobile Command and Air Command,—

Which we are now engaged in studying.

> —the sub-committee fully expects to encounter situations demanding additional expenditures. The sub-committee finds it is being drawn inexorably towards recommendations which would ultimately see Canada's defence expenditures rising to somewhere between 2.5 per cent and 3 per cent of its GNP.

That is still only approximately half the expenditures of the leading spenders among the NATO allies. I suspect, although the figures are difficult to get, that this is only one-third or one-quarter of the expenditures of the Warsaw Pact countries.

The final recommendation in the conclusions states:

> For years, Canada has placed great emphasis upon reducing the risk of nuclear conflict. Canada has been singularly active in pursuing this goal in international forums and through informal consultations. In addition, this country has sought to distance itself more and more from employment of nuclear weapons. First, Canada refused to develop them itself. Later, Canadian forces were withdrawn from nuclear roles. Shortly, the last nuclear weapons held by Canada, those deployed with its NORAD forces, will be replaced by conventional systems. It would be utterly inconsistent with Canada's past attitudes and present policies not to continue to act in a manner which has the ultimate effect of reinforcing efforts within the Alliance to minimize the possibility of nuclear war. Canada should, in particular, do everything possible to enable the Alliance to espouse a strategy of "no early use" of nuclear weapons.

This next sentence is the frightening one:

> By running down its forces, as it did in the late 1960s and through the 1970s, Canada contributed not to raising but to lowering the nuclear threshold.

• (1500)

Unfortunately, nuclear weapons are cheaper than the most sophisticated modern conventional weapons. So, in recommending that Canada improve its conventional weapons systems we are not recommending that war be made cheaper but probably that it be made more expensive though, hopefully, less disastrous in the effect it may have on humanity in the short run and, particularly, in the long run.

Honourable senators, those are the recommendations that we have made. There is, of course, an alternative to accepting these recommendations. The alternative is for us to recognize our inability to defend ourselves, or even to play a significant role in our own defence, and hence to acknowledge our dependence on our NATO allies, particularly the United States of America, and to adopt an attitude of willingness to let others defend us, with the consequent abandonment of our claims to sovereignty. Thence, we would redefine our defence tasks to the minimal effort that we could now put forth in the technological and strategic situation of the 1980s and the 1990s, and this, with our present equipment in many areas, and particularly in MARCOM, would be a pathetic and perhaps almost meaningless contribution.

Those of us who have served in Canada's armed forces and who know something of the performance of Canadian military men in the twentieth century, particularly in the two great world wars, are proud of the fighting forces and the reputation of Canadians in time of war. The effort that we must make now, if we are to continue to play a role in NATO and to defend our own sovereignty, is not too great for us. The proportion of the expenditures which these recommendations propose to the Government of Canada would still leave us, as I said before, well down the scale in the level established and maintained by most of our NATO allies, and well below the level being maintained by the countries belonging to the Warsaw Pact.

I do not think I need say any more. The effort, as I said, is not too great for us, nor is it beyond our means and capabilities. Let us hope that the Government of Canada will carefully attend to the recommendations which have been made in this report, in addition to our previous report and in anticipation of a fuller picture which will emerge as we complete our studies of air command and mobile command.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 25, 1983, at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN SECURITY

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—AMENDMENT OF ORDER OF REFERENCE

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

> That the Order of Reference establishing the Special Committee of the Senate on the Canadian Security Intelligence Service be amended by deleting the words "27th October, 1983" and substituting therefor the words "3rd November, 1983".

He said: Honourable senators, the terms of reference of the Special Senate Committee studying the subject matter of Bill C-157, to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, provides that it is to report by Thursday, October 27, 1983.

My information is that the committee will likely complete its report today, or certainly by Thursday, but that it will take about a week to have it properly printed and translated. That is the reason permission is being asked to substitute "3rd November, 1983" for "27th October, 1983".

Our colleagues on that committee have effectively complied with the order of reference by completing their work by the deadline date, but another week will be required to have the report printed. That is why I am asking the Senate to extend the term for one week.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think this matter has been reviewed by the committee itself, and, actually, the request comes from the committee. Therefore, we have no reason to oppose this extension.

It does raise the question as to when this report will be debated because it will be presented, presumably, to this chamber and to the other place on November 3, and the probabilities are now that the session will be prorogued shortly thereafter. One really does not get the impression that it can be debated before prorogation.

Will it be the policy of the administration to re-present this report in the next session so that we will have an opportunity to examine the recommendations in this chamber?

Senator Frith: For the very reasons put forward by Senator Roblin, that will certainly be my recommendation.

Motion agreed to.

AVIATION SAFETY

BILL C-163—TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ADJOURN FROM PLACE TO PLACE IN CANADA

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, which was authorized to examine and consider the subject matter of Bill C-163, intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof," in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purpose of such examination.

• (1410)

He said: Honourable senators, the wording of this motion is used to justify the travelling of a committee to various places in Canada, but the request of the chairman of the committee was simply that the committee be permitted to attend a meeting that has already been arranged at the Ottawa International Airport. I felt that honourable senators would be glad to support this more traditional wording as opposed to that which would permit the committee to conduct its meeting at a specific place, if honourable senators could be assured that, at the present time, the committee has no intention to travel elsewhere. The committee has authority to meet only in the Parliament Buildings, so there is a technical requirement for this motion, which gives it authority to sit elsewhere.

If honourable senators do not wish to support this motion, I will ask for leave to amend it, but that is the reason it is worded more broadly than is necessary in this instance.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, 27th October, 1983, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators, although we now have before us three pieces of legislation, which might tempt us to change our agreed-upon schedule and sit tomorrow as well as on Thursday, I have decided not to ask for a change in our usual plan. If we were to do so, it would wreak havoc with the plans of the committees. Difficulties for the committees arise if, on very short notice, we inform the chairmen of a Wednesday sitting when, in the week prior, it has been indicated to them that they can use the Wednesday afternoon to meet, as, for example, in the case of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, which has a 2 o'clock meeting arranged for tomorrow afternoon.

For that reason, honourable senators, in spite of the fact that there is an increase in our legislative business, I feel that it would not be fair to the committee chairmen to schedule a sitting of the house tomorrow afternoon. With respect to the three pieces of legislation that are before us, we can deal today with some of the debate on second reading. Perhaps, on Thursday, we can complete second reading of those bills. If some are not too controversial, we might even finish dealing with them on Thursday. For that reason I am not asking that the schedule for this week be changed.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GRENADA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the government whether we can now expect a statement regarding the situation in Grenada. I do so for two reasons; first, because it is a country that has had a long association with the Commonwealth of which we are a member, and secondly, because it is situated in the Caribbean area, which is a part of the world in which Canadian interests have been pronounced and intensive over some period of time. So I would request any information that the government can give us on developments in Grenada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some general information on the situation in Grenada and also more specific information dealing with particular aspects.

The Government of Canada is appalled by the killings in Grenada and deeply saddened by the loss of a Commonwealth colleague. Prime Minister Bishop's ideology was not ours, but he believed in dialogue and he was a friend. It is still unclear exactly what happened last week in St. Georges, but there is no doubt that it was a day of terrible tragedy for Grenada and the West Indies. We extend our heartfelt condolences to the family of Maurice Bishop and to the families of those other colleagues and supporters who were also killed.

I should add that in anticipation of possible violence our government did make an appeal to the existing authorities in Grenada on October 19 to avoid violence. The message was delivered by the First Secretary of the High Commission in Barbados, Mr. Joe Knockaert, who has been in Grenada throughout the crisis. The message was received but, alas, in vain. We are awaiting further clarification of what took place, but it appears that units of the People's Revolutionary Army opened fire on a crowd demonstrating in favour of Prime Minister Bishop. That fire seems to have been returned by some soldiers loyal to the Prime Minister. A "Revolutionary Military Council" has been formed and has announced that it has taken control in Grenada.

Many of the 85 Canadians in Grenada who have registered with our High Commission in Barbados are part-time residents who are not on the island at present. In his report of October 23, 1983, our officer in Grenada said that, of all the Canadians he had been able to contact, 24 wished to leave while others—estimated to be about 15—wished to remain.

Early yesterday the Barbadian authorities issued a declaration prohibiting Grenada-bound aircraft from leaving Barbados. They have since granted an exemption for the aircraft which we had chartered to bring out all Canadians who wished to leave Grenada and which had been scheduled to land in Grenada yesterday morning. New flight clearances for the aircraft to land in Grenada today are now being sought. In his latest report, following the lifting of the curfew, our officer reported that people in St. Georges are moving about freely and the situation is relatively calm. The aircraft we have chartered is standing by ready to go to Grenada when new arrangements for it to land there have been completed.

On the question of possible recognition of the new regime in Grenada, our High Commissions in Bridgetown, Kingston, Port of Spain and Georgetown have been in touch with their host governments, in most cases at the head-of-government level, and we are continuing to study the attitudes of those governments to the evolving situation in Grenada, with specific reference, in this case, to the question of recognition. The fact remains, however, that the situation in Grenada is still not clear, and I am unable at this point to add anything further to what has already been stated.

Honourable senators, I have asked for and received some material dealing with more particular aspects, but a good deal of the information is included in the general statement I have just read.

Senator Roblin: Am I not correct in stating to my honourable friend that there has been some development in Grenada since the events he has just referred to? There have been news reports of an intervention in Grenada by the nations of the Caribbean and the United States. Can my honourable friend say whether that information is correct and, if so, can he tell us what form that intervention is taking.

• (1420)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the information I have with regard to the possible landing of United States troops is as follows: The United States government has directed a small flotilla of naval vessels, including the aircraft carrier USS Independence, to waters off Grenada to offer assistance, if need be, in evacuating U.S. citizens. There is speculation, however, that the Americans, possibly in league with members of the Caribbean Regional Defence Pact, might be planning to launch an invasion of Grenada. Questions may well arise concerning Canadian reaction to this speculation.

So far as the government is aware, U.S. vessels have been positioned in Grenadian waters, but beyond sight of the island, to assist in a possible evacuation of U.S. citizens wishing to leave Grenada, should American authorities decide on such a course of action.

Honourable senators, I have no more official information. I heard on the radio this morning that British and American forces had landed and taken possession of two airports on the island; I have heard about the possible landing of Barbadian or other Caribbean troops on parts of the island, as have honourable senators. I have received nothing to indicate whether those reports are true.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I raised this issue last week and I commend the Deputy Leader of the Government for coming to the chamber with statements. I shall not criticize him, because the Leader of the Government is not present; however, I think it is pretty well known that the President of the United States announced on the media that an invasion composed primarily of American personnel with participation of some countries in the Caribbean had taken place . I do not think the British are involved. Because this invasion has taken place, I would like to know whether the Canadian government was informed of this important action by our ally, the United States, and whether or not the Canadian government indicated that this was a good thing to do under the circumstances. If so, how does that relate to what it seemed to me the Minister of State for External Relations indicated last week and yesterday, that we are prepared to extend normal, de facto recognition to this atrocious regime which killed Prime Minister Bishop and many of his people.

I am not interested in embarrassing the Deputy Leader of the Government. Indeed, I have the highest regard for him. However, can he bring the Senate up to date on just what is happening in connection with the invasion that has clearly taken place and on how all that relates to what I believe the Minister of State for External Relations said not only yesterday but before? Where do we stand on this matter? We merely want to know the facts; we do not want to criticize or embarrass.

Senator Frith: I thank Senator Macquarrie for his question. Perhaps I was not clear, but I was trying to say that I do not have anything official from the government or from the Department of External Affairs confirming the invasion. I am not suggesting that there is any doubt as to whether the invasion took place; merely that I am unable to add anything from official sources at present. I just received a note that there is further material on its way and when I receive it I shall pass it on to the Senate.

As to the question of recognition, perhaps I may be permitted to add that the Prime Minister of Dominica, an adjacent island in the cluster of islands around Grenada, went to the University of Toronto Law School with me and has been a friend of mine ever since—some 35 years or more. I phoned her just after I heard about this matter. She was on her way to the meeting of government leaders in Trinidad. She was quite concerned about the question of recognition, and, therefore, I paid particularly close attention to what the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin said. I thought he said that the government normally waits a decent interval before giving recognition, and, in a subsequent statement when asked to explain, that before giving recognition to the new government in Grenada the government will want to give more consideration to the views of our colleagues, particularly our Commonwealth colleagues in the Caribbean. Beyond that, I will certainly take the question as notice in order to obtain a clear picture with respect to how we stand in regard to recognition. I am as interested in that question as Senator Macquarrie and I will try to clarify it. I will supply additional and more up-to-date information as I receive it today.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am sure my acting leader, who is an outstanding parliamentarian and a man of great judgment and understanding, will be glad to wait until there is further word through the voice of the house leader on the other side. I must confess to a certain inadequacy, perhaps a certain antiquity, in that I do not know well the charming Prime Minister of Dominica. However, I did have the honour and pleasure of knowing the late Prime Minister of Grenada. I am somewhat proud, and I hope not vain, with respect to the fact that there was nothing I said about him when he was alive that I cannot repeat now in the euphoria of the tributes which are paid to him at the time of his untimely death.

I would like the Leader of the Government to know that many of us are concerned about these comments dealing with recognition. While the use of Mr. Pepin's phraseology—the objective approach—conveys favourably to many of us, there are some of us who think, and with deep anxiety, that it was perhaps not a good thing to talk about business as usual while the blood was still dripping from the hands of the murderers of Maurice Bishop.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have a little more information now. The first piece of information deals with the request from the revolutionary military council for Canadian assistance in evacuating foreigners. I believe there was some information in the press with respect to that point. The government has received no direct request for such assistance. Of course, if that type of assistance were given it could be construed—

Hon. Martial Asselin: When was the request made?

Senator Frith: On October 24.

I know Senator Macquarrie will realize that such assistance, if granted, could be considered at least de facto recognition. However, no such request was received.

With respect to the question of Canadian awareness that the United States plans to intervene in Grenada, we were aware that many countries, including the U.S.A., were planning to attempt evacuation of their citizens. This information is from the Department of External Affairs. We were also aware that some eastern Caribbean states wished to take some form of action to contain the deteriorating situation and to rescue their own citizens. We were not apprised, however, of the timing of the evacuation attempt by the U.S.A. and other states, nor of the nature of that action. We were not invited to participate.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I listened carefully to what the honourable senator said. Were we apprised of the fact that there was to be an evacuation effort? If we were so apprised, were we made aware of the timing and nature of such an effort? In other words, did we know about it? The matter of consultation is of enormous importance. This is not a minor event in the course of history. I know such situations have occurred before, but I must say again that this is not a minor occurrence, especially in these terribly dangerous times which fluctuate with appalling anguish and potential for worldwide destruction.

• (1430)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the information I have on that question with respect to the Caribbean states is that we were aware that certain Caribbean states wished to take some form of action to contain the deteriorating situation and to rescue their own citizens. However, we were not specifically apprised of the timing of the evacuation attempt by the United States or other states, nor of the nature of that action, and were not invited to participate.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Can the deputy leader tell us if it is the position of the government that what has taken place today on the part of the United States is, in fact, an evacuation attempt rather than an invasion or an occupation of that island?

Senator Frith: I have no information on the government's judgment of the events; I do not know whether it considers them an evacuation attempt or something else. I expect that, in order to make that judgment, the government will need more facts; when we have them, I shall share them with the Senate. When those facts are sufficient to become a basis for a judgment by the government, I shall take the question as notice on that subject also.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND—ELIGIBILITY OF FISHERMEN FOR BENEFITS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of State for Social Development with respect to fishermen's unemployment insurance. Some concern has been expressed by the Government of Newfoundland with respect to the qualification of fishermen for unemployment insurance. At the moment, fishermen must be employed for ten weeks before they are eligible, six of which must be during the fishing season and the remainder at other types of employment. This has caused some concern and there has been an attempt made to have the regulations changed, which I understand the Minister of Employment and Immigration is supporting.

Has the Minister of State for Social Development anything further to report on that request by the Government of Newfoundland?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries on that subject and, if there is anything further to report, I shall do so at the next sitting, on Thursday.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Minister of State for Social Development having to do with the make-work programs that exist today in Canada. There is a further difficulty for fishermen in this area in that, in order to qualify for employment on one of those projects, an individual has to be unemployed for two months. The other difficulty is that self-employed people cannot qualify for those projects and, since fishermen are classified as self-employed, I am wondering if any consideration has been given to rectifying these inequities in the regulations so that more people, including fishermen, can qualify for make-work programs or for unemployment insurance. Perhaps the minister could inquire of his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, with respect to this matter.

Senator Austin: I shall look into the matter and endeavour to report to Senator Marshall on Thursday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC CONSTRUCTION OF F-18A AIRCRAFT—ALLOTMENT OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, before we proceed with answers to previous questions, I would like to know whether the Deputy Leader of the Government, perhaps at a subsequent sitting, could provide some clarification on the economic spin-offs of the F-18 contract. When this program was announced, we were told that the economic spin-offs for Quebec would be around 49 per cent. In addition, every three months the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services were making an assessment to see how economic spin-offs were being shared among the provinces.

However, for sometime now, why I do not know, the Ministers concerned have decided to drop their quarterly assessment. In any case, last week we were given to understand that the Government could not keep its promise and that the best Quebecers would be able to do in terms of economic spin-offs from the F-18 contract would be 35 per cent instead of 49 per cent.

I would also like further clarification on why the Government raised the hopes of Quebec manufacturers who were expecting to get their share. Why, I repeat, did the Government deceive Quebecers about economic spin-offs that will not materialize?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no information on economic spin-offs or apportionment with respect to the F-18 program. My Cabinet colleagues may have such information. If not, I will take the question as notice.

[English]

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): I will be so bold as to endeavour to answer Senator Asselin's question. It is true that there is disappointment in Quebec and in the federal government with the degree of sharing in the F-18 contract which Quebec industries have been able to achieve. A major part of the reason has to do with competitive bidding and the ability of the Ontario industrial establishment to make itself more effective in cost competitive circumstances. However, Senator Asselin may have noticed, if he has been reading the media in Quebec, that Quebec was successful in acquiring three of the federal government's six frigate construction projects.

Senator Asselin: I am not talking about that; I am talking about the F-18 project. Please reply to that.

Senator Austin: Senator Asselin knows that three of those six frigate projects were assigned to the Quebec industry. Indeed, Senator Asselin may have also noticed that a large project has gone to the province of Quebec in the form of the manufacture of Bell helicopters. That project will establish a new industry in the province of Quebec. That project will be financed substantially by the federal government.

So, in the round, the Quebec industry has been relatively fairly treated in terms of the federal government's purchasing and industrial support programs.

Hon. Lowell Murray: I have a supplementary question for the minister. Will the minister tell us why the government has ceased publishing the details of the regional spinoff for the F-18 project?

If the minister has been reading the English language media, he will have noticed that his colleague, Mr. Lumley, has said, in effect, that he is not interested in that subject and no longer asks his department to provide that information.

Senator Austin: That information is very well known, and there is no sense publishing that which is well known.

The federal government has not hidden its disappointment with the lack of success of the Quebec industry in bidding for the F-18 contracts; nor have I hidden my disappointment with the lack of success of British Columbia or western Canadian industrial enterprises in participating in the F-18 project.

Senator Asselin: I wish to reply to what has been said by the minister concerning the F-18 project.

[Translation]

Once again, I believe that Quebecers realize that the government has deceived them by promising them 49 per cent of all economic fallout for the F-18 project. In addition, the minister has admitted himself that the actual fallout will not reach the promised figure. I hope that the people of Quebec will take note of this and remember it in due time.

[English]

Senator Austin: Indeed, I hope Quebecers will also remember the efforts by the federal government with respect to the work done on the F-18, the work done on the frigate program, the work done on behalf of Bombardier to supply transit cars to the city of New York, as well as the work done to acquire a major project with respect to helicopters. I think that the province of Quebec has received a reasonable proportion of all of the major industrial contracts which have been available. My complaint is of the same regional kind, in that western Canada has not had the benefit of major work in any of those areas.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, Senator Roblin asked me to reply today to a question he put with respect to unemployment insurance and the establishment of premium rates for 1984. As Senator Roblin knows, each year at about this time the Unemployment Insurance Commission sets premium rates subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The Minister of Employment and Immigration will undoubtedly make an announcement on the matter public within the next few days. The calculation of the unemployment insurance premium rate is carried out on an annual basis according to the Unemployment Insurance Act. The commission, pursuant to the statute, calculates a range for the premium by defining the rate required to balance the account based on an average of the previous three years' expenditures and the rate required to eliminate the accumulative deficit in the account, which in the April 1983 fiscal plan was projected to be $4.2 billion in 1984.

Under the statute, maximum insurable earnings will automatically rise by 10 per cent on January 1, 1984 from $385 to $425 a week. The statutory increase is based on an eight-year moving average of employee earnings according to T-4 submissions. Therefore, those employees who have enjoyed, or will enjoy, a salary increase that brings them up to the $425-a-week level, will notice an increased payroll deduction for unemployment insurance.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would my honourable friend undertake to convey to his colleague who is responsible for this reply some observations on the unemployment insurance situation, because the rate of unemployment, to say nothing of inflation, over the past two or three years has been so gross and so unexpectedly higher than anything that was contemplated when unemployment insurance was invented that it has ceased to be an insurance scheme at all. It is a social policy which may be a very good one, I do not debate that, but the way in which it has been financed is that the cost of this policy has been shifted more and more to the employers and the employees and, thus, becomes part of the wage. When it becomes part of the wage, it becomes subject to all the escalations that go into the calculation of prices. What turns out to be an increase of unemployment insurance of a relatively small amount, by the time it gets to the retail stage becomes a very large amount and has its effect on prices in the economy and on the purchasing power of individuals.

There was a very large increase in unemployment insurance—possibly a third, if my memory is correct—this time last year or thereabouts. The minister shakes his head, and he may have the right figure before him. I point out to him that the cost estimated for unemployment insurance this year is going to be approximately 25 per cent over the money that was raised last year for this purpose. It seems to indicate that the employers and the employees can expect a very large increase in this premium if the calculations that my honourable friend mentioned are, in fact, used as the basis of the figure.

What I am saying to him is that the ground is shifting underneath us here. Unemployment insurance is no longer what it used to be. It is not an insurance policy, although it has some aspects of insurance, but it has also incorporated into it, with the last amendment of the statute, a very large element of social policy. I have no objection to that, but I object to the way it is being paid for. I think the economy would be a lot better if the money required was taken at the tax level rather than at the wage level, which is, in effect, a wage tax.

In my province we have a wage tax—I guess we had to keep company with Quebec—and it has had a marked deleterious effect. I suggest that increases in the unemployment insurance premium would have the same effect on industry across Canada.

I thank my friend for allowing me to make this little speech on the subject, but I want him to use his good offices to have this matter examined from the overall economic point of view rather than simply as a measure for raising money.

Senator Austin: I take it that what Senator Roblin is asking for is that there be no premium rate increase for 1984. Whether that turns out to be the case will await the decision of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Senator Roblin has launched us on an interesting discussion with respect to unemployment insurance, and I should like to join him in a debate because it is one of the most important subjects affecting Canadians.

With the substantial increase in unemployment in the past calendar year and this one, the federal government was faced with the decision of whether to maintain the system as one of insurance or whether to provide some important social benefits, which Senator Roblin says he takes no objection to. The last decision taken by the government was to provide very substantial loans to the Unemployment Insurance Fund instead of seeking to raise premiums both to the employer and the employee. The feeling was that raising those premiums would result in lower profits and larger unemployment—as the cost being borne by the employer and the employee would be a drag on economic recovery.

Additionally, Senator Roblin's point on taxpayer contributions was included in the new system. In fact, we have provided very substantial funding by taxpayers in order to allow unemployment insurance benefits to be paid in a rather generous fashion, including the use of section 38 for such programs as NEED. Many of these programs have been the bulk of employment and economic activity in communities across Canada. I have had that experience in British Columbia.

With those comments, I thank Senator Roblin for his interest. When the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable John Roberts, makes his announcement, I shall endeavour to convey it to Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: I would not like my honourable friend to think that I am expecting no increase in unemployment insurance premiums. I certainly am expecting it because there is this increase in the ceiling. Every time you increase the ceiling, that, of course, is an automatic addition to what employers and employees pay. Apparently, that is embedded in the statute, from what my honourable friend said. Therefore, I am sure that we are going to get an increase, but I wish Senator Austin could bring a statement to this chamber on the finances of the Unemployment Insurance Fund in order to show, in a concrete way, the sources of funds in 1982 and those estimated in 1983. Perhaps then we can look at the situation for 1984.

The real motive behind my concern in this matter is the fact that the government has forecast unemployment for the next five years at not under 10 per cent. I suggest that that kind of unemployment is really eating at the vitals of the premium system of financing the Unemployment Insurance Fund in the country. We need what that fund does, but I am concerned about the method of financing. To a large extent, I think it is counterproductive.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps this is an appropriate time to raise a point of order. The exchange that has just taken place between Senator Austin and Senator Roblin is becoming a rather common event during Question Period. Honourable senators know as well as I do, and in many cases better than I do, that it is our custom in the Senate to be the masters of our own procedures and points of order. It may be that honourable senators find that this development is satisfactory and desirable. As Senator Roblin, with his customary courtesy thanked Senator Austin for allowing him to make an additional statement, there is no question of subterfuge. Senator Roblin quite frankly said that he is making a statement supplementary to the answer that was given to him. The difficulty I have found recently in taking objection—I am doing it now because we have just heard a perfect example of it—is that often the exchange is interesting, as Senator Austin has said today. In the course of the questioning and in the course of the statement, a very important and interesting question was raised, namely, whether unemployment insurance has evolved into a wage tax instead of an insurance system. That is something that we could debate.

It may be that we should allow these mini-debates to take place, because on each occasion that they have happened recently, mostly at the instance of Senator Roblin, the result has been both important and informative. I would simply draw this question to the attention of honourable senators.

Strictly speaking, of course, Question Period is a time to ask for information, but I think it is accepted that everyone expects a certain amount of rhetoric to be introduced both into the questions and into the answers. However, we have come to the stage where, quite often, after an answer is given, the senator asking the question will make a statement or comment or, as they say in the sports business, "do the colour" on the answer to the question.

We decide how we want to proceed. I noticed that no senator raised any objection. I am raising an objection because, in strict order, that is not what our rules call for, but it may be that that is what honourable senators want to take place.

Senator Roblin: I do not suppose my honourable friend would expect his observation to go without notice on this side of the chamber.

I believe the form of the questions in the Senate is good because I am not in the sporting business; I am in the public affairs business. I find it possible to elicit a good deal of helpful information and opinion from the government when Question Period allows us the opportunities that we take advantage of in this chamber in order to deal with public matters.

I think it would be a serious mistake for the house leader to suggest that we should adopt the rigid, iron-clad rules which prevail in the House of Commons with respect to Question Period.

Hon. Robert Muir: No muzzling!

Senator Roblin: That is a good expression, and I appreciate it. I think that is the case.

My memory is sufficiently long that I can remember when positions in this chamber were changed, and my honourable friend was over here and we were over there. At that time, as I remember, my honourable friend was quite adept at dealing with Question Period and at introducing into the flow of his thought those items he wanted to be ventilated or expressed; and I admired his skill.

I suspect that, in the natural flux of events, before long he will have an opportunity to demonstrate that skill again, because he will be on this side of the chamber and we shall be over there. I suspect that, when that happens, my honourable friend will find a great deal of virtue in the way in which the Senate of Canada conducts its Question Period.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as usual, I totally agree with Senator Roblin. It would be a great mistake for me to suggest that we stick to the iron-clad rules of the House of Commons. It would be a great mistake for me to do that, and I would not.

I thought I made it quite clear that I believe the way in which we conduct our business here is much more satisfactory and more desirable than the way business is conducted in the other place, to the extent that it is done too strictly in the other place.

Of course, if we want to go into the fanciful hypothesis of a difference in our geographical positions in this chamber, I would find it hard to imagine that Senator Roblin, were he ever in my place, would not have raised this point long ago. He would not have sat as patiently as I have while this new technique was evolving and is continuing to evolve.

I want to make it clear that I still feel it is up to us to decide. I took great pains to say that, frankly, I find this device useful in terms of raising interesting questions, but it is a matter of order as to whether we want to continue to allow it to happen. To what extent we want these comments to take place during Question Period is a matter of discretion.

I have drawn this to honourable senators' attention because my duty is to draw it to the attention of the Senate and have the Senate decide how it wants to proceed.

Senator Roblin: I think I can conclude this interchange by saying that, when Hansard comes out tomorrow, I shall clip out the honourable senator's statement because I am sure that, on a future occasion, I shall find it to be a useful guide.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is just that I am a better bootlegger than Senator Roblin. When I was on that side, I did bootleg my rhetoric a little.

Hon. Martial Asselin: I am sure the honourable senator remembers that he did it once for an hour and a half.

Senator Frith: It was always a question.

Senator Asselin: It wasn't a question; it was a statement.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, on the point of order raised by Senator Frith, it seems to me that, if we are going to ignore our own rules, which is essentially what we have been doing this afternoon, isn't the simple solution to change our rules instead of breaking them? I, for one, would be glad to go along with any change that would give us the opportunity we have taken this afternoon to hear points expressed by both sides.

Senator Asselin: We are not changing the rules. Are there any rules about questions?

Senator Frith: I am interested in any other views.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, as Senator Godfrey once told me, I should not try, too often, to paint the lily, having heard the eloquence of other senators on this very important point of order.

I am one of the old-timers who has spent a long time in the other place, and neither my constitution nor the Constitution of Canada will allow me to be in this place as long as I was in the House of Commons. When it comes to procedure and accomplishment, I am totally committed to the superiority of this place. The flexibility of our procedures is, in my judgment, the essence of our capacity to accomplish things.

I am wondering if in this regard we might pick up something from the thought process of Senator Frith, who is a very thoughtful man— and I know Senator Marshall has mentioned this from time to time. There may be formal occasions when we have to break our rules or perhaps make fuller use of them and use the process of procedure of making statements. Today it might have been just as well if Senator Frith had made a general statement to begin with; then we could have ventilated the matter in that way.

Apart from all that, I have sat here and become more impressed than ever by the brilliance and prescience of Senator Frith. I never saw a man who, so early in the game, was preparing himself for an important role on this side of the house, and I commend him, to use a senatorial expression, for his pre-study of the operation.

Senator Asselin: It is surprising that the ministers are not complaining about it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I rarely intervene, even when I am aware that rules are being broken, since it happens quite often. Perhaps honourable senators are quite correct when they say that our procedure is much more flexible than that in the other place and that communication is better. However, if ever one senator decides to have the rules apply strictly and calls on me to do so, I shall have to apply the written rules.

Very often during Question Period, in violation of the rules following a question and answer, a speech is made and sometimes even a debate ensues. As long as honourable senators agree to that procedure, there will be no problem; but if one senator ever demands that from now on we abide by the rules, we shall be in some difficulty, and I shall have to proceed according to the rules.

Senator Asselin: As long as the ministers are not complaining.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: We would be out by 3 o'clock.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GRENADA—SAFETY OF CANADIAN NATIONALS

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some additional material on the situation in Grenada.

According to our latest information, at present there are approximately 40 Canadians in Grenada. The airlift, which had been planned to take place yesterday, had to be cancelled as final clearances were not obtained in time to use the airport which is open only during daylight hours. Most of the 24 Canadians who had planned to leave on our chartered plane yesterday are now in the Rosspoint Inn. As at 0630 hours today, all were safe and well.

• (1500)

Five CUSO employees who had also planned to leave yesterday returned to their residence, which is located on high ground overlooking the harbour in St. Georges. In telephone conversations with their employer this morning, the latest of which took place at 1030 hours, they said that shells were continuing to come very close to their location.

Information on their situation and location was given to the U.S. State Department task force in Grenada, together with the request that steps be taken immediately to protect their safety. Our embassy in Washington was later requested to follow up, as appropriate, with a view to reinforcing this request.

The U.S. authorities have been requested to take immediate steps to protect the safety of the five Canadians known to be in a danger area. We are continuing to follow the situation with respect to other Canadians with a view to providing assistance as needed and as possible.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON, NOVA SCOTIA—COAL—DONKIN MINE AND PRINCE MINE

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers in response to questions asked by Senator Muir on September 22, 1983, concerning the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

The first answer has to do with mines. At the site of the Donkin-Morien Project two tunnels are being driven towards the coal seam which outcrops on to the ocean floor. A tunnel-boring machine, which has been constructed by Lovat Tunnel Equipment, Inc. for the National Research Council, the Department of Supply and Services, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Cape Breton Development Corporation, has been installed in one of the tunnels. It is anticipated that this tunnel-boring machine will complete its driveage to the coal face by the fall of 1984. At that time, additional samples of the coal will be taken and, following the results of the testing and the marketability of the coal, a decision will be made on whether or not to develop a coal mine at this site.

At the Prince Colliery development work is continuing, although problems caused by a sandstone intrusion have slowed it down considerably. Nevertheless, it is believed that the full production schedule planned by the corporation will still be reached in 1984. The bad roof conditions, which were experienced earlier in the room and pillar section of the colliery, have been left behind. The pavement is not particularly soft and is causing no problems with either safety or production. The machinery is working well, and nothing has happened to give cause for concern for the future of the Prince Colliery. It is anticipated that in another year this colliery will be at its most productive level of operation.

I imagine that there is no one in this chamber who understands that answer quite as well as Senator Muir. I understood parts of it, however, and I believe that it addresses the question he raised.

[Senator Frith.]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VACANCIES

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): The second of my delayed answers concerns the appointment of members to the board of directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Honourable senators, I should first like to correct a mistake which appeared in the answer given to Senator Muir last Tuesday, October 18, 1983, at page 6066 of Senate Debates. The reply was provided by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, not the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. Since that time, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has provided further details on the board of directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

The chairman, Mr. D. S. Rankin, appointed by the Governor in Council, relinquished that office to become president of the corporation on January 1, 1979. The three other directors appointed by the Governor in Council were Mr. Arthur J. Leblanc, whose appointment expired on July 31, 1979; Mr. Kenneth A. MacInnis, whose appointment expired on April 30, 1983; and Dr. Larkin Kerwin, whose appointment expired on September 30, 1983. In addition, two directors were appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Nova Scotia. Mr. Tom Kent's appointment expired on January 31, 1982, while the appointment of Dr. John Burke will continue until February 29, 1984.

There are vacancies for the position of chairman of the board, in which capacity the president has been acting, three directors appointed by the Governor in Council, and one director appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Nova Scotia. There have been some comments in the press indicating that the vacancies have already been filled. This is pure speculation. There are currently two directors on the board, the president, Mr. Rankin, and Dr. John Burke. The minister has promised to inform the Senate as soon as the vacancies are filled.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Frith for his answers. What concerns me, however, is this: How often are the meetings of the board of directors now being conducted and who will conduct the business of the corporation? The deputy leader informed honourable senators of some retirements which occurred in 1979 and 1982, which I was aware of when I asked the question.

I just wonder how a corporation can be run when most of those who sat on the board of directors have retired. Who is running the corporation? There is Mr. Rankin—who is doing his best, I presume—and Dr. John Burke. Is there a third person involved?

I wonder whether the deputy leader could find out how soon these appointments will be filled. If the feds cannot manage to fill these positions, it might be a good idea to get in touch with the Province of Nova Scotia to ascertain what will be done about that appointment, plus the others which have been vacant for so long.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ALLOCATION OF PRODUCER CARS FOR OFF-BOARD SALES

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Steuart on October 20, 1983, regarding the allocation of producer cars for off-board sales of feed grains.

The number of producer cars which may be allocated is fixed by regulation 81(3) of the Canada Grain Act, which reads as follows:

> The Commission shall not in any week allocate to application made by producers of grain other than rapeseed more than 5 per cent of the railway cars that are available for the shipment of any one type of grain to a particular destination.

Thus, if 1,400 cars are available for a shipment of barley in a week, 5 per cent or 70 producer cars would be allocated. No distinction is made between board and non-board barley—that is, it is the producer's choice. Applications are processed in the order received.

The Canadian Grain Commission advises that current barley backlog is 7 to 8 weeks, whereas feed oats and feed wheat backlog is significantly less. Feed grain cars are allocated in connection with the regulations and without regard to pressures from any source. To be eligible for a producer car, producers must have the necessary Canadian Wheat Board delivery quota.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GRENADA—SAFETY OF CANADIAN NATIONALS

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I promised that I would keep the Senate up to date with information respecting the invasion of Grenada, as I receive it. I have just been handed a memorandum dated October 25, 1983 at 3.20 p.m.

Two thousand Americans and 300 other troops from six Caribbean nations invaded Grenada early this morning, after setting out from Antigua. According to my information, the other nations involved are Jamaica, Barbados, St. Kitts, Antigua, St. Vincent and Dominica.

We knew last night that the invasion was a possibility in the contingencies outlined by the United States. We were not asked to participate.

As of noon today—which is a little more recent than the information I passed along a few moments ago—the Canadians were safe. Five CUSO volunteers were near the trouble area and the U.S. task force has been alerted to their presence there. The rest of the Canadians are staying in the Red Point Hotel in the capital. Canada has an official of the Department of External Affairs on site, monitoring the situation.

President Reagan gave three reasons this morning for the invasion: first, to restore democracy to the area; secondly, to ensure stability; and thirdly, to protect the 1,000 American nationals on site.

Canada was not consulted about the invasion because it is not Canadian practice to invade other countries. We are simply concerned with getting our nationals to safety. That is why we made arrangements to have a plane stand by to airlift them out.

This memorandum adds very little information to what I have already related to honourable senators, but I wanted to announce any additional information as soon as I received it.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Does the deputy leader have any information to the effect that the invaders—the Americans and those of other countries—had to fight against Soviet and Cuban troops?

Senator Frith: No, honourable senators, I have received no such information. Should I obtain additional information, I will share it with the Senate.

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. D. G. Steuart moved the second reading of Bill C-163, to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-163 is to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, to be known as the CASB, which will investigate and report on civil aircraft accidents, incidents and potentially hazardous situations.

The establishment of a federal aviation safety board was a key recommendation in volume 1 of the Dubin Report on Aviation Safety. The bill closely follows Mr. Justice Dubin's detailed recommendations on the structure and powers of the board. Volume 1 of the Dubin report, released in May 1981, was wholeheartedly supported by the aviation community and, incidentally, received the support of all parties in the other place.

Investigations into aircraft accidents are now carried out by Transport Canada, which is also responsible for air safety regulations. Once the CASB is established, air accident investigation will be completely independent from Transport Canada, thereby removing any potential for conflict of interest.

The object of the board will be to advance aviation safety and prevent accidents. The board will have no judicial, quasi-judicial or regulatory function. It will conduct its investigations to determine the underlying contributing factors and causes, but it will not indicate where blame or liability lies.

The board will co-ordinate its activity with police and provincial coroners. If an accident involves both military and civilian aircraft or facilities, the board will then co-ordinate with the safety investigators in the Department of National Defence.

The main purpose of the bill is to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, which will conduct independent investigations of "aviation occurrences". It will be a completely independent body in order to avoid the potential for conflict of interest which exists when the investigations are conducted by the body which is responsible for the regulations, as is now the case with Transport Canada.

The main provisions of the bill, dealing with the board's jurisdiction, will be examined when the bill is before the committee for clause-by-clause study. The bill is the first piece of legislation resulting from the three-volume Dubin report.

Extensive revisions to the Aeronautics Act are yet to come. When introducing the bill in the other place, the then Minister of Transport, the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, stated:

> These legislative changes form an integral part of a comprehensive approach to improving air safety.

He went on to say:

> They complement the improvements Transport Canada is making to the enforcement of air regulations and to airworthiness certification.

Honourable senators, with that brief resumé of the principles of the bill, I urge that honourable senators support the motion for second reading.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow moved the second reading of Bill C-168, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act (No. 2).

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill C-168 is to provide for an increase in Canada's subscription to the International Monetary Fund from 2,035 million SDRs to 2,941 million SDRs, or, expressed in Canadian dollars, an increase of approximately $1.2 billion to a total of $3.8 billion. I should point out that "SDRs" means special drawing rights. This is part of the general increase in members' subscriptions—or quotas, as they are called—agreed to last spring by the Fund's board of governors, which will raise the total of such quotas from special drawing rights 61 billion to special drawing rights 90 billion. The overall increase results from the regular five-year review of fund quotas and is designed to ensure a better balance between the size of the Fund's resources and the needs of members for balance of payments financing over the next few years.

The International Monetary Fund is the central institution of the international monetary system, and Canada places great importance in ensuring that the Fund has sufficient resources to carry out its operations, particularly in the current global economic situation where many creditors rely on the Fund to provide leadership in encouraging debtor countries to pursue appropriate economic policies. Quotas provide the Fund with its main line of resources which are lent to countries in balance of payments difficulties. This assistance permits members to correct their imbalances without taking protectionist or other restrictive or disruptive measures. As an economy which is heavily dependent on international trade and the international flow of capital, Canada has an interest in supporting the Fund in its efforts to maintain an open trade and payments system.

Quotas also serve to limit the amounts which members can borrow under the various facilities of the International Monetary Fund. They determine the size of individual allocations of special drawing rights when SDRs are created; and, finally, they determine the voting strength of members and the composition of the Fund's executive board.

The increase in Canada's quota will allow us to maintain our relative position in total IMF quotas, reflecting the importance of Canada in the world economy, and will ensure our capacity to participate in Fund operations, including our ability to elect an executive director. It will also increase the resources available to Canada in the event of balance of payments need and our eligibility for future allocations of SDRs.

As I mentioned, in terms of Canadian dollars our subscription will increase by approximately $1.2 billion. However, the actual Canadian dollar cash payment is approximately only $3 million; 25 per cent, or about $300 million, will be paid in U.S. dollars or SDRs from our international reserves, while the balance of about $900 million will be supplied in the form of non-interest-bearing demand notes. The decrease in the Exchange Fund Account's holdings of U.S. dollars or SDRs will be fully offset by an increase in what is called our "reserve position" in the IMF. That is the amount that we are entitled to draw on demand from the IMF for balance of payments purposes and constitutes a part of our official international reserves. Thus, these transactions will affect the composition of our reserves, but their total will be unchanged.

In the past two years the IMF has increased the scale of its lending activities to meet the difficult payments problems which have arisen. Its continued ability to operate effectively is crucial to the smooth operation of the international monetary system.

I believe that all honourable senators will agree that it is important to strengthen the financial position of the IMF and for Canada to continue to play a prominent role in this institution. It is therefore in Canada's interest to accept the proposed increase in its quota as authorized by the bill, which I recommend to honourable senators for their consideration.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 3)—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-169, to amend the Canada Elections Act (No. 3).

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-169 purports to amend the Canada Elections Act under four main subjects. May I say at the outset that the fact that I am introducing and supporting this bill on elections has nothing whatever to do with views

I have otherwise expressed regarding elections in the Senate—but, who knows, some day those views may be relevant.

The bill introduces quite a number of amendments to the Canada Elections Act, all dealing with one of the most important parts of the act, the question of election expenses. The changes which, incidentally, were given unanimous agreement by the three parties represented in the other place, implement recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer and the political parties following the 1979 and 1980 general elections. So the bill is an update of a number of provisions and a revision of others. The four major areas dealt with by these amendments are the indexing of election expense limits for parties and candidates, a reimbursement formula for candidates' expenses, a new reimbursement formula for political parties' expenses and the elimination of election expenses incurred by third parties, which deals with the so-called special-interest-group feature.

With respect to indexing of election expense limits for parties and candidates, those limits have not changed since they were set in 1974, and owing to the steady increase in election costs they are now considered to be too low. Candidates can now spend only $1 for each of the first 15 voters, $.50 for each of the next 10,000 voters and $.25 for each remaining voter, while parties are now allowed to spend $.30 for each voter where they have candidates. It is felt that that situation ought to be remedied, if we want candidates to run effective electoral campaigns. It is really a matter of adjusting the rates to what has happened to all expenses in the intervening period.

The adjustment formula chosen on the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer and the three parties is an annual indexing based on the consumer price index starting in 1981, the year following the last general election. That formula will obviate the need to amend the Canada Elections Act periodically to raise the limits, if Parliament is satisfied that the indexing formula is appropriate as it occurs. Following this amendment, candidates and parties at the next federal election will be authorized to spend about one third more than they were authorized to spend in 1979 and 1980.

The second major item of the bill deals with a new reimbursement formula for candidates' expenses, or what is sometimes called a rebate or reimbursement formula. Honourable senators will perhaps know that at present reimbursement is based on the cost of mailing, first class, one item to each voter. Mailing costs in 1974 were $.07 per item; they are now $.32. This means candidates in the most populated electoral districts could easily obtain reimbursement of 100 per cent or more of their expense limits. Honourable senators will remember that we just talked about the limits going up by about 30 per cent. For example, the cost of mailing having gone from $.07 to $.32 in a big riding such as York Scarborough would cause the candidate to be reimbursed more than he or she was allowed to spend. So, obviously, that section has to be adjusted. The adjustment, of course, would create a disparity between candidates in small and large electoral districts and would certainly be against the spirit of the act, which is to encourage candidates to raise funds from their supporters. Under the formula proposed today, reimbursement to candidates who qualify will not exceed 50 per cent of the candidates' actual expenses, as opposed to authorized total possible expenses, which will have the effect of saving an estimated sum of about $1 million of public funds.

The third item deals with the reimbursement formula for parties expenses. Currently, 50 per cent of the cost of air time—that is television and radio time—paid by political parties during an election campaign is reimbursed, and that encourages political parties to concentrate their election spending on broadcast publicity. Under the formula proposed in this bill, parties which qualify will be reimbursed 22.5 per cent of their election expenses, regardless of the nature of media used.

Hon. Martial Asselin: How much was it previously?

Senator Frith: It was 50 per cent of broadcast time.

This change results primarily from representations by the written press against the existing formula, which is considered discriminatory.

The fourth and final item deals with the elimination of election expenses incurred by third parties. The aim of the present act is to equalize parties' and candidates' chances by setting a uniform and reasonable limit on election expenses and guaranteeing reimbursement of a good part of these expenses. Unfortunately, that basic and, I think, excellent principle of equality is sometimes undermined by groups or individuals other than political parties and candidates, so-called special-interest groups who incur substantial election expenses during an election campaign without going through a candidate or party. Such expenses are not accounted for anywhere and procure undue benefit for some candidates or parties. Under the bill now before us, all election expenses must be incurred by the parties and candidates officially in the campaign. This amendment would prevent American-style political action committees from setting up business during an electoral campaign in order to favour or oppose the election of a party or candidate.

Finally, the bill provides that a broadcasting arbitrator, rather than the CRTC, will be responsible for alloting air time to the various parties. The bill contains amendments shown to be necessary by the experience of the last two general elections. These changes follow the spirit of the Election Expenses Act, 1974, which is now part of the Canada Elections Act, which establishes a legal framework to ensure that all candidates and parties in an election have an equal chance.

Obviously, this bill is of more primary concern to our colleagues in the other place, but it is of concern to us also as members of political parties.

Senator Asselin: Who knows, it could be our concern very soon.

Senator Frith: Yes, a concern of all of us; who knows? The persons to whom this bill most directly applies, namely, our colleagues in the other place, gave it unanimous support and it was adopted without division. Therefore, I ask your support of this bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, before the motion is considered, I have a question for Senator Frith.

Of course, I did not read the Bill as he gave his explanations, but I was trying to understand the content. However, more on that later. If I understand correctly, the Bill contains changes with respect to election expenses, based on what happened in the two last elections. Is there anything in the Bill that would prevent a new political organization—the Quebec Nationalist Party, for instance—from having the same advantages as other parties?

I saw some rumours to that effect in the press. The legislation you are proposing is based on what happened in the two last elections with respect to the three political parties we have here in Parliament. I would like to know whether the Bill closes the door to other political parties that might be formed for the next election?

Senator Frith: Well, there is no easy answer to that, because, if I correctly understood the provision concerning special interest groups, a party or special interest group may try to present itself as a new political party. It is also possible that the definition raises a political issue. However, it is clear that the intent of the legislation is to give equal treatment to all existing or future parties, by applying the same criteria in all cases. Here, the answer is no. There is no provision that prevents forming or establishing a new legitimate political party.

Senator Deschatelets: I skimmed through the definitions and I wonder whether there is a definition of the political parties that are affected by this legislation? Does the Bill contain a definition of a "political party"?

Senator Frith: With respect, I think it is preferable to look at the question put by Senator Deschatelets in terms of the criteria that will apply. I intend to try to get further clarification on the criteria that will apply in terms of establishing or qualifying a legitimate political party, for the purposes of this bill.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Senator Deschatelets is referring to important issues that were raised, as he said, in the Quebec newspapers, which said that the legislation, which was passed very quickly in the other place by all parties, would violate the rights of a new party that is being formed in Quebec. Perhaps it would be wise to consider referring the Bill to committee to give the appropriate witnesses a chance to testify, for the same reasons given by Senator Frith, so that we cannot be accused of trying to sabotage the formation of a new political party.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators. As I said before, I promise to try to obtain these criteria as well as a satisfactory explanation. If I am not successful, we shall have to pursue the matter further.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 20, the debate on the motion of Senator Molson for the adoption of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, the debate on this motion is a timely opportunity to express our views and suggestions with respect to making the work of the Senate committees even more efficient and more productive than they are. There has always been room for improvement and this report gives good examples of improvements which can be made to our committee work in the future.

This is the right time to mention that the Senate has already initiated the general subject matter of the reform of this chamber by supporting the motion of the Leader of the Government of December 16, 1982, which dealt with the formation of a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons. That joint committee is to report on the ways by which the Senate can strengthen its role in representing people from all regions of Canada and in enhancing the authority of Parliament to speak out on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country. The hearings of that joint committee do not prevent this chamber from studying and initiating internal reforms, at this time—especially reforms of our committees—in order to make our work more efficient, more productive and above all, more useful in meeting the needs and aspirations of all Canadians.

I think honourable senators will agree with me when I say that we are regarded today not only as a chamber of sober second thought but also as a chamber complementary to the House of Commons. More recently it has become expected of us that we play an active role in the often-mentioned topic of regional representation and also that we consider the protection of human rights, civil liberties and the minority groups of our country.

This afternoon I would like to make a few remarks in order to emphasize the feasibility and desirability of the Senate's role in the field of human rights, fundamental freedoms, civil liberties and the minority groups of our country. With respect to the general field of human rights, I would like to mention that this subject has been the topic of many Senate debates before World War I and following World War II. Recently in this chamber we have heard many good speeches with respect to the topics of human rights and civil liberties, not only during the constitutional debate but on various other occasions, when the historical, political, linguistic and demographic aspects of human rights and minority groups were emphasized. Specifically, I refer to the speeches of Senators Bosa, Yuzyk, Neiman, Godfrey and many other senators who made a great contribution to these topics.

When I entered this chamber and made my maiden speech, it was my privilege at that time to devote my remarks to human rights. In March of 1979 I proposed a motion to adopt a resolution to establish a joint committee on human rights.

The debate on that motion was cut short as a result of the dissolution of Parliament a few days later. I presented the same motion in the next Parliament, but again debate was cut short by the dissolution of Parliament as a result of the defeat of Mr. Crosbie's budget.

Senator Godfrey made a speech last week in which he referred to some very useful suggestions with respect to how the Senate can deal with human rights, especially concerning the authorization of powers to make regulations touching upon personal liberties and human rights. Moreover, Senator Neiman has a motion on the Order Paper which suggests that the human rights issue should be considered in a special way by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

I would like to make it clear, especially to the Deputy Leader of the Government, that it is not my wish this afternoon either to obstruct or to delay the adoption of Senator Molson's report, but rather to offer some constructive suggestions. In that spirit, I would suggest that the Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders consider at its next meeting—and preferably before the commencement of a new session— adding, in section 67(j) of Rules of the Senate of Canada referring to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, after subsection (i) a new subsection (ii) on human rights, fundamental freedoms, civil liberties and minorities. The following subparagraphs could then be renumbered accordingly.

Secondly, I would ask the Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to seriously consider amending section 67(l) concerning the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Sciences by deleting subsection (ii), "Indian and Eskimo affairs;" and substituting therefor "the aboriginal peoples of Canada". This amendment would be in order since the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development now uses the word "Inuit" instead of "Eskimo"; furthermore, since the proclamation of the First Amendment to the Canada Constitution Act, 1982 deals with our first inhabitants as aboriginal peoples. The word "Eskimo" should therefore no longer appear in Debates of the Senate or any other printed proceedings.

Finally, in considering the ninth recommendation in its Fifth Report, I would ask this committee to give serious consideration to the desirability of eventually establishing a Standing Senate Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, in the spirit of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which, under the chairmanship of the Honourable Carl Goldenberg, was presented to this chamber in November 1980.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 18, 1983, consideration of the Report of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the subject matter of the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983, which was tabled on Thursday, October 13, 1983.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I would like to make a few remarks upon resumption of this debate on the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, concerning aboriginal rights. I wish to congratulate the Chairman of the Committee, Senator Neiman, who held hearings for the benefit of all native people claiming such rights. The hearings started during the summer and were continued subsequently. Our Chairman contributed a high degree of patience.

At one point, I wondered whether these hearings were necessary and useful, but I can say that I learned much about native rights and claims. I wish to thank Senator Steuart for the objections he voiced when this resolution was submitted to us at the end of the summer, saying he wanted additional information. Those who attended the hearings shared the impression Senator Steuart had, namely, that the many native groups had to be given a chance to come and discuss their claims. Thanks to all Committee members, this was done, and the hearings will be particularly useful at federal-provincial conferences in reaching decisions on native claims. The details of this report will be very useful indeed. Towards the end of his speech, Senator Steuart expressed some concern that all this had the potential of a time bomb, for the following reasons: first of all, native claims cover practically the whole country, and many groups are forming other factions. A good many of the problems created by the claims have to do with provincial territories. I think nobody referred to that today, but during one of the last hearings, the lawyers representing the aboriginal peoples did say that they would not acknowledge the legitimacy of our courts established to rule on the claims.

As I recall, Senator Croll was present then and raised that very important point. In the same line of thought, I went on to say: You can believe that you have claims filed in accordance with the treaties—let us say against Quebec or Alberta—which will be rejected by the provinces concerned, for they will say in good faith: We do not owe that to you, we will not give you territories or mining or offshore rights, we will not acknowledge your claims.

One authority will then have to make a ruling. For us, that authority is vested in the existing courts, but we have been warned that they will not acknowledge the legitimacy of those courts.

All this to say that, as far as I am concerned, I was very glad to attend those hearings because I found them quite enlightening. On the occasion of the repatriation, we concluded with the aboriginal peoples an agreement concerning their existing rights, without identifying them, but I am wondering whether we may have given rise to expectations which we will be unable to meet later on.

In that respect, I share Senator Steuart's opinion that we may very well be headed for extremely complex confrontations. I have been thinking about those hearings in which we took part and I am asking myself whether we will be able to meet the claims of the aboriginal peoples.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to make a few comments with respect to this order. I should like to make them as a senator and not as the Deputy Leader of the Government.

While I too support the work of this committee, which has been excellent, and while I also accept the fact that there is clearly a wrong to be righted, and that this is taking a step towards righting that wrong, I must say that I have a nagging concern about the fact that this proposed amendment is really based on rights being given and founded on ethnicity or race and length of ancestry in the country. I have concern about that principle being introduced into the Constitution. That concern has nothing to do with individual ethnicity, nor, of course, with the fact that there is a wrong that requires righting; however, the time to take objection was when the original constitutional amendment debate took place, because all this does is clarify that fact.

I wish to thank honourable senators for giving me an opportunity to say—without its having anything to do with the aboriginal peoples— that I hope the too technical and perhaps theoretical but important principle of introducing constitutional rights based on ethnicity will not be something that we will someday wish we had not introduced into our Constitution. Perhaps that is just an academic footnote.

On motion of Senator Tremblay, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 27, 1983, at 2 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, 1983

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-152, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE BUDGETS TABLED

Hon. Charles McElman, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled reports approving supplementary budgets of the following committees:

Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce;

Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

(For text of reports see today's Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate.)

[Later:]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question on a point of order. The Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee report was not specifically referred to as an item to be printed as an appendix to our proceedings. Is it intended that that should be done?

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that that is not normally done, and I do not propose that it be done in this case.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe the practice with regard to reports dealing with budgets is to simply table them, and then they can be the subject of questions or inquiries later.

I believe we dealt with this matter once before, and that there is a provision in the rules to that effect. I do not have that provision before me, but I will try to find it.

Senator Roblin: If that is the custom, I do not object. It seems that I shall just have to take the trouble to get my own copy.

AVIATION SAFETY

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-163 TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on the subject matter of Bill C-163, an Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. The Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO CONTINUE STUDY OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-12

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to continue its examination and consideration of the subject matter of Bill C-12, intituled: "An Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency," in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the committee has already been authorized to study the subject matter of Bill C-12. It has indeed made a study and tabled a report. However, some amendments to the bill have been made since then, and the committee now wants to study the subject matter of the bill in its present form. Technically, it requires this order because it had actually discharged the previous order by making a report. That is why the motion includes the words, "continue its examination."

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): May I ask what the intention of the government is with respect to Bill C-12? We are rapidly approaching the expected date of prorogation, and anything we do now in this respect will fall to the ground and will have to be renewed when the new Parliament assembles. It seems to me quite unlikely that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be able to make a great deal of progress on any pre-study of this bill between now and prorogation.

In view of the fact that this is a voluminous document involving a number of highly technical and, certainly in some respects, contentious issues, particularly those respecting the protection of the rights of workers in the case of bankrupt firms, I am wondering what the government's plan is with respect to it, which makes it necessary to do what my honourable friend is now proposing.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have no detailed information about the government's plan, but I will try to get it before prorogation.

The motion before us now is presented at the request of the chairman of the committee, who wants this authority. Of course, if he gets the authority, that authority will not fall to the ground with prorogation, although the bill will disappear from the Order Paper and have to be re-introduced. I will try to get some answers on that aspect.

Senator Roblin: I appreciate my honourable friend's reply. The fact that the bill itself falls to the ground means that the committee will have nothing to pre-study. A new motion will have to be introduced, I suspect, under the number of the new bill, whatever that may be.

I just want to serve notice that I hope there is no intention of trying to deal with this bill before prorogation, because that seems to me to be an unlikely prospect.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have no information that it is the intention of the government to ask Parliament to deal with the bill before prorogation—that is, if prorogation is to be on November 14 or 15.

Senator Roblin: We are spinning our wheels.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, it was my understanding that some kind of an agreement had been reached between the Conservatives and the government in regard to this bill.

I believe the Senate has been studying this bill since 1975 and that the only outstanding issue is the question of protection of employees. After talking to one of the Conservative members of the committee of the House of Commons, my understanding was that they hoped, because of that agreement, the bill would be passed this session.

Since we have to study only one amendment, which has been agreed to in the other place, the committee does not have to go through the whole bill, and it is quite practical that it could be passed.

Senator Roblin: It is quite obviously a matter which needs to be clarified, and I would ask the Deputy Leader of the Government to be kind enough to do that.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Frith.]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

PRINTING OF REPORTS

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted to revert to the question raised by Senator Roblin respecting the Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, I would refer him to rule 83A.(4), which governs the printing of reports and reads as follows:

> Each report of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration relating to a budget presented to that committee pursuant to this rule shall be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for the day on which the report was made.

Therefore, the report will be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I thank my honourable friend for his courtesy in bringing that matter to my notice.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 1, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators will have noted the scenario evolving in the other place regarding the bill on the Crow rate. They will also remember that, pursuant to its rules, the House of Commons will rise on November 4, to return on November 14.

So far as debate on the Crow bill is concerned, the position in the other place is that it will be terminated with two days' debate at report stage and one day's debate at third reading stage. If the bill is debated today in the other place, that will leave one day for debate at report stage and an additional day for debate at third reading.

If honourable senators have their calendars in front of them, they will better be able to follow what I am about to say. If I am correct about the remaining days of debate on the Crow, and if that information is put into the context which is familiar to honourable senators—that is, that it is the wish of the government that the Crow bill be passed before prorogation—we could have the following schedule. If the vote on third reading of the Crow bill does not occur before Friday, November 4—the day on which the other place rises for its November break—the bill will not be available to us until 6 o'clock on that day. If the intended prorogation date of November 14 is to be reached, the Senate may have to sit during the week beginning November 7, the week when the other place will not be sitting.

So, Senator Roblin and I have tried to find some options. The earliest day the bill could be completed in the other place is next Tuesday at 6 o'clock. In order to complete its consideration of the bill on that day, the House of Commons would have to debate it today and tomorrow, finish the report stage on Friday and have third reading debate on Monday. The problem with that is that unanimous consent would have to be given in order to do so because, according to their rules, any vote on Friday is automatically adjourned to Monday. The history of the Crow bill has certainly not been starred with unanimous consents. I think, therefore, that it is safe to assume that there will be no unanimous consent with respect to this bill. That is why I say that, playing out the three days, the earliest time the House of Commons could finish dealing with the bill is 6 o'clock on Tuesday.

If that is the case, perhaps honourable senators should be ready to sit on Wednesday for the purpose of dealing with the bill. That would give us the three days to complete our consideration of the bill. I suppose that, if necessary, we could even sit on Saturday to avoid having to sit the following week. In my opinion, honourable senators, if we receive the bill on Tuesday at 6 o'clock, we could sit on Tuesday evening as well as on Wednesday afternoon. In other words, in that case, the earliest one, we would have a good deal of time to deal with it. In view of our pre-study of the bill, along with the study of it in the other place, I see no need to anticipate extra sitting days of the Senate. It may be that the Senate will sit longer hours, but I doubt whether there will be a need for additional sitting days next week—again, in the case of that "earliest possible" passage in the other place. If we do not receive it on Tuesday, then the following day, Wednesday, is private members' day in the other place. Again, that could be suspended with unanimous consent. However, we have already agreed that it is probably unwise for us to plan on any scenario that involves unanimous consent. Therefore the next opportunity for us to receive it would be at 6 p.m. on Thursday. If we anticipate two or three days of debate, or an equivalent number of hours, we might then consider sitting on Thursday evening, all day Friday, starting at 10 a.m. and, if necessary, on Saturday.

It is in this way that Senator Roblin and I have been trying to work out options to avoid our having to sit during the week when the other place is not sitting.

With regard to prorogation, it is conceivable that we could have Royal Assent on Friday of that week. The other place would be sitting that day. They would only have to obtain unanimous consent to vote, something not necessary for Royal Assent. If that happens, Parliament could resume the following Monday, prorogue on the Monday or Tuesday, and then commence a new session.

Honourable senators can follow the progress of the Crow bill in the other place and work out their own timetables.

There would appear to be no reason for us to sit any earlier than Tuesday of next week, since we do not anticipate receiving the bill before then. We may, however, receive other bills, although I believe that we have received all of the bills that we are likely to receive and that members of the other place will devote all of their time to debating the Crow bill. If further bills reach us we shall endeavour to see that they receive Royal Assent before we proceed to prorogation.

So, the proposed schedule means that there is the likelihood of our sitting some extended hours next week. If honourable senators have any questions, I shall be pleased to answer them.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, to confuse the issue further, there is another possible scenario, namely, that the other place may not make good progress next week. It might decide to adjourn next Friday and reconvene the following Monday. I believe that under their rules the government may ask for that if it is deemed necessary.

Senator Frith: They will have to get unanimous consent.

Senator Roblin: To say that the future is murky is to describe it accurately. We just do not know what is likely to happen. I suspect that we shall be asked to sit on the Friday and Saturday in order to dispose of the bill before the end of next week. So far as we on this side of the house are concerned, we shall be pleased to do so, because while we would like to have a full debate, we do not wish to delay the proceedings unnecessarily. However, I must underline the fact that in the other place the bill is receiving substantial amendments, some of which are of great importance. Those amendments must surely be examined by a committee of this house. If there is any thought that we can deal with the second reading stage and then proceed to third reading without the committee stage, I would not regard that as being probable, because the nature of the amendments being discussed in the other place is such that they will certainly have to be examined by our committee. We might even require witnesses.

That is a complication to which I draw honourable senators' attention because, with all the good will in the world to have the legislation dealt with expeditiously, we should not deprive ourselves of the possibility of examining those amendments with care and discretion.

• (1420)

Senator Frith: I agree with Senator Roblin on his points on the uncertainty of the situation. I also agree with him on the fact that in our discussions we never considered whether or not bills would be referred to committees and that in discussing extended hours we must allocate some time for committee study of bills where the Senate considers it appropriate.

Senator Roblin: There is one other point that we might consider. As it is agreed that the earliest we will probably get this bill is 6 p.m. next Tuesday, why is the Senate not to adjourn until 8 p.m., instead of 2 p.m., next Tuesday? We shall be spinning our wheels all afternoon, unless there is more committee work than I am aware of.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thought of that and I would prefer that we sit at 2 p.m. simply because there is the possibility that we will receive the bill at 6 p.m. We can by then have disposed of Question Period and any additional bills, such as second reading of the bill we have just received, C-152, and third reading of others, and adjourn at 6 p.m. knowing that we would be getting the Crow bill on resuming at 8 p.m. That is the reason I prefer 2 p.m.

Senator Roblin: I see my honourable friend's point well enough, but I think that we are sufficiently skillful in organizing our business to accommodate the agenda he has announced, even if we meet at 8 p.m. on Tuesday.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, on the point of meeting on Tuesday afternoon as opposed to Tuesday evening, what I am about to say perhaps does not need to be drawn to the attention of Senator Frith, but it needs reconsideration.

For a number of senators from the east the only flight in order to be here for a 2 p.m. sitting is the one departing at the unearthly hour of 6.20 a.m., which means that one must be up at 4.30 a.m., or thereabouts, in order to get to the airport in time. Most senators have found that when this happens they are more or less stymied for the rest of the day. Perhaps it is not a strong reason, but it is certainly something to be considered. If it is at all possible to change the afternoon sitting to an evening sitting, it will benefit a number of senators from the eastern part of Canada.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I understand the imposition explained by Senator Rowe. However, I remind honourable senators that if we want to get a good start on the Crow bill on Tuesday, in the event that we get it, if we sit at 8 p.m. we will begin with second reading of the government organization bill, third reading of three other bills, and Question Period, and it will be 10 p.m. before we get to the Crow. I want to have the afternoon sitting to get other items on the Order Paper out of the way so that we can deal with the Crow bill in the evening.

Senator Rowe: May I say on that point that I am sure all honourable senators concerned would be only too happy to co-operate in this particular case? However, what I was just saying a moment ago was meant to be of more general application rather than in relationship to this specific situation. Perhaps the Crow bill is a specific instance where it would benefit us to meet in the afternoon rather than in the evening.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I have a specific observation to make. If the—to use the word of the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate—"scenario" which he envisaged would result in concluding our debate and Royal Assent at 6 p.m. on Friday, November 4, it would be fine. However, he has also said, as an alternative, that we might have to continue to debate the matter until Saturday. It is quite evident that if we did that we could not arrange Royal Assent until Parliament resumed on November 14. It seems to me that we might just as well take that into consideration and come back and deal with it on November 14. It seems to me that there is no point in debating this matter on Saturday, November 5, when there is no possibility of Royal Assent for a week or ten days therefrom.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, all I can say to that is let us wait and see.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am bound to advise that Senator Olson is away this week on public business. I believe I mentioned that on Tuesday last. I have also been told that Senator Austin will be unable to be here today for Question Period for the same reason. I was not so told regarding Senator Argue; however, I can assume that he is engaged on urgent public business as well. We all know that if that were not the case he would not absent himself from this place during Question Period.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

MEETINGS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, since the ministers are not here I would like to start the proceedings by asking a question of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. In the course of a speech I made on October 20, 1983, with respect to the fifth report of the committee, Senator McElman rose on a point of order. He said this:

> I draw the attention of the honourable senator to the fact that there are rules that apply to the discussion that is now taking place. One is that those meetings are held in camera. There is also a prohibition in our rules against discussions in this chamber of committee proceedings. Therefore, I would ask the honourable senator to observe those rules.

In reply to Senator McElman, I said:

> Honourable senators, I humbly apologize. I had completely overlooked that. I agree that I should not have repeated what was said in committee. I tender my apologies.

I was surprised with respect to the comment about prohibition in our rules against discussions in this chamnber of committee proceedings generally. I have since spoken to Senator McElman who said that he did not mean that; he was referring only to proceedings in camera. I was also wondering afterwards why the meetings of this particular committee were held in camera. I spoke to Senator Molson in that regard. As a result of that conversation I would like to ask Senator Molson a question: Were these particular meetings held in camera?

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders does, in fact, sit in camera on many occasions. However, I do not think that whenever the committee sits that it automatically means that it is in camera. I think in order to sit in camera it must be specified.

As far as I can remember, whenever we are considering a report the committee very definitely meets in camera. My recollection is that we meet in camera when we so state. We did not go to this meeting with the knowledge that it was to be in camera.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, Senator Molson has not answered my question. My question was: Was that particular meeting held in camera? That was the question I asked.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I have looked at the transcript of that meeting. I did not see in the transcript, or in the notice, mention of the fact that the meeting was in camera. Nevertheless, the nature of that particular meeting was such that had it been called to our attention I think we would have stated that the meeting was to be in camera.

Senator Godfrey: I only bring this matter up because there might have been some excuse for my overlooking the fact that the meeting was in camera. No motion was moved at that time for the proceedings to be in camera.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I would like to say that if I have done an injustice to Senator Godfrey, who is always so correct in what he does, I would certainly feel very badly about it.

I might add that my recollection is—and it too could be wrong—that the sign which is placed in the corridor outside the door of every committee room in the case of the Rules Committee reads: "In camera". I believe that is the case. In any event, it has been my understanding, wrong perhaps, that such meetings were always held in camera whether stated or not. I have attended the meetings of the Rules Committee since 1966, I believe. The meetings have always been treated as such and no member of the press or public is allowed into the committee room.

● (1430)

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, the points that have been made are valid but I think they need clarification, and perhaps some decision could be made upon them in the next two weeks. Certainly, when we are considering the rules of conduct in the Senate we do not want members of the press or strangers hearing our discussion as to what is proper and what is not. That is why there is a natural inference that a great deal of our proceedings would be in camera. Certainly, every time we have discussed the report, the proceedings have been in camera, but I would like to follow up on the points made by Senator McElman and check whether our signs say that they are. Furthermore, if it is our general understanding that they are in camera, we must ensure in the future, when the Notice of Meetings of Committees comes out, that it states the meeting is to be in camera.

Senator McElman: Perhaps I could add one further point to the discussion, and that is that the same convention, if you will, applies to the meetings of the Standing Senate Commitee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. I have attended meetings of that committee since the mid-to-late 1960s, and have yet to recall an occasion when it was stated that the meeting was either in camera or not in camera. Certainly, the sign outside the door states that the meeting is in camera and convention requires that it be in camera. I would judge that it would require an actual order of the Senate or of the committee itself in order to hold a meeting that was not in camera. I would suggest to honourable senators, and particularly to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, that if it is now proposed to hold a meeting of that committee to conduct business of the nature that the committee was then conducting, it would require a motion of that committee—or indeed of the Senate—to change that convention before an open meeting could be held.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I am very happy to hear the views expressed here today. As I said before, I think the points raised must be clarified. I am not sure that I have heard spelled out the convention that Senator McElman has mentioned. However, the point he is making is certainly a valid one and should be clarified.

Senator Godfrey: It has been drawn to my attention that Rule 73 specifically states:

> Members of the public may attend any meeting of a committee of the Senate, unless the committee otherwise orders.

I would suggest, therefore, that there must be a specific order that meetings be held in camera.

Senator Frith: What is your question, Senator Godfrey?

Senator Godfrey: I do not have a specific question. I am merely participating in the debate on this subject.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON, NOVA SCOTIA—COAL—DONKIN MINE AND PRINCE MINE

Hon. John M. Macdonald: I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in regard to a delayed answer which he gave on Tuesday last in response to a question asked by Senator Muir with respect to Donkin Mine and Prince Mine. In his reply, the deputy leader said:

> It is anticipated that this tunnel-boring machine will complete its driveage to the coal face by the fall of 1984. At that time, additional samples of the coal will be taken and, following the results of the testing and the marketability of the coal, a decision will be made on whether or not to develop a coal mine at this site.

Honourable senators, I may say that in Cape Breton it was understood that the decision had already been made in 1981 to develop a coal mine at this site, and it comes as quite a surprise for me to learn that such a decision has not yet been made. I would, therefore, ask the deputy leader to look into this further to establish just what has been done; what testing was carried out as to the extent of the coal field and the marketability of that coal before this decision was made in 1981.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Macdonald was good enough to give me notice of this question earlier so that I have had an opportunity to try to clarify what is meant by the word "decision" in the earlier answer. The information I have obtained is that, indeed as Senator Macdonald has said, a decision was made with reference to what was Phase I and Phase II, which involved a substantial amount of mining work and a substantial amount of funds.

That decision was for Phase I and Phase II. Before proceeding to Phase III, the information from Phases I and II has to be gathered, namely, the testing and marketability of the coal. If it turns out that the marketability and testing of the coal as a result of mining operations which have taken place to date does or does not justify the establishment of a mine at that location, then a further decision is definitely required to proceed or not, accordingly, to later phases.

I shall send a copy of Debates of the Senate to the corporations and to the minister responsible, and ask if I have accurately stated the situation. I will make a further statement after I have heard from them.

Senator Macdonald: At the same time perhaps the acting leader could refer the officials of those corporations and the minister to a news release issued by the Honourable Allan MacEachen dated February 6, 1981.

Senator Frith: I will see that the entire transcript of our discussion is sent.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INCOME TAX TREATMENT OF MEMBERS OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRAS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Acting Leader of the Government, which he can take as notice.

The Department of National Revenue has recently ruled that the members of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra are to be considered as employees and not independent contractors. In the past, they were considered to be independent contractors and could deduct depreciation on their instruments and other items.

It also appears from press reports I have read that the members of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra are treated somewhat differently in that they are considered to be independent contractors, and can take advantage of depreciation, and so forth. I am told that that is because there are different terms in the two agreements.

The information I wish to receive from the Department of National Revenue is as to why there is a difference between the two agreements which results in the members of those two symphony orchestras being treated differently.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall attempt to obtain that information. I clearly understand the point of the question.

I shall also attempt to obtain that information from the Department of National Revenue and not simply refer the question to the minister because, as honourable senators may know, on such questions of interpretation the deputy minister is not strictly subject to the control of the minister.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSIONERS' TRAINING

Question No. 112 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

> Are veterans still entitled to Pensioner's training and if so, how many are under training now and, if not, what is the status of the agency?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs

> Benefits are still available under the Pensioners Training Regulations for those eligible pensioners who by reason of their pensionable and in some cases non-pensionable disability can no longer carry out their normal occupation. Benefits are intended to allow the recipients to further their academic or vocational training.
> Two pensioners are receiving training under this program and at least four other cases are pending.

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 25, 1983 the debate on the motion of Senator Steuart for the second reading of Bill C-163, an act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, Senator Steuart very ably and in concise form outlined in his introduction of Bill C-1 63 its purpose and objective, namely, to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, which will investigate and report on civil aircraft incidents and potentially hazardous situations.

I must say that one of the advantages of assuming the minor responsiblity of replying in a debate on a bill in this chamber is that it allows one to pay particular attention to the concept of a bill. Unlike Bill C-155, the Crow bill, this bill did not raise any controversial debate in the other place nor did it receive much attention. Undoubtedly, it is a very important bill which, by the creation of a safety board, will aid in saving the lives of many.

● (1440)

It is unfortunate, however, that the bill took an undue length of time to reach the stage of second reading, but it should pass within a reasonable length of time after a committee study.

Honourable senators, I should like to digress for a moment and make an observation on parliamentary reform while following through, in capsule form, the history leading to the introduction of this bill and, it is hoped, its eventual passage.

The bill was introduced and given first reading in the other place on June 13, 1983. Second reading of the bill was moved two weeks later by the then Minister of Transport, but only three members participated in the debate. All three opposition members who spoke fully supported the bill and the only criticism, apart from a few minor political darts, involved chastising the minister for not having introduced the bill sooner.

The creation of an independent, multi-modal board for land, sea and air was inspired in 1967. However, it was not until approximately ten years later that the forerunner to this bill, Bill C-40, was introduced and eventually died on the Order Paper.

The commissioning of Mr. Justice Dubin, which resulted in his excellent report, finally started the action that produced the bill we have before us today—16 years later.

The point I want to make is that a bill hailed by one opposition member, Mr. Forrestall—who pushed for such legislation for years by saying, "This bill represents a giant step toward safety in Canadian skies."—took from 1982 to June 1983 to be tabled in the other place. It was debated, with no controversy—I stress that point—and was supported immediately by all parties. It took another four months to reach the report stage, third reading, and eventual introduction in this chamber.

With our pre-study, with the expert evidence given to us by the most efficient witnesses, and with a few days of clause-by-clause study, we will be able to have third reading, notwithstanding the fact that much of the leg work and the nitty-gritty details were looked after in the other place.

The point I should like to make is this. Why should the parliamentary process in the other place be so untidy and inefficient that it takes years to pass a bill which so affects the citizens of our country? I have the following question to ask the government: Which end of the building or which of the two chambers needs reform?

Honourable senators, Mr. Forrestall who introduced a multi-modal bill in the 1960s, when welcoming the legislation, said the following in the other place:

> I hope that it will provide the experience to form the basis of similar pieces of legislation dealing with maritime and surface transportation matters. To do anything less on our part would be irresponsible.

I agree with him. He went on to say that Mr. Justice Dubin, in recommending this step, suggested that similar legislation respecting the other two modes of transportation might produce the same type of thrust. He said that he did not want to wait another 12 years for similar legislation and did not see any reason why they could not establish immediately an independent body which would have that first responsibility in all areas.

Dealing with the particular details of the bill, the creation of a Canadian Aviation Safety Board will separate the government portion of the aviation safety system into two parts. The Department of Transport will make regulations, enforce them, and carry out the day-to-day supervision of the safety of aviation. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board will analyze the system, largely through the investigation of accidents and incidents. From its analysis, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board will make recommendations to the Department of Transport and others, and these recommendations will be made public. It is clear that this separation will remove any suspicion that accident investigations might be compromised if they become critical of the regulatory agency. That is a positive step.

Possibly even more important than the prevention of a situation where conflict of interest might exist is the creation of some new authorities. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board will be able to take some major steps toward accident prevention. The provision that will allow the board to protect the identity of those who report incidents, or near accidents, will bring forth new safety information before accidents occur. The sections of privilege that provide certain protection to cockpit voice recordings, air traffic control recordings, and witness statements seem to represent a careful balance among the interests of the investigators, the regulators, the police and the courts. They seem to provide enough protection to ensure information is forthcoming, while providing the justice system discretion in the disclosure of much of the privileged information.

Yesterday, members of the committee visited the laboratory at the Canadian Aviation Safety Bureau and we were really impressed with the capability that we have in Canada—something that should be broadcast across the country—of ensuring safety and with the inspections they do of critical parts of airplanes.

The Canadian Aviation Safety Board is proposed as an open agency. It will have broad powers to investigate aviation safety problems, hold public hearings, and make its reports public. It may reconsider its findings at any time and will be obliged to do so if significant new information comes to light. It will not be a judicial or quasi-judicial body, and it will not apportion blame. It will investigate; it will determine contributing factors and causes of safety problems; and it will make recommendations for their correction.

The bill brings together the interests of many groups. This was shown by the many groups who appeared before the committee. It can probably be criticized by any of those groups because particular interests are not reflected strongly enough. The pilots may argue that the protection of cockpit voice recordings is not sufficient. The courts and coroners may feel their interest could be better reflected. The legal community may see defects from its point of view, and even the safety investigators may feel their powers should be stronger. The general, widespread support for the bill, combined with some feelings of the interested groups that their interests could be reflected more strongly, tells us a great deal. It tells us that this is good legislation; it is wanted by the public and the aviation industry. It also tells us that compromises, which give fair and balanced consideration to various interests, have been made and that no interest dominates the tone of the bill, save one—the interest in advancing aviation safety in Canada.

I hope that all members of this committee will agree with the importance of ensuring the safety of aviation in Canada. I am convinced that Bill C-163, which is to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, is a vital element in the improvement of aviation safety. I recommend that it be referred to committee for clause-by-clause study.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Steuart speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, I agree with what Senator Marshall has said. Today, in committee, we received representations from the Canadian Bar Association who, for some strange reason, had not made their objections to this bill known to the House of Commons committee. However, in general, as Senator Marshall has pointed out, they wanted to see the bill passed, although they would like some amendments to be made to it. It was suggested by officials of the department that, since this is a new body, many of the things they suggested might be incorporated in regulations when the board is set up. Certainly, the general feeling on all sides is that the legislation is a great step forward, and we will endeavour to have it passed as soon as possible.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Senator Langlois is not present in the chamber at the moment and he asked me to mention that we shall be meeting at 8 p.m. on Tuesday for clause-by-clause study.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Senator Steuart moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 2)—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 25, the debate on the motion of Senator Barrow for the second reading of Bill C-168, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreement Act (No. 2).

[Senator Marshall.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, although I cannot present myself as an expert in international finance, from what little I know about the subject, I recommend this bill to the chamber and intend to vote for it.

It is called a bill to amend the Bretton Woods Agreement Act, but, to me, it is really a bill to strengthen the International Monetary Fund because the main thrust of the bill is to increase Canada's support for the International Monetary Fund by about 46 per cent—that is, almost 50 per cent—over the level of support at the present time.

A very ingenious method of financing has been evolved for this kind of governmental support for the IMF whereby the cash draw is relatively small, 25 per cent. "Relative" is a good word because, in my opinion, $300 million is not small in any sense. The remainder is financed by a non-interest-bearing note. Pretty neat!

I am not exactly sure where the liability shows on the books of the country for the contingent liability of 75 per cent of the total amount. The mover of the bill might satisfy my curiosity on that point when he speaks.

I support the bill because I think it very important that the International Monetary Fund should be seen to have the support of Canada, not only in the figurative sense but in an actual sense as well. That institution today is the main bulwark of the international financing system.

Everyone knows that many countries have enormous international debts, some of which are not easily repaid. In fact, in some instances the interest alone is not easily repaid. The International Monetary Fund has the responsibility of trying to provide a lead for sorting out the bad debts of the world, so to speak, and put them on a basis within which we can hope for an orderly liquidation of the position. I am not optimistic that, in many cases, these debts will be repaid in my lifetime, but if they can be kept in good standing in the books of the financial organizations of the world, that would be a good thing.

One thing that bothers me about this whole transaction is that some of the private lenders seem to be asking for rates of interest on the new loans they are making, along with the International Monetary Fund, which really reflect the risk they are being asked to accept in this connection. In normal circumstances, that would be quite understandable, but, as the banking system as a whole has some responsibility for the problems we are facing and has secured good rates of return on previous loans to the countries now in difficulty, it seems to me rather questionable that they should continue to ask for rates which do not take into account the realities of the situation and, thus, make it all the more difficult for debtor countries to meet their obligations.

As I began by saying that I am not an expert in international finance, I warn the chamber that my opinions on this subject may be entirely uninformed. However, I cannot help but observe that the international banking system has a considerable responsibility to respond to the leadership of the IMF and to help maintain the creditworthiness of the nations of the world that need help.

In my opinion, this bill is a definite vote of confidence in the International Monetary Fund. It provides a very considerable increase in the resources of that fund; and that is a good thing to do. The fund is pretty tough sometimes—and, I am inclined to think, too tough in some instances. That may result in social problems in the countries concerned, but it is trying to do its best and, on the whole, it is doing a good job.

I think the request of the government that the Parliament of Canada should second the efforts of the International Monetary Fund by authorizing this increase in our support to that institution is justified and should be supported.

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I have to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Barrow speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-168.

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Roblin for his remarks on second reading of this bill. I must admit that I do not know where these reserves are shown in the financial accounts of the government. I understand that these transactions will affect the composition of our reserves but that, in total, they will be unchanged.

That is the only comment I wish to make on Senator Roblin's remarks.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Barrow: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, on the point of order that is being raised here, would it be advisable to have the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce take a quick look at this bill? In view of the program that was outlined in the chamber earlier today, I believe we have time to do so.

Hearing from a witness who understands the full workings of this financial system and who can deal with the questions I have raised and some others that might be addressed to him, would give me an opportunity to complete my education on the subject.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no objection, if the committee chairman and, of course, Senator Roblin, who is a member of that committee, feel that they have the time to do it, in view of the schedule we have discussed.

I hope honourable senators will take into account the fact that we shall be required to "man" the house, in a non-generic sense. Perhaps I should say "person" the house.

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will be meeting, but, apart from that, I see no reason why the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee should not also sit.

Senator Barrow: I have no objection to having this bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and I so move.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (NO. 3)—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 25, the debate on the motion of Senator Frith for the second reading of Bill C-169, to amend the Canada Elections Act (No. 3).

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, this is the third occasion during the present Parliament on which I have spoken to amendments to the Canada Elections Act.

I and other senators have urged the three parties represented in the other place to complete their study of the act and to address, with legislation, precisely the problems addressed in this bill. Therefore, I am happy and relieved to see Bill C-169 before us.

I am also relieved of the necessity for making a very long speech because of the excellent presentation of the Deputy Leader of the Government who sponsored this bill on Tuesday last.

My party supports the bill. We will co-operate in its swift passage through this house. Indeed, there may even be some urgency in regard to it. I could not help but note in the Gallup Poll published today that the Liberal Party has increased its standing from 23 per cent to 26 per cent. With such a dramatic increase in their support and with such startling momentum behind them, I am encouraged to think that they may be encouraged to believe that their prospects will never be better and that they should go to the people as soon as possible.

• (1500)

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Don't hold your breath.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, without these amendments there would be very serious constraints placed upon the ability of our parties and our candidates to wage effective campaigns at the next general election. Take, for example, the national campaigns of our political parties. In 1980, the legal spending limit of our national parties was approximately $4.5 million. Because these spending limits are based on the number of voters on the preliminary list of electors, the limit in a 1984 election, without these amendments, would be approximately $4.9 million, an increase of only 8 per cent. It will be obvious to all honourable senators that between 1980 and 1984 the cost of running a national campaign will have increased by far more than 8 per cent. A national media campaign—one involving television, radio, newspapers and a bit of outdoor advertising—such as that which cost my party some $2.6 million in 1980 would cost some $3.7 million in 1984, an increase of over 40 per cent. In 1980, the travel costs of the Progressive Conservative Party—that is to say, the cost of the travel of the national leader and of other spokesmen for the national party—came to approximately $639,000. I have no doubt that a good 40 per cent would have to be added to that amount in order to run the same tour for the leader and the national party campaigners in 1984.

I am sure that there is an obvious need to increase the spending limit for the national campaigns. The formula agreed upon and incorporated in this bill has the effect of raising the spending limit by some 30 per cent. This is not at all excessive, in view of the inflation that we have known in this country since 1980. Indeed, while I do not have the statistics in front of me, I think I can say with some confidence that the cost of media advertising, and certainly the cost of air travel, will probably have increased faster than has the consumer price index, in general.

This bill also raises the legal limits on spending by candidates. The formula remains the same, but the bill will index the spending limit to the consumer price index, going back to 1981. I can underline to honourable senators the need for this amendment by describing what the situation would be if this amendment were not passed in two ridings that I have examined. Take, for example, the constituency of Brampton-Georgetown near Toronto. The spending limit of candidates in that constituency, in 1980, was some $33,000. Without this amendment, the spending limit in a 1984 general election in Brampton-Georgetown would be approximately $40,000. The same campaign which cost the Progessive Conservative candidate $32,000 in 1980 would, however, cost some $44,000 in 1984. It can be seen that, without this amendment, if the candidate tried to run the same campaign he would spend 112 per cent of the legal limit.

Take, as the next example, the constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap in the interior of British Columbia. The spending limit in 1980 was approximately $28,000. Without this amendment, the spending limit in a 1984 general election in this constituency would be $31,000. However, the same campaign that cost the Progressive Conservative candidate $22,000 in 1980 would cost over $31,000 in 1984. Without the amendments to this bill, if the candidate ran the same campaign in 1984 that he ran in 1980 it would cost him 102 per cent of his spending limit.

The amendment which would limit the reimbursement to candidates to a maximum of 50 per cent of their allowable expenses also makes good sense, in my opinion. The reimbursement has been based upon the cost of a first class mailing. Because of the large increase in postal rates in this country in recent years, candidates in some constituencies would, without this amendment, be reimbursed close to 100 per cent of their allowable expenses. Again, I can refer to the two constituencies I have examined. In Brampton-Georgetown, the reimbursement was some $19,000 in 1980. Without this amendment, the reimbursement would be some $38,000 in 1984, which is very close to the spending limit of $40,000.

In Kamloops-Shuswap, in 1980, the Progressive Conservative candidate was reimbursed some $14,000. Without this amendment, his reimbursement in 1984 would be $25,000, which is, again, quite close to the allowable spending limit of $31,000.

With regard to the reimbursement to national parties, I am very happy that a new formula has been found. Previously, as honourable senators know, the national parties were reimbursed 50 per cent of the cost of their broadcasting time. Under the proposed amendment, the parties will receive 22.5 per cent of their election expenses. This means that all parties will be treated equally. It also means, however, that we are removing an artificial constraint on the allocation of campaign funds by party strategists. I am very pleased with this.

For the record, I should say that this change will not enrich the political parties very much. They will not be much better off, financially, under the new formula. Without this change, and assuming that in a 1984 campaign the Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals and the New Democrats each spent an amount on electronic media equal to the average of their expenditures on that item in the 1979 and 1980 campaigns, the Conservatives would be reimbursed an amount equal to 21.5 per cent of their total expenses, the Liberals would be reimbursed an amount equal to 21 per cent of their total expenses, and the NDP would be reimbursed an amount equal to 22.5 per cent of their total expenses. This change, therefore, as I have said, does not make the national parties any better off financially, but it does make the system fairer. It removes an anomaly, a constraint, that existed on the allocation of campaign funds.

Finally, with regard to special interest group spending during campaigns, I entirely support the spirit of the proposed amendments. Under these proposed amendments, the special interest group can only incur expenses to promote a candidate or a party if it has the consent of that party or candidate, in which case the party or candidate would have to include those costs as an election expense. That, it seems to me, is only fair. After all, parties and candidates are limited in the amounts they can spend. Their advertising, for example, is limited to a 28-day period during a 50 to 55-day campaign. It seems to me to be unfair that individuals or groups other than political parties should be free to do what parties and candidates cannot do during a campaign. Therefore, in my view, these amendments represent a step in the right direction. They will not eliminate entirely—they will not eliminate at all—the ability that special groups have, by virtue of the expenditure of huge amounts of money, to force their issues on public attention during a writ period, and their ability to distract the campaign even while not explicitly promoting a particular candidate or party.

Federal election campaigns last 50 to 55 days, and, in my view, it is right and in the interests of the democratic process to allow the parties and the candidates to articulate their priorities and national policies, and to seek the support of the people, as free as possible of interference from special lobbies. During that brief period, it seems to me to be not unreasonable to take some steps to ensure that the grinding of axes does not drown out proper dialogue between the parties, the candidates and the electors.

● (1510)

Notwithstanding the amendments to which I have just referred, we shall have to continue to be extremely alert to these dangers. On the previous occasions when I and my colleagues spoke to the Canada Elections Act, we made other suggestions for reform and amendment which are not contained in the present bill. I again urge the government, on behalf of myself and my colleagues, to give some thought to those matters. In particular, I suggest that those responsible will profit from reading the speech of my colleague, Senator Macdonald, of Wednesday, May 26, 1982, in which he referred to a number of matters, including the simplification of proxy voting, which is an important subject that should be considered soon by the government and by the ad hoc committee of the various parties.

With those few words, I support the bill and will vote for it, and my party is happy to co-operate in its passage through this house.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: I, together with other honourable senators, have benefited from this legislation having passed the experienced and critical eye of Senator Murray. His optique on several of the clauses in the bill was most helpful and edifying. I support everything he said, and by way of adding something to the force and logic of his submissions on the point dealing with the limits, may I say that in some cases—for example, in York-Scarborough—the reimbursement would exceed the amount that could actually be spent under the legislation.

I also wish to add something for the record in reply to some of the questions that were raised.

[Translation]

Yesterday, Senator Deschatelets asked two questions. First:

> Is there anything in the Bill that would prevent a new political organization—the Quebec Nationalist Party, for instance—from having the same advantages as other parties?

Further to the details I gave yesterday, the answer is as follows: No, not at all, because this Bill does not change in any way the rules governing the registration of political parties. The Nationalist Party—or even the Rhinocéros Party—will have the same advantages as any other party, namely a refund of 22.5 per cent of election expenses, provided they are not less than 10 per cent of the limit on that party's election expenses.

In addition, any registered party may hold fund-raising campaigns and issue receipts for income tax deductions.

Here is Senator Deschatelets' second question:

> Does the Bill close the door to other political parties that might be formed for the next election?

Here is the answer: No, as I said before, this Bill has no effect on the rules governing the registration of political parties. Therefore, in accordance with the existing rules, any group seeking recognition as a political party must abide by the provisions of Section 13 of the Canada Elections Act, which include filing an application for registration with the Chief Electoral Officer and running official candidates in fifty ridings at the following general election.

So, any group that wants to form a political party has only to file the required documents and run a minimum of fifty candidates.

Here is the third question:

> Does the Bill contain a definition of "political party"?

No, there is no such definition in the Bill. There is, however, such a definition in Section 13 of the Canada Elections Act.

In conclusion, I should like to state that the contents of the articles published recently in French newspapers following certain statements made by Mr. Léger are not only inaccurate but altogether erroneous. The amendments before us were proposed in the 1979 and 1980 statutory reports of the Chief Electoral Officer and have been the subject of public discussions ever since. None of them prevents the establishment of new parties, quite the contrary!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 25, 1983, consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the subject matter of the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983, which was tabled on Thursday, October 13, 1983.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, it may be a fortunate or a strange coincidence that like Senator Murray, who announced our agreement on a measure concerning the Canada Elections Act, I wish to announce that we shall be joining our other colleagues in adopting the resolution before the Senate on a constitutional amendment.

I can only conclude that our federal institutions are in fine fettle, both from the point of view of the electoral process and their progress in our federation.

That being said, I want to point out first of all, and I believe I just made this clear, that the purpose of my comments will not be to register or demonstrate dissent with respect to the proposal before this House today, or the report of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs presented by Senator Neiman last week.

Therefore, my comments will chiefly concern, not the substance of this measure, but the procedure followed to develop the Constitutional amendments we are being asked to consider and which will finally lead to their implementation.

These are the first constitutional amendments we have been asked to adopt since patriation of the Constitution in 1982. I feel we should have an exchange of views on the procedure being followed, so that at this experimental stage, as it were, of the new Constitution Act, 1982, we can develop and establish mechanisms and practices that will be compatible as much as possible with our federalism and federal institutions.

The Committee's report stresses that the proposed amendment to the Constitution Act, 1982, which the Senate is now considering, flows from the Accord signed at the Constitutional Conference of March 15 and 16, 1983, in Ottawa. I am not questioning the accuracy of the report's statement.

Nevertheless, I feel that some distinctions must be made according to the kind of amendments being proposed.

There are, in fact, two categories of amendment. There are amendments aimed at guaranteeing that further constitutional conferences will be held on the issue of native rights.

There are also amendments that are concerned either with the substance of those rights or with identifying the persons or groups to which those rights will apply. Both types of amendments flow from one Accord, that is, they all have their origin in the Accord.

However, concerning substantive amendments which expand the concept of rights protected under the Constitution, to include, and I quote:

> Rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired . . .

That is the end of the first part of the quote. There are also those guaranteeing > —aboriginal and treaty rights equally to male and female persons.

These substantive amendments may be said to flow from the 1983 Conference, the negotiations that followed and the resulting agreement. However, the amendments concerning future constitutional conferences may be said to arise from a provision of the Constitution Act, 1982, which I have always found paradoxical.

I am referring to Section 54, Part IV of the Constitution Act, 1982, that provides for a constitutional conference, and I quote:

> Part IV is repealed a year after the effective date of the present Part and this section may be repealed and this Act may be renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of those parts and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

It was to be expected in 1982 that a single conference would not be sufficient to settle the problems that were mandatory items on the agenda of the scheduled conference, and I am referring to the determination and definition of native rights.

The fact that not all these problems were resolved at the Conference in March 1983, automatically led to a Constitutional amendment that would guarantee in the Constitution that further conferences would be held on the subject. There was nothing to negotiate; it flowed more or less automatically from Section 54 of the 1982 Act, which I have always found rather odd. I fail to see why, at that point, it was not decided to institutionalize the Constitutional Conference on a more or less temporary basis. Fortunately, Section 5 of the Resolution now proposes to amend the Constitution Act, 1982, as follows, and I quote:

> The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after Section 54 thereof, the following section: "54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987."

I would like to point out a small technical detail. Section 54 has not been replaced. Section 54(1) has been added, and the old Section 54 remains in the text, although it no longer has any significance. To the ordinary reader, this seems rather bizarre. Section 54(1) arises from the same concept as the old section. It provides that it will be repealed on a given date, namely April 18, 1987, with Part IV as it applies to constitutional conferences on the matter of native rights.

What are we going to do if further conferences of the same kind are scheduled after this date? Shall we go on adding further sections providing for further constitutional conferences, and so piling section upon section? Surely this is a curious kind of legislative editing!

Incidentally, to refer to considerations more significant than that legal technicality, there is another question which comes up and which bears on the contents, namely the agenda of the conferences. In the old Part IV, it was provided:

> (a) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

In the corresponding subsection of new Part IV.1, which is tacked on to the old one—if I may use that expression—which is still part of the text, the words "including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada" have vanished. Those words have been taken out of the new version. Why such a change? Of course, the meaning of the two texts may very well be the same. The expression "constitutional matters" may have a wide connotation, particularly in the 1982 version which was perhaps nothing more than an explanation of sorts. There is a legislative axiom to the effect that the legislator does not do anything without reason. That being so, some people will indeed wonder why it was decided to do away with the specific reference to the identification and definition of the rights of the aboriginal peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada.

I just happened to meet some of the representatives of the aboriginal groups and I did ask them why this specific reference to the definition of the rights of aboriginal peoples had been taken out. It would seem that many other issues could be raised at those conferences. They did confirm to me that, in their opinion, there was indeed a much wider scope. Still, whatever speculations can be made about their origin or the questions that can be raised in that respect, all the amendments have one thing in common: they stem from the March 15, 1983 agreement.

I think that two points can be made in that respect. First, about the signatories to the agreement, second about the more or less urgent decision-making nature of the agreement. With respect to the "signatories to the agreement", it must be recalled that not only the first ministers—except the Premier of Quebec, but that was nothing more than an incident—but also the representatives of the aboriginal peoples signed the agreement. This is a significant gain for the representatives of the native peoples of Canada, as defined by section 35(2) of the Constitution Act of 1982, namely the Indians, Inuits and Metis of Canada.

What was guaranteed by the Constitutional Act of 1982, and what is still guaranteed to the representatives of the native peoples by this resolution is that they are invited to take part in any discussion of constitutional matters that directly concern them at the conferences during which such issues are on the agenda. At the last conference those representatives were parties to the agreement. The draft Resolution was subsequently put before the Canadian legislatures, both provincial and federal. This, in my opinion, is a precedent that goes well beyond whatever is guaranteed by the Constitutional Act. It goes as far as recognizing in the facts that there must be not just the participation of the representatives of the native peoples in the discussions, but also their acceptance of possible changes to the Constitution, where such amendments deal with matters of direct concern to them. Again, this is a significant gain for the native peoples although as yet they have received very little attention. But their representatives certainly have taken good note of them.

In a paradoxical way, the signing by both parties of the March 1983 Agreement has somehow developed a new definition of two Canadas: the Canada of the Premiers on the one hand, and the Canada of the native peoples on the other, both being considered as collective parties. This unprecedented event must be emphasized, not to be questioned but to be clearly realized. There will be other conferences and other issues of a more complex nature than those actually considered during the March Conference will have to be dealt with, and agreements will have to be reached. This is the point I would like to make. I would not put that much emphasis on the implications of the March 1983 Agreement if it were not binding in nature. By raising the issue, we come upon a problem of a much more general nature, as the Committee has found out; some witnesses were under the impression that the amendment proposal should be adopted by the signatory governments before December 31, 1983.

Such is not the case. And I am still quoting from the report of the Committee.

Because the Agreement merely provides that the amendment should be tabled before the legislative bodies concerned before December 31st, since the Premiers cannot bind their respective Parliaments or Legislative Assemblies by an agreement or understanding requiring legislative sanction.

Let us put aside for the moment, in the passage I have just quoted, the question as to when the proposed constitutional amendments can be enacted. I shall come back to this later on. It seems to me that the problem concerns the fact that only Parliament and the legislatures are empowered to amend the Constitution.

How can Parliament and the legislatures exercise their exclusive jurisdiction when an agreement such as that of March 1983 is signed during a constitutional conference? How can we, as a specific entity, the Senate, which is part of Parliament, move amendments to a draft resolution which was the subject of an agreement, even if these amendments seem obvious and even if they are minor? I must point out in passing that there is at least the amendment dealing with the equality of sexes with regard to the recognition of native rights which does not reflect the views of most of the groups who appeared before the committee. If members of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs were to follow the views of the witnesses they heard and who, incidentally, had not had the opportunity to appear before the corresponding Committee of the House since the matter was disposed of very quickly in the Commons; there was if I am not mistaken, only one day when witnesses could be heard. Our own committee heard a much greater number of witnesses, and to say the very least, there was no consensus among the native groups as far as this substantive amendment we are asked to approve is concerned. My intention is not to question this amendment, but simply to point out the procedural problem.

This amendment was proposed following an agreement, but we can see that, substantively, the groups most directly concerned have certainly not reached a consensus which would perhaps be appropriate to mention in an amendment. Would we then be asking for the whole process which led to this constitutional amendment to start all over again?

We only have to ask these questions to see that there is a problem. The difficulty does not only relate to the present situation, but it will exist every time a constitutional amendment is proposed in the future, every time there is an agreement on a constitutional amendment between the various ministers or levels of government before it is introduced either in the Senate, in the Commons or in a legislature.

This would be a very good example of what Professor Smiley calls the "executive federalist".

This brings me to ask the following question: Is it necessary or even timely to have an official agreement at the intergovernment or executive level, every time a constitutional amendment is proposed, an agreement which freezes in a way the entire process afterwards and therefore the legislative process itself?

I feel that this is an important issue, and that this House could play a positive role in initiating, through its Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, a study on various alternatives to deal with constitutional amendments. I have no solution to the problem I have raised, to the dilemma which I hope I have brought out. However, this is a matter which this House itself could investigate. Nothing would prevent it from taking such action. Moreover, I think that it would do a great service to the Canadian federation if it undertook such a review that touches the very foundation of our system.

At this initial stage, we are getting used to the new sovereignty that we gained through patriation. At this stage in our constitutional development, it is important to establish some really valid procedures for the future, which is reason enough to give to this issue all the attention required.

And now—I am sorry to see that I have run over the 20 minute limit which I had set for myself. However, I will not be much longer now.

I now come to the issue which I brought up a while ago concerning the date on which the resolution before us could come into force.

I suggest it could not come into force before May 31, 1984 for the following reason:

First of all, the Canadian Constitution Act, 1982, states and I quote:

> A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1)—

That is the subsection which defines the necessary majority.

> —before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

The proclamation cannot take place within the first year unless each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent. What does that mean? It means that a mere abstention by a province is equivalent to a suspensive veto, for there is no room in this text for abstention, each province having to indicate its assent or dissent for the proclamation to take place within a year.

On this basis, I find that during the first year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure, an amendment to the Constitution could not be proclaimed unless—and I refer again to the previously quoted subsection—in this case, the legislative assembly of Nova Scotia adopted its resolution on May 31, 1983. It is therefore that date—there is another clause which provides that this action could have been initiated by the Senate, the House of Commons or a legislative assembly—which determines the beginning of the year during which the said proclamation cannot take place. Therefore the proclamation giving force to the resolution before us could not take place until June 1, 1984.

I put the question I just raised before the Committee, concerning the information obtained from the Department of Justice. Madam Chairman told me that the Department of Justice was not interpreting matters the same way, and that the proclamation could obtain as soon there is a majority as defined in this case by Section 38(1), as soon as seven provinces totalling 50 per cent of the population have agreed.

This is no doubt open to question. I am still convinced of my own interpretation; but since this is open to question. I would suggest that the Committee attempt to clarify the matter and that the problem be referred for consideration to the Standing Committee on Judicial and Constitutional Affairs. The Committee in this case will hear not only experts from the Department of Justice but also experts from outside the federal Public Service.

We have learned on the Special Joint Committee of 1980 that where legal matters were concerned the experts from the Department of Justice were not always right, and there some merit in obtaining the views of outside experts. On this specific item, this is what I would suggest, that the Committee broaden the pool of expertise it will be making use of.

This may be of significant importance politically, and I put politically between brackets because, as I found out on the Committee on Senate Reform, some of the witnesses, especially from the native groups, seem to be taking for granted that there will be a first Constitutional Conference next March.

If my reading is right the March Conference—and there is nothing to preclude it will be held —will not be the Constitutional Conference provided for in the resolution which we will be adopting; it will be a pre-constitutional conference. If unfortunately I happen to be right, the groups affected would have reason for concern.

To conclude these comments, honourable senators, they were intended as I said at the outset neither to question nor to delay the passing of the resolution now before us. Their only purpose is what I would call the apprenticeship of the Constitution Act of 1982.

It was in that frame of mind that I took it upon myself to make those few comments in this House. Whatever questions we may have about various issues, in the present circumstances we in this House have not much choice but to adopt this resolution without amendments.

In any event, there can be no argument about the need to convene more constitutional conferences with a view to identifying and drafting other constitutional amendments concerning the aboriginal peoples. The need is there.

As to the substantive amendments, I imagine that even if they may be ambiguous and fail to reflect the perception—or, at least, the opinions which are expressed by the groups directly involved -future conferences will lift the veil of uncertainty and there will be a good many more issues to clear up afterwards.

I willingly accept the conclusion and the recommendation of the report of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I will support the adoption of the proposed resolution.

Once again, it seems to me that at the stage where we are, this House has a kind of privileged responsibility to take a close look and see how things are made. When facing a dead end or other difficulties, we might be well advised to study the procedure—it may be nothing more than a question of procedure and people often underestimate the procedure—but in this case it is important.

● (1540)

We ought to make a deeper analysis and take the initiative so that the precedents which will be set this year and in the years to come will not be a strait jacket for our constitutional descendants, so to speak, but rather the instruments of the progress and the positive evolution of our federation.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Neiman, debate adjourned.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-149 WITHDRAWN

On the motion:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-149, intituled: "An Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that Motion No. 2, standing in my name, be withdrawn because I do not see any need for it.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have received a late bulletin indicating that the opposition parties in the other place are raising points of order so that Bill C-155 has not yet been called, and that if it is not called by six o'clock one of the three days we talked about earlier will have been washed out.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 1, 1983, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-163

Thursday, October 27, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to which was referred the subject-matter of Bill C-163, intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 28, 1983, examined the subject-matter of the said Bill.

Your Committee also wishes to report that the Minister of Transport, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, appeared before the Committee and responded extensively to a substantial number of questions.

Your Committee received submissions from the Canadian Bar Association, Air and Space Law Section and Canadian Owners & Pilots Association, held four meetings and heard evidence from the following witnesses: from Transport Canada: Messrs. J. Wilkins, Associate Deputy Minister; B. Carr, policy analyst. From Aviation Safety Bureau (Transport Canada): Messrs. K. Johnson, Director; R. McLeod, Acting Chief, Aviation Safety Engineering; M. Vermij, Head of the Electrical Mechanical Analysis section. Mr. Mike Poole, Consultant Engineer. From Paterson, MacDougall, Barristers & Solicitors: Mr. D. Bruce MacDougall, Q.C. From The Air Transport Association of Canada: Messrs. G. Lindsay, Vice President Government Affairs and G. Capern, Senior Vice-President.

Your Committee also visited the Laboratory of the Air Safety Bureau located at the Ottawa International Airport. During this visit the Members of the Committee were shown the different sections of the Laboratory where they witnessed various experiments on projects undertaken by the Air Safety Bureau and discussed the Air Safety investigative process.

Your Committee, therefore, proposes to resume its study as soon as the Bill has been given second reading in the Senate and referred to this Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

LÉOPOLD LANGLOIS,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 1, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at 3.30 o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

If leave is granted, I will give an explanation of this motion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, leave may be granted, but I am not so sure that I approve of the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if Senator Roblin does not approve of the motion, then there has obviously been a breakdown in the hurried communications earlier this afternoon, because I thought he had consulted with the chairman of the committee and that 3.30 p.m. was a satisfactory time for the committee to meet. It was hoped that the committee could meet at 4 o'clock in order to consider the bill on the Bretton Woods Agreements. Senator Roblin pointed out that the Subcommittee on National Defence was also scheduled to meet at 4 o'clock. It will be remembered that Senator Roblin is a member of the Subcommittee on National Defence and that he has spoken on the Bretton Woods Agreements. That is why I felt that the scheduling of the committee meeting should be changed to 3.30. I realize that, if the Senate were sitting at that time, Senator Roblin would still face the problem of having to have someone replace him as Acting Leader of the Opposition. In any event, that is the explanation.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, although it is true that I would like to attend both of these committee meetings, that is not the reason why I have some views on the subject. We must consider the interests of the Senate rather than the convenience of any one person. I would agree with my honourable friend, however, that the original plan called for two committees to be meeting at the same time, and for one of them, namely, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to be meeting even though the Senate might also be sitting. I appreciate the efforts that have been made by the chairman of the committee and by the leader of the house to separate the times at which the two committees will meet so that one meeting will begin at 3.30 and the other at 4 o'clock. However, the Banking Committee will still meet while the Senate is sitting. That is my objection to this arrangement.

What is even more curious is the fact that our program all day tomorrow seems remarkably light. There is practically nothing going on tomorrow afternoon. It is curious that we cannot arrange our affairs so that committees do not meet when the Senate is sitting and that, when they do meet, the times of meeting be separated whenever possible.

I suggest that we simply agree that the Banking Committee should meet at 3.30, provided that the Senate has risen, in which case we could probably, in a half an hour or so, dispose of whatever business is to be dealt with. The other committee could then meet at 4 o'clock. Perhaps that might be a practical way to get around this dilemma. I would urge my honourable friend not to ask us to authorize the meeting of any of these committees while the Senate is sitting, especially when tomorrow is almost a free day and all committee meetings could be scheduled for a time when the house is not sitting.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Roblin when he says that we want to suit not just the convenience but also the availability of senators to attend these committee meetings. I want to propose a motion that will bring about that result. I invite Senator Barrow, the chairman of the committee, to speak if he wishes to add anything.

If, by 3.30, the Senate has risen, then it is merely a matter of giving notice that the committee will meet when the Senate rises, since we do not need a motion for a committee to meet when the Senate rises. I ask Senator Barrow if that is a possible solution, or whether he would rather schedule the committee meeting for tomorrow, as put forward by Senator Roblin.

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators, I had made arrangements with the Director of the International Finance Division of the Finance Department to be here at 4 o'clock. I have just changed that time to 3.30. I think it would be more appropriate that the committee meet today at 3.30, or when the Senate rises.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, since no authority is needed to schedule a committee meeting when the Senate rises, I will, with leave, withdraw the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next, November 3, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps I can express an attempt at understanding where we might be with reference to the famous Bill C-155. The progress of the debate on the Crow is, of course, well known to most honourable senators. Honourable senators will recall the situation there. Three days of debate were allocated, and one day of debate took place last week. Two days have been set aside for the report stage and one day for debate on third reading. No debate on the bill was held last Friday. I should correct myself. There was no debate on the bill last week. The bill was first called yesterday and debate took place. However, for procedural reasons that I have had explained to me—I believe I understand those reasons, but I would just as soon not attempt to explain here — the other place is not sitting today. That means that so far there has been only one day of debate. Tomorrow is Private Members' Day and it will be necessary to have unanimous consent before there can be debate tomorrow, which would make it the second of the three days allocated for debate. The sounds emanating from the other place are not those of harmonious consent.

• (1410)

Hon. C. William Doody: Is anyone giving any thought to Commons reform?

Senator Frith: I am sure someone is, but please don't ask me who it is at the moment. The other place could conceivably debate the bill on Thursday, for the second day of debate. For the vote on third reading to be held on Friday, unanimous consent would also be required. Under the rules of the house, a vote on a Friday is automatically put off until the Monday. Therefore, a vote on third reading on Friday would require unanimous consent.

The present arrangement is that the other place will not be sitting on Monday. From comments I have received from the other place, it seems unlikely that the Crow bill will be passed in the other place this week. If that is the case, then obviously it will not be passed next week unless unanimous consent is given in the Commons to sit next week—which would require amendment of their rules—and, therefore, in my view there would be no reason for us to sit next week. However, there is always the possibility that something will happen to alter the situation.

If we received the bill on Thursday evening, then we hoped to debate the bill that evening, all day Friday and perhaps on Saturday. However, it now looks as if such a schedule will no longer be necessary.

Senator Roblin and I discussed a schedule of Senate sittings for debating the bill. We were going to ask honourable senators to support that schedule, but it now seems likely that it will not be necessary.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): My honourable friend's analysis is apt and we can rationally assume that we shall not be receiving the Crow bill this week. Therefore debate on the bill will be left until after the forthcoming adjournment. I will not get into a discussion with him about the time allocation order that we are not now going to debate. I was not entirely in agreement with the terms set out and I would have suggested a lengthening of the proposed period. However, that is now not an issue and I shall not pursue it at the present time. It would appear that there is no likehood of Royal Assent before the house resumes on November 14.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDUSTRY

PRATT AND WHITNEY CANADA INC.—PROPOSED GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to direct a question to the Honourable Senator Austin. I am somewhat embarrassed since I am uncertain of my honourable friend's correct description. Can he expand a little on some of the items of news with respect to the government's proposal to assist Pratt and Whitney Canada Inc. with its research and development programs and other associated matters? I refer particularly to the financial relationship between the government and the company. In the press release there is a phrase that I believe covers this matter, namely, that all financial support for engine development projects will be repayable. But when I read the newspaper report on the subject, it says:

> The Government will get a basic 2 per cent royalty on engine sales beyond phased repayments of its contributions of taxpayer funds and geared to each individual program. Such repayments average 30 to 50 per cent of the original contributions, Mr. Lumley said.

Perhaps it is unfair to expect the minister to have the information at his fingertips, but I would like to know what the repayment arrangements are with respect to the Pratt and Whitney grants.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, the reason there is no designation for me in this regard is that I have no ministerial responsibility with respect to the announcement made by the Honourable Ed Lumley over the past week or so on the matter of Pratt and Whitney or, indeed, on the matter of Bell Helicopters. All I can do at this moment is take notice of the honourable senator's question and perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate will respond or, if appropriate, I shall.

Senator Roblin: I thank Senator Austin for his reply.

On the same subject there is another reference that could bear further examination. In the same press release Mr. Lumley says that one of the advantages of this program is that it will increase Canadian content through specific plans to increase purchasing from present Canadian sources, to establish new suppliers in Canada and to develop small business sources of procurement.

I find nothing wrong with that, but can the minister tell me how it will affect established businesses in this industrial sector and, speaking as a senator from Red River, particularly such businesses in the city of Winnipeg? I would like to know the specific programs, how they will affect the aircraft industry in the city of Winnipeg in particular, and also how they will affect similar companies across the country.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I take notice of the question on the same terms as the previous question.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK—VIA RAIL SERVICE

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I address my question to the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure that I speak for thousands of New Brunswickers, particularly those in western New Brunswick and in the industrial city of Saint John, when I say that I was thunderstruck by the blazing headlines in this morning's Citizen which informed us that the government is stuck with the trains after the failure of the Amtrak deal. It appears that a deal was made in 1977 through VIA Rail and the government that Amtrak would purchase two LRC trains at a cost of about $9 million. It now appears that the American company, Amtrak, has reneged on the deal, and that VIA Rail is left with two LRC trains which are not adaptable to use on the Quebec-Windsor corridor. Now the Minister of Transport, Bombardier and others are trying, in vain, to find a buyer in some other country. It is all right to say that these trains were worth $9 million at the time, but the present price is around $12 million to $15 million, despite the fact that we were told, at the time the government cut off the Atlantic between Montreal and Saint John, they were doing it to save money.

● (1420)

Although not as awesome as the Maislin and Canadair investments, this is very serious as far as we in New Brunswick are concerned. How far would that $12 million to $15 million have gone to extend the operation of the all-important Atlantic railway service between Montreal and Halifax or, more particularly, between Montreal and Saint John?

I should like to ask the Acting Leader of the Government how soon we in New Brunswick can find out what this is all about. Who made the boo-boo? In light of what we were told over the past two years with respect to its being too expensive to operate the Atlantic, why is it that officials of VIA Rail, the Department of Transport, or whoever is responsible, are allowed to have sitting outside the Bombardier plant in Montreal two LRC trains at a cost to the taxpayers of $12 million to $15 million? I would like my questions answered soon.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with respect to how soon people in New Brunswick may find out what has taken place here, I can only assure Senator Riley that he will find out as soon as I can find out.

With respect to who made the boo-boo—I do not want it to be taken that one was made—we will no doubt find that out in the answer to the first question, as we will with regard to the senator's other question. I will obtain the information as soon as I can.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

AVAILABILITY OF AUDITED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I notice in the third volume of the Public Accounts of Canada entitled "Financial Statements of Crown Corporations", at page 67 under the heading "Canada Post Corporation", the following comment:

> The audited financial statements for the years ended March 31, 1982 and 1983 were not available at date of printing.

My question for the Deputy Leader of the Government is: Why are these financial statements not available?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know. I will try to find out.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to inquire as to why my honourable friend, Senator Argue, does not remain for Question Period. I have a question to ask him with respect to livestock. Since he is the nearest thing we have to a farmer on the front bench opposite, I am a little disappointed that he is not here to respond to my question.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know whether he has left the chamber temporarily or not. I should say that Senator Olson is pretty near to being a farmer, too.

Hon. Lowell Murray: But he is not near to us.

Senator Frith: That was not the point. The point was that Senator Argue is the senator nearest to being a farmer. Senator Argue left without informing me why he left. Therefore, I shall have to take the question as notice.

Senator Roblin: I must admit that Senator Olson has some of the attributes of a farmer. However, the point is that neither of the ministers are here, so what good does that do?

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

CANADAIR LIMITED—REVIEW OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I am prepared to give a delayed answer which will take a minute or two. Perhaps Senator Argue, who has left his books on his desk, intends to return. If he returns before I have finished giving this answer, then Senator Roblin will be able to put his question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, on October 20 Senator Nurgitz asked me two questions with respect to Canadair and two executive aircraft for which Canadair has legal and financial responsibility. I would like to answer those two questions at this time.

In June of this year, the officials of CDIC who have responsibility for Canadair Limited were informed that, sometime before, the president, Mr. Fred Kearns, had approved lease arrangements with respect to a Citation I and a Citation II. The purpose of these lease arrangements was to provide transportation for officers of Canadair and also for customers of Canadair in order that they could attend meetings or demonstrations in the ordinary course of business of Canadair.

Investigation showed, however, that the transaction of leasing involved employees of Canadair who were requested by the president, Mr. Kearns, to enter into arrangements for the purchase of the Citation I and the Citation II, and then, in turn, these employees were backed by leasing agreements with Canadair.

The investigation also showed that, for these leasing arrangements to be entered into, Canadair's own rules required approval by the board of directors. The board, however, never received notice of either of those transactions and, therefore, did not have the opportunity to consider them. I must therefore advise you that the two transactions constitute a violation of the corporation rules of Canadair and of the authority of the office of president of Canadair. I would point out, however, that in both cases the transactions were directed and made by employees of Canadair at the request of the president of Canadair and, accordingly, the investigation shows that those employees met with their requirements to give notice and to seek the approval of the corporation for those transactions.

Of the two contracts, one was a time payment and the nature of the arrangement was, "We will use your aircraft, and when we do we will reimburse you." The second contract, which was I believe a 40-month contract, remains valid and binding on Canadair and the company must live within the terms of that contract, save and except that Canadair has entered into arrangements with those employees that they will be held harmless but, on the other hand, will receive no gain or benefit from the existence of that contract. Therefore, in answer to your question regarding unjust enrichment, Senator Nurgitz, there certainly will be no benefit provided to those employees.

With respect to that 40-month lease, I would like to advise you that the lease terminates on December 15, 1984. Canadair has the right to purchase that aircraft at any time during the term of the lease for the principal amount then owing to the financing institution, plus $75,000 U.S., which represents costs incurred by the four senior employees of Canadair Inc.

With respect to the question on James B. Taylor, who was recently appointed chairman of Canadair Inc., the U.S. marketing subsidiary, I confirm that he is one of the four senior employees who owned the Citation I on the 40-month lease to Canadair. However, Mr. Taylor was not involved in the second arrangement. I should add that Mr. Taylor is a valued member of the Canadair organization and has agreed to be appointed chairman in place of his previous position of president and chief executive officer of Canadair Inc., the United States selling corporation. We are delighted that he will continue to assist us in marketing our product in the United States.

• (1430)

The transfer from the position of president to chairman is not as a result of the Citation contract, but as a result of management reorganization within Canadair.

As I have already stated, Mr. Taylor was requested by the president to engage in this leasing arrangement and did so under the authority of the president. It was not his role to inquire into whether the president had obtained the proper authority from the board of directors.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: My understanding of what Senator Austin has said is that the particular employees in question will not be permitted to earn or profit from any of the transactions. I suppose that that is from the point of view of disclosure.

The contract that will expire next December — some 13 months from now — is the contract that has been in existence for some 29 months. My question is: Could the minister tell us what interest was earned or what profit was gained by those employees for the first 29 months of what will turn out to be, in all likelihood, a substantial contract?

Senator Austin: Thank you for the opportunity of making the point clear. I am advised by CDIC officials that the present arrangement is that there will be no gain throughout the life of the contract; it will be on a stand-still basis, a no-gain, no-profit basis. The employees will not be exposed to any external liability, but will not benefit from having entered into the contract.

Senator Nurgitz: My point is that I am looking for the employees to be exposed to some external liability; I want them to repay the moneys they unjustly earned during the first 29 months of the contract. I want them to repay any moneys they earned from the initiation of the contract until they were caught.

Senator Austin: My understanding is that the arrangement now is that there will be no benefit to the employees whatever from their engaging in this 40-month arrangement. I cannot advise you whether they have repaid any moneys at this moment. As I have just said, they will not benefit in any way over the 40 months of the lease contract.

I do object to the use of the word "caught". I am sure that it was not used advisedly. As I said, the authority for the arrangement was directed by the president, and those employees had no need in the ordinary course of the administration of that business to inquire into whether the president had, indeed, covered himself by getting authority from the board of directors.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I should like to pursue that further because, in the ordinary course of operating a business, if certain activities require approval of the board of directors, then those who are paying the bills, those who are running the business side and the accounting, do not pay bills until a certificate of approval is received.

So, merely to say that the president gave the authority and no one did anything about it after that strikes me as being rather odd. Why did those who disbursed the moneys—who know the rules and regulations and know what levels of purchases can be approved by certain persons and what requires the approval of the board of directors and what does not—not use that knowledge to ensure that everything was in order?

Senator Austin: Apparently the president directed the disbursing officers of the corporation to make payments and provided written authority for them to do so. The executives of Canadair acted on the president's authority.

Senator Roblin: I am afraid that does not satisfy me because, if the rules of the game provide that the approval of certain offices or boards of directors is necessary, how can you say that we do not need to pay any attention to that if the president gives us written authority to do so. It seems to me that the overriding authority is the authority of the board and it is not good enough to say that the president ignored it. What about all the other people in the chain of payment? It seems to me that that is something that requires an explanation.

Senator Austin: I cannot give Senator Roblin more of an explanation than what the facts are. The president issued an authority for the payments. Officers of the company, under his authority, acted on his authority and the transactions took place. It is a rather good point as to why more than the president's authority was not required, but, clearly, it was not required. That event is a demonstration of what took place within Canadair and away from the view of the directors and, of course, led to the events which brought CDIC into its role as a controlling shareholder.

Senator Roblin: Obviously, I do not know all the facts. I do not wish to be judgmental with respect to third parties whose direct responsibilities are unknown to me. What strikes me out of the recital that the minister has given us is that these activities can take place with no penalty. All that you are asked to do is to return the money you should not have had and the people who authorized the things in an improper fashion, so far as I can tell, are allowed to—I am not even sure they are rebuked. Perhaps they are. As I said, I do not wish to be judgmental, because I am not sufficiently informed, but it does raise question marks in my mind as to whether people are accepting the responsibilities that are assigned to them in the proper way.

Senator Austin: I can only point out to Senator Roblin that the president is no longer at Canadair and some other officers of the corporation have also departed.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK—LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Cyril B. Sherwood: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, but, since he has not returned to the chamber, I should like to direct my question to the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. What new adjustment programs is the government about to put into effect concerning the livestock industry in New Brunswick?

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice and try to have an answer at our next sitting.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMPLEMENT OF DEPARTMENT

Question No. 114 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

1. What was the head office complement of the Department of Veterans Affairs as of 31 March, 1983?

2. Of the head office staff, how many are between the ages of (i) under 20, (ii) 20 and 30, (iii) 30 and 40, (iv) 40 and 50, (v) 50 and 60, and (vi) 60 and 70?

3. Of the staff, how many are veterans?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. Head Office Ottawa	798
Head Office Charlottetown	413
TOTAL	1,211

2.	Ottawa	Charlottetown	Total
Under 20	17	4	21

3. The information requested is not available. The personnel record of an employee may or may not indicate if the employee is a veteran.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND (No. 3)—THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-169, to amend the Canada Elections Act (No. 3).

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, 1983

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-152, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-152 seeks to establish new structures and mandates for those departments of government which deal with regional economic development, regional industrial expansion and external affairs, including international trade. The bill also makes some new provisions for parliamentary secretaries and provides for transitional and consequential arrangements arising from those changes.

Honourable senators will be aware of the importance of taking into account Canada's regional diversity when planning national economic development and the importance which this government has attached to encouraging the fullest possible growth in all regions of our country.

Over a decade ago, Parliament established a department totally devoted to regional economic expansion. As we all know, ministers responsible for that department have, since then, steadily devoted themselves to developing the economic potential of every corner of the country and especially the less developed regions so that all Canadians can contribute to our national prosperity.

The government has examined carefully the structures devoted to economic development and international trade and has drawn three main conclusions. The first is that regional economic development can no longer be considered a specialized activity under the sole authority of a single department but must now become a central concern of all of the government's economic agents. Let me quote the Prime Minister. In a press release of January 12, he said:

[Translation]

> Responsibility for regional economic development can no longer be left to a single department. I have instructed all Ministers operating in the field of economic development to reinforce departmental staff and programs in the regions. All Departments with a specifically economic orientation must take a more direct and more active part in regional economic development. Government reorganization is precisely concerned with this major objective.

[English]

Honourable senators, we need to mobilize the resources of all departments to achieve the economic development of all regions in Canada and especially those areas where the need is greatest. Each department in the economic sector must become, in a sense, the department of regional economic expansion for its own area of activity. The creation of a single industry department to serve the needs of secondary resource industries in all regions is key.

The second conclusion is that such a redistribution of regional responsibilities requires, at the same time, a capacity to co-ordinate the broad range of government activities in this area. It is, therefore, necessary to give a central place to regional economic concerns in the decision-making apparatus of government.

The third conclusion is that there must be a close link between economic growth in Canada and our international trade. The complexity of the modern international environment, in which political and economic relations are increasingly intertwined, and the necessity of ensuring optimum use of government resources devoted to international relations have called for a strengthening of government structures in that sector. I now turn, honourable senators, to the bill.

Part I of the bill gives the Department of External Affairs a new statutory base and reflects the evolution of this department since the passage of the External Affairs Act in 1909. It brings together the functions related to international trade and the more traditional activities of the department in dealing with external relations. The bill recognizes the absolute necessity to emphasize the role that trade plays in our overall international position.

It also reflects the evolution and the growing maturity of our diplomatic institutions. Since our country acquired fully independent status on the international stage through the Statute of Westminster in 1931, Canada has distinguished itself on the international scene as a strong trading partner, an important agent of stability of the international system, a receiving country for immigrants and refugees and an important source of assistance for international development.

The institutions proposed in this bill underline and reflect the integration necessary for a coherent and co-ordinated representation abroad of the multitude of Canadian interests.

Honourable senators will also note that this bill assigns to the Secretary of State for External Affairs the control and supervision of the Canadian International Development Agency.

Part II of the bill creates the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. This new department brings together the regional industrial development responsibilities of the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion.

I strongly invite all senators to read this part of the bill and note the importance that the government assigns to regional development. The regionalization of this new department will be a model for all other sectoral departments to follow. In this way, the overall regional impact of all government activities will be increased and both sectoral and regional considerations will be built permanently into the policy development and the program implementation processes of each department.

Honourable senators will remember that, just before the summer adjournment, we passed Bill C-165 which set up these programs. Bill C-152 now reflects the establishment of the department that matches the programs that were in that bill. As you know, those responsibilities have been carried out on an interim basis, awaiting this change in department designations.

Part III of this bill continues the existing Special Areas Program with which I am sure honourable senators are well acquainted and which has proven its worth.

Part IV amends the Parliamentary Secretary Act. Its purpose is to include the ministers of state responsible for ministries of state in the computation of the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries that may be appointed.

The fifth and last part of the bill lists a certain number of transitional arrangements and proposes amendments to the proclamation because, as honourable senators will know, ministries of state are established under the Minister and Ministries of State Act by proclamation. The fifth part proposes amendments to the proclamation of the Ministry of State for Economic Development. This proclamation stresses the new regional responsibilities of that minister of state and proposes a new name to underline the importance that the government assigns to his co-ordination role with respect to regional economic development policies.

[Translation]

As regards any change in the number of public employees as a result of this Bill, according to my information, the measures I have just described will not require new staff. These measures are part of a deliberate effort to reallocate our human and financial resources in order to improve our response to the needs of Canadians, while promoting in all our regions both economic development and the marketing of the products of such development, within the context of steadily increasing competition on world markets.

[English]

Honourable senators, these changes will help to ensure a better management of economic and regional development for the benefit of all Canadians, wherever they live, will strengthen our institutions devoted to international relations and will emphasize the importance of international trade in the overall framework of our external relations.

[Senator Frith.]

I hope that honourable senators will agree that prompt passage of this bill is in the interests of Canadians. It is in that spirit that I have briefly summarized the contents of Bill C-152. I ask honourable senators to support this bill at second reading.

• (1450)

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I listened attentively and not, I hope, without compassion to the Acting Leader of the Government as he carried the government's brief for this measure to the Senate. I could not help but wonder how many hours, days, nights and weeks have already been wasted by how many of our best people, whether they be politicians or bureaucrats, on this useless measure. How much time did it take to draw up this labyrinthine plan? How many people and how much of their time did it take to get it from its first draft, through its various intermediate drafts, to its final draft? How many committee meetings were held at the junior, intermediate and senior levels of the civil service? How many interdepartmental meetings were held? How much time was spent getting it through cabinet, discussing it in caucus and debating it in Parliament? How much time and energy has been wasted already on this so-called re-organization? How much time is yet to be wasted in ironing out the wrinkles, in settling the office arrangements, in preparing the job descriptions, in establishing the salary classifications, in smoothing over the personality conflicts and in sorting out the confusion?

Honourable senators, hundreds of person-years and battalions of people have already been devoted to this exercise—which is just a simple waste of time, energy and people—and to what end?

What might be said about this bill, this re-organization, is hardly speculative or hypothetical. This re-organization is, to all intents and purposes, a fait accompli. It was announced in January 1982. We first saw legislation covering it in an omnibus bill, Bill C-123, in June 1982. The bill has since been split into three bills, one of which is Bill C-152. Second reading of this bill began in the other place on May 27, 1983. Meanwhile, the changes have been implemented, more or less. The people in the various departments of government have been at it for a year and a half, trying to bring order out of confusion. This is especially true of the External Affairs-International Trade merger, respecting which they are now immersed in what is called, in the Pearson Building, "Re-org 3."

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): What happened to 1 and 2?

Senator Murray: Re-org 1 and Re-org 2, of course, have gone by the boards. We have now reached Re-org 3, and perhaps there are other re-orgs to come in this never-ending saga of paper pushing and musical chairs.

Honourable senators, there has always been a certain tension between the External Affairs people and the Trade people which existed both at home and abroad. Perhaps it was even what Mr. Trudeau used to call "creative tension." It was decided that the rivalry be ended by having External swallow Trade—in particular, the trade commissioner service— but the rivalry has not ended; it has merely become internalized: we now have three ministers and two ministries warring within the bosom of a single department.

I read the testimony given before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance by the Honourable Gerald Regan, in which he went to such lengths to explain that he is No. 2 in the hierarchy and that Jean-Luc Pepin is No. 3 in the hierarchy. What does all this mean, honourable senators? The list of cabinet seniority indicates that Mr. Pepin is the number three man in the government, behind the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister. In this departmental re-organization, however, Mr. Pepin is demoted.

As an aside, I might say that the relations between the two junior ministers in the Pearson Building, the Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of State for External Relations—each of whom is a normally congenial person—have become turbulent, if not sulphurous, during the past eventful week. During the week, people in the Department of External Affairs were as bemused by the battles between Gerald Regan and Jean-Luc Pepin as they were by the battles in Grenada.

At the same time as this re-organization is taking place, which is bringing International Trade under the wing of External Affairs, the government is trying to organize a new and more complicated set of relationships between the Trade people who are now in the Department of External Affairs and the people concerned with domestic industrial policy, who used to work with those people in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce but who have now been left behind in this new hybrid called DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The stated justification for this re-organization is, in part, the need for more effective linkages between domestic and international sectors in terms of the government's policy development and progress. Honourable senators, an effective cabinet committee system could accomplish the same objective without the disruption and confusion that have attended this so-called re-organization. A couple of strong ministers and deputy ministers could accomplish the same objective. It is extremely doubtful, on the basis of experience to date, that this re-organization will accomplish it. This re-organization has done more harm than good thus far because it has contributed to a breakdown in cohesion and unity within the government. It has contributed to lost productivity and declining morale in those parts of the public service that are affected by it.

Honourable senators, spokesmen for the government have explained that this re-organization was necessary because trade and economic issues ought to form an integral part of overall foreign policy. Again, I say that a working, effective cabinet committee system could accomplish the same result without having to emasculate the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I think that honourable senators generally appreciate the assumption on which much of this is done—the assumption that international financial relations and institutions will increasingly be at the centre of the preoccupations of political leaders and statesmen. I think all honourable senators are aware that the best hope for sustained, satisfactory economic growth in Canada and in other developed countries—the best hope of avoiding mass unemployment in this country—lies in an expanding world economy, and that this emphatically means that we must address the range of issues that is sometimes labelled "north-south." In order to buy our goods and services, the economies of these developing countries must be capable of producing and selling to us. There are two apparent obstacles to this, one of which is at home, where public opinion is not yet sufficiently persuaded of the importance of this as a matter of enlightened self-interest. It seems to me that it is a job of political leaders to mobilize public opinion. On the international scene, it seems that the governors of the central banks, the secretaries of the treasuries and the ministers of finance too often call the shots and that their perspective is not an historical perspective—it is not one of vision. Therefore, what is needed in this context is bold, visionary political leadership.

The response of the present Government of Canada to this challenge, however—and perhaps the reason why Mr. Trudeau has blown so hot and cold on so many of these issues—is to tie up some of our best people for many months in bureaucratic shuffling, as if flow charts and systems organization provided an end in themselves.

• (1500)

The problem is not with the so-called delivery system. The problem is with the political leadership of this country. The same holds true on this question of regional disparity. It would be hard to imagine anything more disingenuous than some of the explanations we have heard for the liquidation of DREE. The Acting Leader of the Government cited a few moments ago in French the rationalization of the Prime Minister in this respect. The Prime Minister said that it was no longer acceptable to have one department in charge of regional economic policy; and he, as well as other spokesmen for the government, has said that the disappearance of DREE does not mean that there will be less emphasis on regional economic expansion because with no DREE every minister, in a sense, will be responsible for regional economic expansion.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: The Prime Minister has said it, and other government spokesmen have said it—and they may even believe it, so out of touch with reality have they become.

I read quite attentively the testimony of the Honourable Don Johnston, the Minister of State for Economic Development, who appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on this matter, and this afternoon I heard the Acting Leader of the Government refer to the reorganization that has taken place in the regions, under the Honourable Mr. Johnston's leadership, where an officer of the Ministry of State for Economic Development is attempting to co-ordinate the activities of the various federal departments in the provinces or regions.

I make no comment on that. I trust and hope that the process will work well. However, in any case, this could have been done without the necessity of dismantling the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—because we have been losing ground in this country in the battle against regional economic disparities. I could cite the various criteria used to demonstrate that, but I will not do so. The fact is that we are losing ground in the battle against regional economic disparities. We have a severe productivity problem in the country. For some years there has been a slowdown in the rate of productivity growth, and in the last year or so there has been an actual decline in productivity. We need to export more manufactured goods, to do more R&D; technical advances have to be diffused more widely and more quickly, and our whole economy has to adapt more quickly to the changing economic environment in the world.

We do not lack for policy alternatives or for ideas, for they have come to us from the Science Council of Canada, from the Economic Council of Canada, from Senate committee reports on trade and regional development, from numerous sources in the private sector and from other levels of government. When I consider those problem areas and the policies that have so far failed the country, I think of all the good that might have resulted, had all of the time, effort, energy and talent that have gone into this bureaucratic game been spent in trying to find solutions to the country's problems, such as consulting with industry and labour, working with the provinces, and negotiating with our trading partners. The bill is really irrelevant to the pressing problems of this country. This bill is proof that power not only corrupts, but ossifies; it deadens the critical faculties and the sensitivities of politicians and bureaucrats.

Senator Frith: Does it ossify absolutely?

Senator Murray: Faced with the harsh reality of our economic problems, confronted by the complete erosion of confidence in the administration, the responsible people in government go back to their toys. They spend their time in the adult bureaucratic equivalent of cutting out paper dolls. The bill is a sign of the intellectual rot that has set in on this government. The reorganization it purports to authorize is a time-wasting exercise, conceived by senior bureaucrats and politicians who are completely out of touch with the problems of the country and utterly without any ideas in the realm of substantive policies. The bill has for some time been in the process of implementation. Parliamentary approval of it is, therefore, the merest formality. To delay it further would simply be to dignify it and invest it with a significance it does not deserve.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I listened carefully to the remarks of the Acting Leader of the Government and I have certain reservations about the bill. When I tried to listen to the political diatribe of the Honourable Senator Murray, I became more confused than ever. I was not surprised to hear from Senator Murray, because he knows something about bureaucratic power. He exercised it in the best fashion when he was in office in New Brunswick, and New Brunswickers have been paying for it ever since in cut services and higher taxation. My concerns, however, are not political. My concerns are for New Brunswick, the region I try to represent in the Senate. Unlike those politicians who represent Ontario and Quebec or those who refer to their regions as eastern and western provinces, I felt proud when years ago the Prime Minister, for the first time in the political history of this country, established a department to deal with regional disparities—a department headed by the present, esteemed Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Thériault: For the first time in my political career I saw the Government of Canada doing something that would really help develop the region where I had worked and lived all of my life. But I tell you honestly—again, not for the reasons given by the Honourable Senator Lowell Murray, but because of what I have learned in my political life—that I am concerned when I see legislation that will make all departments of government responsible for industrial expansion, regional expansion and economic development. I have read the bill carefully and there are some parts of it that I like and will support. Contrary to Senator Murray's views, I support that part dealing with international trade. I believe that he is out of line in his views on international trade. It is needed, and the Department of External Affairs should rightly be concerned about it.

With regard to regional economic expansion, I have two concerns. At the present time, we in this country are experiencing an economic slump. Any minister with national responsibility has to look at the country as a whole and should recognize that certain regions are suffering from the present economic situation. When viewing the situation from the broad perspective of the national level, it is easy to lose sight of the fact that some provinces are able to deal with their economic problems better than others. I am sure there are regions in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario, and particularly in Quebec, that are as adversely affected by the downturn in our economy as New Brunswick and other Atlantic provinces are. I hope, however, that the economic downturn is only temporary, that after it has passed we will revert to giving consideration to those regions which over the years have been affected by underemployment and lack of services. I am not too concerned as long as we have the present Prime Minister, because he has repeatedly demonstrated that he cares, and I feel confident that he will direct his ministers to continue to do all in their power to help avoid regional disparities. But I am concerned that there will be a change of government and that the government of this country will fall into the hands of the Tories, who will restrain and cut back. Of course, the Atlantic provinces will be the first to suffer. I do not think that the clauses pertaining to doing away with DREE should have been included in this bill. For that reason, I cannot support it. As I said in the National Finance Committee and in New Brunswick, I do not believe that DREE was a cure-all, but it at least showed a determination on the part of the national government to help regions with chronic economic problems. Disbanding this department and throwing regional disparity into the hands of a multitude of ministers will not work. We have seen this before and what is suggested in some parts of this bill with regard to all departments of the government being involved in alleviating regional disparity in this country is not new. The country is too diverse and too large, with too many different interests for such a proposal to work.

I hope that the government will see the light and that it will review the bill. Perhaps it could re-introduce it in an improved fashion by giving specific instructions to specific ministers, particularly on dealing with the chronic problems faced in the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I shall deal first with what Senator Thériault said. I have a different perception of the process of dropping DREE for DRIE, but I hesitate to challenge Senator Thériault's analysis because I know that as a very effective champion of his province, particularly in the context of regional disparity and the need for attention to the disparity as reflected in his province, he is entitled to a great deal of respect and attention in his doubt as to whether this plan will work. I can say that I share his hope that it will work. It is my understanding that Bill C-165, coupled with Bill C-152, will mean that the programs will be made more efficient in the sense that, rather than simply designating certain geographic regions and qualifying them by, in effect, putting fences around them, the entire area of Canada will be considered—

Senator Thériault: That is the problem.

Senator Frith: —and each area will qualify for the programs on the basis of certain criteria. Senator Thériault's criticism is directed at Bill C-152. He believes that there is a danger, in that, by spreading the responsibility too widely among various ministries, it will dissipate or dilute its effectivenes. I understand his point, but I hope that that will not be the case. I know that the intention of the government is to make it more efficient, in that all departments will be concerned with regional matters.

Senator Thériault: The road to hell is paved with good intentions.

Senator Frith: That is true, but I have also heard that the road to Heaven is paved with good intentions as well. It is not a sure result that if you have good intentions you are on the road to hell rather than the road to Heaven. Let us all hope that the government's plan will work.

With regard to the comments made by Senator Murray, I agree with Senator Thériault as well, though I was not surprised with Senator Murray's position on the matter, nor the fact that he used this debate as a springboard to express some carefully thought out views about the efficiency of this government in general. I can only say that——I would have done the same, perhaps not as effectively, but most assuredly with the same purpose in mind.

[Translation]

[English]

He used such words as "waste" and "uselessness", and that vocabulary, together with his mischievous misinterpretation of ministerial manners, depends on his opinion that it is in fact a useless bill. Perhaps he expected a great deal more from the bill than it was ever intended to deliver. Anyway, I know that some honourable senators will agree with Senator Murray and some will not. He will not be surprised that I am among the latter. I say that this bill will increase efficiency in government and that it is neither wasteful nor unnecessary but, rather, is important for streamlining government action. That is why I ask honourable senators to support the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance for study and report.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, November 3, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 3, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, if the universe unfolds today as it should then our present sitting will be the final meeting prior to Remembrance Day, November 11, that day each year on which we Canadians focus on the memory of our fellow citizens who gave their lives in conflict and sacrifice for Canada so that we may enjoy the freedoms we have today.

Honourable senators will no doubt participate in ceremonies in their respective communities as part of a day of National Remembrance. In drawing this event and matter to the attention of the Senate I can think of no more fitting manner of doing so than relating a recent Act of Remembrance in The Netherlands by members of this chamber and the other place.

> MILLER; Private Alexander J., Canadian Scottish Regiment, 2 April, 1945, Age 21. Son of Alexander and Mary Miller of High River, Alberta.

With 15 Canadian parliamentary colleagues I stood recently in Groesbeek Canadian War Cemetery in Holland. While our heads were bowed, I tried to answer the question of why Private Miller came here to this corner of Europe to die, too soon, too young.

The senators and members of Parliament were members of the Canadian delegation to the annual session of the North Atlantic Assembly in The Hague. Our presence in the cemetery was no perfunctory side trip—Private Alexander Miller and his fallen comrades had called us there to remember, perhaps even to account as to why, as parliamentarians, notwithstanding 38 years of relative peace we had made precious little progress in making the world the place he thought he was dying to create.

> HETHERINGTON; Private William, Essex Scottish Regiment, 20 February, 1945, Age 19. Son of Edwin and Margaret Hetherington of Calgary.

The cemetery is located 10 kilometres southeast of Nijmegen in the Dutch province of Gelderland close to the German frontier. Buried there are 2,328 servicemen who served in the First Canadian Army and the RCAF in the 1944-45 Rhineland campaign.

There is a separate memorial recording the names of 107 Canadians "missing" who paid the supreme sacrifice but to whom the fortunes of war denied an honoured grave.

> THOMPSON; Private Archibald W., Calgary Highlanders, 1 April, 1945, Age 20. Son of Robert and Mary Thompson of Calgary.

On arrival at the cemetery we were joined by citizens of the village of Groesbeek. Led by pipers from Canadian Forces Base Lahr, to the slow march The Barren Rocks of Aden, we solemnly made our way to the Cross of Sacrifice at the centre of the cemetery.

> ROWLES; Lance Corporal James P., the Calgary Regiment, 25 May, 1945, Age 31. Son of John Kansas Rowles and Annie Elizabeth Rowles; husband of Lennox Sheila Rowles of Calgary.

An appropriate service of remembrance was conducted by the Reverend S. Bonting of Groesbeek, to which the Reverend Father Bob Ogle, the honourable member for Saskatoon East, led the delegation in the response "They Shall Not Grow Old". Wreaths were placed by our delegation leader, Leonard Hopkins, the Member of Parliament for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, and by the Canadian Ambassador Larry Smith, on behalf of the government and people of Canada, as well as by the Honourable Allan McKinnon, Member of Parliament for Victoria, a former Princess Pats platoon commander in the First Canadian Division, on behalf of Canadian veterans.

> JAMES; Sgt. Frederick Grant, Royal Canadian Artillery, 28 February 1945. Age 25. Son of George Frederick and Ida Mary James of Lethbridge.

In moments of silent meditation—while the pipers played Amazing Grace—each of us, in our own way, paid a deeply sincere yet inadequate tribute to the memory of these young men whose mortal remains lay beneath the soil of the Netherlands, so far from their native land.

> SMITH; L. Bdr. Charles, Royal Canadian Artillery. 3 March 1945. Age 31. Son of James Smith and Ephermia Smith; husband of Margaret Smith of Bowness, Alberta.

The emotions of humility and pride flooded my thoughts as I viewed the monuments surrounding me. They cry out the equality of sacrifice. Each of the dead commemorated individually by name and unit; all treated as equals irrespective of rank, civilian status, race or religion. So young, so young. My contemporaries, my comrades.

> SANDS; Cpl. James F. The Calgary Highlanders 1 April 1945. Age 24. Son of Eleanor L. Sands of Horburg, Alberta.

Humility at the thought of the terrible price paid by these men with "no greater love", who came from every part of Canada seeking only to do their duty. They bravely faced the horror and anguish of war. Over 7,000 of them fell in nine dreadful months of conflict ending May 5, 1945. It was part of the great offensive designed to drive the enemy back over the Rhine and bring final victory.

LEE; Pte. Russell C., R.C.A.S.C. 10 January 1945, age 19. Son of Arnold and Mary Lee of Bluesky, Alberta.

Pride in Canada and the great contribution made by a small nation in the liberation of Holland and its people who had almost reached the end of their endurance from the misery and starvation which accompanied the "Hunger Winter" of 1944-45. Powerful bonds of friendship still endure between the people of the Netherlands and Canada.

While other forces participated in the offensive, the people of the Netherlands will never forget the sacrifice of the Canadians who were "first over the dikes". It is manifest in the tulips that bloom each spring in Ottawa, and in the care and attention bestowed by the Dutch people on the burial places of our war dead.

LITTLE; Lt. Kenneth Wayne, South Alberta Regiment, 28 January 1945. Age 35. Son of George and Isabel Little of High River, Alberta.

His brother Walter Carlyle Little also fell.

May this time of national remembrance inspire us all to rededicate ourselves to be worthy of their gallant sacrifice. May we seek renewed courage to continue the struggle for peace, understanding, tolerance and goodwill between all who share this planet. Private Miller and his comrades would demand of us nothing more. Their sacred glorious memory deserves nothing less.

Other members of the Canadian Parliamentary delegation were the Honourable Senators Jacques Flynn (Quebec), John Godfrey (Ontario), Stanley Haidasz (Ontario), Heath Macquarrie (P.E.I.) and MPs Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre), J. Roland Comtois (Terrebonne), Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata), Gaston Gourde (Lévis), Tom Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle), John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown), Chris Speyer (Cambridge) and Ronald Stewart (Simcoe South). Stephen Knowles and Daniel Bon of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Secretariat accompanied the delegation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is meet and right, at this season of the year, that we should bring into glorious and grateful remembrance the names and generations of those young men and women who lost their lives in the wars that have shaken this century. When Senator Hastings was describing to us the ceremony of remembrance in Holland, it reminded me of the privilege I had in visiting the beaches of Normandy a year or so ago for one of the ceremonies of remembrance on that part of the European continent. No one could help but be moved by the memorials and the headstones on which the names and ages of those who are buried are inscribed. I found it particularly so because I was one of those who crossed over those beaches in June 1944, and I remember well being present at the burial, in that difficult summer, of some of those who perished in those battles. It was moving to see how that original graveyard has been transformed into an everlasting memorial. But memories are not good enough. We have to recall our duty to the present and to the future as we strive in our small way—and it is only a small way—in this chamber and in this country to do those things that may be open to us to do in order to prevent, or to lessen the possibility, of a recurrence of those dreadful and terrible times.

It is with gratitude that I join with those who remember our glorious dead as we approach Armistice Day.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of all honourable senators on this side and, indeed, the government, I want to join in the remarks made by Senator Hastings and Senator Roblin by saying that at least once a year, and more often in many cases, a sincere and deep reflection on the sacrifices that were made is appropriate. This is probably the last sitting day of the Senate before November 11, the date set for remembrance of Canadians who have been involved in conflicts in the name of the preservation of freedom and liberty as we know it in this country. I think it particularly appropriate that words are expressed such as those of Senator Roblin and Senator Hastings today. I should like the record to show that all of us on this side wish to be associated with those comments.

HON. HARTLAND DE M. MOLSON

FELICITATIONS ON AWARD OF HONORARY DOCTORATE BY McGILL UNIVERSITY

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honorable senators, with your permission, I would like to inform you that yesterday's newspapers mentioned that our colleague, the Honourable Hartland Molson, with other prestigious recipients, received an honorary doctorate yesterday from McGill University, for his distinguished service in the Armed Forces, his dedication to public affairs and Parliament and for his broad interest in all Canadian causes that needed support.

The reason I mention this today is that I would like this to appear in Hansard and also because it is an honour that reflects on the entire Senate. I felt it was my duty to mention it to you.

Hon. Senators: Hear! Hear!

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to express my appreciation to Senator Deschatelets for bringing this important matter to the attention of the Senate today. I also wish to assure him that we fully endorse, and wish to be associated with, his comments.

As was pointed out when the honour was bestowed upon him, Senator Molson has a most distinguished record, in terms of his activities in the military field and his very useful contribution to public affairs, particularly through the Senate chamber.

We wish to join in the congratulations extended by Senator Deschatelets on this occasion.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Léopold Langlois, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 3, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to which was referred Bill C-163, intituled: "An Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to its order of reference of Thursday, October 27, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LÉOPOLD LANGLOIS
Chairman

He said: Honourable senators, with leave, I should like to make a brief statement respecting this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, during the course of its examination of the bill, your committee brought to the attention of the Justice officials an apparent inconsistency between the English and French versions of one of the clauses of the bill, to wit, clause 4(3). Since the evidence before the committee showed that the wording in question is similar to that employed in other acts of Parliament, the committee obtained from the Justice officials an undertaking on their part to make a general study of the particular language problem noted by the committee and to report back to the committee in due course. If it is later concluded that the wording in question requires amendment, this could be done in all acts that would be affected by the change, either by means of the next miscellaneous statute revision act or in the next consolidation of the Revised Statutes of Canada. The committee intends to follow up on this matter with the Department of Justice.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. P. Michael Pitfield: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on a Canadian Security Intelligence Service respecting the subject matter of Bill C-157 intituled: "The Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act."

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 6141.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Pitfield: With leave of the Senate, I move that this report be taken into consideration now. If that is agreeable to honourable senators, I shall outline the highlights of the report today and shall make more specific comments on it at a later date.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Pitfield: Honourable senators, the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on a Canadian Security Intelligence Service is the product of over three months of hearings and deliberations on the subject matter of Bill C-157. Your committee heard over 30 witnesses comprising a cross-section of public opinion with respect to the bill. We were greatly assisted by the testimony of those witnesses and, as well, by numerous other submissions from the public.

Your committee has subtitled its report, "Delicate Balance: A Security Intelligence Service in a Democratic Society." This subtitle concisely expresses a major concern which we have with respect to this proposed legislation. It acknowledges the need for a security intelligence capacity, and implies that it is compatible with a democratic society. But it also clearly communicates a quite basic concern, namely, that protection of security must be balanced with the preservation of individual rights. Individual and collective security bear a relationship which is, to a significant degree, symbiotic. The raison d'être of a security service is the maintenance of a free and democratic society. But if an agency has too much, or inadequately controlled power, it can be a threat to individual rights. On the other hand, if the security of the state is not sufficiently protected, there is a danger of the weakening of a society in which freedom and democracy should flourish. Thus it is necessary to achieve a "delicate balance"—one must give an agency enough power and freedom of action to protect legitimate security interests, while at the same time preserving the interests of society in the preservation of civil liberties. Your committee, in its report, makes a series of observations and recommendations which we believe would ensure the requisite equilibrium in legislation dealing with a security intelligence service.

Your committee is unanimously of the opinion that there exist threats to the security of Canada; that there must exist a distinct capacity to deal with them; and that the federal government is the appropriate jurisdiction to establish and maintain that capacity. The committee could not, however, come to complete agreement on the location of that capacity. This is the only point on which the committee is not unanimous. All the members save one are strongly of the opinion that there should be established a civilian agency separate from the RCMP. The majority has been influenced by the findings of the Mackenzie and McDonald royal commissions on this issue. We subscribe to the view that there is a need for a fundamental reorientation of management of security intelligence, ranging from recruitment of employees, through control of operations, to the relationship of the service to the government. To be successful in this reorientation, changes must be made to the present system. This, in part, stems from the quite fundamental differences between law enforcement and protection of security, a matter dealt with in some detail in the report.

As to the rest of the report, your committee is, as I have said, unanimous.

With respect to the operation of a security agency, the report is divided into four parts, dealing with (1) the mandate and functions of the security service; (2) the powers and immunities of its employees; (3) the management, control and responsibility for the agency; and, (4) the monitoring and review of agency operations.

Your committee makes several recommendations with respect to mandate and functions. The report stresses the importance of these elements of proposed legislation. We accept the parameters of the definition of threats to Canada's security in clause 2 of Bill C-157, namely, that such a definition should include espionage and sabotage, foreign-influenced activities, political violence and subversion. But we also propose a series of quite large changes to these definitions to more tightly focus their application. For example, to protect lawful and peaceful agitation for constitutional change, we add to the definition of subversion the requirement that it include "violent" attempts to undermine Canada's constitutionally established system. In addition, we recommend the inclusion within the definition of threats itself a limitation of the agency's power to investigate lawful protest, advocacy and dissent.

With respect to the primary function of the security service,—the gathering and analysis of intelligence relating to threats to security,—your committee proposes the inclusion of another limitation, that the agency be limited to doing what is strictly necessary to protect Canada's security.

With respect to two other functions of the proposed agency—that of performing security assessments and collecting "foreign intelligence"—your committee also makes recommendations. On the issue of security assessments, we have attempted to ensure that there is a measure of control over the transmission and retransmission of data. On the issue of foreign intelligence, we have again tried to inject a higher level of control to ensure that a minister of the Crown is directly responsible for requests; that all activities in this area come under the review imposed upon the security service; and that Canadians are not targeted.

In the area of powers and immunities of the security service, your committee has concluded that the agency should have access to a broad range of investigative techniques, including those which are "intrusive". However, we also propose that much more exacting conditions be introduced into the process whereby judicial warrants would be issued by judges of the Federal Court. In so doing, we adopt some of the standards used in authorizing electronic surveillance under the Criminal Code, as well as a recommendation made by the McDonald Commission. In addition, we recommend that an application for a warrant should have to satisfy the judge that the intrusion on privacy embodied in the warrant is outweighed by the gravity of the threat to security and the importance of the information sought.

On the controversial issue of protection of security service employees, your committee recommends deletion of clause 21 of Bill C-157 which would justify employees taking such "reasonable actions as are reasonably necessary" to perform their duties and functions under the legislation. Although we did not agree with all the criticism made of this provision, we are of the opinion that it would be more appropriate to give security service employees protection similar to that enjoyed by peace officers pursuant to section 25 of the Criminal Code, and at common law. In this area, we also propose substantial amendments of a provision, clause 12, which would make it an offence to disclose the identity of security service employees involved in covert operations or of informants. Our proposal would reduce its draconian tenor by requiring proof of detriment to the security of Canada, and not solely disclosure.

On the issue of management, control and responsibility for the security service, your committee found much of the bill to be appropriate. However, with regard to the so-called "override" given to the director of the agency on questions of targeting of persons or groups and on disclosure of information, we recommend that the minister be empowered to intervene on these matters, perhaps in writing. While we do not envision that the minister would, or should, do this with any regularity, we are of the opinion that such a power residing in the minister is vital to the maintenance of genuine ministerial responsibility and accountability.

In the last area of the establishment and functioning of the agency, that of the monitoring and review of CSIS operations, your committee found the innovations proposed in Bill C-157—the office of the Inspector General and the Security Intelligence Review Committee—to be among the most positive aspects of the proposed legislation. We do recommend, however, some adjustments to the provisions governing these entities. For example, we recommend both have access to cabinet documents in the possession of the CSIS. But, on the whole, our report is quite commendatory of them. They will play the very important role of ensuring that the security service is conducting itself both effectively and within the law.

Our report considers, but rejects, the proposal that a special parliamentary committee be established to review CSIS activities. In doing this, we should not be taken as devaluing, in any way, the need for parliamentary review. Our report outlines many of the practical problems with a special committee. In any event, we do conclude that parliamentary review through the existing committee structure would be greatly improved by the existence of the review committee and its annual report.

One other aspect of Bill C-157 not directly related to the CSIS is also dealt with in the report of our committee. That is Part IV, the proposed Security Offences Act, which would give the federal Attorney General exclusive authority to prosecute "security offences"—that is, offences arising out of activity constituting a threat to Canada's security or against internationally protected persons—which would give to the RCMP primary responsibility in relation to police work surrounding them. While your committee concludes that it is indisputable that the federal government has the constitutional power to enact Part IV, nonetheless we find that the federal interest in these areas can be facilitated without so radically disrupting the traditional system of law enforcement. Accordingly, we recommend that the federal Attorney General have the power to intervene in proceedings involving security offences, and that the RCMP should have to consult with municipal and provincial police forces concerning the investigation of such offences.

The report of your committee concludes, in part, as follows:

> The Committee believes that legislation dealing with Canada's security intelligence system is necessary, and that it should be enacted in the near future. The status quo is not acceptable.
> At the very least the legislation should contain: a defined mandate and statement of functions of the agency; judicial control of the use of intrusive investigative techniques; and a system of external monitoring and review of security operations. Bill C-157, revised as we recommend, could adequately deal with Canada's security requirements without unjustifiably infringing on individual rights.

Finally, your committee recommends that a thorough review of any legislation in this area be undertaken by a parliamentary committee, after the legislation has been in operation for a period of time, perhaps five years.

Honourable senators, may I conclude this statement with a word of appreciation of the enormous contributions that each and every one of my colleagues made to our deliberations. Their attendance through the hot summer and busy fall, their effort in mastering such a highly complex subject, their openness to all views and their good will towards all participants, not least among themselves, has been in the highest traditions of this chamber. I know that my colleagues would want me to express our special appreciation of the excellent staff support that we have received and also to particularly single out the contribution of Senator Flynn, whose good judgment and generous spirit were exceedingly helpful. While welcoming the distinguished and productive participation of Senator Roblin, we all regretted greatly the loss of Senator Flynn from the committee in the final days of its deliberations.

On motion of Senator Pitfield, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, November 14, 1983, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Explain.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to take a minute or two to explain this motion because it calls for adjournment until Monday evening as opposed to Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

I should say for the record that the House of Commons, pursuant to its rules, will stand adjourned from tomorrow, November 4, until 11 o'clock, November 14. It is also known—although I stand to be corrected on this point—that the House of Commons has moved into the second of three days' debate on Bill C-155, an act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof. It is possible that they may move to the third day of that debate tomorrow. That is not certain although it is possible. In any event, even if the conclusion of that debate is reached on Friday and they decide to vote on it under the interim rules of the house, the vote would be deferred until the following Monday. In this case the following Monday is November 14, a week after Monday next, according to the calendar.

The reason for our adjournment until Monday, November 14, is that there are now indications from the Commons that that vote will be taken late Monday, November 14. If they get into the voting by 6 o'clock, I believe it should conclude shortly thereafter. However, these are details of which most honourable senators will be aware.

I am suggesting we sit Monday evening so that we can be in the position to receive the bill for first reading. Naturally, I will ask leave of the Senate to proceed to second reading at that time because that would make it possible for the bill to be referred to the Transport and Communications Committee. The committee could then proceed with hearings on Tuesday, November 15. Of course, if leave is not granted then we must wait the 48 hours provided for in the rules.

In conclusion, I hope that honourable senators will agree to meet at 8 o'clock on Monday so that we can at least deal with first reading of the bill. If leave is granted, we could then move to second reading and commence a debate which, hopefully, would conclude later that same evening. These are not matters which we on this side, or anyone, has the right to decide. We must simply ask leave at that time.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have taken note of the program outlined by the Leader of the Government. I must say that the probabilities seem to be that a vote will be reached on third reading in the other place some time on Monday. I am not at all sure that it will take place in time for us to be presented with the bill from the other place on that evening, although it may be possible.

I would like to tell my honourable friend that we should proceed on this matter with all deliberate speed. However, we should not lend ourselves to any unseemly abbreviation of our discussion. It is true, of course, that we have had a pre-study with respect to this bill, which I think has been valuable, but it must be realized that the bill that we pre-studied is not the bill which will be coming to us. There have been many substantial amendments, and those matters will have to be considered by senators on this side of the house after the bill is received here. In that case I do not think it likely that we would be willing to seriously abbreviate our regular procedure, although I do not wish to make any firm statement on that matter at the present time, since to do that would be premature. We must wait and see how things turn out on November 14 and thereafter.

I will tell my honourable friend that there will be no obstructionism as far as we are concerned. However, we will insist on due process, which means there must be ample time for second reading. I know there are a number of senators on this side of the house who wish to take part in the debate, since it will be an exceedingly important one. We will request that the bill be referred to committee and it is even possible we may wish to hear witnesses. If substantial new matters are to be introduced then in all likelihood we will ask that witnesses be called. However, that is a matter upon which I merely wish to give notice. It is not necessary, nor indeed is it possible, to be positive about it at the present time.

I must confess my preference would be to call the house back on the following Tuesday, November 15, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. I believe that would turn out to be just as good as returning on Monday, November 14. However, I am not in the position to have my own way with respect to this matter. I will have to yield to my honourable friend in this respect. I do tell him that while there will be no unseemly obstruction as far as we are concerned, we will insist that the matter receive the consideration it is due in this chamber. The debate with respect to this matter has been hot and furious for some time now.

I am sure my honourable friend will agree that everything I have said is perfectly proper and acceptable to him.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments made by the Acting Leader of the Opposition. I think it is a reasoned approach to the situation. I understand my honourable friend's comments with respect to sitting on Tuesday as opposed to Monday evening, but I do believe it will be better to spend a longer period of time with respect to this matter before the committee meets. In that circumstance, of course, officials from the Department of Transport, and others, may be called to respond in detail to questions which my honourable friends may have with respect to the amendments. I agree with Senator Roblin when he says that there is likely to be a large number of amendments to this legislation, and that, therefore, the bill which was the subject of the pre-study and the bill which will incorporate the amendments are substantially different.

I am trying to assist members on both sides of the house and suggest that we maximize the time the members of the committee will have to question witnesses, including the minister and the officials responsible for this bill. That being the case, those witnesses will have the maximum amount of time to respond to the questions asked by the members of the committee.

Senator Roblin: I do not want to be unduly argumentative about this, but the phrase "the maximum amount of time" is one that puzzles me, because if we take the amount of time required, then that is the maximum amount of time, and we can just as well start the ball rolling at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon as at 8 o'clock on Monday evening.

Senator Olson: The last thing I want to do today is get into an argument, because I am in such a conciliatory mood.

The point I wish to make is that the Acting Leader of the Opposition will realize that some preliminary arrangements are required before a committee can meet, and more than one committee will hold meetings that week. I think that this bill will receive high priority when it is referred to committee. Earlier today the chairman of the committee and I had a discussion with respect to this matter, and while he can speak for himself, he has told me he has made some preliminary arrangements so that the committee can hold a meeting on November 15.

Senator Asselin: Or November 16.

Senator Olson: Yes, but the committee could commence consideration of this matter on November 15. I do not want members of the committee to use the maximum amount of time; I want them to maximize the use of their time before the committee.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can count on us to do that, but I point out to him that when arrangements are made for a committee to meet, he should take into account the fact that the committee will not meet until the bill has received second reading. I think it is an unwarranted assumption to think that that might be done in time for the committee to meet on Tuesday. I am sure that the committee will meet on a later date, and more probably the date suggested by Senator Asselin.

Motion agreed to.

CAPE DORSET PRINT MAKERS

CELEBRATION OF 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, with leave, I should like to make a short statement with respect to the Cape Dorset Print Makers. It was 25 years ago this week that they exhibited their prints in the Railway Committee Room of the Parliament Buildings, an event which was attended by the then Governor General and senior members of the government of the day.

An invitation has been sent to honourable senators by the Cape Dorset Print Makers to attend their 25th anniversary celebration at 7:30 this evening in the Railway Committee Room and to see their Dorset-'83 prints.

His Excellency the Governor General will also attend this evening. I hope that many of you can be present. These are the most creative components of the Canadian art scene and are widely admired, not only in Canada but throughout the world.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

UNITED NATIONS

GRENADA—CANADIAN VOTE ON RESOLUTION

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. There was a vote yesterday on a United Nations resolution concerning Grenada, and I would like to know how the Canadian Government voted on that resolution. Did it vote to condemn the United States, or did it abstain from voting on the resolution introduced by Nicaragua, I believe?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I am informed that Canada abstained.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I would like to know as well whether it is true that Canada will be a member of a Commonwealth contingent which is expected to go to the islands within the next few days to replace the American troops which have been pulling out of Grenada over the past day or so?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, a direct answer to that question would be somewhat premature. I am able to say, however, that there will be some discussions held between the Commonwealth Secretariat officials and Canadian officials on the possible role of the Commonwealth in Grenada.

Canadian officials will conduct informal discussions with officials from the Commonwealth Secretariat in New York today and on Friday. The Commonwealth officials are in New York on other business and we are taking advantage of their presence there to obtain their views on the possible role of the Commonwealth in Grenada.

I should advise Senator Asselin, as I did at the beginning, that talks at this stage are exploratory in nature.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: To get back to the resolution introduced before the General Assembly of the United Nations, is it not true that the resolution was voted on clause by clause, and that on the clause condemning the United States for invading the island of Grenada, Canada voted in favour?

[English]

Senator Olson: I am not sure whether Senator Asselin asserted that Canada voted in favour of that part, or whether he was asking if Canada did or did not.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I wonder if it is true that when the resolution was put forward and voted upon "clause by clause", Canada voted in favour of the clause condemning the Americans' intervention in Grenada.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will have to look that up. I am not sure whether or not several votes took place, although I am not questioning that. There may have been more than one.

Canada's position in the situation at the United Nations respecting that whole matter is a very complex one because of an indication that there would be some other resolutions put forward that would have some different wording from the one that finally came up and, therefore, I should like to take as notice the question in order to obtain an explanation of not only Canada's vote and whether there was more than one vote, but also an explanation of why Canada voted as it did. I believe I am correct in saying that the Canadian delegation did, in fact, give an explanation either immediately before or immediately following the vote.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: On the same issue, it has been said in the other place that the Americans had not forewarned the Canadian government of their intention to intervene in Grenada and that steps should be taken to find out whether the Department of External Affairs had been forewarned. Is it true that the United States had not gone to the trouble of warning Canada, an ally, of their intention to intervene in Grenada?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have been advised that the United States Deputy Secretary of State, Mr. Kenneth Dam, met with our ambassador in Washington on October 26 concerning Grenada. At that time Mr. Dam indicated that consultations with Canada and other countries had been considered. Military security and operational considerations had to prevail in the decision not to forewarn Canada of the exact time, according to Mr. Dam. However, there was recognition by the United States that Canada had very specific interests in the Carribean region and that Canada would be provided with the fullest information as soon as possible.

• (1500)

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, will the Leader of the Government indicate whether there has been an investigation of the statements made by the Prime Minister of Dominica recently to the effect that she had been delegated to carry the message to Prime Minister Trudeau but could not obtain his telephone number for that purpose?

Senator Olson: I have not had any advice officially on that, although I am aware of some press speculation, or otherwise, that that might have happened. Therefore, I assume that the question was put seriously, and, if so, I will take it that way and try to obtain an answer.

Senator Murray: The Prime Minister of Dominica was quoted to that effect.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I suggest good relations between the United States and Canada are of the utmost importance, and I think it is in the interest of Canadians to know whether the Americans have bothered to forewarn Canada of their intention to intervene militarily in Grenada.

I find this situation quite confusing and unclear, and the Prime Minister cannot decide one way or the other; when asked, the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the statement made by Senator Olson. Could the Minister state clearly when we return on November 14 whether there is any friendship between Washington and Canada?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can assure my honourable friend that there is a very high and valued friendship between the United States and Canada. I know that Senator Asselin is asking for further information on the level and the extent of the consultations, but at this time I cannot add anything to the answer I have already given.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Is my honourable friend not sensitive to the implications of the statement made by the Deputy Secretary of State of the United States as to why Canada was not informed, the statement being that it was necessary that we should be kept in the dark for reasons of military security? The implications of that excuse or reason are far-reaching because it implies that information given to Canada, which, after all, is an ally of the United States, and a close neighbour, is information that has to be guarded. Therefore, the implication is that we are not trustworthy in respect of confidential information of a secret or military nature.

I should like to know what interpretation the Government of Canada placed upon the reason given by Mr. Dam as to why we were not informed about this thing before we were, whether the Government of Canada is satisfied with this explanation, or whether there are any extenuating circumstances that perhaps might relieve my concerns about the matter.

Senator Olson: The officials directly responsible in the Canadian government and, indeed the ministers, including the Prime Minister, are very sensitive to the points that have just been made. I shall endeavour to obtain from the Secretary of State for External Affairs a more expanded answer as soon as possible.

Senator Roblin: I would be grateful for that because it does seem to undercut a great deal of the relationship between our two countries in a very distressing fashion. That the matter has gone, as far as I know, unremarked by the Canadian government, I find extraordinary. I want my honourable friend to clarify this matter because if relationships between Canada and the United States are on the basis indicated by Mr. Dam's statement, then I think something needs to be done about them.

Senator Olson: I have already given an undertaking to refer that question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, so I will leave it at that for now.

AGRICULTURE

RED MEAT STABILIZATION PLAN

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am glad to see the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board here because although the Leader of the Government was accused of being a farmer the other day—and I guess he does not mind the description—his colleague is equally entitled to that compliment. I am addressing him as one farmer to another and I want to ask him about the agreement in principle on the red meat stabilization plan that was announced by the Minister of Agriculture the other day. It refers to an agreement with three provinces—Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta. One of the significant factors in the agreement is the first one mentioned, that no top loading—that is, stabilization payments beyond the national levels—be permitted. I find that a very satisfactory statement.

My question is: What happened to the Province of Manitoba because although they are included in the reference, the implication is that they have not agreed to it themselves? Could the minister also tell me where the Province of Quebec stands respecting this matter because livestock subsidies in Quebec, as I think the minister knows, are a matter of much concern for the rest of the country. Some of us would be rather pleased if they, too, saw fit to accept this principle of no top loading.

[Senator Roblin.]

What is the position respecting the Provinces of Manitoba and Quebec?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Roblin for his question. I regret that I was not here the other day when he was about to ask this question. The information that I have been given is that Manitoba is still very interested in the plan. The Minister of Agriculture of Manitoba, the Honourable Senator Uruski—

Senator Roblin: He is not a senator yet.

Senator Argue: The Honourable Bill Uruski was unable to be here because he said that with the busy schedule he had it was rather short notice. As far as I know there is no information that Manitoba is not interested. I think it would be very helpful if Manitoba did, in fact, continue to take part in the discussions.

Senator Roblin: Are they a party now?

Senator Argue: At the time of the press release, they were not at the meeting and, therefore, could not be part of this tentative arrangement. I certainly agree with Senator Roblin's inference that top loading is something, from a national point of view, at any rate, that is best avoided.

I believe that Quebec did have an observer at that meeting, but the information I have is that Quebec has not indicated, at least to date, that it is likely to come into the plan. As Senator Roblin also pointed out, Quebec is a major producer of beef. It has a major dairy industry and, of course, beef is a component of that industry. It would be desirable for all the provinces to come in, but, as I understand it, up to this point Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario have signified interest and, of course, the federal government.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

SPONSORSHIP OF BILL C-155

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, so that honourable senators can fine-tune their preparations for the Crow debate, whether it will be he or some other senator who will be sponsoring the bill on behalf of the government.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I think that that is a question for the Leader of the Government.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that may be, but, as Senator Roblin has indicated, there are many honourable senators on this side of the house who are thoroughly familiar with farming in western Canada and the people who will be significantly affected by this. We have several other senators, including Senator Steuart from Saskatchewan, who have displayed a great deal of capability in this respect. I think he did a great job on the pre-study of Bill C-155. Therefore, it is not confined only to the farmers in the front row.

• (1510)

Senator Murray: Will the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board be taking part in the debate, in any event?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I anticipate doing so.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK—LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Sherwood on November 1. The question was:

> What new adjustment programs is the government about to put into effect concerning the livestock industry in New Brunswick?

The answer that has been supplied to me by the Department of Agriculture is as follows. The government is currently having discussions with the provinces, including New Brunswick, for a new series of economic and regional development agreements (ERDAs) under which we expect a sectoral program for agriculture in the New Brunswick agreement. It is likely that the New Brunswick livestock industry will be included under that agreement.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

1984 PREMIUM

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am a little disappointed that no reply has been made to a question I previously put to the Honourable Senator Austin regarding unemployment insurance. The news has now been reported in the newspapers. In the interests of timely disclosure to this house, I regret that Senator Austin is not here to give us the information. It certainly could give rise to further questions that might be asked. I must now wait until Heaven knows when before we get back to that subject.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate Senator Roblin's point in that perhaps it ought to be put on the record. I will give him an undertaking, however, to communicate what I might call his consternation—

Senator Roblin: Not consternation, but dismay.

Senator Olson: I will communicate to Senator Austin Senator Roblin's dismay. Perhaps a reply could be given to Senator Roblin through his office, although I realize that that is not as satisfactory as having the reply given on the floor of this chamber.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 27, 1983, consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the subject matter of the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983, which was tabled on Thursday, October 13, 1983.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that, if the Honourable Senator Neiman speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the consideration of this report.

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, Senator Tremblay made a number of interesting observations during the course of his intervention on this matter last week. I should like to take a few minutes to reply to some of them.

As was pointed out by Senator Tremblay, there are two categories of amendments in the proposed amendment to the Constitution which the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has been studying and which is the subject of this report. Senator Tremblay drew our attention, in particular, to what might be termed the technical aspects of the proposed amendments. He pointed out that there are certain apparent anomalies, if you will, in the wording of some of the sections.

I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators, first of all, to those comments with respect to section 54, Part IV, of the Constitution Act of 1982. Senator Tremblay has indicated that, in fact, Part IV and section 37—which is all that is contained in Part IV of the act—were repealed by operation of section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1982, as of April 18, 1983. We discussed this matter earlier. Apparently, the form of the present proposed amendment is such that the old Part IV is being left as part of the Constitution and we are inserting a new Part IV.1.

I talked this over with the Deputy Minister of Justice because it seemed to be an unusual procedure. He advised me, however, that it is not uncommon. Rather than delete sections of the act which are now repealed or are intended to be repealed at some future date, his officials made the decision that the section should remain as part of the record for future reference. He pointed out to me that this is not an uncommon practice because it leaves an historical record, and, further, that it was done respecting sections 42 and 43 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

It seemed to me—and, perhaps, to Senator Tremblay—that it is a rather awkward way to make an amendment and that when we send out copies of the Constitution for public display, it appears rather odd to see, included within the Constitution, sections which are in fact repealed followed by other sections which are the current, viable sections of the Constitution. That was, however, the decision which was made at that time. It is entirely possible that, when future amendments are made, the officials will decide to remove those sections. I merely indicate the present reasoning behind this procedure.

Senator Tremblay then referred to the fact that certain words have been deleted from the new sections of Part IV.1. In particular, the words "including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada" have now been deleted. This is one of the very matters to which our committee addressed a good deal of its efforts during all of its hearings. We felt—as I think our subsequent comments here in this chamber have emphasized—that the committee, as a whole, believes that the identification and definition of the rights of these peoples must be established at the earliest time, before negotiations can be proceeded with in any meaningful or successful way.

● (1520)

Senator Tremblay asked why the change was necessary. We cannot give an answer to that except to say that it was obvious to us that all parties to the negotiations—that is, the government officials and the representatives of the various native groups—seemed content that those words should be omitted so that they could deal with them at a later time. I do not think that allays the uneasiness or concerns that we have, but, as it appears satisfactory to those people who are going to be negotiating, I think we must simply rest our case with the observations that we have made.

The other interesting point raised by Senator Tremblay dealt with the question of when the resolution may be proclaimed, if adopted, as it undoubtedly will be today. Senator Tremblay is quite correct in noting that the resolution cannot take effect before June 1, 1984. This is covered by section 39(1) which states:

> A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 38(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

When our report was presented, we noted that five provinces, at that point, had adopted the resolution. It had also then, of course, been adopted in the other place. I have been advised that, since the commencement of our discussions in this chamber, the Province of Ontario, after a three-day debate, unanimously adopted the resolution on October 18. I am also advised that the Province of British Columbia, amid all the other business that that legislature has been involved in, debated this resolution for one day and adopted it on October 21. If this chamber adopts the resolution today, as I hope and expect it will, it means that the requirements under the Constitution Act, 1982 will be fulfilled insofar as the number of provinces is concerned.

However, as Senator Tremblay has pointed out, it can only be proclaimed after the expiration of one year. Since the Province of Nova Scotia initiated the resolution and passed it on May 31, 1983, we must wait till May 31, 1984 before proclamation.

After discussions with the Department of Justice, my understanding is that the meaning of the section is that it will automatically be adopted on June 1, 1984, whether or not the Province of Quebec takes any action with respect to it. If all ten provinces register their assent or dissent before that date, then it could be proclaimed before that time. That is the only clarification I would make with respect to that particular point which Senator Tremblay raised.

I would now turn to the subject of the first ministers' conference as required in the amendment we are considering. It was pointed out that, if a conference of first ministers is held prior to the date on which the proposed amendment to the Constitution is adopted, it will not be a conference authorized or required by the Constitution, and I think that is quite true. The amendment cannot take effect until next June 1, so, if a meeting is held prior to that date, it will not be a constitutional conference within the meaning of this amendment. However, I do not think that that is of particular concern because I am sure the native groups would be glad to have a conference before then as a forerunner to the formal constitutional conference.

The only requirement then is that there must be one conference before the appropriate date in 1985. However, they could, perhaps, have any number of preliminary conferences before that time. They will still be entitled to two constitutional conferences as required by this amendment.

Honourable senators, I believe that these are the only points on which I wish to make special comment. I would conclude by suggesting to you that we endorse the suggestions and observations made by Senator Tremblay in his concluding remarks concerning the role the Senate should play in future amendments to the Constitution. His suggestion that our committee should convene a special meeting to look into the procedures is something I take seriously. I believe this could be done very well by our committee. We shall certainly proceed with his suggestion.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this report is considered debated.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AMENDMENT PROCLAMATION ADOPTED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:
> That:
> Whereas the Constitution Act 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

And Whereas the Constitution of Canada, reflecting the country and Canadian society, continues to develop and strengthen the rights and freedoms that it guarantees;

And Whereas, after a gradual transition of Canada from colonial status to the status of an independent and sovereign state, Canadians have, as of April 17, 1982, full authority to amend their Constitution in Canada;

And Whereas historically and equitably it is fitting that the early exercise of that full authority should relate to the rights and freedoms of the first inhabitants of Canada, the aboriginal peoples;

Now Therefore the Senate of Canada resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Paragraph 25(b) of the Constitution Act 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) any rights or freedoms that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired."

2. Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally to male and female persons".

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 35 thereof, the following section:

"35.1 The government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to the principle that, before any amendment is made to Class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, to section 25 of this Act or to this Part,

(a) a constitutional conference that includes in its agenda an item relating to the proposed amendment, composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces, will be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada; and

(b) the Prime Minister of Canada will invite representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada to participate in the discussions on that item."

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 37 thereof, the following Part:

"PART IV.1 CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

37.1 (1) In addition to the conference convened in March 1983, at least two constitutional conferences composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada, the first within three years after April 17, 1982 and the second within five years after that date.

(2) Each conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on those matters.

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of a conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to derogate from subsection 35(1)."

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 54 thereof, the following section:

"54.1 Part IV.1 and this section are repealed on April 18, 1987."

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983."

7. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation 1983.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at length on this motion of Senator Frith. I simply want to express my appreciation and, indeed, my congratulations, not only to the chairman of the committee but also to the members of that committee, who made a very useful contribution to the process that is involved in the matter referred to the committee.

As Senator Neiman pointed out in the course of her comments, we are now at a stage where eight of the ten legislatures have adopted this resolution, as well as the House of Commons. I believe it is also true, as has been pointed out, that when the Senate adopts this motion, it will be proclaimed one year later.

• (1530)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Senator Neiman has already explained that.

Senator Olson: I have to acknowledge that at one point I was not listening to the debate. However, I do not think that I can add anything more to what Senator Neiman has said, and I hope that honourable senators will approve the motion today.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: I do not intend to engage in a debate, because actually it already has taken place on the substance of the issue. Referring to Senator Neiman's remarks, I would simply say I am glad that the suggestion I made the other day, that the process or evolution of constitutional amendments, now that we are in the post-patriation phase, is a matter to be studied thoroughly, in order to establish for the future procedures that are reliable and all-encompassing. In any case, we will be perfectly conscious of that and will be sufficiently aware of the nature of what is implied to avoid any surprise. Senator Neiman suggested that while the native peoples did expect a constitutional conference to be held in March, the fact that it will not be such a conference may not be a serious problem. Having met subsequently a few natives who are involved in the work done by the association representatives, this has been a disappointment to them. They say so in private, because they thought everything would be over by December. This goes to show the importance of looking at each such operation, because every time we will be breaking new ground as far as procedure is concerned. The Senate indeed is there to undertake such studies. Of course, the procedure will not necessarily be the same each and every time. I am glad that Senator Neiman has seriously considered this suggestion that the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs take the initiative in holding a few meetings as needs be. We will be hearing Department of Justice officials, and witnesses from outside, and will look at the various possible ways for introducing future constitutional amendments. To conclude, it has already been indicated that we are going to agree to the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, November 14, 1983, at 8 pm.

CONCLUSION

APPENDICES

INTRODUCTION

1 Bill C-157, given first reading in the House of Commons on May 18, 1983, would mark a new and important departure in the treatment of Canada's security needs. The Bill would establish an entirely new security intelligence agency separate from the RCMP. The agency so formed would not be police in nature; it would have a legislated mandate; and new control and review mechanisms would be added to attempt to ensure the propriety and effectiveness of the agency's activities.

2 The Committee is mindful of the significance and importance of the proposals in Bill C-157 and, in fulfilling the terms of its Order of Reference from the Senate of 29 June 1983, has undertaken as thorough a study of the subject-matter of the Bill as time and circumstances have permitted. The Committee has heard over 30 witnesses in 18 days of hearings, and has also considered numerous other submissions from the public.* We have heard from a fairly representative cross-section of public opinion on Bill C-157, including the legal community, the police, human rights organizations, political groups, and representatives of provincial governments. In so doing, the Committee has also acquired a degree of familiarity with the difficult issues involved with legislating in this area. We believe that this has been a useful and constructive enterprise, and hope that this report can adequately reflect some of the incisive and judicious testimony and recommendations which we have heard. We also hope that the proposals made in this report can contribute to the process of formulating legislation in this area that is both effective and congruent with democratic principles.

3 Before proceeding to our analysis of the subject-matter of the Bill, it is first necessary to address a number of matters which underlie the proposed legislation. One of the most important of these matters is the delicate balance which must be achieved, in security intelligence matters, between the protection of individual rights and the protection of collective security. Discussed in more detail below, it should be noted at this point that this balance is an issue which runs through and informs virtually every part of this report.

* A list of witnesses is appended: Appendix A.

MATTERS PRELIMINARY AND FUNDAMENTAL

4 Some issues relating to the subject-matter of the Bill are necessarily preliminary to a consideration of it, and are of such a fundamental nature as to merit consideration throughout this report. They will, accordingly, be dealt with first.

1. The nature of the threat — the need for a security intelligence service

5 This is surely the most basic issue to be addressed in dealing with the subject-matter of Bill C-157. Are there threats to Canada's security? If so, are they of such significance that a distinct security intelligence capability is required?

6 The Committee believes that both questions must be answered in the affirmative. Both the Royal Commission on Security (The "Mackenzie Commission") in 1968, and the Commission of Inquiry Concerning Certain Activities of the RCMP (The "McDonald Commission") in 1981, found that there was, and is, a need to protect the security of Canada from threats both external and internal. The Mackenzie Commission found that the state had a duty to:

> protect its secrets from espionage, its information from unauthorized disclosure, its institutions from subversion and its policies from clandestine influence.

The McDonald Commission found that in the protection of the security of Canada there are two basic needs:

> first, the need to protect Canadians and their governments against attempts by foreign powers to use coercive or clandestine means to advance their own interests in Canada, and second, the need to protect the essential elements of Canadian democracy against attempts to destroy or subvert them.

The McDonald Commission identified threats to Canada's security as falling into three basic categories: activities of foreign intelligence agencies, political terrorism, and subversion of democratic institutions. It further found that these types of threats could not be dealt with solely by law enforcement agencies. Advance intelligence is required in any credible attempt to protect security, and a distinct security intelligence capacity is the only realistic source of such intelligence.

7 It should be noted that, while there was considerable divergence among witnesses before the Committee as to the appropriate mandate, powers, structure and location of a security intelligence agency, no witness questioned the need for such an agency. There was, indeed, substantial disagreement among witnesses as to the extent and seriousness of threats to Canada's security. But, again, no witness claimed that there were no threats, or that the threats were so minimal as to require no significant response. The debate before the Committee on Bill C-157 demonstrated implicit acceptance of most of the basic principles enunciated in this area by the Mackenzie and McDonald Commissions. Accordingly, the Committee has found that the need for a security intelligence capacity has been demonstrated. What must be addressed is the extent and configuration of that capacity.

2. Jurisdiction

8 The issue of jurisdiction, at least in relation to the establishment and operation of a security intelligence agency, is clear and easily disposed of. The Committee believes that legislative authority in this area clearly resides with the federal government. Ensuring the security of the collectivity is a matter of national importance, and is a distinct subject-matter which does not fall within provincial jurisdiction. Federal authority in the areas of national defence, criminal law and procedure, and "peace, order and good government" all buttress the claim that only the federal government has the jurisdiction to establish an agency with the scope and powers as that contemplated by Bill C-157. No witness seriously challenged federal competence in this area. This is not to deny the provinces a role in security matters; but merely to assert that only the federal government can bring into existence and maintain an agency of this kind.

9 While federal primacy in this area is, in our opinion, beyond dispute, what is less clear is the question of the limits of that competence. Several witnesses, in particular representatives of the provincial law officers of the Crown, have challenged the attempt in Part IV of the Bill to potentially exclude the provinces from participation in the prosecution of security-related offences, and to give the RCMP "primary responsibility" for police work in relation to such offences. This matter will be dealt with in that part of this report which discusses Part IV, the proposed Security Offences Act.

10 A final issue involving the question of jurisdiction has to do with the effect which the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms may have on Bill C-157. Some witnesses who appeared before the Committee contended that several provisions of the Bill constitute prima facie infringements of fundamental freedoms and legal rights which are guaranteed by the Charter, such as freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression; freedom of peaceful assembly and association; the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice; and the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure. Other witnesses went further and declared that the whole thrust of the Bill was inconsistent with the spirit of the Charter.

11 It would be difficult to disagree with the contention that some of the provisions of Bill C-157 may, without consideration of the question of reasonable limits, be construed as infringing on some Charter rights. Indeed, any effective security intelligence agency will require the use of extraordinary powers which have the potential for conflict with civil liberties. But the Committee disagrees with those who contend that a statute establishing a security intelligence agency is fundamentally incompatible with the Charter. The fact that an attempt is being made to legislate in this area is, we think, a clear indication that the government recognizes the need for effective limits, control and review of our security intelligence capacity.

12 With respect to the particular question of the constitutionality of certain elements of the Bill, the Committee takes the position that any detailed discussion of the Charter would, of necessity, be highly speculative. The Committee is, however, confident that a Bill amended as recommended in this report would be compatible with the Charter, and that whatever infringements of rights and freedoms which may result could be considered "reasonable limits ... as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society."

3. The distinction between law enforcement and security intelligence operations

13 Once it is accepted that a distinct security intelligence capacity is required, cognizance must be taken of the fundamental differences between a system established for enforcement of the law, and a system established for the protection of security. There are similarities between such systems, and a distinct area of overlap in which the interests of a police force in certain crimes against the state, or against particular individuals, are identical to the interests of a security intelligence agency.

14 But the differences are considerable. Law enforcement is essentially reactive. While there is an element of information-gathering and prevention in law enforcement, on the whole it takes place after the commission of a distinct criminal offence. The protection of security relies less on reaction to events; it seeks advance warning of security threats, and is not necessarily concerned with breaches of the law. Considerable publicity accompanies and is an essential part of the enforcement of the law. Security intelligence work requires secrecy. Law enforcement is "result-oriented", emphasizing apprehension and adjudication, and the players in the system — police, prosecutors, defence counsel, and the judiciary — operate with a high degree of autonomy. Security intelligence is, in contrast, "information-oriented". Participants have a much less clearly defined role, and direction and control within a hierarchical structure are vital. Finally, law enforcement is a virtually "closed" system with finite limits — commission, detection, apprehension, adjudication. Security intelligence operations are much more open-ended. The emphasis is on investigation, analysis, and the formulation of intelligence.

15 The differences between law enforcement and the protection of security have profound implications for several aspects of a security intelligence régime. They can have effect on many questions of policy, such as how much power or freedom of action a person employed in a security agency should have; or obversely, how much protection a person who is the object of investigation can have in light of the differences between operational means and investigative ends. An investigation related to security can have severe consequences on a person's life. Thus the question of control and accountability becomes important, because there is no impartial adjudication by a third party of the appropriateness of an investigation. Since it is so open-ended and confidential in nature, security intelligence work requires a close and thorough system of control, direction and review, in which political responsibility plays a large part. Such close direction is incompatible with our traditional notions of law enforcement.

16 The distinction between law enforcement and the protection of security is one which should be kept in mind throughout our analysis of the subject-matter of the Bill. It forms a large part of the basis for several recommendations which are made.

4. Civilianization

17 The foregoing discussion of the distinction between law enforcement and the protection of security leads logically to consideration of one of the major and fundamental changes proposed in Bill C-157. That is the separation of the security intelligence function from the RCMP, and the establishment of a civilian agency.

18 The witnesses who have appeared before the Committee have forcefully presented the arguments on both sides of the civilianization issue. While conceding that some of the arguments for retaining the Security Service within the RCMP are valid, a majority of the Committee is strongly of the opinion that it is necessary to proceed as proposed in the Bill and establish a civilian agency. One member of the Committee, Senator Kelly, disagrees. He maintains that the RCMP should retain the security function, but is otherwise in accord with the Committee as to the rest of this report.

19 In coming to this conclusion, we have been influenced by the findings of the Mackenzie and McDonald Commissions, which both proposed a civilian agency. Those findings were emphasized by several witnesses. There is a need for a fundamental re-orientation of management of security intelligence, extending from control of operations to the relationship of the service to government. The RCMP has, in the past, proved to be extremely resistant to such changes. It may be impossible (and undesirable) to impose such controls on a police organization. In addition, there is a need for a new type of recruit, with a different outlook and education. Analytical and assessment skills must be greatly increased. The RCMP recruitment system has, and continues to produce excellent policemen, but we subscribe to the view that, to a critical and substantial extent, security work requires individuals with a different background. Furthermore, the relationship between the government and the agency must be very close, and the agency must be stringently monitored and reviewed by third parties. Such a relationship would be neither appropriate nor possible with a police force. At present, the Commissioner of the RCMP consults with the Solicitor General in two capacities, as head of both a police and a security organization. There is a great potential for confusion or mixture of those roles, to the disadvantage of the police, the security agency, and the system of ministerial responsibility and accountability. Finally, there is inherent in the combination of law enforcement and security duties the danger of the creation of what the McDonald Commission referred to as a "political police". Police forces must function with a high degree of autonomy. But such autonomy is incompatible with the strict process of control and review which must be exercised with respect to a security force.

20 We recognize, of course, that civilianization will not be a panacea. Considerable effort must be made to ensure that a precise mandate is prescribed and that effective controls are imposed on the agency. We also recognize that there will, inevitably, be difficulties in the transition to a civilian agency.

For example, there is the danger of a loss of effective liaison with other agencies, and the concern that the agency might be more subject to penetration by foreign powers once removed from the RCMP. These are issues which must be addressed in the transition, but they do not, in our opinion, outweigh the benefits to be gained from the creation of the new agency. In this regard, it should be noted that, in its initial stages, the CSIS would be composed entirely of former RCMP Security Service employees, and that changes in personnel would be gradually introduced. This should alleviate many of the concerns as to the transition.

21 We also note that an RCMP role in security matters will continue to exist in areas having to do with security operations and the enforcement of the criminal law. A special branch of the force is to be established to deal with the CSIS for these purposes. Not least because of the useful check it will put on the CSIS, this is an important matter, and will require special attention during the establishment of the CSIS.

22 Before leaving this area, we would like to stress the fact that the creation of a new agency will not diminish or devalue the extremely important work of the RCMP. It should be recognized that some of the difficulties experienced in the past with the Security Service arose less from any inherent defect in the RCMP or its personnel, than from an unsatisfactory institutional framework and the undesirable mixture of police and security functions. We would hope that the creation of a new agency would introduce a welcome degree of certainty for the force. It is possible, however, that prolonged delay in the separation of the security function will affect the morale of the RCMP. The Committee is concerned about this possibility, and expresses the hope that the transition can be effected quickly, efficiently and with minimal disruption of RCMP activities so that the force can resume its policing functions with characteristic expertise, and maintain its undoubted prestige.

5. The security of the collectivity and individual rights

23 This matter is perhaps the most important to be considered when dealing with the subject-matter of the Bill. The need to balance collective security — the safety of the state and its institutions from threats of espionage, terrorism and subversion — with individual rights to privacy, to dissent, to be politically active and to hold and express unpopular or radical opinions is a challenge to be faced in the establishment of a security intelligence system. There is a very basic tension between the concepts of collective and individual security, and it must be addressed at virtually every stage of the formation and operation of a security intelligence agency. To a significant degree, it must be noted, individual rights depend upon maintenance of collective security. Both ends are desirable, but they also make competing demands on the institutions of a democratic state. Either end, by itself, could be easily attained, but at great expense to the other. The crucial task is to arrive at an appropriate balance of the two.

24 The raison d'être of a security intelligence agency is the preservation of a free and democratic state in which individual liberty can be maintained. Thus, the degree to which such an agency impinges unjustifiably on freedom is a measure of its failure. The McDonald Commission expressed this concern as follows:

> Canada must meet both the requirements of security and the requirements of democracy: we must never forget that the fundamental purpose of the former is to secure the latter. Those who seek to subvert Canada's democratic institutions would realize an ironic victory if Canadians were to permit their governors to violate the requisites of democracy in the course of protecting them from its opponents.

25 It is with these matters in mind that the Committee has approached its analysis of the Bill. A credible and effective security intelligence agency does need to have some extraordinary powers, and does need to collect and analyze information in a way which may infringe on the civil liberties of some. But it must also be strictly controlled, and have no more power than is necessary to accomplish its objectives, which must in turn not exceed what is necessary for the protection of the security of Canada. As in our discussion of the Charter above, we submit that any limitations on rights and freedoms caused by a security intelligence agency must be reasonable, within section 1 of the Charter.

26 The Committee thus makes a number of recommendations which, in its opinion, would lead to a more appropriate balance between collective and individual security. The Committee acknowledges the fact that striking such a balance is a difficult endeavour. It hopes that this report will be of assistance in the final formulation of legislation in this area.

AN ANALYSIS OF THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-157

27 Bill C-157 does provide a comprehensive framework for the establishment of a security intelligence agency. Its main structural elements are basically sound. The Committee does, however, recommend several adjustments, clarifications and additions, which it submits to improve the proposed legislation. This report will adopt a functional approach, rather than a clause by clause analysis, in order to facilitate a clear understanding of the rationale for its proposals. Accordingly, we will commence with an analysis of the mandate and functions of the CSIS. The report will then proceed to a discussion of: the powers and immunities of employees; management, control and responsibility for the agency; monitoring and review of operations; and other matters not subsumed within the foregoing. The analysis will conclude with a discussion of Part IV of the Bill — the proposed Security Offences Act.

1. The mandate and functions of the CSIS

a) The primary function and mandate

28 What might be termed the "primary function" of the proposed agency is to be found in s. 14(1) of the Bill:

> The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise, and analyse and retain information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada and, in relation thereto, shall report to and advise the Government of Canada.

This subsection, on its face, is unobjectionable. It sets out clearly what the principal activity of any security intelligence agency should be: investigation, analysis and the retention of information and intelligence on security threats. This, of course, then leads to a very important question, the answer to which is crucial to the scope of the agency's power: what constitutes "threats to the security of Canada"? In brief, how is the agency's mandate to be defined?

29 Before addressing this question, however, the Committee feels that it would be useful to stipulate an immediate limitation on the primary function in section 14. It has in mind what the McDonald Commission recommended, and what several witnesses endorsed: that there be included in the statute words which would indicate that the agency's mandate should not be given an overly expansive interpretation. The McDonald Commission suggested, in part, the following:

> that the legislation establishing Canada's security intelligence agency contain a clause indicating that the agency's work should be limited to what is strictly necessary for the purpose of protecting the security of Canada ... (Recommendation 4, p. 443, Second Report)

30 Adding words to this effect to s. 14(1) would, we believe, have a salutary effect on its interpretation. The recommendation in that Report also went on to include words which are found in s. 14(3) of the Bill.[1] The Committee is of the opinion that this formulation is also useful, but that it should be expressed affirmatively, and within the definition of security threats, as discussed below.

31 This, then, brings us back to the question of mandate. Section 2 contains the definition of "threats to the security of Canada". One cannot overstate the importance of this definition. It constitutes the basic limit on the agency's freedom of action. It will establish for the CSIS, its Director, and employees the fundamental standard for their activities. It will enter crucially into judicial determination of whether a particular intrusive investigative technique can be used. And it will provide a benchmark for assessment of agency activities by review bodies, and by the agency's political masters. It will not, however, create a crime or crimes.

32 Not surprisingly, the definition has received attention commensurate with its importance from witnesses and in submissions to the Committee. The Committee agrees with many of the criticisms made of the definition. We do believe, however, that the four elements of the definition — espionage and sabotage; foreign-influenced activities detrimental to Canada's interests; political violence; and subversion — establish appropriate parameters for the definition.

33 The first issue to be addressed with respect to the definition relates to the phrase "or any state allied or associated with Canada" in paragraphs (a) and (b).[2] The phrase would extend the scope of the mandate in relation to sabotage and espionage, and foreign-influenced activities to include the practise of such activities against such "allied" or "associated" states. The Committee agrees with those witnesses who contend that the phrase in question has the potential to unreasonably expand the agency's mandate. In particular, it finds the concept of "association" with other states to be unduly vague. As several witnesses have pointed out, this word could conceivably include all member states of the United Nations. It is true that the phrase is used in other federal statutes, notably the Access to Information Act, and the Financial Administration Act. But we do not believe that its use is appropriate for the purpose of defining threats to security.

34 The Committee recommends that the phrase be deleted from section two. In its place should be put reference to detriment to the interests of Canada. Thus, in paragraph (a), espionage and sabotage would constitute a threat if directed against Canada, or if those activities are otherwise detrimental to the interests of Canada. This would allow a particular analysis of whether any given act of espionage against another state should be a concern of the CSIS. Paragraph (b)

[1] Section 14(3) reads as follows:

> Nothing in this Act authorizes the Service to investigate the affairs or activities of any person or group of persons solely on the basis of the participation by that person or group in lawful advocacy, protest or dissent.

[2] Paragraphs (a) and (b) of the definition:

> (a) espionage or sabotage against Canada or any state allied or associated with Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage, (b) foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada or any state allied or associated with Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person.

already contains the phrase recommended, and thus the reference to association and alliance is surplusage. Beyond the offending phrase, the Committee finds paragraphs (a) and (b) to be acceptable.

35 Paragraph (c) deals with political violence.[3] It appears to be primarily directed against terrorism. No witness objected to the inclusion of such activity in the definition. Concern was expressed, however, with the scope of this definition. It includes activities directed toward or in support of "the threat or use of violence ... for the purpose of achieving a political objective ...". It is argued that this wording would not only catch acts of terrorism, but also relatively minor acts with political overtones. The typical example given was the throwing of a tomato at a political figure. This can be characterized as "violent" activity with a political objective, but should it attract the attention of the CSIS? Since there is no qualification of the word "violence" in paragraph (c), a political tomato-thrower might well fall within its scope. The quite similar definition recommended by the McDonald Commission would have qualified the word "violence" with the adjective "serious". The Committee was urged by several witnesses to incorporate that word in paragraph (c).

36 The Committee appreciates the intent of this criticism, and agrees that minor acts of political violence should not be a great concern of the CSIS. But it does not agree that this difficulty would be resolved by adding the word "serious" to the definition. The word is so vague and susceptible of various interpretation that it would further confuse the issue.

37 The Committee believes that the problem can be dealt with otherwise. First, the addition of the qualifying words to s. 14, limiting the agency to what is strictly necessary to protect Canada's security (described above) would assist in excluding innocuous conduct. Second, the limitation added to s. 2 itself to protect lawful advocacy, protest or dissent, described below, would further restrict the CSIS. Finally, the adjustments suggested to s. 22, dealing with warrants (also described below) would further insulate minor political violence from the use of intrusive investigative techniques by the CSIS. But beyond these further limitations, the Committee believes that even minor political violence could be a concern of the CSIS, even if not the subject of its full investigative powers. In this regard, the tomato-throwing example is not particularly apt; but no less harmless conduct, closer to "serious" violence, might in particular circumstances constitute activities that have the potential to be threatening, or are incipient terrorism. We would not want to restrict the CSIS unduly at such a stage.

38 The final element in the definition is paragraph (d) which has been generally described as the "subversion" definition. This is perhaps the most difficult part of the definition of threats to deal with, because the activities it describes come closest to legitimate protest, dissent and advocacy. Indeed, it was suggested by some witnesses that subversion should not be a concern of the CSIS at all, specifically because it is so hard to distinguish from legitimate activities. The Committee does not agree with this approach. Even though the limits of subversion are hard to define, it can represent a threat to the security of the state. A state should be in a position to protect itself from illegitimate attempts to weaken its institutions. Having taken this position, however, the Committee believes it is necessary to tighten up the definition.

39 Paragraph (d) has reference to activities directed against the "constitutionally established system of government in Canada".[4] In its definition of "revolutionary subversion", the McDonald Commission referred to the "democratic" system of government. It was urged by several witnesses that the Committee adopt that formulation. We decline to do so, because the word "democratic" is too vague for this purpose. The Committee should not be taken as saying that we do not know what democracy means, in the popular sense. But for the purposes of a statutory definition, the word lacks clarity. Any word that has been used to describe political systems as diverse as those of Canada and, say, Albania, is too elastic to be used in such a critical statutory definition. Since there is no universally accepted concept of what inheres in democracy, using that term could actually have the effect of widening the scope of paragraph (d). The Committee would prefer to temper the perceived rigour of that paragraph in other ways.

40 Paragraph (d) has two arms. The first is "activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts" the constitutionally established system. This part is unobjectionable. The second arm refers to "activities ... directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow of the constitutionally established system." The Committee finds itself in agreement with some of the criticism directed at this part of the subversion definition. "Destruction" and "overthrow" do not necessarily include within their ambit violent or disruptive conduct. Thus it would be open for the CSIS under paragraph (d) to investigate the activities of a peaceful, legal political party, for example, which seeks to alter Canada's constitutional system. This would not be acceptable. Accordingly, the Committee would modify this second arm of paragraph (d) by including reference to destruction or overthrow "by violence". Peaceful and lawful agitation for constitutional change should not be considered a threat to the security of Canada.

41 It is at this point, after threats have been defined, that the Committee believes words similar to those in s. 14(3) of the Bill would be most effectively expressed. Thus, after describing the four types of threat, the definition in section 2 should go on to stipulate, clearly and affirmatively, that lawful advocacy, protest or dissent are to be beyond the investigative scope of the CSIS, unless carried on in conjunction with conduct which does otherwise constitute a threat.

42 A final suggestion which has been made to reduce the possible severity of the definition of subversion is to prohibit the use of intrusive investigative techniques against such a threat. This was proposed by the McDonald Commission. The Committee would see some merit in this suggestion if the definition of subversion were to remain as it is in the Bill. But

[3] Paragraph (c) of the definition:

(c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state.

[4] Paragraph (d) of the definition:

(d) activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada.

the definition we suggest, which would apply only to covert unlawful acts or the use of violent means to destroy or overthrow the constitutionally established system, does not have the same breadth. In addition, the changes which we recommend to s. 22, concerning warrants, would further protect non-threatening activity. Thus, intrusive techniques could be used without a substantial risk of unduly interfering with legitimate activities.

43 One element of section 14 remains to be discussed. That is subsection (2) which states that:

> Nothing in this Act restricts the Service from remaining informed about the political, economic and social environment within Canada and matters affecting that environment.

This subsection was included, it appears, out of an abundance of caution — to prevent the argument being made that the CSIS could not go about collecting information from open, public sources without specific permission. The Committee feels that this fear is groundless, and that the functioning of the agency would not be hindered if the subsection were to be deleted entirely. There is nothing to prevent CSIS employees from becoming familiar with political, social and economic affairs in the public domain. Indeed, in order to provide cogent analysis of intelligence to the government this will be a necessity. But to include unnecessary words in a statute is to court mischief. An example of this is provided by a conjoint reading of ss. 14(2) and 22(1) of the Bill.[5] On a literal reading, the CSIS could request a warrant for the use of an intrusive investigative technique for the purpose of "remaining informed" about economic matters. The Committee doubts that such a reading was intended, and, indeed, officials who testified before the Committee indicated that it was not, and that s. 14 should have been specifically excepted from s. 22. Yet it is a possible reading of those sections.

44 In summary, the Committee submits that the changes that we recommend to the primary function and mandate would sharpen the focus of the agency's activities and serve to better protect legitimate social and political activity while, at the same time, keep the government informed as to genuine threats to the security of Canada.

b) Security assessments

45 The provision of security assessments and advice relating to the security of Canada would be functions assigned to the CSIS by ss. 15-17 of Bill C-157. These are what might be termed "secondary" functions of the agency. But the CSIS would be the logical entity to perform such duties, which are necessary for the proper and secure operation of government institutions. The Committee is, on the whole, satisfied with the scope and content of these sections, subject to a few qualifications.

46 The Committee notes that no criteria for the performance of security assessments are provided in the Bill. Thus, Cabinet Directive 35 (which was made public by the McDonald Commission in 1978) would in all likelihood continue to govern assessments of loyalty and reliability of government employees. Assessments would not be limited, of course, to the criteria of threats to the security of Canada.

47 We find this to be entirely appropriate. But we would urge one adjustment. That is that Cabinet Directive 35, any amendments thereto, or any replacement of it should be transmitted to the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) which would be established under the proposed Act. The SIRC would review such material, and be in a position to report its opinion to the government as to the appropriateness or necessity of those assessment criteria. This would ensure that the assessment process comes under external scrutiny. Security assessment standards should also be made public. There is no reason why such matters should not be openly known and debated. (It should also be noted that the SIRC would have a further role in hearing complaints from individuals concerning security assessments. This is discussed below).

48 Three other matters should be dealt with. First, s. 15(2) would allow the CSIS to conclude agreements with, inter alia, any police force in Canada to provide such forces with security assessments.[6] The Committee believes that it would be preferable if the agency entered into such agreements only after having first informed the relevant provincial government. Second, s. 15(3) might allow for the transmission and retransmission of security data to foreign states or institutions with whom an agreement has been concluded. Because of the consequences which the transmission of such data may have on the individuals concerned, the Committee feels that such arrangements should only be entered into under ministerial certification, and should be monitored by the SIRC to ensure that the issue is being dealt with properly. Further, all such agreements should also be transmitted to the SIRC. Finally, section 17 would allow the agency to "conduct such investigations as it considers appropriate" for the purpose of providing security assessments. It is important in this regard that s. 22 would not allow the use of intrusive investigative techniques in security assessments.

c) The collection of information from foreign states and persons concerning defence and international affairs

49 The third function of the CSIS under Bill C-157 would be to assist in the collection of what has been termed "foreign" intelligence, to distinguish it from security intelligence. Under s. 18, the CSIS would be empowered to assist in collecting information or intelligence in relation to "the defence of Canada or the conduct of the international affairs of Canada" concerning the capabilities, intentions or activities

---

[5] Section 22, discussed in greater detail below, governs the issuance of warrants for the use of certain investigative techniques.

[6] Section 15 reads as follows:

> 15.(1) The Service may provide security assessments to departments of the Government of Canada.
> (2) The Service may, with the approval of the Minister, enter into an arrangement with the government of a province or any department thereof or any police force in Canada authorizing the Service to provide the government, department or police force with security assessments.
> (3) The Service may, with the approval of the Minister after consultation by the Minister with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, enter into an arrangement with the government of a foreign state or an institution thereof authorizing the Service to provide the government, institution or organization with security assessments.

of foreign states or persons other than Canadian citizens, permanent residents, and Canadian corporations.

50 According to the Minister of State for External Relations, the collection of foreign intelligence is a well-established function of the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs. It includes such things as the collection of intelligence by the Defence department on the armed forces and war potential of foreign states, and "signals intelligence" — information gathered about foreign countries by intercepting and studying their radio, radar and other electronic transmissions — collected by the Communications Security Establishment. It also includes information gathered by the Bureau of Intelligence Analysis and Security, and the Bureau of Economic Intelligence of the Department of External Affairs which generally advise the government on economic, political, social, and military affairs relevant to Canada's multilateral and bilateral relations.

51 According to the Minister, section 18 is intended to provide necessary support for the collection of foreign intelligence in Canada. At present, the government has inadequate means in this area. Section 18 would fill that gap, allowing the CSIS to assist the relevant government departments. What would distinguish the agency's role in this area from that with respect to security intelligence would be the fact that only foreign nationals could be targeted, and the fact that the agency would only act at the request of a minister of the Crown.

52 The Committee acknowledges the continued need for foreign intelligence, and rejects any suggestion that its collection is not of importance to Canada's interests. It also cannot agree that section 18 is the first step in the creation of a security intelligence service that will act abroad. As noted above, this form of intelligence collection has been in existence for some time. In addition, section 18 specifically restricts the agency to collection of information "within Canada". Another criticism of section 18 is that, although it purports to restrict intelligence gathering to information about foreign nationals or states, nothing in the section prevents the targeting of Canadians who have knowledge or expertise about such foreign interests. The Committee feels that this criticism may have substance, and that the section should be amended to make it completely clear that the targeting of Canadians or permanent residents is forbidden.

53 While the Committee is of the opinion that facilitating the collection of foreign intelligence by proper authorities is an appropriate function of the CSIS, it also believes that that function should be much more closely controlled and monitored. Further, political responsibility for the collection of foreign intelligence should be clear.

54 To this end, the Committee makes the following proposals. First, the CSIS should not only assist in the collection of such intelligence — it should have a monopoly on all operational work. This would ensure that all such activity comes within the régime of review and accountability which will accompany the CSIS. Second, CSIS operations (including the use of intrusive techniques) should only be activated under s. 18 where the relevant minister seeking the information — be he (or she) the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs — certifies the requirement for such information and delivers it to the Solicitor General who will also certify it, before directing it to the CSIS.

55 The CSIS operational monopoly and the requirement for ministerial certificates would decrease the possibility of s. 18 being used to avoid the strictures on surveillance of Canadians. The agency would not be able to initiate intelligence gathering under s. 18 ab initio; it would first have to receive a request certified by two ministers of the Crown. In particular, the "monopoly" aspect of this procedure would ensure that the Security Intelligence Review Committee would consider the conduct of such operations, and attempt to verify their propriety. In addition, if the agency proposed the use of an intrusive investigative technique under s. 18 it would have to obtain a judicial warrant pursuant to s. 22.

2. The powers and immunities of the CSIS and its employees

a) Intrusive investigation techniques and judicial control of their use

56 The phrase "intrusive investigative techniques" has reference to a group of extraordinary powers which would be given to CSIS employees, by warrant, pursuant to s. 22 of Bill C-157. Section 22(1) refers to warrants allowing persons "to intercept any communication or obtain any information, record, document or thing".[7] Employees in possession of such warrants would also be empowered to enter any place or open or obtain access to any thing; to search for and remove or copy any record or thing; and to install, maintain or remove any thing. Thus, the CSIS would be able to engage in such things as electronic surveillance, wiretapping, surreptitious entry and mail-opening, and would be able to obtain a warrant allowing them access to personal information in the possession of the government.

57 Section 22 would give the CSIS very significant powers. Some witnesses who have appeared before the Committee have contended that there is no need for the agency to have such a broad expanse of extraordinary powers. We do not agree. A security intelligence agency does need to have access to a wide variety of investigative techniques. While the utility of any given technique varies with circumstances, to absolutely deny one or other to the agency would be to unreasonably restrict its operations. The Committee is quite aware of the dangers inherent in allowing such powers to be given to anyone. But we take the approach that the proper way to avoid

[7] Section 22(1) of the Bill:

> 22. (1) Notwithstanding any other law, on application in writing to a judge for a warrant made by the Director or any employee designated by the Minister for the purpose, the judge may, if satisfied by evidence on oath that a warrant is required to enable the Service to perform its duties and functions under this Act, other than sections 15, 16 and 17, issue a warrant authorizing the persons to whom the warrant is directed to intercept any communication or obtain any information, record, document or thing and, for that purpose, authorizing those persons:
> (a) to enter any place or open to obtain access to any thing;
> (b) to search for, remove or return, or examine, take extracts from or make copies of or record in any other manner the information, record, document or thing; or
> (c) to install, maintain or remove any thing.

abuse is to restrict the availability of a warrant to specific and exigent circumstances, rather than deny the use of a particular power outright. Thus mail-opening, for example, will be available, but only in a proper case where the agency meets a strict set of conditions, and where the prescribed mandate and functions of the agency allow it.

58 This is not to say, however, that the Committee is satisfied with s. 22. In our opinion, that section falls considerably short of providing a sufficiently rigorous set of controls on warrants. The first difficulty is the standard expressed in s. 22(1) governing the issuance of a warrant:

> ... the judge may, if satisfied by evidence on oath that a warrant is required to enable the Service to perform its duties and functions under this act ... issue a warrant.

This standard is unreasonably low. It barely allows for the application of judicial consideration and, when read in conjunction with ss. 14 and 2 of of the Bill, would likely permit warrants to be issued too easily.

59 The Committee recommends instead the incorporation of provisions similar to those dealing with authorizations to engage in electronic surveillance in Part IV.1 of the Criminal Code, and in the warrant procedures recommended by the McDonald Commission. Thus, the judge would have to be satisfied:

> i) That other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed; or > ii) That other investigative procedures are unlikely to succeed; or > iii) That the urgency of the matter is such that it would be impractical to carry out the investigation of the matter using only other investigative procedures; or > iv) That without the use of the procedure it is likely that intelligence of importance in regard to the activity in issue will remain unavailable.[8]

60 In addition to fulfilling one of these conditions, an application should also have to satisfy a judge that the gravity of the threat to security, or the need to collect foreign intelligence, is such as to justify the intrusion into the privacy of those affected by the warrant. Thus, an application for a warrant would have to meet three criteria: that it relates to a duty or function of the CSIS (except security assessments); that it comes within one of the four conditions set out above; and that the intrusion on privacy is outweighed by the gravity of the threat, or by the importance of the intelligence sought. In our opinion these criteria set an appropriate standard.

61 The Committee also recommends that the statute itself contain a fixed limit on the duration of warrants, rather than leaving that matter up to the judge as is done in s. 22(2)(e). The Committee has closely considered whether the agency should have to justify to the issuing judge both not informing the target of a warrant, and not returning things seized. It has concluded that this should not be the general rule, but notes that, pursuant to s. 22(2)(f), the judge does have the power to include such conditions in a warrant.

62 The Committee agrees that the Federal Court is the appropriate forum in which to have the warrant process. The Chief Justice should, however, pursuant to s. 15 of the Federal Court Act, designate a panel of judges who will deal with warrant applications. Further, to prevent "judge-shopping", every application for a warrant should have to include details of previous applications with respect to the same target or matter.

63 Some witnesses have suggested that civil liberties might best be protected in this context if a distinction was made between targets who are Canadians or permanent residents and targets who are foreign nationals. Much more stringent conditions would apply to targeting of Canadians. The rationale for such a distinction is that foreign nationals are more likely to be involved in security-threatening activity, and that Canadians who are so involved are much more amenable to less intrusive techniques or to the ordinary processes of the criminal law. The Committee found this to be an interesting proposal, but chooses not to adopt it. The Committee entertains some doubt as to the legal propriety of such a distinction between citizens and non-citizens. It is generally undesirable. Further, it would prove to be a difficult distinction to make in practice.

64 Another significant proposal is that the warrant process be extended to cover the use of undercover agents, informers and infiltrators by the agency. This suggestion was forcefully put to us by Mr. Jean Keable, who recommended that both police and security forces submit their undercover operations to the warrant system in his report to the Government of Quebec on police operations in 1981. Again, the Committee cannot recommend such a step, although it acknowledges the force of some of the arguments in favour of it. The Committee agrees with the McDonald Commission that the appropriate way to deal with this issue is for the responsible minister to issue detailed guidelines for the conduct of undercover operations and the running of sources. Those guidelines would set out the scope of permissible conduct in such operations. Such guidelines would be referred to the Security Intelligence Review Committee for consideration and review. Their review would also, it is hoped, lead to appropriate public discussion of these matters.

65 A view commonly expressed before the Committee was that, even if improved, the warrant process under the Bill would be little more than an exercise in formalism — that the court would "rubber-stamp" applications for the use of intrusive investigative techniques in much the same manner (it is alleged) that the criminal courts deal with applications for search warrants. The Committee cannot, and does not wish, to express its opinion of this argument. It may contain an element of truth. But the rate of success of warrant applications may also be the result of the fact that recourse would be had to such investigative techniques where only the system of controls ensures that their use is, in fact, necessary. In this context, we

[8] The first three conditions are taken from s. 178.13(1)(b) of the Criminal Code; the fourth from Recommendation 21 of the Second Report of the McDonald Commission.

note that the number of warrants issued by the Solicitor General under s. 16 of the Official Secrets Act (which would be replaced by s. 22 of the Bill) has not been particularly high.

66 It should be noted that the bringing of a judicial consideration to bear on warrant applications is not the only benefit which would flow from the introduction of the warrant process. It would also have the salutary effect of bringing into existence a formal record of the use of intrusive investigative techniques, something which would assist the review committee to assess the effectiveness and propriety of agency operations. Further, the necessity of having in possession a warrant would conclusively settle the issue of legality of unwarranted investigative intrusions.

67 In closing the discussion of this area, it should be noted that some of the modifications suggested herein to the warrant process would, according to officials who appeared before the Committee, have been included in regulations promulgated pursuant to section 26(b) of the Bill. Even if such was the case, and one assumes that those regulations would have been made public, the Committee believes that the changes it recommends should be incorporated into the statute itself.

b) The protection of CSIS employees

68 Certainly the most controversial provision in Bill C-157 is section 21. It states that the Director of the CSIS and its employees > are justified in taking such reasonable actions as are reasonably necessary to enable them to perform the duties and functions of the Service under this Act.

Subsection (2) stipulates that the director shall report to the Solicitor General and federal Attorney General the fact that a CSIS employee has acted unlawfully in the purported performance of his or her duties, where in the Director's opinion such unlawful conduct has taken place. Section 21 has been severely criticized by witnesses, and in submissions to the Committee, as giving to the agency a licence to break the law whenever agency employees themselves feel it is necessary.

69 The Committee has serious misgivings about section 21. But we wish to make clear at the outset that we reject some of the extravagant and unreasonable criticisms that have been made of it. First, the Committee is satisfied that section 21 could not justify the commission of serious wrongdoing. We believe that the phrases "reasonable actions" and "reasonably necessary" would be interpreted as stating an objective test. That is to say, an employee would be held to an objective standard by a court as to whether his action was reasonable. His subjective belief would not be the decisive factor. At most, s. 21 would go slightly beyond the common law defence of necessity. We do not believe that any court would interpret section 21 in such a way as to allow anything more than minor infractions to go unpunished. There is, indeed, a strong argument that s. 21(1) embodies a codification of the common law powers of peace officers.

70 These issues aside, our concern about section 21 derives from other sources. We would expect that any employee of a security intelligence agency, when confronted with a situation in which he might act illegally in the performance of his or her duties and functions, would be predisposed to act legally. There may, of course, be situations in which such an employee will have to act in a manner which is, prima facie illegal, but is not likely to be regarded by the courts as of serious consequence. The archetypical example is where an agent would break traffic laws to continue surveillance of a target.

71 But in cases where the reasonableness of an employee's acts are not so clear, where what would be involved is a more serious illegality, a provision like s. 21 could give the wrong signal to agency employees. It might lead such an employee to conclude that since he considers a course of action to be reasonable, he may do it. Thus, the defect which the Committee perceives in s. 21 is not that it would finally exonerate employees for blatantly serious illegal conduct, but that it might influence employees, in critical situations, to proceed illegally when they might otherwise act with full propriety. This is also of importance with respect to subsection (2), which relies on the Director to report illegality to the Attorney General based on his opinion as to its legality. A Director, in a close case, might find in s. 21(1) a justification for not reporting conduct which should be reported.

72 The Committee accordingly recommends that section 21(1) be replaced with a provision which deems agency employees, when acting in the performance of their duties and functions under the Act, to be peace officers for the purpose of section 25 of the Criminal Code, and which also allows agency employees in such situations to avail themselves of whatever protections peace officers have at common law. Such a provision would provide protection to employees for acts done on reasonable and probable grounds where the duties they are performing are required or otherwise authorized.

73 In any event, the protection which the Committee envisages as being given to agency employees by such a provision would not authorize serious illegality. It would, in proper cases, justify technical breaches of the law or violation of minor criminal or regulatory laws. The McDonald Commission recommended a concerted effort by the federal government to convince the provinces to amend their laws to give police and security forces exemptions in several areas. While this is a laudable approach, it may be impossible to achieve. Giving agency employees the protection we recommend should have the effect, on the whole, of what the McDonald Commission proposed.

74 As stated above, the Committee believes that there should be no legalization in respect of more serious offences. The line between serious and minor offences may be difficult to draw. But in cases close to the line we feel that employees of the CSIS should rely on prosecutorial discretion and sentencing practices of the courts to provide flexibility in the application of the law. Where an employee has committed a relatively serious offence, he should not be able to avoid the consequences. But he should be able to rely on whatever mitigation flows from the fact that he committed the illegality in the course of his duties, to the same extent as a peace officer could.

75 With respect to s. 21(2), the Committee has considered whether that provision should compel the federal Attorney General to forward reports of CSIS misconduct to his relevant provincial counterparts. This would not, in our opinion, be appropriate in all cases. Where the federal law officer of the crown decides, for reasons related to the security of Canada, that it is not in the public interest to report the matter to a provincial attorney general, he should have to certify a document expressing his opinion. This document would be forwarded to the Security Intelligence Review Committee, which could consider and, if necessary, report on the matter. Where the federal Attorney General does transmit such information, he should also be able to lay down conditions as to its use. In any event, the Committee is aware that the Attorney General has traditionally been reluctant to withhold information from his provincial counterparts. The prospect of review of his decisions will re-inforce that reluctance.

c) Disclosure of identity of CSIS employees

76 Section 12 of Bill C-157 would make it an offence, punishable by up to five years' imprisonment, for any person to disclose any information from which the identity of CSIS employees engaged in covert operational activities, or persons who are or were confidential sources, could reasonably be inferred. The Committee agrees with much of the criticism that has been directed against this section. It is too extreme, and could have the effect of impeding freedom of expression. Further, it could make difficult the reporting of any CSIS wrongdoing.

77 The Committee was gratified to learn from officials who appeared before it that the government is also in agreement with some of these criticisms and plans to substantially redraft s. 12. We acknowledge that there is a need to protect covert employees and sources. One change that the Committee would suggest is that the section incorporate a stipulation that the disclosure be detrimental to the interests of Canada, and that the person disclosing it should have known this, or not have been reckless as to the possibility.

3. Management, control and responsibility for the CSIS

78 These are issues of vital importance to the establishment of the CSIS. One of the reasons for the creation of a new civilian security intelligence agency is the need for effective management and control, and distinct political responsibility. Defects in these matters could render nugatory all the other proposed changes in the Bill, and potentially return us to the state of affairs which led to the creation of the McDonald Commission.

79 On these matters, the Committee finds itself in agreement with much that is found in Bill C-157. It agrees with the division of responsibilities outlined in section 6(2):

> The Service is under the control and management of the Director, but the Director shall comply with general directions issued by the Minister under subsection (1).

Pursuant to section 6(1), the Minister would issue these "general directions", setting out the broad policy objectives of the Service.

80 The Committee also agrees with the tenor of s. 7, which would codify the crucial role of the Deputy Solicitor General in keeping informed of agency operations and providing advice to the Minister. We view the formalization of the deputy's role as a positive step, which would ensure that the Director of the CSIS does not acquire the de facto status of deputy to the Minister in matters of security. The Minister would be able to rely on his deputy for advice independent of the official who manages the agency.

81 We have serious misgivings, however, about the contents of s. 6(3). This is the so-called "override" provision, which would allow the decision of the Director to prevail:

> (a) on the question of whether the Service should collect or disclose information or intelligence in relation to a particular person or group of persons; or
> (b) as to the specific information, intelligence or advice that should be given by the Service to the Government of Canada or any department thereof, a Minister of the Crown, the government of a province or any department thereof or any other authority to which the Service is authorized by or under the Act to give information, intelligence or advice.

On these matters, the Minister would not have the power to override the decision of the Director.

82 The Committee agrees with much of the criticism that has been made of s. 6(3). It would give too much unchecked power to the Director, the only available sanction against whom would be dismissal. It would also insulate the Minister to too large a degree from operational matters. Affixing political responsibility for acts of the CSIS would be extremely difficult and thus effective control would be proportionately less likely. The ostensible rationale for s. 6(3) is that it is necessary to prevent partisan political abuse of the CSIS. But of all the misdeeds and abuses about which the McDonald Commission wrote, partisan use of the RCMP Security Service was not one. That report was quite critical of several politicians, but there was no evidence that any person used the Security Service for personal or political ends. In addition, no witness who appeared before the Committee expressed concern about abuse of the CSIS by its political masters. This is not to say, of course, that there is no potential for such abuse. But the Committee feels that effective review of agency operations would soon bring such activity to light, and that Parliament could be relied on to fully deal with such matters. In any event, the danger of political abuse is far outweighed by the need for effective control and responsibility.

83 Accordingly, the Committee believes that s. 6(3) should be deleted, or at least altered to give the Minister an override. The relationship between the Minister and the Director should be very much like the relationship between other ministers of the Crown and independent agencies for which the ministry has responsibility. On the whole, the Director should be left to manage the CSIS, as he sees fit, subject to the law and a system of controls and review. But nothing except good judgment and political scruples should prevent the Minister from intervening on operational matters. The agency should be an "open book" to the Minister, who will consequently have full political responsibility for matters about which he reasonably can be expected to have knowledge.

84 This recommendation should not be taken as proposing that the Minister play a large role in operations. It has been suggested to the Committee that responsibility for the CSIS be given to a new Minister, who would deal exclusively with security. This would be a mistake. To have a minister whose only concern is a security intelligence agency would almost invite well-meaning but inappropriate political interference. It might have the effect of neutralizing the Director. We believe that it should be the Director who performs most of the functions in relation to control of the agency. Ministerial intervention would be rare. The Minister would be mostly concerned with larger policy considerations. To ensure that such a state of affairs would exist, it has been suggested that ministerial interventions should have to be formally submitted, in writing, to the Director and also transmitted to the Security Intelligence Review Committee. The Committee sees some merit in this suggestion.

85 It has been suggested that legislation dealing with a security intelligence agency should contain explicit reference to the role of the Prime Minister. While the Committee agrees that the Prime Minister, as the person who must accept ultimate responsibility for government policy and operations, plays a very important role in this field, we do not believe that codification of that role is necessary or desirable. It is preferable to leave the question of the relationship between the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General (or any other minister) to be dealt with within the context of our system of cabinet government. Constitutional custom, parliamentary tradition and mere necessity ensure that the Primer Minister has both the ability and motivation to remain informed in this area. There is a long-standing usage that deputy heads of departments, of which the Director would be the equivalent, have access to the Prime Minister in exceptional circumstances. To attempt to reduce these matters to statutory form would introduce an unnecessary inflexibility into the system.

86 Beyond these foregoing issues of control and responsibility, the Committee finds the other sections of the Bill dealing with the appointment, term of office and remuneration of the Director to be acceptable.

4. The monitoring and review of CSIS operations

87 The monitoring and review of CSIS operations are the final two elements of the proposed new security intelligence régime. They are of great importance. Through these mechanisms, it should be possible to ensure that the other elements of the agency are operating as intended. They are vital to maintaining both the effectiveness and propriety of agency activities.

88 Bill C-157 would establish two institutions: the office of the Inspector General and the Security Intelligence Review Committee. There is no analogue of these institutions in the existing security intelligence establishment. The Committee wholeheartedly approves of their inclusion in the Bill. Subject to a few proposed modifications and additions to some sections relating to them, the Committee believes that they are among the most positive aspects of the proposed legislation.

a) The Inspector General

89 The Inspector General is dealt with in ss. 28 and 29 of the Bill. By virtue of section 28(2), the Inspector General, who would be responsible to the Deputy Solicitor General, is to:

> review the operational activities of the Service and ... submit certificates pursuant to subsection 29(2).

Under s. 29(2), these certificates are documents which are submitted to the Minister giving the Inspector General's opinion of whether the agency has done unauthorized, unreasonable or unnecessary acts in its operations. The Inspector General bases his opinion on a report which is furnished by the Director to the Minister, and presumably also employs the knowledge gained from his ongoing review. These certificates are also forwarded to the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

90 The obvious intent of these provisions is that the Inspector General should provide, for the political masters of the agency, ongoing information as to its functioning. If the Solicitor General is to be politically responsible he must know what is going on in the agency, through his deputy. The Inspector General will be the ministry's "eyes and ears" on the Service. He will very much be the "minister's man", in order to maintain an appropriate degree of ministerial responsibility, and is not to be regarded as a functionary of the CSIS.

91 The Committee is concerned that this monitoring role is not clearly expressed in s. 28. That section should be amended to make it clear that the Inspector General is not to be limited to after-the-fact review of operations, but is to have the function of ensuring that existing policies are being observed.

92 One other aspect of the Inspector General's role troubles us. Section 28(3) allows the Inspector General very broad access to information under the control of the agency, and also allows him to require reports and explanations from the Director on operational matters. Subsection (4), however, allows confidences of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada (i.e. cabinet documents) to be withheld. This should not be the case. If any cabinet documents relating to operations are in the control of the CSIS, the Inspector General should have access to them.

b) The Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC)

93 The SIRC would be the final element in the balance between mandate and powers on the one hand, and controls and review on the other. It would perform the crucial review function, seeking to ensure that the whole superstructure set up by the legislation operates within the bounds of the law. Throughout this report we have mentioned many matters which we believe should be referred to the SIRC, over and above its functions as set out in s. 34. The Committee takes no issue with that list of functions. It includes the general review of the performance by the service of its duties and functions along with review of the Inspector General's certificates and the Minister's general directions under s. 6(1) and agreements made under ss. 15 and 19; the direction of specific reviews by the Inspector General or its own staff of questionable service activities under s. 36; investigations in relation to complaints made concerning CSIS activities and denials, or the consequences of, security assessments; and dealing with reports made under the Citizenship, Immigration and Canadian Human Rights Acts dealing with the denial of rights or privileges based on security considerations.

94 To this list of functions, the Committee would add:

i) The monitoring of raw security data given to foreign governments;
ii) The review of Cabinet Directive 35 or any other guidelines used in security assessments;
iii) The review of decisions by the federal Attorney General not to transmit information concerning illegal activities for national security reasons;
iv) The review of regulations promulgated governing the warrant process;
v) The review of certificates issued under s. 18 to collect foreign intelligence.
vi) The review of any guidelines issued by the Solicitor General covering informers and infiltrators.
vii) The compilation and analysis of statistical data on CSIS operations.

This list is, of course, not exhaustive. Other matters will be added by the SIRC in the performance of its functions under s. 34 (a), as necessary.

95 In order to perform this sizable array of functions, it may be necessary to expand the size of the SIRC. We would suggest that five members be appointed, and that a quorum of three could perform official functions. The Committee has heard some criticism as to the composition of the SIRC, namely privy councillors no longer sitting in Parliament. We find the choice of privy councillors to be entirely appropriate. Such persons would have both political experience and the prestige of their office to assist them in their tasks. We would not, however, object to expanding the list of possible candidates who might be made privy councillors for this purpose. We would be opposed to allowing sitting politicians to serve on the SIRC. One interesting suggestion to be explored has been that a fixed number of members should be chosen from a slate prepared by the provincial attorneys general.

96 The Committee would like to stress, at this point, the vital role which the SIRC would play in the functioning of the security intelligence system. The extraordinary powers of the agency under the Bill must be balanced by a review body with broad powers of its own to enquire into and investigate CSIS operations.

97 One role, in particular, which we feel that the SIRC should have is that of ensuring adequate debate, where necessary, in the area of security. We would hope that the SIRC would report in such a way as to bring into focus, in a general fashion, particular issues of policy and, where necessary, impropriety in the security field for Parliament and the public at large.

98 The Committee approves of the method of appointment outlined in s. 30. Consultation with other political parties in the choice of members should ensure that the credibility of the SIRC would be maintained. As with the Inspector General, the SIRC should have access to all cabinet documents in the possession of the CSIS. Finally, the Committee believes that the staffing of the SIRC is a very important matter and should be done with care to ensure that it is a small but effective body.

c) A Special Parliamentary Committee

99 It has been submitted to the Committee that the operations of the CSIS should be subject to the scrutiny of a special parliamentary committee which would have much the same powers as the SIRC. The McDonald Commission also recommended the establishment of such a committee.

100 We agree that, ideally, such a committee could be of benefit. But there are many practical difficulties involved. A parliamentary committee would likely duplicate much of the efforts of the SIRC. Further, parliamentary committees are notoriously subject to vagaries of time, changes in membership and overwork. There is also the problem of maintaining the security of information. This has reference in part to the possibility of partisan motivations in some members; but it also refers to the general question of whether that type of committee can maintain the requisite confidentiality by reason of the nature of its proceedings. In view of these considerations, the Committee believes that it would not be advisable to establish a parliamentary committee with special access to CSIS operations and information.

101 Under s. 48 of Bill C-157, however, the annual report of the SIRC must be laid before Parliament by the Minister. Under the present Standing Orders of the House of Commons, such a report is automatically referred to a standing committee. We would urge that the appropriate committee give priority to consideration of the SIRC report. Although such a committee would be relying on a report, and would not have original access to agency records, we expect that the quality and comprehensiveness of information which Parliament will receive about the operations of the security intelligence system will be greatly improved, thereby achieving some of the objectives of a special committee. This would also likely stimulate a useful public debate on these issues.

5. Other matters concerning the CSIS

102 By "other matters" we refer, in this part, to certain specific issues which were raised by some witnesses concerning labour relations and pension rights of CSIS employees. It was submitted that Bill C-157 would adversely affect the collective bargaining rights of certain employees who are now unionized within the Security Service, and that it would also unreasonably restrict dispute resolution and grievance procedures. With respect to pension rights, it was forcefully argued by representatives of some Security Service members that certain provisions of the Bill would compel them to treat their transfer to the CSIS as an extension of their RCMP service, thereby depriving them of acquired pension rights. This was said to be discriminatory when compared with the treatment of others in the federal public service. We note that policy in this area of acquired pension rights and re-employment in the public service appears to be under review by the government.

103 The future effectiveness of both the CSIS and RCMP will depend, to a significant degree, on the manner in which the transition takes place. It is thus vital to observe and respect the legitimate interests of employees of the Security Service. Another example of issues which could be addressed has to do with the right to rejoin the RCMP. As drafted, Bill C-157 allows those members of the RCMP Security Service (who become CSIS employees on proclamation of the legislation) the right to transfer back to the force. Such a right might be made available to other RCMP members who join the CSIS, but who at the time of joining, were not members of the Security Service.

104 We would urge that close consideration be given to matters such as these by any body charged with detailed study of any proposed legislation in this area, with a view to ensuring that employees of the new agency are not treated in a discriminatory fashion, and that only such changes as are necessary for the efficient functioning of the agency will be made to existing labour relations arrangements.

6. The Security Offences Act — Part IV of Bill C-157

105 The Security Offences Act, which is Part IV of Bill C-157, is functionally quite separate from the rest of the Bill. It has very little to do with the establishment or functioning of the CSIS. It deals with how those responsible for law enforcement are to deal with what has been compendiously referred to as "security offences". Those are offences arising out of conduct constituting a threat to the security of Canada within the meaning of that phrase as defined in s. 2 of the Bill, or offences the victim of which is an "internationally protected person" as defined in the Criminal Code. Sections 52, 53 and 54 purport to give to the Attorney General of Canada primary authority to prosecute security offences. No proceedings could be commenced without his consent, and he would have all the powers assigned to the Attorney General of a province in the Criminal Code in respect of proceedings taken against persons alleged to have committed security offences. Section 55 would give to RCMP the "primary responsibility" to perform duties assigned to peace officers in relation to the apprehension of the commission of security offences.

106 Part IV has, not suprisingly, aroused considerable concern among the provinces. The Committee heard the testimony of three provincial attorneys general, and received submissions from three others. Each was adamantly opposed to the proposals, and characterized them as a "power grab". We were also informed that all other provincial law officers of the Crown shared this view. The Attorney General of Canada on the other hand, contended that the federal government had full jurisdiction to act in this area, and that such changes were necessary to allow the government to treat sensitive security-related criminal activity in a manner which would be conducive to the interests of Canada.

107 A recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada appears to have settled the jurisdictional issue in this area. It can no longer be said that provincial competence over criminal prosecution is comprehensive and exclusive. But even if this is the case, and Part IV is within federal jurisdiction, the Committee is of the opinion that it is too broadly framed and that it should not so radically disrupt the traditional system of criminal prosecution by the provinces. It should not be necessary for provincial authorities to have federal consent to prosecute security offences. Instead, the federal Attorney General should be able to intervene by fiat and take over proceedings where issues of national security are involved in a criminal prosecution.

108 Although the federal police force should have "primary responsibility" to investigate security offences, it should also have a duty to consult with municipal and provincial police forces when exercising this jurisdiction. We believe that these changes would facilitate the federal interest without unnecessarily disturbing traditional methods of law enforcement.

CONCLUSION

109 The Committee believes that legislation dealing with Canada's security intelligence system is necessary, and that it should be enacted in the near future. The status quo is not acceptable. At the very least the legislation should contain: a defined mandate and statement of functions of the agency; judicial control of the use of intrusive investigative techniques; and a system of external monitoring and review of security operations. Bill C-157, revised as we recommend, could adequately deal with Canada's security requirements without unjustifiably infringing on individual rights. In this regard, we wish to acknowledge the many useful and helpful contributions we have received from the public which have assisted us considerably in our deliberations. .

110 Some Committee members and witnesses have expressed concern with respect to the precision of the French version of the Bill, in particular with the name of the new agency. Since precision is a matter of particular importance in legislation of this kind, the Committee trusts that special care will be taken in its drafting.

111 One final matter should be dealt with. Because legislation in this area will be of such import, and will introduce into the security intelligence system several entirely new elements, we recommend that a parliamentary committee be empowered to conduct a thorough review of the operation of the legislation after a period, perhaps five years, of experience with it. Such a review would go a considerable way toward ensuring that the legislation is working as Parliament intends it to operate.

THE SENATE

Monday, November 14, 1983

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE SALTER A. HAYDEN

TRIBUTES ON RESIGNATION FROM SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is with deep regret that I announce the resignation of the Honourable Senator Hayden tendered in a letter to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, the Right Honourable Edward Schreyer.

I will read to honourable senators the substance of his letter.

> Having become afflicted with a permanent infirmity disabling me from the due performance of my duties in the Senate, I hereby resign my place in the Senate pursuant to the provisions of an Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, Chapter M-10 of the Revised Statutes of 1970—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I am sure that all honourable senators learned with regret of the most serious illness that led Senator Hayden to believe that he should resign, and of the fact that he has resigned from this chamber.

I wish to pay tribute to Senator Hayden, who has served this chamber for over 43 years—indeed, he is the longest serving senator—and who has often been referred to as the dean of the Senate. Senator Hayden has always been an innovator in this chamber. He is responsible for what is now the Senate's established practice of the pre-study of bills at the committee stage, which practice has become known as "the Hayden formula." As the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Salter Hayden exemplified the role that a senator plays in the legislative process. He is also in no small part responsible for the outstanding reputation enjoyed, in general, by Senate committees.

In the 43 years that Salter Hayden served this institution he earned the respect and admiration of all his colleagues for his many contributions to Canadian public life. It would be an understatement to say that Senator Hayden will be sorely missed.

I can only conclude by wishing Salter Hayden and his wife the very best in their retirement years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, three months short of the forty-fourth anniversary of his appointment to the Senate, Senator Salter Hayden has apparently decided that he has done his share. I consider that not only has Senator Salter Hayden done his share, I would even say that he has done a lot more than his share.

He was a hard worker and, over the years, he has gained a reputation as a man who had a truly extraordinary capacity to do an excellent job. The senator was the inspiration and driving force behind the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. That committee was widely known because the knowledge and the ability of its chairman had already earned respect in business circles. The dean of the Senate is an expert in taxation matters. There were many times when, with the help of a few other senators, he was able to improve the government legislation submitted to his committee.

On many occasions, the senator launched preliminary studies of pieces of legislation which the Commons were debating at the same time. The work done by the committee under Senator Hayden's chairmanship has always been of exceptional quality. With his committee, he would study every aspect of the clauses of a bill and, thanks to his outstanding knowledge and experience in the wide-ranging business field, he often pointed out mistakes, uncovered shortcomings and difficulties which his committee would remedy and solve.

[English]

I am sure that those who appeared, or may wish to appear, before the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will be saddened by the news of Senator Hayden's retirement. Many are those who were subjected to the good senator's incisive cross-examination, and there are many today who wish they had had a better case. I do not think that anyone would ever complain that Senator Hayden was anything less than a gentleman; nor would they say that his tone was ever overbearing. But those who could not well defend what they were there to defend will surely say that after all the pertinent questions had been asked by the chairman they felt that they had been worked over by an intellectual and learned person who was also a lawyer.

Honourable senators, the dean of the Senate is a person of great ability. We in this chamber were privileged to have him guide us for so long, and Canadians have been fortunate to have someone of such stature to serve them so well for so long.

On behalf of my colleagues in the Senate, I wish Senator and Mrs. Hayden a long, pleasant and restful retirement. That retirement is indeed well deserved.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I want to add a few brief comments on this occasion. I recall, before my appointment to the Senate, appearing before the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on behalf of a client. I had known Senator Hayden and his son Gerry professionally, but I also knew the senator and his wife Ruby socially. On one occasion I was in the senator's office seeking his advice, on behalf of my client, on a certain bill which at that time was being considered by the Senate. We were talking about the Senate and he said, "You know, Royce, I love this place". Those were his exact words. We all know that he did love the Senate, and it was that love, respect and affection for this place that brought so much honour to him, and to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. Indeed, it brought great honour to all Senate committees and to the Senate as a whole and, accordingly, to each of us as his colleagues here. I believe I speak for all honourable senators in extending to him the same affection and respect which he brought to all of us and which he always extended to his colleagues and to all those who had anything to do with the Senate.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, there is something about the Irish, in that they do awfully well in the Senate. I cannot help thinking of the late John Connolly, who was one of the most able men I have ever met—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Walker: —and of the great Senator Grattan O'Leary, than whom there was no more eloquent speaker. Salter Hayden is another Irishman, and, believe me, he is really Irish. Senator Hayden and Senator Joe Sullivan were very great, tough, hard fighting athletes in their day. Both men were tops in their professions. Joe Sullivan was one of the finest surgeons in the world in his day and Senator Hayden, is one of the greatest lawyers in Canada. As a lawyer I faced Senator Hayden many times. Sometimes I was with him and sometimes I was against him, and he always excelled. He had an encyclopaedic mind. He could remember things that others would forget. He never seemed to have to study things and would rely on instant recall.

● (2010)

Honourable senators are aware of what Senator Hayden did for the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. He built it into the most powerful committee in the Senate and, indeed, in Parliament. Individuals and representatives of companies came from all over Canada for the privilege of presenting their views before his committee. I consider it a great privilege to have been a member of that committee for 21 years under the aegis of this very great man. I sometimes thought of him as a genius. Often times geniuses are ill-tempered but I never saw Salter Hayden lose his temper. Nor did Salter Hayden ever show his political leanings in the committee meetings. I never saw him distinguish between a Liberal and a Conservative in the committee even during very heated discussions. To my mind, Senator Hayden leads a charmed life. He has a lovely wife, Ruby, and three fine sons. He was head of what became one of the greatest and largest law firms in Canada, McCarthy and McCarthy. Somebody has already mentioned the length of his membership of the bar and of the Senate, so I will not repeat that remarkable achievement.

Never in my life have I met a parliamentarian of either house who had, to my mind, the abilities of Salter Hayden. He combined those abilities with goodness, mercy and charity toward others. Never did Salter Hayden get angry, excited or upset over what may have been said. He never reacted badly. He would sit over there across the floor, and when it came time for him to speak on an important bill, he would rise and talk at length on the various clauses of the bill and other pertinent matters without a note.

As you all know, I greatly admired the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. These two men, each great in his own field, were a real contrast. It is sad and difficult to realize that Salter Hayden will no longer be with us. Many of us, including Senator Barrow, who has ably carried on in Senator Hayden's place as chairman, begged him to stay on. It is hard to think that Salter Hayden will never be with us again. Parliament, particularly the Senate, will never be the same because we will no longer have this great man urging and prodding us to do well and to give the public our best. I am sure that we all hope that Senator Hayden will be spared many happy years. I suggest that we will never have another like him.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, when I was appointed to this chamber 13 years ago I remarked that I was adding to the number of graduates of the University of Ottawa sitting in this chamber, the dean being Senator Hayden; then there was Senator John Connolly, Senator Lionel Choquette, me, to be joined later by Senator Wagner and Senator Haidasz.

Senator Hayden was truly a pillar of this institution. I was extremely fortunate in that he and Senator John Connolly became "godfathers" to me in the Senate. They inculcated in me a faith in this institution which very few others could have done. I am grateful to him. Not only was he a godfather but he was, and remains, a great friend.

As I said a moment ago, in Canadian history he will prove to have been a pillar of this institution, of the same stripe as Senator Raoul Dandurand and Senator Thomas A. Crerar, and perhaps a few others whose names I have not researched. I am indeed sad, as Canadians should be, that his physical capacity no longer enables him to contribute to the work of this Parliament. However, we are all grateful for everything he has given his country in the last 40 years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

THE LATE HONOURABLE WALTER D. BAKER, P.C., M.P.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Today, honourable senators, the Canadian flag is at half-mast, and for a good reason. We are deploring the loss of an outstanding Canadian and of a friend of a great many parliamentarians.

If I may, on behalf of the members of our party in the Senate, I should like to extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family and the wife of the late Walter Baker, P.C.

Walter Baker was a kind, affable and extremely competent man. I had an opportunity to serve with him in Mr. Clark's Cabinet and that is where I was able to appreciate the intellectual abilities of the man. Walter was very good at synthesizing. The ramifications of a problem could be numerous, diversified and even complicated, but when Walter would join in the discussions to explain his point of view, he never failed to pinpoint the problem and make it a lot easier for everyone to understand.

Besides his talent for synthetizing, the Honourable Walter Baker was also able to express his views very clearly. He always managed to get his message through objectively and with all the simplicity he was well known for.

Honourable senators, the Canadian Parliament, the Canadian nation generally, and especially our party, have suffered a great loss yesterday. There will never be enough men of that calibre to serve our country.

[English]

On behalf of my colleagues in the Conservative Party in the Senate I wish to extend to Mrs. Baker and her children our most heartfelt condolences.

• (2020)

Walter's contribution to the public life of Canada is one of which his family can be justly proud. It is one worthy of emulation. He was a man of singular qualities who enjoyed the respect and affection of all those who had the opportunity and privilege to know and work with him. The sensitivity he displayed in considering the issues of the day, as well as the needs and aspirations of Canadians, made of him an outstanding politician.

Honourable senators, Walter Baker will be greatly and sorely missed.

Senator H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it was with a great deal of sadness that I learned of the passsing of Walter Baker. Canada in general, and Parliament more particularly, has lost a great Canadian. Walter Baker was a very intelligent and knowledgeable person with respect to the parliamentary process. I would like to associate myself and the members of the Liberal Party with remarks that have been made by the Acting Leader of the Opposition about the late Mr. Baker.

By way of background, I would like to say that Walter Baker arrived in the other place in the same year that I left and, consequently, I did not know him personally as well as I would have liked. However, I knew him as an outstanding parliamentarian who devoted his life to Parliament and his constituents. He will be remembered as a person who made a large contribution not only to the House of Commons but, as I said a moment ago, to the institution of Parliament and to the parliamentary process as a whole. On behalf of the government, therefore, and all senators on this side of the chamber, I would like to extend my most sincere condolences to the Baker family.

Honourable John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I am speaking as Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which, although not a very glamorous committee, is a very important one. Walter Baker was a member of that committee, and a very faithful attender at its meetings for many years. As well as being one of the nicest men I have ever met, he was also one of the most sensible when it came to discussions within that committee. I would add that the whole time that Walter served on our committee, he was impeccably non-partisan, and we are going to miss him very much.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, the untimely death of the Honourable Walter Baker, P.C., M.P., serves to remind us that the life of man of earth can indeed be short. His life was cut short at the age of 53 when he was still in his prime and should have been looking forward to an ever brighter future. However, fate decreed otherwise.

In the eleven years of his political activity, Walter Baker accomplished much for the good of his constituents and for the good of our Canadian nation. As his record has been outlined by previous speakers, I shall not repeat it.

I should like to remind honourable senators, however, that Walter Baker was active in cultural affairs and in the defence of freedom of peoples. For several years, he was co-chairman of the Parliamentary Sponsoring Committee of Baltic Evening on Parliament Hill, which has been attended and enjoyed by many senators and members of the other place. This annual cultural event of Canadians of Estonian, Latvian and Lithuanian origin brought a new dimension to the activities on Parliament Hill, due in large part to the untiring efforts of this man.

Walter Baker was a great Canadian; a great friend to his fellow man; a great defender of freedom, democracy and justice; and a great defender of the dignity of the human being. His untimely death is a great loss to Parliament and to the people of Canada.

On behalf of the Parliamentary Sponsoring Committee of Baltic Evening and its co-chairman, Stanley Haidasz, who is unable to be here this evening, I should like to express our deepest heartfelt sorrow and condolences to Walter Baker's family, his wife, Lois, his sons, David and Jeffrey, and his daughter Nancy. Walter Baker will remain fondly in the memories of all who had the privilege of being associated with him.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Needless to say, honourable senators, that I am in complete agreement with what has just been said about both Senator Hayden and the Honourable Walter Baker. I knew the latter when we were both in the House of Commons and he managed to convince me that, above party lines and short-lived rivalries, human beings could experience very stable human relationships.

Walter was one of those with whom I established very good relations, as I did with some who now sit in this Chamber.

I share the sorrow that the Canadian people as a whole will certainly feel.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before giving consent to proceeding with second reading tonight, I would like to give some details on how our party intends to deal with the Bill.

This is an important piece of legislation. As you know, it was under consideration for a number of weeks in the other place. Over 80 amendments were submitted and discussed. After several of them were agreed upon by the government, the debate came to an end only this afternoon.

Clearly, our group did not have time to look at all the amendments brought forward.

However, as Senator Roblin indicated last week, we do not intend to unduly delay the passing of legislation that we feel is important, albeit controversial.

There is virtually no chance of another session of Parliament being convened this week, as suggested in some quarters—that is, that the current session might be prorogued and a new one opened in the forthcoming days. As such is not the case, it stands to reason that we are going to allow for second reading of the Bill tonight.

We have, on our side, several honourable senators who have misgivings about this bill and who are anxious to air their views both at the second reading and committee report stages.

The Government Leader will probably agree that this bill is of tremendous importance and that many questions about it remain unanswered. It will have to be referred to our Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which will hear witnesses, including the Minister himself, and suggest solutions to some problems which the other place has failed to clear up.

We make no secret of the fact that we way move amendments on third reading. We wish to go easy on the government; yet, we also wish to fulfill our duties and assume our responsibilities, which is to criticize constructively the various pieces of legislation which the government introduces from time to time. We will accept the government's timetable, the one which I discussed this afternoon with Senator Frith and which calls for second reading taking place today or tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Government): We will start debate as early as tonight.

Senator Asselin: Yes, we could adjourn tonight until tomorrow afternoon, and second reading could continue tomorrow. We could refer this bill to the committee sometime on Tuesday. Because of the funeral of the late Walter Baker, there is an agreement between the parties: the committee could meet on Wednesday at 4 p.m., and also on Thursday morning in case it has not completed consideration of this bill. Third reading could take place on Thursday. We could move our amendments, should we decide to move any, on Thursday, and the vote could follow. Then, if the government so decided, we could have Royal Assent on Thursday afternoon. That is the way we think we should proceed when considering this very important piece of legislation.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Frith, the House Leader, will deal with and, I am sure, concur in the outline of the agenda the Acting Leader of the Opposition has just put before this chamber.

If Senator Asselin had had a typed script before him, I am sure he would have said that we would send the bill to committee on Wednesday. We expect that the committee will meet on Wednesday. The bill could possibly be sent to committee sometime tomorrow evening so that the committee could deal with it on Wednesday. If that is understood, I have no problem.

We appreciate the agenda Senator Asselin has given, and we will be as helpful as we can to expedite all the requirements of the committee during the period he has outlined. Perhaps Senator Frith has one or two points he wishes to add, but, otherwise, I find the agenda, as outlined by the Acting Leader of the Opposition, acceptable.

[Translation]

Senator Frith: Senator Asselin has given the precise terms of our agreement and I have nothing to add.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the names of the Honourable Senators Bonnell and Buckwold be added to the list of Senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in case there is any misunderstanding about the Senate sitting on Wednesday, I will reiterate that the intention is not to sit on Wednesday. It is in that context that we hope to have the vote on second reading of Bill C-155 at some time tomorrow—tomorrow evening, if necessary. The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications would then sit on Wednesday, but I repeat that the Senate will not sit on Wednesday.

Perhaps this is also a good time to point out to honourable senators that the copy of Bill C-155 they have before them is the proof copy of the bill as it was passed in the other place earlier today. It is possible, although it is not likely, that there are some technical mistakes in the proof copy of the bill. Tomorrow honourable senators will have on their desks the final proofread copy of Bill C-155.

THE ESTIMATES 1983-84

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e):

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DISARMAMENT

PRIME MINISTER'S INITIATIVES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. Last week Prime Minister Trudeau toured Europe in order to discuss with the heads of state of various countries his plan for disarmament and for peace talks. Last night in Montreal the Prime Minister outlined to the Liberal Party there the objectives and the main purposes of the plan he had discussed with the European leaders last week. We would have preferred that that sort of statement be made in Parliament, because, when the Prime Minister visited Europe last week he did so as the Prime Minister of this country, not as the leader of the Liberal Party.

The Prime Minister has said that he wrote to the heads of state of the United States, of China and of the Soviet Union. Can the Leader of the Government tell us the nature of the replies, if replies have been received, respecting his proposals for peace talks as he discussed them with the leaders of the countries in Europe?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will refer that question to the Prime Minister's office for a more precise answer. There were, however, a number of comments made by the leaders of several European countries following the discussions that they had with the Prime Minister of Canada. There was one common theme running through the comments of the various leaders in Europe, and it was to the effect that they welcomed the initiative of the Prime Minister of Canada to achieve the objective he has outlined, which is, of course, to bring about discussions, negotiations and communications in this extremely serious situation so that east-west relations will not deteriorate even further.

I am not sure whether the Acting Leader of the Opposition asked me for the content of the letters that were sent to the heads of state of the United States, China and the Soviet Union. I believe that I detected a question as to the content of those letters. I do not believe that it is the usual practice to release the content of letters of that nature until the sender has received a reply and has had a little time to think about it. Therefore, I cannot give an undertaking that the content of those letters will be made available. I will certainly convey the honourable senator's request to the Prime Minister's office. I do not think that, to date, the content of those letters has been made public information.

Senator Asselin: Has the Prime Minister planned any visits to the heads of state of the United States, China or the Soviet Union?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I believe that, for quite some time, there has been a standing invitation to the Prime Minister of Canada from the President of the Soviet Union, Yuri Andropov. I would think, however, that before the Prime Minister would wish to indicate whether any visit will be made to Russia in the immediate or near future, he will want to assess the response he receives to the letter concerning this extremely important subject.

UNITED NATIONS

GRENADA—CANADIAN VOTE ON RESOLUTION

The Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, last week, Senator Roblin and I put some questions to the Leader of the Government dealing with certain statements made by the Defence Secretary of the United States, concerning the information that Canada had not received about the Grenada invasion, and the Government Leader told us he would complete his answer after getting more details. Could he now state if he is in a position to complete the answer he gave us?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have replies to eight questions dealing with Grenada that were asked on November 3 by Senators Asselin, Murray and Roblin. I am prepared to read them or take them as read. The answers are not long, but there are eight of them. If Honourable Senator Asselin wishes me to read both the questions and answers, I will do so.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I would like you to read them.

Senator Olson: Does the honourable senator wish me to read them now?

Senator Asselin: Yes.

Senator Olson: Senator Asselin's first question concerned Canada's abstention from voting on the resolution at the United Nations. The response is that Canada, along with 25 other countries, abstained from voting on the operational paragraph of the November 2, 1983 United Nations resolution concerning Grenada.

The honourable senator also asked a question concerning the clause-by-clause vote on that resolution. In reply, it is true that the United Nations resolution on Grenada was voted on clause by clause. However, as previously indicated, Canada abstained from the operative paragraph which condemned the United States.

The honourable senator's third question was whether Canada voted to condemn the United States. In reply, as indicated, Canada did not vote in favour of the clause condemning the United States.

The senator's fourth question was whether or not the United States forewarned Canada. In reply, it is true that Canada was not forewarned by the United States of its decision to invade Grenada.

The fifth question in this series was asked by Senator Murray and concerned the role of the Prime Minister of Dominica. In reply, no investigation has been carried out concerning reports that the Prime Minister of Dominica had been delegated to carry the message about the Grenada invasion but could not obtain Prime Minister Trudeau's telephone number for that purpose. The Canadian High Commission in Bridgetown, Barbados, which includes Dominica in its jurisdiction, could, of course, have conveyed such a message had it been contacted by the Prime Minister of Dominica.

The sixth question was again asked by Senator Asselin and related to whether there was any friendship between Canada and the United States. In reply, there is, of course, great friendship between the governments of the United States and Canada.

The seventh question was asked by Senator Roblin and concerned the explanation given to Canada by Mr. K. Dam, Deputy Secretary of State for the United States. In reply, the Government of Canada, through its embassy in Washington, has expressed its profound surprise and disappointment over the explanation given by Mr. K. Dam, and has informed the U.S. authorities that our exclusion on the decision to intervene was particularly surprising in view of the fact that our two countries are bound together by the NATO and NORAD security pacts.

The eighth question was asked by Senator Roblin and it concerned the relationship between Canada and the United States. In reply, as I have indicated, Canada has expressed its surprise and disappointment to the United States government over the lack of prior consultation in connection with the military intervention in Grenada.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

AMWAY CORPORATION CONVICTION—DISPOSITION OF FINE

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, perhaps this question should be asked of the Deputy Leader of the Government. We have recently read in the press and seen on television news of the $25 million fine levied on the Amway Corporation. That fine is, of course, the heaviest ever imposed on any corporation or individual in the history of this country. The case was heard in the Province of Ontario, and I am sure that many people are wondering whether the Ontario treasury or the federal treasury will benefit from the fine imposed on the Amway Corporation.

We know that the fine was imposed because of a violation of the Customs and Excise Acts, which are federal acts. Where will the proceeds of that fine go? Will they go to the Ontario treasury or to the federal treasury? Many people are asking that question. I, as a former Attorney General, know the answer, but I would like to hear it from the Deputy Leader of the Government.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Half and half.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was intrigued by the fact that the honourable senator chose to address his question to me, and I am relieved to learn that his choice had nothing to do with Amway. I am taking a risk here, but my first reaction is to say that, because federal statutes are involved, apart from some administrative costs in connection with the court proceedings—because, of course, the courts come under the jurisdiction of the provinces—the proceeds of the fine would go to the federal government. However, I would have to confirm that. I will ask the Department of Justice, or the honourable senator himself, as soon as the Senate adjourns.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. According to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of November 3, there have been 26 questions asked by our colleague, Senator Marshall. Of the 26 questions, 13 relate to locations leased by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in various parts of the country. If we add together the number of leased locations mentioned, it would appear that the honourable senator is asking for a list of 666 leased locations. In addition, he is asking for the exact location of each one, and also for each of the owners of the buildings, the amount of square footage leased, the amount of rent per square foot and the total monthly rental of those 666 leased locations. Finally, he asks for the term of lease of those 666 locations. That makes a total of 3,996 questions.

I would like to know from the Leader of the Government whether or not we can expect an answer to these questions before the end of this session. And does he have any idea how much it will cost the government to be nice to Senator Marshall by answering these questions?

• (2100)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I take questions on the order paper very seriously, as does every member of the government. However, I am equally concerned about the cost to the taxpayers of the questions just asked by Senator Asselin.

Senator Denis: Don't make such mistakes.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps when I come back.

Senator Olson: I am sorry, I meant Senator Denis. I am well aware of who asked the question and who put the questions on the order paper.

Senator Asselin: Was it a planted question?

Senator Olson: Not that I am aware of.

Senator Asselin: That is quite a calculation.

Senator Olson: Senator Denis is very capable of such calculations and has a great interest in matters of efficiency, as he demonstrated when he was the Postmaster General. He has a great appreciation for the work and cost involved. Senator Denis mentioned that there were something like 3000—

Senator Denis: 3,996.

Senator Olson: —questions. Some of these questions will take several hours of somebody's time and the cost of formulating the replies in the precise way in which the questions are put will be tens of thousands of dollars. I hope that I will be able to have a chat with Senator Marshall about the matter because I do not think that he understands the cost involved in replying to such questions. If he insists that they be answered, then we shall provide him with the replies as quickly as we can, but I hope that he does not expect us to take on additional staff, which would mean greater cost, to answer such a multiplier question. That would be unreasonable.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, Senator Marshall is quite able to defend himself against the accusations or grievances which were made tonight about his way of seeking information.

The Leader of the Government will learn that on this side of the house, we hold as sacred the duty to advise the Canadian people on what is going on in Parliament. Canadian taxpayers have a right to know how their money is being spent. No matter if it costs a few thousand dollars to the government, so long as the information Senator Marshall is seeking is relevant to a question or project which is important to his province or Canada. I hope the Leader of the Government will not have to remind him that he should not seek such information if he feels that such questions are important to let Canadian taxpayers know how their money is spent.

Second, if the government had adopted sooner its freedom of information legislation, all these questions would probably not have appeared on the Order Paper. In order to obtain the information they need to advise people, they must submit written questions.

It is quite possible that from now on these questions will be fewer in number, because the Access to Information Act will make it possible for parliamentarians to go straight to the source of information to obtain the data they need. However, whatever the search for the information may cost, I think the public has the right to know.

[English]

Senator Olson: I think Senator Asselin misunderstood what I said.

Senator Asselin: Not at all.

Senator Olson: I have no objection at all to an honourable senator asking questions.

Senator Asselin: Then why are you complaining?

Senator Olson: I will explain, if you will give me a minute. I have no problem at all with an honourable senator asking questions concerning a reasonable area such as his or her constituency. It is true that senators from Newfoundland are in the same situation as senators from Alberta, in that we are senators for the entire province, not merely a specific part of it. As Senator Denis has pointed out, Senator Marshall has applied his question to the entire country, and that is where the numbers come in. Quite frankly, I think that to obtain the answer will be unreasonably costly.

I shall talk to the honourable senator, but if he insists on receiving an answer, we will try to get it, despite the fact that it will cost tens of thousands of dollars to obtain it. Perhaps he could be a little more specific and confine his questions to a series within reason, not one amounting to about 4,000 questions.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, as a supplementary question I would like to know whether Senator Marshall or Senator Asselin could find the answers to those 3,996 questions by reviewing the Public Accounts, by checking with the CBC—

Senator Olson: Yes, they could do their own homework.

Senator Denis: —or by taking advantage of the new freedom-of-information legislation.

Senator Asselin: The leader and Senator Denis should know that they have been appointed to govern, which includes providing information to members of Parliament on the way in which taxpayers' money is being spent. You are the government, not us. You are there to provide information if we request it. That is all.

Senator Olson: What Senator Asselin has said is very reasonable, but when we receive a request for information that is so voluminous—most of which will probably be 99 per cent useless to the honourable senator—then I think it is irresponsible, and it will certainly be excessively expensive to obtain.

Senator Asselin: If the government must hire some people to put together the information, perhaps it can look to the two million unemployed in Canada, most of whom would be very happy to have a job.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, is it for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to look down from on high and say that Senator Marshall is irresponsible?

Senator Olson: I did not say that. I said that it was an irresponsible request.

Senator Muir: Is it for him to look down from on high and say that this exercise is a terrible waste of money? Is it his right to condemn Senator Marshall, who is not here at the moment to defend himself, and to carry on a "by-line" with one of his fellow senators, thereby giving Senator Marshall a tongue lashing in this chamber? The leader shakes his head, but he is not telling the truth, because he is giving Senator Marshall a tongue lashing. As Senator Asselin said, Senator Marshall is quite capable of looking after himself, but I would not appreciate it if, for example, the leader attacked me, in my absence from the chamber, in the same way as he has just attacked Senator Marshall.

In all fairness and decency, it is not right for the leader to say, as he has said several times in his pious way, that he will contact Senator Marshall to see if they can arrange something else. Is it not right that the leader should have said in his initial response to Senator Denis that he would contact Senator Marshall to determine whether there is some other way to settle the matter, and not carry on for half an hour with condemnation and argumentation?

Senator Olson: Senator Asselin started the argument.

Senator Muir: You are the one who is condemning Senator Marshall, not Senator Asselin. There is no reason for such an attack. Common sense will tell you that it is not fair. I am sure that Senator Olson would not appreciate it if Senator Marshall, or any other senator, attacked him when he was not present in the chamber and was thus unable to respond. Senator Marshall will read Hansard, but it will not have the same effect as if he were present. He will not know that Senator Olson is more or less saying, "Well, Senator Marshall really is an idiot for asking these questions on a national basis." Is it not Senator Marshall's responsibility to ask questions, not only for his own region but for all parts of Canada, to determine what is transpiring with taxpayers' money? That is our job. I think you will acknowledge that it is our duty.

• (2110)

Senator Olson may think that these are not worthwhile questions. I do not know anything about them. Therefore, I cannot condemn Senator Marshall for asking them. However, the honourable gentleman may have some reason for doing so. Why not wait until you have conversed with Senator Marshall, because you would then be in a better position to assess the situation?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Muir can place any construction he wishes to place on the comments I have made, but he will have to take responsibility for it.

I completely disagree with all that he has said and his interpretation. I did not speak from on high to anyone. I did not say that Senator Marshall was irresponsible; I said the request he made was excessively expensive, in my view. I am still of that opinion.

Senator Muir: Would the honourable senator like to check other expensive matters which have been exposed in this chamber and in the other place?

Senator Olson: With respect to whether Senator Muir is in any doubt as to whether senators have the right to express their opinions, I say that they do have the right to express their opinions, and I, as a member of the cabinet, have an obligation to express my opinion when I believe a request has been made which would prove to be excessively expensive to the taxpayer. I do not withdraw one inch from that view.

Senator Muir: Senator Marshall is not here to respond to you, Senator Olson.

Honourable senators, to use an old cliché, not invented by either Senator Olson or me, I think Senator Olson gets carried away by the exuberance of his own verbosity.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Asselin on May 12 last concerning the application of the Official Languages Act in Fitness and Amateur Sport.

The answer is that the official languages promotion program of Fitness and Amateur Sport has been approved by the Treasury Board.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): When was that?

Senator Olson: I am advised that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport will give a full report on its implementation to the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages tomorrow, November 15, 1983.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

PROPOSED JOINT CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING SHARED WATER—GARRISON DAM PROJECTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Roblin on October 18, 1983, concerning the Garrison diversion report. It is a rather long answer made up of some five parts, and, if it is agreeable to honourable senators, perhaps it can be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows):

1. Discussions between Canada and the United States with regard to the Garrison Diversion have been undertaken on a regular basis over the past decade. Canada has had the opportunity to present its views and the United States has supplied us with the technical information we require.

2. Mr. MacEachen and Mr. Caccia raised the Garrison issue with Mr. Shultz and Mr. Ruckelshaus at their meeting in Halifax. The United States agreed to a bilateral meeting to discuss the Garrison diversion exclusively. It will be held in Ottawa on November 21, 1983, and will involve senior officials of Environment Canada and the Department of External Affairs. The discussions will focus on Canadian technical concerns as well as general policy questions. The need for extraordinary new measures was not discussed by ministers at Halifax.

3. The invitation to participate in studying Garrison that Senator Roblin refers to was raised informally in meetings in 1981 and 1982. No such invitation for joint study has been communicated to Canada by diplomatic note or other formal means. Moreover, this type of joint study was not thought to be necessary for several reasons:

(a) the project was blocked by court injunctions;

(b) construction was not at the stage where this would be useful;

(c) Canada was already receiving and evaluating technical and design information provided by the United States.

In addition, a joint study of Garrison has already been done by the International Joint Commission. The 1977 report and recommendations of the IJC form the basis of the Canadian position on this issue. Canada does not wish to enter into any arrangements that would dilute the impact of the IJC's recommendations.

4. It is not accurate to imply that, because Canada has not participated in the type of overview referred to by Senator Roblin, it is any less well prepared to comment on Garrison with a view to influencing development of the project. Since the early 1970s, the United States has provided Canada with available technical and construction drawings and designs. They have been studied carefully by officials of Environment Canada (engineers, biologists, etc.) and Fisheries and Oceans Canada. Canada's technical concerns with specific "Phase 1" features have been identified and communicated to the United States. A technical meeting was held on July 20, 1983, in Ottawa at which time U.S. officials made presentations regarding various aspects of the project. Canadian officials raised questions and pointed out technical concerns. A detailed summary of Canadian technical concerns was transmitted to the U.S. government by diplomatic note on October 3, 1983. These technical concerns, as well as general policy questions, will be discussed at the meeting of senior officials on November 21, 1983. It should be noted that officials of Environment Canada have also visited Garrison testing facilities and construction sites, either as part of technical meetings or with the International Souris-Red Engineering Board of the International Joint Commission.

5. The current arrangements regarding information exchange and consultation, at the official and ministerial levels, are working well. The United States government is fully aware of Canada's position and its concerns. The onus is on the United States to see that these concerns are fully taken into account and measures are taken to resolve them. We have no reason to believe that any other arrangement would cause the United States to take Canadian concerns more seriously than at present.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. D. G. Steuart moved the second reading of Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-155, the western transportation initiative, comes to this house as one of the most fully debated pieces of legislation in years. This is an important fact since the government did not tangle with 87 years of history lightly or without a profound awareness of what the effects of the proposed changes will be.

The Crow rate is a subject around which a great deal of mythology has been built. The rate was originally created in 1896 as a developmental rate to encourage settlers to move into western Canada. It fixed the price at which settlers' effects and supplies would move into western Canada and the price at which their grain would move out to the Lakehead. The terms of the rate have changed significantly over the years as it was expanded from 289 shipping points to 1,245 shipping points and from one port to include the ports of Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Churchill. In 1925, the special westbound rates for settlers' effects was discontinued but the Crow rate has continued to the present day at a fixed rate of one-half cent per ton-mile. I point out that this is an average of about 13 cents a bushel.

As recently as 10 years ago, no one dared to question the effects of the Crow rate in western Canada—to do so would have been suicidal. However, more recently a growing number of western Canadians have begun to recognize that the artificially low Crow rate was doing western Canada more harm than good. Originally, the Crow rate was not that good a deal. For example, in the 1920s the Crow rate represented about 18.7 per cent of the average price of grain. It was only later, as a result of the rise in inflation, that the Crow rate became a great bargain for farmers. Today the Crow rate accounts for less than 5 per cent of the price of a bushel of grain.

As the costs of operating the railways rose over the years, the large percentage of their costs covered by the Crow fell. By the late 1950s or early 1960s the Crow no longer covered the railways' costs for moving grain, and the railways began to lose money hauling grain. By the 1980s these losses had reached in excess of $300 million annually. As these losses mounted the railways' incentive to invest in the system declined, and with it our ability to ensure that our grain was marketed on time and our customers' confidence also declined.

Eventually the government had to become involved in order to protect the producers and our export markets. This was done through a number of ad hoc programs such as the branch line subsidy program, the branch line rehabilitation program and the purchase of hopper cars. These were merely stop-gap measures, and because of them a major disaster for our producers was avoided. However, even with these measures there were years when sales were lost because we could not guarantee delivery, particularly 1978 and 1979.

While railway losses on grain were mounting so were the demands on the western rail system. In 1962 only 44 per cent of the railways' total work load for all of Canada was west of the Lakehead. By 1980 the work load had risen to 63 per cent, and it is projected that by 1990 the west may account for as much as 70 per cent of the railways' work load. Potash, sulphur, coal, petrochemicals and lumber all compete with grain for limited rail capacity.

While the recession has delayed the problem and allowed grain to continue moving without major problems, the day is fast approaching when we will face a crisis in rail capacity, when the railways will be forced to ration traffic through the overworked mountain region.

Politically, it would have been wise for the government to await the crisis—until it became painfully obvious to everyone that something must be done. It would have been easy to bring in this legislation if grain was piling up on farms and if elevators were plugged, or perhaps if the Wheat Board was losing contracts because we could not deliver. Unfortunately, a $16.5 billion railway expansion cannot occur overnight. The double tracking and tunnelling which needs to be done through difficult mountain terrain will take years to complete. Only an irresponsible government could ignore the need to move now. It should be clearly noted that if this bill is not passed a great deal of that work will not be done at all. Certainly a great deal of it will be delayed.

It is not only the government which recognized the growing capacity problems. Two broadly-based western grain organizations also saw the growing problem and the relationship between the need for Crow change and a comprehensive solution to the rail capacity shortfall. The Western Agricultural Conference, which includes the great co-op grain-handling companies, United Grain Growers and others, in conjunction with the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition, which includes the Pallister Wheat Growers Association and the Rapeseed Association — these and other organizations called on the government to deal with the problem and agreed that, if certain conditions were met, they would negotiate Crow change. They told the government to put its money on the table and show that it was serious about the need to solve the problem. The government replied by putting on the table $3.2 billion — which has now been increased to $3.7 billion — and by appointing Dr. Clay Gilson to meet with all interested western agricultural groups and the railways to try to work out an acceptable solution to the western transportation problem.

In addition to the capacity problem which I have described, there is a second way in which the Crow negatively affects western Canada. By giving an artifically low freight rate on grain being shipped for export while retaining commercial rates on processed products, the Crow has acted as a disincentive to adding valued industry to western Canada. Every economic activity from livestock production to agricultural processing has been affected by a freight rate system which encourages western Canada to export its raw grain and, with it, jobs and economic growth. We have, therefore, a system so totally biased in favour of growing grain for export that producers often use for wheat production land that is much better suited for other "non-Crow" crops or for livestock. In the view of many agrologists, this practice is endangering the western land base.

After the government appointed Dr. Gilson, he undertook very broad consultations with all the interested parties and found many areas of agreement. In other words, all parties seemed to agree on the need to end the ad hoc programs and replace them with a comprehensive approach to the Crow rate problem. They agreed on the need to deal with the distortions and anomalies created because of the Crow; they agreed on the need for a new grain transportation agency to oversee the workings of the grain transportation system and they agreed on the need for the railways to be properly compensated.

There were two main issues on which Gilson had trouble reaching an agreement or concensus: one was the question of how much the producers should pay and the other was the method of payment. In other words, to whom should the government pay the subsidy?

Method of payment has been a very difficult issue throughout the long Crow debate. Dr. Gilson recommended that payments initially be made to the railways, with producer payments being phased in until they reached the figure of 81 per cent, with 19 per cent going to the railways. When the minister, Mr. Pepin, took over, he proposed a 50-50 split in the payments. After finding little support for that proposal, and under pressure from the prairie pools and eastern producers, he then moved to 100 per cent payments to the railways. The major problem was finding a fair way to make the payments. Acreage payments were suggested; the Alberta government came up with something called the double-80 formula; the Manitoba Farm Bureau devised the freight entitlement plan. All of these devices were complicated and none was universally accepted. As a result, the government has included in this bill provision for a commission of inquiry to examine methods of payment; to explore economic and social implications of producer payments; and to report its findings within a year. As Dr. Gilson had suggested that the payments all go to the railways in the first year in any event, this is a very acceptable compromise and leaves the issue open for future amendment.

When one looks at the reports of the standing committee which toured the west, one can see the differences of opinion which exist. Clearly, the west is not the homogeneous area that some would like to portray. In Alberta, for example, most witnesses who appeared seemed to view the method of payment as the most important issue, and most of those witnesses favoured producer payments. However, when the hearings moved to Saskatchewan, railway payments were the preferred way to proceed, and the whole issue of method of payment took a back seat to the question of what the farmer could afford to pay.

Honourable senators, grain prices have, admittedly, been depressed for the past few years as world wheat stocks have been high. At the same time, producers have faced skyrocketing costs for fuel, fertilizer and many other commodities, together with high interest rates. As a result, the producers' profit margins have been squeezed. Many producers, therefore, fear that they just cannot afford an increase in shipping costs at this time. It is important to recognize, however, that what the farmer can afford even less than an increase in transportation costs is a transportation crisis. If our transportation system is not capable of getting a farmer's crop to market, he will lose revenue from sales and face ever-increasing interest costs and on-farm storage costs.

At the same time, while freight rates are to be increased, there are a number of protections built in to ensure that producers are not being asked to pay more than they can afford. First of all, the government will pay $650 million annually towards producers' freight bills — and that is a monumental commitment. Secondly, the government will protect them from future inflation by paying everything above three per cent of railway cost increases in the first three years, and everything over six per cent thereafter. This is protection from inflation that few people in Canada will enjoy.

Thirdly, there is a safety net which ensures that at no time will producers pay more than 10 per cent of the value of their product as freight costs. This safety net will start at four per cent and be phased in over five years. This safety-net provision is a key one, and has not, in my opinion, been well understood. Forgetting the predictions of five-times or ten-times Crow, if wheat sells, for example, at $6.00 per bushel, the freight rate will never exceed 60 cents a bushel. This safety net provides a great measure of both protection and certainty for the producer. In addition, the Crow is being expanded to cover a whole range of new crops and products. No longer will the system be biased strictly in favour of the traditional crops.

Honourable senators, through this bill the government has committed itself to the economy of western Canada. It is committed to building a first-class rail transportation system which will ensure that all western products get to market and will protect our reputation as a trading partner. At the same time, the interests of grain producers will be protected and their historic right to a statutory freight rate system will be maintained. This, in turn, will protect them from the monopoly of the railroads and the uncertainties of inflation.

To sum up, the government will pay at least $650 million annually in a subsidy to help western farmers move their grain to market. It is true, however, that the farmers will pay more. It may take two, three or four times the present rate, which again, I point out, is only 23 cents a bushel on average. In return, they will get a modern tranportation system within the next eight to ten years. Farmers will be protected by a ceiling against rapidly rising inflation and railway costs, and by the ten per cent limit in the relationship between the amount of money they receive for their grain and the cost of freight to move that grain to market.

In turn, the railroads are committed to spending something over $60 billion in the next eight to ten years to modernize both the rail transportation system and the port system. This money, incidentally, will be spent in all parts of Canada.

Honourable senators, this bill is the result of great consultation; of many good, sound compromises. I urge all honourable senators to give it their support.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, first, I would like to congratulate Senator Steuart on his able presentation of the bill. Once again he has shown that he is an expert on agriculture. However, while Senator Steuart gave a good explanation of this bill, it is more complicated than he would have us believe. In my opinion, it will take this chamber several days to understand all the angles and facets of this legislation.

When I was first elected in 1958, the first speech I ever heard was a speech on grain. At that time we had 208 members, many of whom were elected from the west. Our Prime Minister at the time, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, was from Saskatchewan. Every day we heard speeches by farmers from the west about grain. We did not know too much about the Crow at that time. We knew that the Crow was historical and we knew that it had something to do with freight rates for western grain producers. Even then we sensed that that could only be appreciated by someone born in the vast rolling lands of our western provinces, and who grew grain. We learned that the Crow rate had its origin in 1897, after an agreement with the CPR and the passing of the Crow's Nest Pass Act. This agreement gave moneys and land to the railroad in exchange for railroad construction and a flat rate transportation charge on prairie grain bound for export destinations such as Churchill, Thunder Bay and west coast ports.

We also found that many people confused the Crow rate and its beginnings in 1897 with the CPR's transcontinental agreement of 1881. In that year Parliament passed the CPR Act which provided a grant of $25 million, 25 million acres of lands and exemption from taxation for some years in return for constructing the transcontinental line from Thunder Bay to Vancouver. The two agreements are not the same, but their purpose was to tie this country together from sea to sea, and, whatever may be said about these arrangements, they were then deemed necessary in the national interest.

The Crow rate was seen by the western grain farmers as Canada's guarantee to them of a fixed rate that would secure their capacity to compete and prosper. It was in a very real way the reason for being Canadian.

Speaking about the Crow rate, my good friend the Honourable John Fraser, from Vancouver, told this story recently:

> There is a story that has been told before but bears re-telling. In the 1930s, in a small school in rural Saskatchewan, an important educational expert from the east was visiting. The teacher wanted to be sure that on that day her class would make a favourable impression. After the eastern educational expert was introduced, she said, "Now class, today we will discuss the Crowsnest Pass rate." "What," inquired the visitor, "is the Crowsnest Pass rate?"
> The whole class rose and, in unison, piped out, "Half a cent per ton per mile—FOREVER".

And therein lay the rub—"forever". But the idea of forever does not die easily. In 1949-50, the Turgeon royal commission considered whether grain rates should remain under the control of Parliament or be determined in the same manner as rates for other traffic. It concluded that grain rates should be altered only by Parliament.

In 1961, the MacPherson royal commission found that the railways were losing money due to the Crow—$16 million in 1958—and recommended that losses under the Crow be paid as a subsidy to the railways. MacPherson also said that benefits of government land grants and financial assistance should not be used to operate railways. He said:

> We find no evidence that either donor or the receiver contemplated such action. Grants were made to get the railway built . . . we do not recommend that earnings of other corporate investments be taken into account in setting freight rates.

In 1976, the Snavely royal commission concluded that the railways lost $105.5 million moving grain in 1974.

In 1977, the Hall royal commission concluded that the Crow should be kept and expanded to other commodities and said that the government should pay the Crow shortfall to railways as a subsidy.

Senator Roblin gave me some notes which I shall review this evening in order to continue tomorrow to explain to the Senate what kind of problem this party faces with the present legislation before us.

On motion of Senator Asselin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, November 17, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): It is my understanding that the Transport and Communications Committee will meet at 4 p.m. tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, yesterday I met with Senator Langlois, the chairman of that committee. He suggested that should the bill receive second reading before 6 p.m. today the committee could meet this evening as well as tomorrow at 4 p.m., following the funeral service for the late Honourable Walter Baker. If the committee meets this evening, the minister will not be available for that meeting. However, the committee could deal with other business tonight and the minister would then appear tomorrow afternoon. I have not yet received notice of the exact time for tomorrow's meeting.

Senator Asselin: I thought it had been decided yesterday that the Transport and Communications Committee would meet at 4 p.m. on Wednesday. Accordingly, we on this side of the house have organized our business in order to be able to attend tomorrow's meeting.

Senator Frith: There is no question that that is the plan, just as we agreed to it. I am merely adding that, should the bill receive second reading before 6 p.m. today, the committee could meet this evening to deal with other business relating to the bill as well as meeting tomorrow afternoon, when the minister is scheduled to appear. Senator Langlois may wish to add something to what I have said.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I do not have much to add to what the Deputy Leader of the Government has said, but if necessary, we could also sit tomorrow evening. Apparently, the minister will be available to appear before the committee tomorrow afternoon only. Departmental officials, however, would be available this evening, so that we could commence our study of the bill, as amended in the other place, and could then meet with the minister at 4 p.m. or 4.30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while we are on the subject of committee meetings, could the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us which committees will be sitting this week? Could he also give us the assurance, as he gave it to me over the phone earlier today, that the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will not sit this week to consider Bill S-31, for the reasons I gave him, and that the sittings of that committee will be put off until next week?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as discussed between Senator Asselin and myself this morning, I made that recommendation just as we had agreed. I tried to get in touch with Senator Barrow to keep him posted, but to no avail. I see that we did not get notice of a Thursday meeting even though one had been scheduled. I have discussed this with the Leader of the Government and, as far as I can tell, it seems we will proceed as planned. Perhaps he might have something to add, but since I was committing myself, I made the exact recommendation which we agreed to today.

Senator Asselin: I raised the question because I have been advised that witnesses had been called to appear before that committee on Thursday this week. I want to make sure that those witnesses will be told that they will appear before the committee next week rather than Thursday this week.

Senator Frith: With respect to the witnesses and the committee proceedings, as I just said, I was unable to get in touch with Senator Barrow.

As to the other matter, namely the recommendation to the Leader of the Government, I did make it.

I am sorry I have not heard anything about the witnesses due to the fact that it has been impossible for me to reach Senator Barrow.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: You are still talking about Bill S-31?

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HON. HARTLAND DE M. MOLSON

FELICITATIONS ON AWARD OF HONORARY DOCTORATE BY McGILL UNIVERSITY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, perhaps you will permit me to bootleg a comment under Notices of Motion. I must begin by saying that the senator to whom it applies preferred that I not say anything. Nevertheless, I think you would want me to tell you that earlier this month our colleague, Senator Molson, received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from McGill University.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I thank my colleague for his very kind remarks. I shall not go into the question of whether or not the honour was deserved, but the fact remains that it was from McGill University, a university we all respect, and it is, indeed, a great honour. I was grateful and proud to receive the honorary degree.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe the same subject was raised last week by Senator Deschatelets. I have no objection, however, to the Deputy Leader of the Government mentioning this event again. In any case, Senator Molson was not present the first time.

I would like to say that we on this side join those on the Government side in offering the honourable senator our sincere congratulations.

Senator Molson: I wish to thank the Acting Leader of the Opposition.

[English]

HON. HAZEN ARGUE, P.C.

HON. DONALD CAMERON

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to advise you that Senator Argue is ill and is in hospital in Regina with a severe case of the flu. We think that he will not be able to return to the chamber for several days.

I would also like to mention that Senator Cameron has rejoined us today, after having spent several weeks in hospital. I am sure that all honourable senators wish to join me in welcoming him on his return to the Senate.

HON. ARTHUR TREMBLAY

FELICITATIONS ON AWARD OF HONORARY DOCTORATE BY WATERLOO UNIVERSITY

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since we are all extending congratulations, I would like to mention that Senator Tremblay recently received an honorary doctorate from the University of Waterloo.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—UNILATERAL DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE BY TURKISH POPULATION—SAFETY OF CANADIAN MILITARY PERSONNEL IN U.N. PEACEKEEPING FORCE

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. We heard this morning about the unilateral declaration of independence by the Turkish population of Cyprus, which was quite a shock to the Cyprus community. The Turkish and Greek authorities are on the alert and the United Nations is apprised of the precarious state of affairs.

Since Canada has had a peacekeeping force in Cyprus for well over ten years, does the Leader of the Government have any information to give us concerning the situation on the island? Could he tell us whether our personnel based on Cyprus for peacekeeping purposes are in peril and should they not rather be repatriated?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the background is essentially as Senator Asselin has described it. There has been what I think is termed a "unilateral declaration of independence" by the Turkish population living in a certain part of the island of Cyprus. As the honourable senator has indicated, this has created some tensions and certainly some apprehension with respect to what it really means. It is correct that there are about 500 Canadian military personnel there as part of the United Nations peacekeeping force. I believe they went there some 19 years ago, as opposed to some 10 years ago.

At the present time we are trying to assess the implications of the situation. In any event, the situation will be handled by the United Nations since all the troops which are there from several countries, including Canada, are part of the U.N. peacekeeping force. When I have further information I will let the honourable senator know. In the meantime, our concern is that no Canadians, including the military personnel there, get into a difficult or untenable situation.

● (1410)

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister had suggested that the Canadian Government might repatriate our peacekeeping force on Cyprus. Is this still under consideration?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, some weeks ago the Prime Minister suggested that perhaps it was time to reassess the situation in Cyprus. The original assumption was that the Canadian troops were in Cyprus for a reasonable time as part of the U.N. peace-keeping force to assist in maintaining peace and order along the demarcation line, if you will, and, in conjunction with troops of other nations, had fulfilled that task.

However, it was never Canada's intention that this would be a permanent commitment to perform this kind of peace-keeping role in Cyprus, and the Prime Minister has suggested—very properly, in my view—that, after 19 years, Canada should assess whether or not it should continue to have that kind of temporary peace-keeping force.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

QUEBEC—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question about another current issue. Last week, at a special Cabinet meeting, the Government of Quebec decided to spend substantial amounts on speeding up Quebec's economic recovery in various industrial sectors.

Last night on television, the Premier said that officials of the Quebec Government and federal Government had been working for some time to determine the federal Government's contribution to Quebec's economic recovery.

Could the Leader of the Government tell us whether this matter was discussed in Cabinet? Could he also tell us whether the federal Government will be contributing to the emergency fund being planned by the Quebec Government? Is the federal Government prepared to make a substantial contribution in order to help in Quebec's economic recovery?

[Senator Olson.]

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): My reply to Senator Asselin's inquiry is: Yes, I shall take parts of his question as notice. However, I can tell my honourable friend now that there has been a significant and on-going effort made by the federal government to deal with the economic situation in all parts of Canada, including Quebec, and to try to enhance it.

Since my honourable friend's question specifically concerns Quebec, I can tell him that there have been massive commitments of financing for Quebec in several sectors. For example, there is the federal government's investment in a new helicopter industry; shipbuilding has been accelerated at two of the shipyards, since Quebec is playing a very important part in the frigate program; there is a very large research and development program for the Pratt and Whitney works at Longueuil; the Gaspésie development program is a large project which includes many smaller projects, and that is now under way.

I would be glad to request a complete list for my honourable friend, and I am sure he would be impressed with the magnitude of what the federal government is attempting to do to enhance the economy of Quebec.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, my good friend Senator Olson never misses a chance to convey a partisan political message from his government. We have known for some time that the federal government has invested some funds to help the economy of our province. However, the specific question I was asking him involved the decision that has been announced by the Government of Quebec to invest more money to give the Quebec economy a boost. In that regard, the Premier of Quebec said last night that he will ask the federal government to share in that upsurge of the Quebec economy by making a contribution. I only want to know if your government is disposed to going along with the Government of Quebec in the matter of this fund.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not think Senator Asselin should get so excited, because in the answer I gave him a minute ago, I indicated that I would take as notice that part of the question regarding specific funding. Because he does not often initiate that kind of discussion, I wish to draw to his attention the large number of significant economic enhancement programs that the federal government has already undertaken. I am sure he appreciates my reminding him of that from time to time, because I realize he derives great interest and satisfaction from knowing that the federal government has this keen interest in the economic enhancement of Quebec.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Unfortunately, when we ask my honourable friend questions about Quebec or economic development in Canada, his answers are often far too partisan and subjective. They would be far more valuable if they were more objective.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I find it somewhat difficult to reply to Senator Asselin without dealing with the preamble to the questions he has put. When he comes to the specific answer, of course, he wants me to confine myself to that. However, if he does not want me to comment on, or give some background information on, the preamble, then I suggest that he omit it. I think that he is entitled to a complete response to all of the comments he makes, both in the preamble and in the specific question. If he would like to be more specific and confine himself to the question, I promise him that I will respond to the question only.

Senator Asselin: I learned how to ask questions from you when you were sitting in the opposition as a member of the Liberal Party.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Well, you learned from the best then!

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

VALUE OF HOLDINGS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Social Development. Could he confirm the accuracy of a report that the value of the Canada Development Corporation's holdings is significantly less than the $809 million claimed in the company's last annual report?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, I doubt that I will be in a position at any time to offer comments on CDC's stock market values. I will be prepared to report on the government's investment in that portfolio, but I do not see the advantage or—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Propriety.

Senator Austin: —propriety—thank you—of engaging in stock market speculation.

Senator Nurgitz: I was asking the minister if he would comment on the value of the holdings, which is a totally different question. Notwithstanding the minister's good coach, I have no interest whatsoever in the stock market price of the shares. A Toronto newspaper report today indicates that the holdings should be valued at $478 million. That is a 41 per cent difference from CDC reports. I think that is significantly different from the question the minister suggested I was asking.

Senator Austin: The Canada Development Corporation has been reported as seeking to issue equity to the Canadian public. It has filed a prospectus with the Ontario Securities Commission, and perhaps with other commissions, in order to begin to establish that offering under appropriate securities rules. Given that that process is under way, I think it would be most inadvisable for me to comment on value. There is no doubt that the offering itself, if accepted by the Canadian public, will say something as to value.

As Senator Nurgitz knows, there are many tests of value, such as market, book, fair value on sale, and so on. All I can report, although I know it may not satisfy Senator Nurgitz, is that the government's policy with respect to offering its shares to the Canadian public, which was arrived at by agreement on May 27, 1982, still stands, but to this time the government has not received any proposals from the private sector to acquire our position or any part thereof.

In the meantime, I have been requested by the directors of the Canada Development Corporation to declare that the Government of Canada will not sell any of its equity holdings during the currency of a Canada Development Corporation offer. That is a standard provision under securities practice which ensures that there is no undisclosed secondary offering. For the time being, I am in a position to advise this chamber that my shares are not in the market, and, consequently, the Canada Development Corporation can proceed with its treasury offering.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

1984 PREMIUM

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State for Social Development): Honourable senators, on October 20 Senator Roblin asked a question with respect to unemployment insurance. When I replied to it on October 25, I included an undertaking that, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable John Roberts, made an announcement with respect to unemployment insurance and the establishment of premium rates for 1984, I would endeavour to convey that information to Senator Roblin.

That announcement was issued by Mr. Roberts on October 28 and was circulated to all senators and members of the other place and, I am advised, would have been in all offices by Monday, October 31. I was in this chamber, as was Senator Roblin, on Tuesday, November 1, but no question was addressed to me on the matter by Senator Roblin.

When I inquired of the office of Mr. Roberts to ensure that Senator Roblin and other senators had received this statement by the minister, I was advised that it had been circulated. My office also circulated a copy to Senator Roblin.

I make these comments in order to express my dismay over Senator Roblin's question in this chamber on November 3, in which he indicated his dismay that I had not communicated the statement of Mr. Roberts.

Senator Roblin is not here today, but this is my first opportunity to respond to his question of November 3. I believe that, because of the circulation by Mr. Roberts' staff and by my own staff of the statement of October 28, I have fulfilled my undertaking to convey it to Senator Roblin. Therefore, I am not sure of the exact nature of Senator Roblin's dismay.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, November 14, 1983, the debate on the motion of Senator Steuart for the second reading of Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): When I adjourned the debate last evening, honourable senators, I made a reference to the important issue of the Crow rate, the Bill before us. I said that it would be easier to appreciate the history of the Crow rate if we had a better knowledge of the history of Western Canada. The grain producer of Western Canada is the author of a very impressive success story, almost unrivalled in the economic development of Canada. Production has gone up 50 per cent in recent decades. In net terms, grain accounts for $6 billion in our balance of payments account. Grain production opens up a market worth billions of dollars to the Canadian industry and therefore creates thousands of jobs for Canadians. Despite such truly exceptional results, the grain producer's net income has not kept pace.

[English]

Costs of production have risen sharply from 1971 to 1983. The costs of economic inputs have risen from 100 per cent to 300 per cent. The farmer pays for these inputs on the basis of domestic cost structure. The grain he exports, however, is not sold on a domestic price basis; it is sold on the basis of internationally established prices. This means that grain prices have been subjected to a cost-price squeeze. The farmer does not set his selling price on the basis of his cost of production. His cost of production is dictated by the domestic market, which is outside his control. His selling price is dictated by international forces, which are outside his control.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: The result can therefore be summarized as follows: The net yearly farm income in the Prairies for 1971 was $4,825. In constant dollars, in 1982 that same net income was $5,096. Between 1971 and 1982, some years were naturally better than others, as the production volume increased by 50 per cent. This is where we can see the significance of the Crow rate. This rate of $4.89 per ton was the only thing that remained stable and on which the farmers could count. We now have Bill C-155, the Crowsnest Bill. Under its provisions, the price per ton would increase from $4.89 to $9.35 within three years. This bill is rather complex and I would ask for Senator Denis' indulgence in listening to me.

Hon. Azellus Denis: I can understand you very well.

Senator Asselin: You understand nothing about it; I find this understandable. I was saying that the rate will be $27.21 per ton in eight years. What is the use of applying the 6-and-5 policy to wage increases? It is fair to note that grain farmers were subsidized and that the Crow rate was a major element of this subsidy. In view of the distances involved, transportation costs in Canada are much higher than in the United States, Australia and the European Economic Community. Indeed, for the period between 1972 and 1982, the total of Canadian subsidies for grain production was estimated at 4 per cent of the market price. During this same period, the subsidy amounted to 8.6 per cent of the market price in the United States and 10.8 per cent within the European Economic Community. Crops were even better in 1982 and 1983. This year, the subsidy amounted to 37 cents a bushel in Canada, while it reached $1.12 a bushel in the United States.

[English]

Thus the grain trade has been one of the great engines of our economy. The farmer is squeezed between uncontrollable domestic costs and uncontrollable international prices, while his main competitors in the world market receive significantly higher subsidies. The effect of the Crow reform is to increase the farmer's transportation costs by five times over the next eight years. This most certainly raises the question of the farmer's ability to pay, on which I will have more to say later.

• (1430)

Against that background of farming concerns, what does Bill C-155 propose? It proposes to put western rail transportation on a sound economic and technical footing by ensuring that the railways receive adequate compensation for the movement of grain. All exporters, whether of wheat or other natural products such as coal, potash or lumber, et cetera, are beneficiaries of this reform. In the national interest, there is general agreement to proceed. A significant product of the Crow reform should be the removal of Crow economic dislocations. At present, the Crow rate promotes the export of raw farm materials but harms the processing in Canada of farm materials. The Crow reform should also be counted on to introduce the "hidden hand" of competition and enterprise and to promote the cost effectiveness of our transportation system.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the Bill acknowledges that grain producers need help to adapt to that new situation. We must change, it is true, but change is sometimes painful. However, it will be easier to accept if it is implemented as fairly as possible.

I want to examine with you some of the basic principles of Bill C-155 which will ensure that the new transportation costs which the grain producer might incur will be fair, and how the new rates might prove to be more beneficial and more effective.

The people who drafted Bill C-155 expect a sustained inflationary spiral in rail transport costs. In the first three years, the producer will pay the first 3 per cent of the new inflationary thrust and, after that, the first 6 per cent of the inflation rate.

Let us compare those rates with the estimated inflation rates contained in the last budget of the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Marc Lalonde: 6.3 per cent in 1983, 4.5 per cent in 1984, 4.5 per cent in 1985, 4 per cent in 1986, and 3.7 per cent in 1987.

[English]

The provisions of the bill do not appear to be very generous. They ensure that the first charge for inflation will be against the farmer. The government will pay more only after the farmer's contribution has been taken into account. Thus, the farmer pays most of the increased costs. It would be far more equitable if the inflation factor were shared from the beginning between the farmer and the government. A fifty-fifty split might be considered.

The bill also purports to protect the farmer against low grain prices by proposing a "safety net". The safety net would provide that the transportation charge would not exceed 10 per cent of the export price of grain. That is not a very comforting proposal. In the 20 years up to 1981, the 10 per cent factor would have come into play only three times. In the last 10 years, a 5 per cent factor was exceeded only once, while a 4 per cent factor was exceeded three times. In order to be of practical assistance to the farmer, the safety net percentage should be made more generous. The figure of 4 per cent as a permanent percentage might be appropriate.

A third area in which the bill is unsatisfactory has to do with the total amount of grain exports to be taken into account in deciding the cost of freight. That total is capped at 31.5 million tonnes. Volumes of grain exports above this figure will pay the full cost of transportation. This is obviously a penalty for greater productivity, and it should be removed. The volume of exports has been increased by 50 per cent over the past 10 years. Government targets call for exports of 36 million tonnes within seven years. The cap therefore becomes a disincentive that should be lifted.

I would propose that the bill be amended to improve the farmer's position in those three particular areas. Unfortunately, as that would probably call for an increase in public expenditures, such a change could originate only in the House of Commons.

I turn now to the calculation of the Crow gap, which is to say the money that is required to bridge the gap between railway costs and railway revenues in respect of grain traffic.

The bill provides for a Crow benefit of approximately $650 million-plus each year. That would total approximately $2 billion over a three-year period. When other subsidies, such as those for branch line maintenance and hopper cars, et cetera, are added in, the total subsidy amounts to around $3 billion over a three-year period.

At least two items of this subsidy are open to question. First is the cost of capital. Under the provisions of this bill, the subsidy provides a sum of $63 million to pay a return of 20.1 per cent on the cost of capital. Capital includes not only borrowed moneys but also the equity in shares and the return of reinvested profits. A quick comparison with the same second calculation applied to other public utilities would lead one to think that this is a generous provision. Indeed, it may be too generous. The government itself is so uncertain in the matter that it intends to ask the Federal Transportation Commission to hold hearings on it.

The second questionable calculation has to do with an item called "contribution to constant costs". Besides the variable and other costs of grain movement that can be verified, there are certain other railroad costs that are hard to identify and define. It appears that a subjective judgment has been made to the effect that the so-called constant costs are equal to 20 per cent of the variable costs and are included in the subsidy accordingly. This means, of course, that the contribution to constant costs is a sort of cost plus factor. As in the current year, they will amount to $116 million. They are an important factor. The introduction of the cost plus feature in the subsidy obviously does little to encourage efficient operation. In the present case, the contribution of $116 million to the constant cost factor will flow right through to the bottom line of the railways and will thus constitute a direct addition to their profits each year.

● (1440)

[Translation]

Honourable senators, there are obviously some questions about capital and the contribution to constant costs that have not yet been answered to everyone's satisfaction. Benefit payments should depend on there being a satisfactory solution to these two problems. In addition to the Government subsidy, producers themselves will be paying hundreds of millions of dollars more to the railway companies for the transportation of their grain. However, because of the way the rates have been established, the producers' contribution, during the first three years under the new Crow rate will be relatively modest.

In fact, it will amount to about $200 million for those first three years. This is the farmers' contribution that can be frozen at that level while attempts are made to resolve any problems encountered in connection with the new Crow rate. The suggested freeze would apply only to the producers' contribution of $200 million over the next three years.

No freeze is suggested for the remaining period covered by this financing plan. Even without the producers' contribution, the railway companies will be receiving $2 billion in compensation for the Crow rate over the next three years, and another billion reflecting a number of other subsidies. The three-year freeze on any increase in the $200 million costs to producers will not affect the plan as a whole. However, it will give us time to see what the producer can afford to pay. It will give us time to clarify other issues raised by the requirements of this legislation. As far as the railway companies are concerned, the process should not take too long, but it would appear that the problems of producers will take much longer to solve.

The last controversial point I would like to raise is the method of payment of Government subsidies. The two potential recipients are the railway companies and the producer. Professor Clay Gilson, quoted by Senator Steuart yesterday evening, was also in favour of the producer receiving 80 per cent and the railway companies 20 per cent of the subsidy. Minister Pepin's first position was to give 50 per cent to producers and 50 per cent to railway companies. The relevant provision in Bill C-155 would give the entire subsidy to the railway companies.

Clearly, when Minister Pepin decided to change the subsidy formula in Bill C-155 so as to give the entire subsidy to the railway companies, he was being influenced either by the Members from Eastern Quebec or the Quebec agricultural organizations which, in my view, misinterpreted certain provisions of the Bill.

This last comment is by Senator Roblin. It was feared that the new method for subsidizing the railway companies would raise the price of Western feed grains for producers in Eastern Canada.

I am not saying that I disagree, but I would like to give my own explanation. I think this is an erroneous interpretation of the Bill, since the price of feed grain in Eastern Canada is affected above all by the price of corn imported from the United States. What happens to prices in Western Canada is purely academic. If the price of Western grain does not compare favourably with the price of U.S. corn, not much Western grain will be sold in Quebec.

I think that is abundantly clear.

[English]

A second argument is that meat producers in Quebec would suffer. The west might secure a comparative advantage but it is not likely to have any competitive advantage. After all, poultry prices in Eastern Canada are set by marketing boards. The subsidies given by the Quebec government to hog and beef producers are a most significant consideration in setting the returns to farmers in that province. Nevertheless, the federal government yielded to the pressure.

I must also say that western opinion has been split on this distribution of the subsidy. The wheat pools defend the status quo with particular reference to their elevator systems and to the social impact on rural communities. I do not minimize this opinion, but it is clear that sooner or later changes will come. Recent experience makes it perfectly clear that it is better to meet change head on and master it than to suffer the consequences of perpetuating the status quo.

A second western view—the one which in my opinion will ultimately prevail—is that paying the railways is the second best alternative. It is better to pay farmers. Paying the railways locks in a fixed and relatively inefficient handling system which is of little benefit to eastern livestock producers. The prairie grain producers will be tied to the railways even if truck competition offers lower costs overall. Certainly, railways will have less incentive for efficiency and cost control. The export of raw materials will continue to be more attractive than local Canadian processing. Paying the Crow subsidy to farmers improves the chances of maximizing economic leverage and of taking advantage of price competitive developments.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Bill C-155 raises a number of questions which remain unanswered.

The Bill must go forward if the Crow rate is to be of any assistance in the development of our transportation system, but that does not mean that the whole bill must be adopted immediately.

If there is a basic question which is of great concern to me and to many Canadians, it has to be the capacity of the producer to pick up the tab.

[Senator Asselin.]

The protection offered by this bill is inadequate. Too many uncertain factors will weigh heavily on the shoulders of the grain producers. We need to understand those thorny issues much better than we do now.

I think it is altogether reasonable that the $200 million increase in the cost of transporting grain be spread over three years. That will not in any way distract us from the ultimate goal which is to come up with an improved transportation system for those who use our trains; it will give us the time needed to solve all our problems.

In its October 22 editorial, the Toronto Star made a worthy and thought-provoking contribution to the Crow debate when it made the following suggestion:

[English]

> By setting aside for further review their controversial proposals to hike the cost of shipping western grain, the Liberals could press ahead unopposed with those parts of the bill which deal with much-needed investments in our country's transportation network. Revenues from the proposed higher rates would be foregone, but in any case they play only a small role in financing the overall improvements.

[Translation]

It ended with the following conclusion which I think deserves full marks and in which the Western grain farmers are singled out:

● (1450)

[English]

> Western grain farmers use only a small part of the rail system, but they are being threatened with 400 per cent increases in rates by the end of the decade.

My hope is that some way and somehow we will take this advice to heart.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, in concluding, I want to say that in committee we shall try to clarify the various issues I raised in this debate. My colleagues will also have an opportunity to consider them in the course of this debate on second reading.

I would also like to point out, quite frankly, that some parts of this speech consisted of comments Senator Roblin left with me before going on his trip to the Middle-East.

[English]

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, anyone who has grown up in western Canada, and especially in the great wheat growing province of Saskatchewan, has understandably been exposed for his entire life to debate and discussion concerning the Crowsnest Pass agreement or, more correctly, to what evolved from that agreement, the statutory rate for the movement of grain and flour.

The statutory rate had its genesis in a Supreme Court of Canada decision which held, in effect, that application of the 1897 Crowsnest rate would lead to discrimination in freight charges because on rail lines built after 1897 freight charges could be higher than the Crowsnest rates. This decision of the Supreme Court required that a legislative solution be found in order to address this problem. In due course, the federal government submitted to Parliament certain amendments to the Railway Act which became effective on July 23, 1925, and had the result that since that date the Crowsnest Pass limitation on rates has not existed except with respect to the movement of grain and flour from western Canada to export positions at the Lakehead. By subsequent amendments, the law was extended to apply to export grain moving through west coast ports and the port of Churchill, and in 1961 Parliament amended the law to make the rate apply to the movement of rapeseed.

In the result, the situation has changed from 1897 from one in which a two-party agreement set rates for moving grain to one port from 289 points on 3,000 miles of track applicable to one railway, to the present circumstance in which the law prescribes the freight rate for moving grain to five ports from more than 1,600 points on 20,000 miles of track operated by three railways.

Current rates are still at the Crowsnest level because of the amendment to the Railway Act passed in 1925. Therefore, these rates owe their existence to the act of 1925 as subsequently amended, and not to the agreement of 1897, and fall under the jurisdiction of Parliament and not the Canadian Transport Commission.

There have been a number of attempts to have the statutory rates altered. There was the Turgeon royal commmission in 1951 which was established to examine the rail freight rate structure and which, after examination of the subject, recommended no change in the rates. There was also the MacPherson commission on transportation in 1959-61 which, after lengthy hearings and in-depth study, recommended that losses which it had recognized the railways were incurring should be borne by the Parliament of Canada, and that the railways should be subsidized to the extent necessary to cover their costs and achieve a reasonable return on investment associated with the task performed. In spite of this recommendation no alteration to the statutory rates occurred.

The most recent investigations of the situation conducted by Carl M. Snavely and Mr. Justice Emmett Hall both found that the railways were losing money moving grain at the statutory rate. Both Mr. Justice Hall and Mr. Snavely recommended that the statutory rate be retained, and that losses be covered by a government subsidy to be paid directly to the railroads.

I think it must be recognized that a critical point is approaching in that the low revenue from the statutory rate is hindering the transportation companies in implementing their plans for a major restructuring and expansion of the western transportation system.

Both major railways have estimated that as much as $14 billion is required for future rail line upgrading and expansion to cope with the needs of western Canadian commodity producers. In addition to grain, these commodities include coal, sulphur and potash.

A consensus has developed in western Canada that changes to the statutory rate will have to be made. However, there is no consensus with respect to who should bear the burden or, perhaps more correctly, in what proportion the burden should be borne in order to cover the deficits of the railroads and provide them with the return on investment needed to justify the huge investment which must be made.

I would now like to attempt to put this matter into perspective from the standpoint of the province of Saskatchewan. Last year prairie farmers sold some 27 million metric tons of grain on the export market and earned some $6 billion of foreign exchange for this nation.

Obviously, if our farmers cannot afford to grow grain in such volumes and ship that grain through an efficient transportation and grain handling system, then the economic consequences to this nation will be very serious indeed. Grain accounts for 70 per cent of our agricultural exports. Based on a multiplier of four, export grain provides a $24 billion contribution to Canada's gross national product.

In 1981 prairie farmers spent over $2 billion on farm machinery and repairs, $760 million on energy and $640 million on fertilizer. These inputs provided an important market for the Canadian manufacturing sector. Over 150,000 farm families and 25,000 workers are directly involved in the production, shipping and handling of export grain.

Grain is the largest single commodity shipped through the St. Lawrence Seaway and provides a valuable backhaul opportunity for vessels moving iron ore upstream. The Great Lakes movement of grain also generates significant activity in Ontario's shipbuilding and ship-repairing industries. Clearly, a healthy prairie farm base generates a high level of activity throughout the total economy.

No Canadian, no matter where he or she lives, or what he or she does for a living, will escape for long the ripple effects of such a serious impairment of our national economy. The textile worker in Quebec will suffer. The factory worker in Ontario will suffer. The fisherman in the maritimes will suffer, as will the fruit farmer in British Columbia.

Fundamental, therefore, to any significant alteration to the existing statutory rate system must be the continued economic viability of the prairie grain grower faced with the necessity to move the product which he grows to ports where it can find its way to the markets of the world.

Perhaps to understate the situation, the bill before us has received intense, exhaustive debate and scrutiny, both in debate in the other place and also in committee there. Understandably, western Canadian members of Parliament representing the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada have been prominent in that debate and have ably, and with clarity, expressed their views on the details of the bill and, indeed, have succeeded in having accepted by the government substantive amendments to the bill. Notwithstanding this fact, we remain opposed to passage of the bill in its present form—a point of view held as well by every major western Canadian farm organization.

Two fundamental amendments to this bill were advanced in the other place by our party and were rejected in turn by Mr. Axworthy and the government.

The first amendment proposed would have placed a freeze on producer payments for three crop years—that is to say, up until July 31, 1986. This proposal has been misinterpreted and misunderstood as advocating a three-year delay in implementing the entire bill. Honourable senators, this is simply not the case at all. Notwithstanding the proposed freeze on the statutory rate within the time frame proposed under the terms of the bill, approximately $1 billion of economic benefits would flow to the railways in each of those years. This amount of money would certainly enable the railways to get on with the job of modernization and expansion of the existing transportation system.

● (1500)

The second proposed and fundamental amendment to the bill was a clause to facilitate a change in the method of payment to the railways by regulation rather than by statutory amendment as would be required under the terms of the existing bill. The minister, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, announced in the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications that once the bill became law, a review committee would be established to examine this method of payment. However, without this proposed enabling clause to facilitate a change in the method of payment—if indeed a change was recommended—the work of such a review committee would become a sham, since changes which would be required by legislation could conceivably take as long to bring about as have the proposed changes to the statutory rate presently under debate.

Honourable senators, it is our intention to introduce on third reading amendments along these lines, and perhaps others, the defeat of which in this chamber will make it impossible for senators on this side to support the bill.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I really do not intend to enter into the debate as it has been expostulated so skillfully by Senator Balfour. Indeed, having read Senator Steuart's speech of last evening, I really think there is very little that I can add to the subject that he has not already dealt with.

There is one aspect, however, that comes within the expertise that I have arising out of the investigations of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, and that is the importance of renewable resources to the Canadian economy. There is no question in my mind that the Crow rate should be revised, and that the transportation system that will carry grain to the ports should, by virtue of that higher income to the railways, be made as efficient as possible. Indeed, we would be living a myth if we thought we could continue with the low transportation rates as envisaged by the Crow and still have the kind of railway system that we need in this modern world.

However, there is something that we must not lose sight of in respect of grain, lumber, fisheries and so many of the other renewable resources that Canada is so capable of exploiting. We need foreign exchange to live. We are indeed a trading nation. We believe in the concept that a manufacturing base is essential to our survival and I would not, for a moment, doubt that that is so.

However, we now have a new mythology that everything can be solved by high technology, and we are in danger of pouring hundreds of millions of dollars of government money into areas of high technology that might very well prove to be uncompetitive in this very competitive world. What is interesting is that our renewable resources in Canada account for 33 per cent of our exports. Indeed, if you remove the vehicles and parts that go back and forth across the Canadian-American border under the Auto Pact, then renewable resources account for an even higher percentage of our exports—perhaps 40 or 45 per cent. I do not intend in any way to downgrade the Auto Pact. It is simply that the Auto Pact is a north-south movement of vehicles and parts so that we in Canada manufacture for the American market, and the Americans, in turn, manufacture for our market and, in my view, it is therefore legitimate to remove the Auto Pact when looking at the magnitude of our exports.

It seems to me, in all the examinations that have taken place in the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, that what has come home to us is that our renewable resources are a very important part of our exports. We might find it difficult to accept the fact that we are hewers of wood and drawers of water. The bolstering argument against this activity is that wasting resources are being exploited and the product exported to someone else to do the manufacturing. Perhaps that is true of non-renewable resources, but in renewable resources we in Canada are probably as efficient as any country in the world at producing those resources which contribute so vitally to the livelihood and well-being of Canada and its citizens.

While I support the Crow bill, and think that it is essential to have an efficient means of transporting grain to the ports, I say we must not lose sight of the fact that our future is more greatly assured through our renewable-resource industries such as grain than through any aspect of our undertakings in technology. I think that sometimes in Canada we get carried away with the idea that we ought to be a manufacturing country at a time when it is becoming more and more difficult to compete with the low-wage manufacturing countries of the world; that, somehow, high technology will solve our problems. In my opinion, what will contribute most to our standard of living in Canada is our renewable resources.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few brief comments with respect to Bill C-155, which I believe is one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before Parliament in a long time, especially if one looks at it from the perspective, as I do, of a western Canadian. No one in Canada can doubt the importance of rail transportation and agriculture to this country. The building of the railway system was a means of nation-building in this country. The railway provided the link between the various regions and encouraged settlement of vast areas, both in the east and in the west.

I should like to mention that, during the course of my comments, I shall be incorporating some comments left with me by Senator Sherwood who, because of illness, is unable to participate in this debate, and who wanted a few comments made on behalf of people in the Atlantic region.

Agriculture has long been a mainstay of our economy. Even today, following the massive urbanization and industrialization that has taken place in the last 40 or 50 years, agriculture remains a major component of our economy. Western grains and oilseeds alone, as has already been mentioned, contribute over $6 billion to Canada's balance of trade and, through the multiple effect, generate some $24 billion-worth of economic activity in Canada.

Beyond its economic contribution, agriculture has historically helped to determine the social structure and fabric of Canada. Our social and cultural institutions grew out of rural settlement patterns of Canada's early days. Part of the Canadian identity is the heritage of the adventuring spirit and courage possessed by the first pioneers and their off-spring, most of whom were engaged in agriculture or related industries.

The railways and agriculture are intertwined in our history as a nation, and I expect they always will be. I suggest that what we are dealing with in Bill C-155 is not simply a question of dollars and cents but how much money the railways are losing hauling grain and how much the farmer can afford to pay, or what portion should go to whom.

It is a large issue. It is about a way of life. It is about the very fundamental socio-economic structure of western Canada. These are rather strong terms, but I do not think they overstate the case. The right to an affordable, efficient and reliable rail transportation network is tantamount, as has been said several times, to a constitutional pillar, in western Canada.

Senator Sherwood asked me to remind honourable senators of the anger and outrage generated in Atlantic Canada by Via Rail cuts in 1981. The abritrary and unilateral manner in which these cuts were imposed, as was suggested by some, reflected a government that had forgotten some of the historical importance of the railways to Canadians.

In western Canada, and to some degree in the maritimes, the railways in many ways determined the settlement pattern. Our forebears, with their national policy and through the establishment of the Crow rate, clearly wanted the railways to become the vehicle for settling the west, and they did.

What the government is now proposing is to radically alter the Crow rate. Such change will have an important impact on western Canada and on prairie grain producers in particular. Many westerners have viewed the whole process of Crow reform with a certain degree of fear and trepidation.

Recently, the federal government launched a comprehensive review of transportation policy in the Atlantic region, including an examination of the maritime freight rate assistance and the Atlantic region freight assistance programs.

My colleague, Senator Sherwood, wanted me to say that, as with the Crow, these programs are seen as an important element in encouraging the economic growth of the Atlantic region. Whether it be in agriculture, forestry or manufacturing, they enable Atlantic Canada to overcome one of the major stumbling blocks in terms of competitiveness and economic development, that is, its distance from major markets.

As part of the government's review, the recently completed Heckling report examined the impact of removing the freight assistance. That report concluded that to do so would eliminate approximately 12,000 jobs and cause considerable loss of income in the Atlantic region. Due to these findings, I was pleased to see that the Minister of Transport announced in Moncton last month that the government had decided not to phase out the maritime freight rate assistance and the Atlantic region freight assistance programs.

In developing Bill C-155, the government based the proposed legislation on the Snavely commission and the Hall commission, which studied the railway system during the 1970s, as well as the Gilson report prepared in 1981. While these were worthwhile studies and have contributed to the debate, they all focus on the need to provide additional revenues to ensure maintenance and expansion of the western rail network. None of them examined—although the Heckling report attempted to—the impact of a change in the freight rates on the shippers, the people we ought to be most concerned about, the prairie grain farmers.

What the government has done is develop in Bill C-155 a new freight rate structure without a clear understanding of the impact of this new structure on western producers. They intend to implement this scheme and then, during the 1985-86 crop year, examine its consequences through a comprehensive review of the act.

Given the importance of the grain industry to western Canada both in an economic and social sense, we find it somewhat unsupportable for the government to proceed without first studying the impact of the proposed legislation on those most directly affected, the farmers of western Canada.

We find the government's course of action particularly unacceptable because the evidence that was available to the House of Commons Transport Committee clearly indicates that, at present, grain producers simply cannot afford to pay the additional freight costs proposed under the bill, nor should they have to. It is just not right to expect it from the farmers who have made the Canadian agricultural industry one of the most efficient and productive in the world. If other segments of the country's industry had achieved and maintained the same degree of efficiency and productivity as Canadian agriculture, our economic position would be far better.

There are some startling statistics in terms of prairie grain producers. There is some indication in several reports that 10 per cent of prairie farmers are in financial difficulty. Farm income was down 29 per cent in 1982. The price of grain has fallen to 1973 levels, yet input costs tripled in the past decade. Interest costs over the last five to seven years have been astronomical. Fuel costs have doubled since 1979. By 1992 the new rate will be five times the Crow and will cost producers an extra $3.5 to $4 billion dollars. The National Farmers Union projected figures show that in 1992 a farmer shipping 14,778 bushels under the present Crow rate would pay $1,773. Under the new proposal, that same farmer will pay $11,258—a difference of approximately $9,500. The average net farm income in 1982 was only $13,300.

I could go on. Suffice it to say that grain exports contributed $6 billion to Canada's balance of payments and in some way generated economic activity of $24 billion. Given that the international market is highly competitive and highly subsidized, and that Canada's share of the world wheat trade has dropped from its high in the 1960s of 25 to 28 per cent to approximately 17 to 18 per cent today, our concerns are genuine.

Faced with these statistics, it is clear that Bill C-155 will increase producer freight rate costs over the period to the end of July 1986 and will threaten the viability of many prairie farmers. Accordingly, my party has put forward the proposition that the existing freight rate be maintained until at least the end of the 1985-86 crop year.

With respect to western Canada, our grain producers are price-takers on the world market and any freight increase will have to be absorbed by those producers with a consequent reduction in return. It is simply a question of economics and of supply and demand.

At present, the world grain market is highly competitive and it is putting our producers in a difficult position. The statutory freight rate represents the major benefit afforded to Canadian farmers. At present, United States and European Economic Community subsidies are two and three times higher than the benefit our producers receive.

The reality of today's international grain market demands that in order to remain competitive Canadian producers continue to receive this benefit. I remind honourable senators that 89 amendments were adopted in the House of Commons and many more, including the freeze I have spoken about, were not considered in the other place. I am sure they will be moved by my party on third reading.

In closing, I should like to quote from a rather thoughtful article on the Crow, that appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail, by a reporter from Edmonton. It stated:

> Most want to see an efficient grain handling and transportation system, even at the cost of higher freight rates. Few think the new arrangement will achieve that end.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to put a sincere question to Senator Asselin and Senator Nurgitz. Senator Roblin and Senator Sherwood are absent today. In his speech Senator Asselin said, "Senator Roblin asked me to say" such-and-such; and in his speech Senator Nurgitz said, "Senator Sherwood asked me to say" such-and-such, which is perfectly acceptable.

I have a question to address to both senators, and I do not intend to provoke a speech as an answer. Do they themselves subscribe to what they were asked to tell the Senate today? My question is as simple as that.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: If Senator Robichaud had bothered to listen to the speeches made by senators on this side of the House, he would not have had to ask this question. Where appropriate, we pointed out we were quoting comments by Senator Roblin or Senator Sherwood. We said so. I think the best contribution Senator Robichaud could have made would be to speak on behalf of the people of New Brunswick and let us know what he thinks about this legislation.

[English]

Senator Nurgitz: In response to Senator Robichaud, I wholeheartedly endorse the comments of Senator Sherwood. I might say that I did not refer, on each and every occasion, to some of the notes I used. I did not give all my sources away.

Senator Robichaud: That is an intelligent answer.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few comments on Bill C-155, the Western Grain Transportation Bill.

The Honourable John Fraser, P.C., M.P. for Vancouver South, in an attempt to explain the Crow to British Columbians, said:

> I knew the Crow was historical. I knew it had something to do with freight rates for western grain producers and even then I sensed that there was an almost religious devotion to the Crow rate that could only be appreciated by someone born on the vast rolling lands of our western provinces and who grew grain. I learned that the Crow rate had its origin in 1897 after an agreement with the CPR and the passing of the Crowsnest Pass Act. This agreement gave monies to the railroad, and land, in exchange for railroad construction and a flat rate transportation charge on prairie grain bound for export destinations—Churchill, Thunder Bay, and west coast ports.
> I also found that many people confused the Crow rate and its beginnings in 1897 with the CPR's Transcontinental Agreement of 1881. In that year Parliament passed the CPR Act which provided a grant of $25 million, 25 million acres of land, and exemption from taxation for some years in return for constructing the transcontinental line from Thunder Bay to Vancouver.

The purpose of those two acts was to bind the country together from coast to coast. The railway was a means of transportation and communication while the Crow was Canada's guarantee to the western farmers that the cost of the transportation of grain would be constant, thus securing their growth and development.

Once again, I refer to John Fraser's speech where he said that he sensed an almost religious devotion to the Crow rate that could only be appreciated by someone born on the prairies and who grew grain. Honourable senators, I was born on a farm in Alberta and, with very few exceptions, have lived my entire life on a farm. I helped to harvest the 1983 crop, hauling about 15,000 bushels of barley into the bins. I know the costs and the labour involved. I know what hail, frost, drought or sudden torrential rains can do to the best of husbandry and management.

From a very early age I was aware of the security of grain transport under the Crow rate, although I did not recite, "Half a cent per ton per mile forever." I never learned that until much later.

I was also well aware that in 1933 farmers lost carloads of grain—grain that was hauled into the elevator during the price crash. Elevators charged storage. As prices came down and the storage mounted, some farmers just signed off when the storage costs surpassed the value of the grain. They therefore avoided the transportation costs. Others salvaged very little. On the other hand, farmers shipped cattle and hogs to the city stockyards and ended up with a shipping bill that was more than the price received for the livestock.

Does anyone wonder why farmers are so concerned, or why the Crow is so revered? It is, in fact, the only guarantee that western farmers have had. The Crow rate was encompassed in an act of Parliament, the main purpose of which was to bind the country together in 1897, and, for that same reason, it may even be more crucial in 1983 than it was then.

Farmers' costs are escalating, and farming returns are on the downgrade. Senator Nurgitz gave us a good account of the situation in figures. Canadian grain, as a percentage of world markets, is losing ground, now only constituting about 18 per cent.

Canada's record of delivering grain on time has not been very good. The transportation of grain from prairie farms via the Crow rate and railway losses is not something that was not foreseen. It was foreseen by the Turgeon royal commission of 1949-50. In 1961, the MacPherson royal commission estimated that the loss in 1958 was $16 million. The 1976 Snavely commission estimated that the loss in 1974 was $105.5 million. The 1982 Snavely report estimated that the loss for 1980 was $537.8 million.

All of the above commissions and reports recommended that the government simply meet the costs of the railways. Rising shipments of bulk commodities such as coal, sulphur and forest products added to the costs. Lack of vision, responsibility and action on the part of government over the years—not now, but over the years—has led to the crisis in which the country now finds itself.

Some provincial governments, such as Saskatchewan and Alberta, provided rolling stock in order to keep the grain moving. In all fairness, the federal government also provided some rolling stock.

It was not until 1980, when the Honourable Don Mazankowski became Minister of Transport, that that situation was helped by the creation of the Grain Transportation Authority, which allocates rail cars carrying grain along prairie railways each day.

On February 1, 1982, the then Minister of Transport, Jean-Luc Pepin, appointed Dr. Gilson to examine the situation. Dr. Gilson identified railway losses and recommended an annual Crow benefit of over $600 million, 81 per cent of which was to be paid to the producer by 1989-1990 so as to end distortion and promote agricultural diversification. The Gilson report was not universally accepted, but the government adopted much of it. The principal divergence was a fifty-fifty split of the $651.6 million Crow benefit between the producers and the railroads. Before the legislation was ready, however, the wheat pools lobbied the Quebec MPs to come out against any split to the producers of that $651.6 million. It was argued that such a split would create competition for Quebec producers, especially the livestock producers. The Minister of Transport gave in to this pressure. At that point, whatever fragile consensus had existed in western Canada collapsed.

Bill C-155 was introduced in Parliament before the summer adjournment. Within several days of its introduction the Liberal government was threatening closure, despite the fact that this bill was publicly declared to be the third major initiative of the government after the Constitution and the National Energy Program.

The government responded predictably to the parliamentary uproar. It immediately put out the story that if the bill did not get through quickly, it might have to be withdrawn completely—and who knows when it would be considered again. There were rumours that if the bill were not passed by the end of June, that would be the end of it—there would be no rail improvement, no jobs, no infusion of the promised $16 billion of investment by the railways, and so on.

Honourable senators, Bill C-155 is far from perfect. It does not adequately address the farmers' ability to pay, international competition, disincentives to production, the method of payment, service guarantees and the lack of impact assessments on rural agricultural communities. Destroy western Canadian agriculture and the country itself will suffer.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Steuart speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to reply to two or three points raised by senators opposite. Senator Asselin has pointed out that there has been a huge increase in the production of western farmers over the past decade—an increase welcomed by all Canadians, I am sure. He questioned whether, in spite of that increase, the western farmers have really profited from it. As a westerner, I think it is fair to point out that, while there is no doubt that western farmers have had a great lobby in Ottawa over the years—one perhaps out of all proportion to their number—they have indeed profited considerably from the increase in production. I agree that farmers in the west have had their ups and downs, but I think that if we were to tour western Canada we would find that most established western farmers have operated prosperous businesses over the last few years. They have had their difficulties, but they have indeed profited.

Those in difficulty are the young, new farmers, who, when they bought their land and machinery at high prices, faced high interest rates. Without a doubt, they are facing a great many difficulties.

I realize that they are not alone in this regard. Honourable senators no doubt recognize that a great many other young men and women who have gone into business over the last 10 years have faced the same difficulties. I simply wanted to go on record as saying that the western farmers, in general, have prospered over the last 10 or 20 years.

Honourable senators, there has always been talk about the increased costs facing farmers under Bill C-155. There is no doubt that farmers will face an increase in freight costs. However, one thing that has been overlooked is the 10 per cent ceiling on the rate the farmer will pay under the provisions of Bill C-155. This will mean that, if the rate increases five times, as is predicted—in which case the farmer will pay something like $27 per tonne or roughly $1.15 per bushel—the price of grain will have had to more than double. The price of grain at the present time is under $6 per bushel. If the rate were to increase five times, the price of grain would have to be something over $10 or $11 per bushel.

Senator Asselin: That would be difficult in terms of the competition.

Senator Steuart: I am sorry, I do not understand.

Senator Asselin: That would be difficult in terms of the competition with other countries.

Senator Steuart: I agree that our farmers are dependent upon world prices; of course our farmers cannot control world prices. However, the only way that the farmers would ever pay five times the Crow rate to move their grain to market would be if the world price of grain more than doubled. That is a fact; that is in the bill. If that should happen, while their costs would rise sharply, their income would also rise sharply. I believe that most farmers would be happy to pay $1 per bushel per shipment of grain, if they were paid $11 per bushel for the final product. I think that we must keep these things in mind.

I think it well to remember that the alternative to paying higher freight rates is an ever-increasing difficulty to move grain to the market place. Something must be done to improve the rail transportation system and the port facilities. It would not benefit farmers a great deal to hold the freight rate at 23 cents a bushel—the present Crow rate—if, as happened back in the 1970s, the farmers could not ship their grain. That would only increase their on-farm storage and their interest costs.

As to whether western grain prices influence what the eastern farmers—primarily, Quebec farmers—pay for feed grain, I am afraid that there is such an influence. In this last year, the price of feed grain was controlled by the price of corn coming out of Chicago. This year, however, the price of corn is extremely high because of the drought in the western United States, so feed grain prices will also be very high. Because of the Crow rate and because of the feed grain assistance, the costs to eastern farmers—especially Quebec farmers—are kept artificially low. I only mention "especially Quebec farmers" because they buy more feed grain than Ontario farmers do. Ontario farmers are now growing more of their own corn.

Quite frankly, I think the Quebec farmers were misguided in the view that, if part or all of the money were paid to the farmer rather than to the railroad, western cattlemen would be in a favoured position compared to eastern cattlemen. I do not agree with that view. Perhaps the opposition to the method of payment was based upon false information, which came, in the first place, from the Government of Quebec. When the review system examines this point, I hope that those farmers will see that they objected wrongly, and I hope that they, along with many other groups, will recognize that it is in the best interests of the whole of Canada—not only of the western farmers—to take a serious look at the method of payment.

The method of payment, as I stated, will be examined by the review committee. There are really two review committees. One will commence next April and will go to the following April. It will really set the stage for the longer range review committee that will report three years after the bill is passed. To say that it is a bit of a sham is something with which I cannot agree. They will look into a broad range of problems and questions raised as a result of Bill C-155. A major one, of course, will be the method of payment. The honourable senator is right in saying that the method of payment recommended by Snavely was 80-20, namely, 80 to the farmers and 20 to the railroad. The Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin came in with 50-50, but the Quebec farmers, the Quebec caucus, took a strong stand against that.

I would point out that they were joined, from the beginning, by the largest grain growing farm organization in western Canada. The Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba wheat pools together represent far more grain farmers than any other organization in western Canada, and from Day One, for their own reasons, good or bad, they were strongly opposed to paying the money to the farmers. They said, "This is a transportation subsidy and it should be made to the transportation companies and not to the farmers." They also have other reasons for opposing it. So we had the largest grain organization in the west joining with the Quebec farmers to make a stand against it.

The rest of the opposition was split. Cattlemen from Alberta and Saskatchewan were split on this question. When the committee visited Alberta, the main issue there was the payment, and most of those who attended the committee hearings wanted the payment made, all or part, to the farmers, and either not at all to the railroads or only part to the railroads. When the committee reached Saskatchewan, where 60 per cent of our grain is produced, that was not the major question. Most of those who attended the hearings in that province said that the money should be paid to the railroads. Their main question was whether the farmers could afford to pay any increase.

I do not believe that the review committee is a sham, or that it would cause an uproar, which appears to be the feeling of those on the other side of the house. Let's face it, the debate in which we are now engaged is a wrenching experience for prairie farmers and for western Canada generally. We are in the process of changing one of this country's basic props, one of the only subsidies given to western farmers, something that has been part of our heritage. In my view, it is quite amazing, and says a great deal for the broadmindedness and outlook of most western farm organizations, that they were prepared to sit down and agreed to some changes.

I doubt whether there is any group in the west that likes all of the provisions contained in Bill C-155. However, the fact that they were ready to sit down and consider some changes speaks volumes for their outlook and reasonable approach to this whole question.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: But to say that if three years from now the review committee recommends a change, such as in the method of payment, it would result in a debate similar to that which we are now having, I just do not believe is accurate. What we are doing now is quite basic, and to fine tune the legislation three years from now, no matter which government is in power, will not, in my view, produce as many problems or the same type of debate as we have so far experienced.

As to the suggestion of putting a freeze on the bill, I agree with Senator Balfour that the suggestion by the Conservatives in the other place is merely to say: "Put the Crow bill through, pay the railroads the full subsidy and let them get on with the job of improving the transportation system. Spend the $16.5 billion over the next eight nine or ten years, but don't raise the rates to the farmers. Keep the Crow rate at $5 per tonne or 23 cents per bushel." In my view, that is a cop-out. If I were a Tory and I honestly felt that my party would be the government after the next election, I would be double damned if I would want this problem dumped into my lap, to have to suddenly face farmers three years from now and say, "Well, we got rid of those Liberals, but now we are going to raise the freight rate, double, triple, or four or five times." I do not believe that honourable senators really want that or are really serious about it.

On the other side of the coin, if, in fact, honourable senators on the other side of the house say to the railroads, "We are going to have to suspend these extra payments," I am not sure that the railroads or their investors will be prepared to invest the billions of dollars necessary to upgrade the railroads knowing that three years from now they will again have to face a lengthy debate, or that the government of the day will be prepared to pay $1 billion per year—or perhaps by that time well over $1 billion—in annual subsidies to the railroads. I am not sure that investors would take that chance.

Frankly, I do not believe that this amendment is any more than an effort to say, "Look, we are not really going to stand in your way. We know there is a great deal in this bill that should be passed, but we have found some way to dump it squarely on the back of the government and to say, 'Look what good fellows we are. We say pass the bill, get on with the job of improving the railroad system but do not charge the farmers' rates." I do not think it is practical and I do not think that those on the other side of the house really believe in it themselves.

Honourable senators, I do not believe there is much more that I wish to say. I look forward to having this bill considered in committee and hearing an explanation of the amendments by the minister and his officials. I look forward also to any changes that may be proposed in committee, because the bill that was considered during the prestudy stage is in fact a far different bill in many ways from the present one. I look forward to a clause-by-clause study of the bill in committee.

Senator Bielish: Honourable senators, I cannot help but read into the record—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I must point out to the honourable senator that debate on second reading of the bill is now closed.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): If the honourable senator wishes to provide further information, she is permitted under our rules to do so.

Senator Frith: Perhaps she could put it in the form of a question.

Senator Bielish: Senator Steuart, in his closing remarks, said that the major farm organizations supported the bill. However, it is my understanding that the National Farmers Union, a major farm organization in Canada—certainly in Saskatchewan—states that:

> Bill C-155 represents an historical watershed for the massive reorganization and reallocation of economic and human resources in this country. While enriching a few major stakeholders, it will do so at the expense of thousands of farmers to whom it represents, a swindle of massive proportions.
> Bill C-155 is unquestionably a corporate welfare bill and must die on the order paper.

Does the honourable senator agree that this is one major organization that does not support the bill?

Senator Steuart: In reply to the honourable senator, I said that major farm organizations concerned with grain, namely, the wheat pools, agreed to payment to the railroads and reluctantly to changes to the Crow rate. I repeat that they agreed to the changes reluctantly. I cannot agree with the honourable senator that the National Farmers Union is a major farm organization in western Canada. It is not a major farm organization. The National Farmers Union, in comparison with the prairie wheat pools of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, represents less than 10 per cent of western grain farmers. I agree that the union opposed the bill totally from Day One, but I do not agree that it is, in fact, a major farm organization.

Senator Bielish: I have a supplementary question. What about the United Grain Growers, who backed off?

● (1550)

Senator Steuart: The United Grain Growers is a major farm organization, though it is not as large as any of the wheat pools. It reluctantly agreed to changes in the Crow and came out very strongly, saying that it wanted to see part or all of the payments made to the farmers rather than to the railways.

Just for the record, if this bill passes in its present form, my personal wish is that when the review takes place in three years the minister or government responsible will give serious consideration to paying part or all of the subsidy to the farmers, because I believe that that is the best way.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I am puzzled by the subsidy arrangements. As I understand from what Senator Steuart and Senator Asselin have said, the Canadian wheat growers principal subsidy is the transportation subsidy or, in other words, the statutory Crow rate. Will this change in the freight rates affect the competitive advantage of Canadian grain exporters over such competitors as the United States and the European Common Market?

Senator Steuart: There is no question that the figures put on record by various farm organizations indicate that the subsidies given to grain farmers in other countries are much higher than those historically given by all Canadian governments, past and present, to western farmers. I think that is probably true. Certainly, the European Common Market subsidizes its farmers at a much higher rate than we do ours in Canada.

I think it should be pointed out that the subsidy given through the Crow rate, which will be $658 million per year, is a very large subsidy and will continue to increase. It may not be as high as the subsidy given by other countries to their farmers, but it is not the only subsidy. For example, there is the Grain Stabilization Program. This is the system in which the Government of Canada puts into a pot $2 for every $1 the farmer puts in, and the money is paid out to the farmer when his cash income drops below a certain average. We are hoping to see the turnover in this program reduced from five years to three years. So there are other smaller subsidies, but the main subsidy is the Crow.

I do not think that the Government of Canada could afford to match the subsidies given to farmers by the European Common Market. As to the subsidy in the United States, it is my understanding that it tends to go up and down. Over the past couple of years the subsidy there has been fairly high. However, I do not know of any program on the horizon that will compensate farmers for their added costs in the movement of grain.

On the other hand, we have a better transportation system, and there is the opportunity for the farmer to take advantage of spot prices because he will be able to move his grain more efficiently. With the improved transportation system, storage costs on the farm should be reduced.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. D.G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, with regard to this bill, I have made arrangements for the committee to meet this evening at 7.30 in Room 256-S, tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock, when the minister will be present, and tomorrow evening at 7.30, if necessary.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Who will be present at the meeting this evening?

Senator Langlois: Officials from the department.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, November 17, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 17, 1983

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

LATVIA

SIXTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, for centuries, Canada has been a haven for refugees from many parts of the world who were forced to flee from persecution and oppression. The first refugees to come to this country were the victims of the excesses of the American Revolution—the United Empire Loyalists—whose bicentennial is being celebrated now in Ontario and other provinces. Canada has admitted refugees in large numbers from Asia, Africa, the Middle East, the Caribbean, South America and hundreds of thousands from the Soviet Union and its subjugated satellite countries. Among the peoples of Eastern Europe who arrived after World War II were the Latvians, together with the Estonians and Lithuanians, known as the Baltic nations.

I think that it is fitting that we should note that tomorrow, November 18, marks the sixty-fifth anniversary of the proclamation of independence of Latvia. The two other Baltic nations, Lithuania and Estonia, proclaimed their independence and established democratic republics respectively on February 16 and February 24, 1918, following the example of Ukraine, which had established its independence and statehood on January 22, 1918. These republics emerged after the downfall of the Russian Tsarist monarchy and empire. The Ukrainian National Republic was not able to survive because it was overrun and conquered by the Russian Communist armies and incorporated as a Soviet "republic" into the U.S.S.R.

The Baltic states were given de jure recognition by the western powers in 1918 and by the Soviet Union in 1920. In 1921, they were admitted to the League of Nations. In 1922, the United States also gave the Baltic states de jure recognition. The three states, including Latvia, adopted advanced democratic constitutions. Their cultures flourished freely and they developed prosperous economies. The people were happy, living in peace and harmony with their neighbours.

World War II changed the fate of Latvia, her Baltic neighbours and the countries of Central and Southern Europe, which were occupied by the Soviet Red Army. Although the Soviet Union had recognized the independence and sovereignty of these states previously, this did not stop the Russian Communist regime from conquering these states. Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania were annexed and incorporated as "soviet republics" in June, 1940. The leaders were imprisoned; many were killed and thousands of people were persecuted with brutality and deported to Siberia. Freedom and democracy were supressed. The Soviet system was imposed as well as the Russification of the people.

At the end of World War II, hundreds of thousands of Latvians, Estonians and Lithuanians were able to escape from Soviet terror. As refugees, they settled in the countries of Western Europe, but the largest numbers were admitted to the United States and Canada. Here they have proved to be conscientious, hard-working, constructive and loyal citizens. Their concern for the fate of their homelands and their concern for freedom and democracy are shared by the leaders and people of their adopted countries.

On the occasion of the sixty-fifth anniversary of Latvia's independence, let us salute these Canadian citizens who have integrated into all aspects of Canadian life and have made valuable contributions towards our progress in all fields of endeavour. Parliamentarians now know and appreciate them better because of the eleven Baltic Evenings on Parliament Hill, which have been annually sponsored by a joint parliamentary committee representing all parties and both chambers.

I should like to congratulate the Canadian citizens of Latvian ancestry for their devotion to freedom and democracy and pay tribute to them for their many-sided contributions to their adopted land. I believe that honourable senators will join with me in this tribute and in extending our very best wishes to them for the realization of the freedom of Latvia. The Latvians are happy to live and work in full freedom, and Canada is a better country for having accepted these people who have enriched our lives.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Jack Marshall, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

Thursday November 17, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to which was referred Bill C-155, intituled: "An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof", has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Tuesday, November 15, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Your Committee, however, considers it important that the following observations be made:

Your Committee noted several drafting and typographical errors in the French and English texts of the Bill. These errors do not constitute an objection as such to the principle of the Bill. However, your Committee considers that it is most essential that great attention be given in drafting and printing future Bills.

Respectfully submitted,

LÉOPOLD LANGLOIS,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. D. G. Steuart, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORT APPROVING COMMITTEE BUDGET TABLED

Hon. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled its report approving the supplementary budget of the following committee:

Foreign Affairs, Subcommittee on National Defence.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I am seeking some information, although I appreciate that ministers are kept very busy by their ministerial responsibilities. Still, could the Leader of the Government tell us why, for quite some time now, we have not seen the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and Senator Austin who is not here very often? We thought that they would be here today because our colleagues have questions for them. Is there a reason for their absence?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thought I had advised the house—perhaps not directly but in some of the comments I made on Tuesday—that Senator Argue is quite ill with a severe case of influenza. He had intended to be present during all of the sittings this week, but he has been hospitalized in Regina. I think he went into hospital either last Sunday or Monday, and it will probably be several days before he is released.

Senator Austin attended the last sitting of the Senate. Today he is in Vancouver dealing with an important matter of government business respecting the CDIC. That is the reason he is not present today.

Senator Asselin: I feel very sorry about Senator Argue's illness. I wish him a prompt recovery and request that the Leader of the Government tell him that he is missed in the Senate.

It is my hope that the questions which were supposed to be put to Senator Austin will be referred to the Leader of the Government in order that answers can be given as soon as possible.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can give the undertaking to take such questions as notice. One never knows, sometimes I even have the answers.

Senator Asselin: Surprisingly!

Senator Olson: In the event that I do not have the answers today, however, I will ensure that the questions are communicated immediately to Senator Austin's office staff.

Honourable senators, I spoke to Senator Argue on the telephone yesterday. I do not think that he will be able to take his place in the house next week, so we will make some arrangements, in co-operation with his office, to respond to questions that may be asked of him during the time that he is ill.

PARLIAMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government tell us when the new Speech from the Throne will be made in Parliament? Does he know when the next session will begin? What is the intention of the government in terms of proceeding with legislation, not only in the House of Commons but also in the Senate?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Asselin has just asked a question that is under active consideration right now. Perhaps within hours, I may be able to indicate when the government hopes that this new Speech from the Throne, indicating the beginning of a new session, will be made.

Regarding the legislation that is to be dealt with, there is the matter of the fisheries bill, Bill C-170, which is extremely important to the people of the region involved in that industry. We hope to receive that bill fairly quickly. Another piece of legislation to which some importance is attached is that dealing with amendments to the Income Tax Act. Although that bill does not have to be passed this week or next week, we do have to consider the problem we encountered last year, namely, that now is the time for printing forms so that taxpayers all across the country can have them available. In many cases, taxpayers will get refunds, which is an important factor. To have them ready early in January is a high priority with the government. It would assist me and my colleagues a great deal if the Leader of the Opposition could give his support to having the bill passed in time for the forms to be printed and mailed, to enable those who expect refunds—and there are hundreds of thousands of such people—to receive them. That is why this is particularly important.

The other matter that requires attention before we adjourn or prorogue—it may be a combination of those two—is the time required for the allocation of supply. I understand that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has now completed its consideration of supplementary estimates (A) and (B) and, therefore, I do not anticipate any difficulty. However, I believe that several more opposition days are obligatory before those estimates can be passed. Therefore, it may be the latter part of next week, or even shortly thereafter, before all of those matters can be dealt with. We could then adjourn and have the Speech from the Throne fairly soon afterwards.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government is asking for our co-operation in order to have those bills passed by the Senate. As usual, we on this side of the house cannot commit ourselves until we have seen the implications of those bills. We shall, as usual, co-operate with the government in getting those bills passed, but we must study them before making any decision, since we have to fulfil our sovereign mandate.

DISARMAMENT

THE PRIME MINISTER'S INITIATIVES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): In another context, it has been reported that the Prime Minister is leaving today on another peace mission. Our party would like to wish him well on his undertaking. However, we are somewhat concerned about the attitude of the United States towards this peace mission. The American Under Secretary of State visited Canada recently and met the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs. Apparently, they talked about this peace mission. It would seem that the Americans were not overly enthusiastic about the mission of our Prime Minister. Can the Leader of the Government tell us about it and give us a brief report on this recent visit?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in response to the Acting Leader of the Opposition, we on this side of the house are indeed happy to receive the best wishes of his party for the success of the Prime Minister's overseas visit last week and also for his current visit to the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference in New Delhi. The opposition's good wishes for that undertaking are appreciated.

The United States government has had discussions with our Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I have not yet received a report on the results of those discussions, although I can say that the United States has indicated a cautious—perhaps "approval" is not the right word—wish that the initiatives of the Prime Minister may be successful. But for reasons that they have expressed, they would like to see the results of some other aspects because, of course, other people are involved in the determination of whether there will be some positive steps forward. They want to know what the Prime Minister's initiative involves. Therefore, I think it is understandable that everybody is a bit cautious at this point in time. I shall refer the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether he can give us a more precise indication of the results of the consultations that he had with the Under Secretary of State of the United States.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: On a supplementary, after his visit to the Commonwealth countries, does the Prime Minister plan a meeting with the President of the United States or the Chairman of the U.S.S.R., before Christmas, to discuss his peace mission?

[English]

Senator Olson: I do not believe that a specific date has been set for either of the suggested meetings at this point in time.

SOLICITOR GENERAL

COMPENSATION FOR WRONGFUL IMPRISONMENT OF DONALD MARSHALL

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can he advise this chamber whether or not any consideration is being given, or has been given, by the government to the provision of compensation to Donald Marshall, who was wrongfully convicted of first degree murder and who spent 11 years of his life in Dorchester Penitentiary? I realize that, no matter what compensation this man may receive, it will not make up for those 11 years of imprisonment for a crime he did not commit.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I shall ask the Solicitor General to provide a reply to the question, particularly as to whether any consideration has been given, or is being given, to the matter.

Senator Muir: Donald Marshall, a Micmac Indian, faces a legal bill of $82,000. Would the leader ask of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Honourable John Munro, who was quoted as saying that he would try his damnedest to get the department to cover the legal expenses, whether he has had any success in having those legal bills paid by the department?

Senator Olson: I shall take that question as notice as well.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: While the Leader of the Government is making inquiries with respect to the questions asked by Senator Muir, would he seek a reply to the question I raised in May with respect to the 12 Canadians who were denied their freedom by a decision of the National Parole Board?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I shall remind the minister that that question has been put to him, and try to obtain an answer as soon as possible.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY—STATUS OF FUNDING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On December 21, 1982, I asked a question concerning federal involvement in the funding of post-secondary education.

On January 31, 1983, the Leader of the Government in the Senate provided me with an elaborate answer. That answer concluded on the following paragraph, with reference to the discussions then being held between the Secretary of State and the ministers involved at the provincial level. The Leader of the Government answered, or rather stated that:

> The Government is optimistic that out of these discussions can come, in the very near future, new arrangements for post-secondary support . . .

Here is my question: What is the status of the discussions referred to by the Leader of the Government almost a year ago? Have these discussions led to new arrangements, and, if so, what are they?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I could send a request for an update to both the Minister of Finance and the responsible minister of state. I will try and have that update as soon as possible, perhaps even next week. I repeat, it may only be an update since I am not sure that there have been any agreements. In fact, I believe there was a lack of agreement. The federal government had, of course, stated its intention with respect to an adjustment in the payments.

Senator Tremblay: I would just like to make a comment, honourable senators. The answer I received last January from the Leader of the Government painted a very clear picture of the situation. I hope that his answer to today's question will provide us with all information with respect to those discussions.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Tremblay's remark re-affirms something which we on this side try to do all the time, that is, give complete and factual answers to questions which are put in a way that may be answered completely and factually.

SASKATCHEWAN

WATER SUPPLY TO REGINA AND MOOSE JAW

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, in the sentiment just expressed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I should like to ask him if he would undertake to bring forward an up-to-date report to the Senate concerning the study which was undertaken by the PFRA, as announced by Senator Argue last July, concerning the fresh water supply problem existing with respect to the cities of Moose Jaw and Regina. At that time Sentor Argue said that as an alternative to a pipeline system an open canal system was being examined which would also have the effect of supplying additional fresh water to other areas of southern Saskatchewan. Would the Leader of the Government undertake to update us with respect to the progress of the PFRA in that connection?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I will indeed, Senator Balfour. I am not sure whether or not the study has been completed. If it has been completed I will attempt to obtain it for presentation to senators as soon as possible. If the report has not been completed, then perhaps I will be able to obtain an interim report with respect to this situation.

PETRO-CANADA

OFFICE ACCOMMODATION IN CALGARY

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the absence of Senator Austin. I realize he will have to take the question as notice. My question is: Is it correct that Petro-Canada is, and has for some time, been paying substantial amounts of money in rent for vacant office space in downtown Calgary? If this is the case can the Leader of the Government undertake to ascertain the amount of rents so paid and also what the ongoing exposure of Petro-Canada is in this regard?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Yes, honourable senators, I can do that.

I would like to respond now to Senator Balfour by saying that Petro-Canada is not alone in the situation which he outlines. There are several million square feet of vacant office space in downtown Calgary at this point in time. I believe the vacancy rate there is somewhere around 20 to 22 per cent. This is the consequence of an extremely rapid expansion of office space construction in that city which has been ongoing for the past four or five years. I shall attempt to obtain those figures as quickly as I can, but it is not a situation that is confined to any one company.

Senator Balfour: It is not my intention to precipitate a debate with my honourable friend, but I would point out that an over-supply of office space is normally a problem of the owner of the office space; that is to say, the landlord. It is not ordinarily a problem of the tenant, unless the tenant has so mismanaged its affairs that it has over-committed itself with respect to the space that it requires. In this case, I have reason tc believe that there has been a substantial over-commitment on the part of Petro-Canada with respect to leased space and, if this should be the case, I am sure my honourable friend would agree that this is not a question of over-building, but mismanagement.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend indicated that he did not wish to get into a debate, and then he proceeded to do just that.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): It is an excellent procedure.

Senator Olson: It is one that he has learned well from his deputy leader; I understand that. I, too, do not wish to get into a debate. I simply wanted to indicate to my honourable friend that this is not an unusual problem for either owners or renters of downtown office space in Calgary, Edmonton or several other cities. It is now rather a common thing for tenants to have a commitment for a somewhat longer term than they require, as a result of some changes in the level of economic activity.

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF VANCOUVER ISLAND PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have a question which I would have preferred to direct to Senator Austin. However, he is not here this afternoon, and I therefore take advantage of the undertaking of the Leader of the Government that he will endeavour to secure answers on behalf of Senator Austin and several other ministers who are not present.

In the budget prior to the last one, the government committed itself to assist in the construction of a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. If anyone is interested in knowing why a humble senator from Nova Scotia is asking questions about something that is taking place on Vancouver Island, it is simply because we are all Canadians and we are just as concerned with the problems on the far side of the country as we are with those on our own doorstep. Also, there are no representatives from British Columbia on this side of the chamber, and therefore I take it upon myself to ask a question about what is taking place in Vancouver.

Therefore, I point out that that commitment was made by the government, and my question is: Can the minister offer anything more precise as to the magnitude of the federal government's financial commitment to that pipeline?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not think we can be as specific as that at this time; the reason is very practical and precise, and that is that there are studies under way at the present time, including cost projections of two or perhaps three alternative ways of delivering gas to Vancouver Island.

Senator Donahoe: The minister who has just spoken is frequently on his feet, reading to us long, involved lists of what he calls mega-projects which he offers to us as examples of the way in which we are making progress in this country. Here we are talking about a very expensive project, and we find that we are unable to get little more than an assurance that, if we wait patiently, in the course of time we shall be told what is going to happen. Of course, we know that; we know that we can all read newspapers as well as anyone else but we had thought—perhaps mistakenly—that this body, the Senate of Canada, was devised by those who framed the system of government of this country as a means whereby information could be elicited. After four or five years' experience in the chamber one comes to feel that perhaps that is an object that has not been accomplished; nevertheless, it was the original intention.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he can give us any indication of when that pipeline is likely to proceed, and when the government will be precise in identifying its commitment to the project.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the response I gave before answered that question completely. However, in the event that Senator Donahoe did not understand that answer—and I think some of his other comments indicate that that is the problem once in a while—the fact of the matter is that this government has long followed the policy of trying to do things in concert with the views and the desires of the people in the area. I told him a few minutes ago that there is more than one project under consideration now and, surely, any responsible federal government would wait until the assessment is done so that both the best and perhaps the most economical type of delivery system can be endorsed and sponsored financially.

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE—PROJECTED COMPLETION DATE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have a further question on a related topic, except that I am moving from one side of the country to the other. I am now moving back to my native province of Nova Scotia. In that province we also were interested in a gas pipeline. It was called the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes Pipeline. I should like some clarification on that subject.

I have made inquiries on numerous occasions and have received pacifying answers of one kind or another, but little or no information. I am led to believe, if I can believe what I read in the press, that the likelihood of this pipeline ever going across my native province and ever proceeding farther than the border of Quebec is rather remote. I suspect that if it gets to Quebec, that is as far as it will get.

I should like clarification of whether or not the government is standing by the commitment it made in its October 1980 budget, when it said that we would have a gas pipeline into Halifax by 1986.

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I answered that question, I believe, about 15 months ago—

Senator Donahoe: That was a long time ago.

Senator Olson: —and the answer is just as valid today as it was then. Since the announcement was made by the Government of Canada about being ready and willing to ensure that all parts of Canada have access to natural gas through a major pipeline system, there have been major new discoveries of natural gas offshore of Nova Scotia.

It is our understanding that the people of that province and, particularly the government, are interested in building a pipeline that may pick up gas offshore and supply the area that was in question, and that the gas would move from east to west in that line.

Therefore, I have to tell Senator Donahoe again that I do not believe that the majority of the people in that area would particularly appreciate building a gas pipeline now where the financial commitments of the gas contracts would be necessary to finance that pipeline where there would be a flow from west to east. That is very simple.

Senator Donahoe: I just hope it will come in my lifetime.

Senator Olson: It depends on how long you live.

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF CERTAIN CBC TELEVISION STATIONS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding a paper that was submitted—after the Hébert-Applebaum committee had submitted its report—by the Minister of Communications, the Honourable Francis Fox. That paper was circulated by Mr. Fox, although I am not sure that it was prepared by him. It is my understanding that one possible cut listed in that paper would involve the closing of half a dozen CBC television stations in communities such as Sydney, Nova Scotia; Windsor, Ontario; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; and Prince George, British Columbia.

I was wondering if the minister—I will wait until Senator Frith gives him the answer.

Hon. D.G. Steuart: You don't even have a question yet.

Senator Muir: I was wondering if the minister could check into this matter and ascertain whether or not there is anything to this so-called secret report written by a noted columnist. I hope that there is not, because we in Sydney, Nova Scotia, along with the people in those other areas I have mentioned, would still like to have the television stations.

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Muir knows better than I that it is not proper to give an undertaking either to confirm or to deny press speculation, no matter how eminent the writer may be. I will take the substance of his question as if he had asked it without that reference and will endeavour to ascertain whether or not there is anything to it.

Senator Muir: All right, I will take responsibility for it. Will the Leader of the Government find out what the story is on the question I have just posed to him—coming from me and not from a newspaper columnist—on this 70-page report prepared or, at least, circulated by the Minister of Communications? This paper was submitted to cabinet ministers. If the minister is not aware of it, I am surprised because he was at one time a great heavy in the cabinet. I am sure that before Mr. Fox would have submitted it he would have said "Well, now, Bud, what do you think of this? Do you think that it will be all right if I submit this to cabinet?"

The Leader of the Government must know something about it, and I am surprised that he is trying to slough it off by saying that it is just a newspaper report. I realize that he and I dealt with this matter many times over the years in the other place. Of course, he was not in government then, but if he would be kind enough and gentle enough to ascertain whether or not there is anything to these suggestions, I would appreciate it.

Senator Olson: I have already answered that question, but I will do it a little more gently this time by taking it as notice.

JUSTICE

WRONGFUL IMPRISONMENT—CIVIL LIABILITY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question arising out of a question asked earlier.

If the Leader of the Government is pursuing answers to questions raised by Senator Muir and Senator Hastings with respect to the Marshall case in Nova Scotia, I am wondering if there is either a policy or a jurisdictional question when a person is convicted, for example, by a federally appointed judge under a federal law but in a provincially administered court room, which, I take it, is precisely what would have happened in that Nova Scotia case. Where does liability lie?

Senator Frith is looking at me with a questioning look.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Liability for what?

Senator Nurgitz: Liability for anything.

Senator Frith: Do you mean civil liability?

Senator Nurgitz: Civil liability, if any, which would lie in a situation where a person is sentenced by a federally appointed judge under a federal law in a provincially administered court room. My understanding is that the Minister of Justice has indicated that the federal government is not willing to compensate. At least, I remember reading that recently.

Hon. Jack Marshall: That is right.

Senator Nurgitz: The other question I would like to ask is whether or not there is a legal opinion on the subject. I am not asking the leader for the opinion, but I am asking him if there is such a document. Is there a legal opinion? Where liability lies is what I want to know.

• (1440)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the question of whether there is in existence a legal opinion will be included as part of my reference.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, that raises another supplementary question, because the Minister of Justice has stated that the federal government is not responsible, but that the provincial government is.

The question I should like to ask the honourable gentleman is: How long does a man like Donald Marshall have to wait while all the legal beagles in the provincial and federal Departments of Justice decide whether he is to receive any compensation for this terrible miscarriage of justice?

I am not a lawyer and I do not know whether this has ever happened in Canada before. However, I believe that, in my lifetime, this is the only instance of a man being charged, convicted and sentenced to 11 years for a murder he did not commit.

This man is now faced with a $82,000 legal bill. How long will he have to wait while provincial and federal lawyers debate this question? Surely, he has been through enough hell already. I want to know what can be done to help him.

Senator Olson: I have already taken that question as notice. Obviously, I cannot predict how long it will take.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I am not too interested in the question of a legal precedent in connection with the case of Donald Marshall. Of course, some would have had him at the end of a rope and consigned to eternity 11 years ago had they had their way in the administration of justice.

I am concerned with the case of 11 Canadians who were brutally denied their right to freedom, as provided by the Parliament of Canada, by a decision of the National Parole Board supported by the Solicitor General.

Does the Leader of the Government not believe that, after the great speeches made in this chamber and in the other place with respect to linguistic rights in Manitoba, there is a moral right for an ex gratia payment to these 11 Canadian citizens who were denied their rights by this simple decision of the National Parole Board, which was very quickly—in about 14 minutes—set aside by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Is there not a moral responsibility on the part of this government, which advocates the rights of the individual, to make at least an ex gratia payment to these 11 Canadians?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have already given an undertaking to obtain a reply from the minister responsible for the administration of this case.

Concerning the substantive part of the question, which requires me to give an opinion on whether there is a moral right, I will wait until I receive a reply from the minister directly responsible before I express an opinion.

NEWFOUNDLAND

CORNER BROOK—RUMOURED CLOSING OF PAPER MILL

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which has to do with the threatened or rumoured closing of a paper mill in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, which will, if it happens, destroy the economy of half the province.

From his experience as Minister of State for Economic Development, is the Leader of the Government aware, or is the federal government aware, of any consultation between Bowater's and the federal government, or between the Province of Newfoundland, which is directly responsible, and the federal government regarding this impending closing?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I cannot be specific about that because I have not made inquiries. However, from my experience, I would think that there must have been a great deal of intense discussion about anything as important to a part of Canada as that particular situation envisages.

Senator Marshall: I realize that there are supposed to be ongoing sensitive negotiations concerning a prospective sale; however, we have to be prepared with contingency plans.

In the economic development perspective for Newfoundland prepared in May of 1983, the federal government ministers responsible were aware of the difficulties arising as a result of serious layoffs, the need for capital grants and the need to improve machinery, et cetera.

While we hope there may be a purchaser, would the Leader of the Government consult with either the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of State for Economic Development under the new MSERD program and report back to this chamber on what negotiations have taken place in the last months or weeks with regard to this threat which will hurt the economy so greatly?

Senator Olson: I will take the question as notice.

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF VANCOUVER ISLAND PIPELINE—ABERCROMBIE REPORT

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a very specific question regarding the proposed Vancouver Island gas pipeline. Could he find out for us if the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is, in fact, making a specific, technical and economic appraisal of the Vancouver Island pipeline proposals known as the Abercrombie Report?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe it is. Of course, the responsibility for approving pipelines in British Columbia does not necessarily lie with the federal government. In fact, at the present time, B. C. Hydro has put together a proposal, and some other interested parties are working on different designs for that delivery system.

I will ask for a report.

Senator Bell: As a supplementary, I would point out that I believe this is one reason why our newly-constituted Natural Resources Committee should be meeting now and not waiting for a new session. The taxpayers of Canada will be asked to contribute to this natural gas pipeline whether it is needed or not. It would help if the Senate Natural Resources Committee could sit now to hear the proposals being put forward, before a lot of money is committed to something that is perhaps quite unnecessary.

TRANSPORT

AVIATION SAFETY—MONITORING PROCEDURES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, since we have just passed a bill establishing the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate that has to do with two air safety incidents.

The Gimli inquiry has indicated that a confusing and outdated form was used to tell the pilot of the Air Canada 767 how much fuel his aircraft carried. I am sure the Leader of the Government is aware of the difficulties which occurred in that incident.

Hon. Martial Asselin: He was not aboard.

Senator Marshall: Another incident occurred a couple of days ago, when damaged combustion blades on an Air Canada DC-7 caused an engine to fail on take-off from Toronto International Airport.

I think it important that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board should be independent; it should monitor the situation very carefully and not hide the results of these inquiries. One of the objectives of the establishment of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board was to provide information to the public.

Would the Leader of the Government contact the Minister of Transport and ask him what the new Canadian Aviation Safety Board is doing to ensure that the public will know what is going on, if, indeed, the board is monitoring the situation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice.

• (1450)

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK—LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a question for either the Leader of the Government or the Deputy Leader of the Government. I believe Senator Frith responded to a question asked by Senator Sherwood a little over two weeks ago. Senator Sherwood asked the deputy leader: What new adjustment programs is the government about to put into effect concerning the livestock industry in New Brunswick?

I wonder whether the Leader or the Deputy Leader of the Government has an answer to that question. I believe Senator Frith said he would check into it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I took that question as notice because Senator Sherwood asked me to deal with it in the absence of Senator Argue. That afternoon I called Senator Argue to ask him whether he would either answer the question himself or give me the information to do so, and he subsequently became ill. He did not indicate it would be difficult for him to get the answer, but I just do not have it because of his illness. I am sure that he will answer the question when he returns to the chamber.

Senator Muir: I thank the deputy leader. To elaborate a little further, it would seem that the Crow legislation will be disposed of shortly. In May of 1983, the Minister of State for Economic Development advised the government that:

> New Brunswick's livestock industry may well need to undergo major adjustments, if the resolution of the Crow rate and adjustments to feed grain policy result in altering the present economics of livestock production in favour of the western provinces.

Is the Leader of the Government able to comment upon that statement or advise this chamber of any adjustment programs the government has in the wings for the New Brunswick livestock industry as soon as the Crow legislation might pass?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take notice of that question and obtain a precise answer from the minister responsible for the program.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. It appears that we have been asking questions since shortly after 2 o'clock this afternoon and that no answers have been given. All of the questions are taken as notice. I am willing to give notice two days before a question is put if, in that way, we get answers to them. However, it seems futile to ask questions to which we do not receive answers for three or four weeks.

An Hon. Senator: Don't ask questions.

Senator Marshall: Somebody has now suggested that we should not ask questions. Why, then, are we here? Honourable senators, Bill C- 152 has been passed. That bill was supposed to create positions for more parliamentary secretaries. Perhaps that is not such a bad idea. Perhaps we should have a couple of them over here so that they could supply answers to questions.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It was worth a try, but the Tories insisted that that provision be taken out of the bill.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Marshall's comments are inappropriate. Almost every question that has been asked in this session has been answered. As a matter of fact, today I have only one delayed answer. I am not saying that there are no more delayed answers to be given, but I would suggest that, at this time, less than 5 per cent of the questions that have been asked over the last six weeks have not been replied to. I think that Senator Marshall's comments are unfair.

Perhaps Senator Marshall will recall that the reason why the questions asked today were not answered is that they were of a technical nature, and any answer would obviously have to be checked. I know that Senator Marshall's respect for completely accurate answers is so high that he would prefer that I take a little time rather than speculate on what the answer might be.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Marshall that it is extremely frustrating to have answers to questions delayed. The Leader of the Government has stated that sometimes he does not have a response at the moment the question is asked. If he only realized that we are being gentle with him because we know that he has certain limitations which make it difficult for him to have all of the answers. The Leader of the Government in the Senate is a member of important committees of the cabinet, yet he seems to be so very cautious. He seems to be afraid to say anything until he goes back to check with someone as to—the minister is not listening to me because he is being coached, again, by the Deputy Leader of the Government. Perhaps Senator Frith should be the minister—

Hon. William C. Doody: Hear, hear.

Senator Muir: —because he seems to be able to give good advice.

Honourable senators, one would think that the minister would have some answers without having to say, "I will walk across to the other side and come back with a written response; I will say what they have told me to say, not what I think should be said." I wonder whether it would be possible, under the rules, to have a member of the messenger staff, who are intelligent and good people, sit on the other side to take those questions and to do the job that the minister is doing at the moment.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, perhaps the real point of order would relate to the members of the opposition telling us how long they are going to spin out the clock. That is obviously what they are up to.

In response to the question, I do not think I need add anything to what I said a few moments ago. I think that Senator Muir has indicated something that we on this side have known for a long time; that is, that he does not know how to play on a team. Teamwork is involved here. The minister responsible for a particular department—not ministers responsible for other departments—answer questions relating to his department. That rule applies to this minister, as well.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, is there not some liaison between the minister and his colleagues? Do they not trust each other or tell each other anything?

I have something to say with regard to the other statement made by the minister. He suggested that somebody is spinning out the clock. I thought that an accusation of that nature was not to be made against any member of this chamber or of the other place.

Senator Olson: I was asking; I was not accusing.

Senator Muir: The minister was accusing members of this side of the chamber—members of the "Aggressive" Conservative Party—of trying to spin out the clock.

Senator Frith: Perhaps you could be a little more gentle about it.

Senator Muir: I would ask the deputy leader to speak a little louder. I cannot hear him because there are so many others talking at the moment, including his seat mate.

Honourable senators, I do not think that the idea should be put forward that anybody is spinning out the clock. The minister does not know what is in any other person's mind, and I do not think it is for him to suggest what it might be. For instance, when I raise a question about a man who has spent 11 years in Dorchester Penitentiary, having been sentenced unjustly by the courts of the land—a man who went through hell for 11 years—am I spinning out the clock and killing time in this chamber? Is the minister suggesting that?

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Not at that time, but now you are.

Senator Muir: I definitely am not.

Senator Robichaud: You are.

Senator Muir: I definitely am not. That remark is a reflection on Donald Marshall; it is a reflection on the Micmac people of my area, and I am not going to listen to it here. I was asking a straightforward, decent question regarding an individual who has suffered terribly. I wonder how Senator Robichaud would like to spend 11 years of his life in a penitentiary if he were not guilty? That is all I am asking. Whether a man be Scottish, French-Canadian, black, Métis or Indian, justice must apply. That is the point I was raising, and I am not going to be accused of spinning out the clock or of wasting time in this chamber.

Senator Robichaud: May I answer your question, please?

Senator Muir: Oh, by all means.

• (1500)

Senator Robichaud: The question was whether I would like to be incarcerated for 11 years for a crime that I did not commit. Of course, I would not like it. However, the honourable senator asked the question and was given an answer. At that time he was not wasting time, but for the past five or ten minutes he has definitely been wasting time. I will not refrain from saying that, and I have no remorse of conscience in saying it.

Senator Muir: On a point of order. That is merely a misguided opinion from an individual who got carried away. Someone once said that in politics one should take everything seriously except oneself. I would commend that to Senator Robichaud.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, perhaps we can come to order. Two points of order have been raised. Senators may ask questions, but there is nothing in our rules to compel ministers to answer. Therefore I cannot accept those points of order.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VACANCIES

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I do not wish to be accused of wasting the time of this chamber. Recently I raised questions concerning the membership of the Board of Directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and I received co-operation in obtaining the information. Of six members of the Board of Directors, only two are left, and for the operation of that corporation I believe they meet in the bathroom. Recently the corporation had a large deficit. His Honour the Speaker is familiar with that because he did excellent work in connection with the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act when in the other place. I repeat that the deficit was reported to be quite large. The Honourable Ed Lumley, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion reacted to the deficit with great dismay and consternation. I am not making light of it. However, if the minister compared that deficit with the deficits of Canadair and many others, it is piddling.

My question is: Does the Leader of the Government not consider that filling the vacancies on the Board of Directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation would assist Mr. Rankin, the President, and the other lonely member of the board in formulating policies which would be of future benefit to that corporation? Perhaps the Leader of the Government could say whether those vacancies are going to be filled shortly, and, if so, when.

I know that the Honourable Ed Lumley is concerned about the matter. I will make an effort to contact him, because he is a fine man and I would not want him to be in a position of saying "Let's kill the Cape Breton Development Corporation". I, for one, give the government full marks, full credit for creating the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which has done an extremely good job. Perhaps the Leader of the Government will address that question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question did receive a reply. The honourable senator is now asking me for an opinion as to whether the future of the Cape Breton Development Corporation would be enhanced by having those vancancies filled. I will refer that question to the minister responsible, and I am sure the honourable senator will understand why I have replied to that effect.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF POLAND CHOIR

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have the privilege of calling your attention to the presence in the gallery of members of the University Choir of the Catholic University of Poland. They are beginning their concert today with a visit to Parliament Hill, which includes a visit to our chamber.

I should like to extend to them our warmest greetings and best wishes for an interesting and successful tour of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: On behalf of the Official Opposition, I want to join Hon. Senator Haidasz in welcoming our visitors. I wish them a pleasant stay in Canada and the best of luck.

QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. It concerns questions asked in the Senate on November 14. I recognize that this matter should be raised as soon as possible, but I must point out that I was absent from the chamber until this week and did not have any opportunity of doing so.

On November 14 Senator Denis asked a question in connection with one I had asked concerning space rented by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in various parts of the country. I had my reasons for asking the question. I have no objection to the honourable senator asking the question and suggesting that it would involve too much time and be too expensive. I am sure he has every right to question my motives. I am pleased that he takes such an interest in the questions that I place on the order paper. He raised a similar point shortly after I arrived in the Senate about four or five years ago. Rather than question my motives, I would hope that he would ask about matters such as the $34 million that was wasted on Maislin Transport. I wonder why he does not ask about the $1.4 billion loss in connection with Canadair, or the $300 million loss in connection with de Havilland.

While on the subject of costs, I should also point out that I took the time to ascertain the operating budget of the Senate. I find that for the year 1982-83 the figure amounted to $14 million. The Senate sat 90 days and, at eight hours per day, 60 minutes per hour, the cost amounted to $330 per minute. Senator Denis and Senator Olson—

An Hon. Senator: And Senator Muir.

Senator Marshall: —and some other colleagues spent 15 minutes on November 14 discussing this matter. It cost the Senate $5,000 and I was not even present. So I thank honourable senators for thinking of me while I was in Newfoundland looking after regional interests.

Senator Olson said a few moments ago that all of the questions had been answered. I do not wish to be hard on him, because he has every right to say what he thinks. However, when he talks about being irresponsible in asking long questions that cost too much money, he knows full well that I have an 83-page question here which I agreed not to have on the record because of the cost involved. I took my copy and sent the information to those across the country who wanted to know how much each legal firm was getting from government business. Therefore I did my part. I did not ask that that answer be printed. I merely wanted information.

• (1510)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Rule 33 reads:

> When a matter or question directly concerning the privileges of the Senate, of any committee thereof, or of any senator, has arisen, a motion calling upon the Senate to take action thereon may be moved without notice—

Senator Marshall is perfectly in order in that regard. The rule continues:

> —and, until decided, shall, unless the debate be adjourned, suspend the consideration of other motions and of the Orders of the Day.

I am not suggesting that Senator Marshall does not have a motion, but he has not told us what it is that he is calling to our attention as a matter of privilege. A question of privilege, as the honourable senator knows, for he is more experienced than I as a parliamentarian, should deal with something that affects his ability to perform his functions as a senator. So perhaps Senator Marshall can tell us what his motion is and what action he wants us to take.

Senator Marshall: My rights as a senator are being stultified with regard to putting questions on the order paper. When I ask questions they are taken as notice and I do not receive an answer for two or three months, forcing me to remind everybody. When I put questions on the order paper, it is imputed that I have put them there for mischievous reasons.

Senator Frith: What action do you want us to take?

Senator Marshall: I want an apology. I should have been given the common courtesy of waiting until I had returned to the chamber so I could defend myself. I want an apology saying that I have the right to put questions on the order paper and to request information without it being imputed that it is an irresponsible act.

Senator Frith: We will pass that motion right now.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: We apologize.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): We will apologize, but whether or not it is reasonable is another matter.

Senator Marshall: I want to state my reasons, and I shall continue even if I have to stand here for the rest of the week. My whip, Senator Macdonald, is harsher than I am, but properly so, and he has suggested that since the Leader of the Government indicated that I was irresponsible, that statement should be refuted.

I would like to point out to the leader that I put question No. 65 on the order paper on June 29, 1981, some two and a half years ago. It reads:

> What is the status of Eastern Provincial Airways (1963) Limited on its application for amendment to Licence No. ATC 2481/75 (S), which serves to request withdrawal of EPA service from Deer Lake Airport?

This matter was discussed in the papers and the decision came down months ago. I was getting sick of waiting for an answer, and I did not wish to have new sheets put on the order paper because somebody would complain about the cost of repeating questions, so I wrote to the Air Transport Committee and received an answer. It only took about three days. The application was rejected. The minister will ask,"Why didn't you do that in the first place?" The reason is because I do not have the staff and it is my right to put questions on the order paper to obtain information for my constituents or for my own benefit in representing my district. It is strange that I could not get an answer.

Senator Denis said that there are some 666 stations involved. He said it would cost too much money for the CBC to answer this question and that it would have to take on extra staff. With regard to staff, let us look at the CBC annual report under "Board of Directors." There are 16 directors on the board—7 from Ontario, 5 from Quebec, and 1 each from Manitoba, Alberta, B.C. and Nova Scotia. There are no directors from Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or Saskatchewan. But those 16 directors could divide the provinces among themselves and determine the cost per square foot from their regional offices. On page 43 are given the senior officers of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. There are 45 of them, starting with the president; executive vice-president; general counsel; vice-president, finance; vice-president, corporate affairs—and listen to this one—vice-president, special assistant to the executive vice-president. That is quite a title. Surely that man could take one province and determine the rental charges per square foot to the CBC. I have given you a total now of 61 employees.

Page 46 of the annual report indicates that there is a CBC advisory committee composed of 100 people. Surely they could divide up amongst themselves my request of who rents space to the CBC in all the regions of Canada and in the foreign service?

The information given in the CBC annual report is fantastic. It includes everything but the answers to the questions I asked, and that is why I asked them. Here are some of the things they tell the public. For example, with regard to the penetration of cable TV in Canada as of January 1, 1983: Homes with cable and converter, 27.6 per cent; homes with cable but no converter but converter services available, 25.7 per cent. Nobody reads the annual report but people like me. Here is another one: homes with cable but no converter, converter service not available, 7.9 per cent; homes without cable, service not available, 21.7 per cent; homes without cable, cable and converter services available, 15.4 per cent. There is every kind of information one could think of, but they will not tell the public how much they pay for rent in the various areas of Canada.

The funny thing is that CBC has a liasion officer in the Chateau Laurier, for members of Parliament and senators, who is supposed to take questions as notice and give answers. They have a computer system. There is a whole paragraph in the annual report on the mangement information systems. On page 42 under that heading the report reads:

> Due to the increasing need to exchange computerized data between locations, development was commenced of a multi-mode communications network. This will link Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver. The design will eventually allow designated users anywhere in the Corporation authorized access via the network to any remote CBC computer file. First links have been established at Montreal and Ottawa, with Toronto and western points to follow in 1983-84.

Who says that they have to hire staff and that it will cost too much money? I could lift up the phone and do it all in an hour.

The annual report includes all kinds of information on their fixed assets—their leases, the hours and the total amounts, on which I wanted a breakdown to determine whether my province was getting its fair share. The last thing I shall say, because I see that people are not interested—

Hon. C. William Doody: That is not true!

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Fascinating.

Senator Marshall: —is with regard to a release that came out the other day headed, "CBC to seek private partner for construction of new Toronto broadcast centre. $530 million Waterfront project will create 12,000 jobs."

Senator Frith: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: I am sure that there are thousands of square feet of space available in Toronto, but I suppose that this will be another empty government building.

I want an answer to my question to be able to determine whether the people of Canada, particularly those in my district, are getting a fair shake. It is a justified question and I think the Leader of the Government should give me the benefit of the doubt. The leader knows that I would co-operate if they were having trouble getting the information, and that I would obtain the information myself, as I have in the past.

Senator Olson: I accept that admonition and we will do the best we possibly can to get an answer as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): On the question of privilege, the Leader of the Government should confirm the existence of Section 20A of the Rules of the Senate of Canada which states:

> 20A. (1) A Question described in paragraph 20(1)(a) or (b)
> (a) that seeks statistical or other information not readily available, or
> (b) to which an answer in writing is desired,
> shall be sent in writing to the Clerk of the Senate to be placed on the Order Paper until answered.

The Leader of the Government should advise all honourable senators that if they wish to receive answers in writing, they must place their questions on the Order Paper, no matter how long they may be or how long it may take to prepare their respective replies. I suggest that the Leader of the Government should state emphatically that the members of this house have this privilege under our Rules.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I could not agree more. I would encourage my good friend, the Acting Leader of the Opposition, to encourage his colleagues to do exactly what he has described to us in that standing order.

• (1520)

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words, since my name was mentioned. As all senators know, we are not averse to senators rising on questions of privilege. Senator Marshall has the privilege to ask questions; however, he must be reasonable. He is abusing his privilege. That is the meaning of the question I put. One can see that he put some 4,000 questions on the order paper. If every senator were to ask likewise, not only with respect to the CBC but with respect to other issues, such as buildings belonging to the government, we would have to reply to each and every question. There are some 102 senators here, and if each were to ask similar questions then the government would have to answer about half a million questions. This is very childish behaviour indeed.

Senator Marshall: Senator Denis should look at the order paper in the other place. The House of Commons has three people on staff and they have a budget of $86,000. They have staff members in their constituency offices and the members in the other place put thousands and thousands of questions on the order paper which the government will not answer. The government must be accountable to the members and to senators. That is the objective of Confederation and democracy.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before we make a decision with respect to this question of privilege, if the mover of the question wishes a decision of the Senate—and I think perhaps he does not at this stage—I wish to thank the Acting Leader of the Opposition for drawing the attention of the Senate to the rules which provide for the asking of questions.

I would take this occasion to remind us all that when Question Period is called, oral questions can be asked of the Leader of the Government, or a senator who is a minister of the Crown or chairman of a committee, and supplementary questions can also be asked. Rule 20(3) reads as follows:

> (3) If an oral question cannot be answered immediately, the senator to whom it is addressed may take the question as notice.

Rule 20(4) reads as follows:

> (4) A debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the senator who asks the question and by the senator who answers it.

Senator Asselin has very usefully drawn our attention to the rule dealing with certain statistical type information. That is rule 20(A), which states that written questions that seek statistical or other information not readily available, or to which an answer in writing is desired, shall be sent in writing to the Clerk of the Senate to be placed on the Order Paper until anwered.

Senator Asselin has also pointed out that rule 20A.(2) reads as follows:

(2) The reply to a question on the Order Paper shall be printed in the Debates of the Senate of the day on which it is given.

While I am dealing with these points I would just like to quote rule 20B, which reads:

A preamble to a question, whether it is asked orally or in writing, is out of order.

Senator Asselin: You should have followed that rule when you were sitting on this side of the house.

DISARMAMENT

PRIME MINISTER'S INITIATIVES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer which is in response to a question asked by Senator Asselin on November 14 concerning correspondence between the Prime Minister and various heads of state relating to the Prime Minister's peace proposal. It is a rather long answer and if it is agreeable to honourable senators perhaps it can be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows):

The correspondence between the Prime Minister and the heads of state named by Senator Asselin is confidential. To make it public would break every diplomatic rule. Under some circumstances, it might be useful after the event to make such letters public. However, until the Prime Minister has finished his consultations, he intends to respect the confidence that the people expect of him. Perhaps later, if there are some possible results, the letters will be made public, but certainly not now.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INCOME TAX TREATMENT OF MEMBERS OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRAS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers. They cannot be taken as read because I wish to reply from my notes. The first deals with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the ruling as to the employment status of musicians. I can leave that answer until Tuesday, if honourable senators would prefer.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

AMWAY CORPORATON CONVICTION—DISPOSITION OF FINE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have an answer with respect to a question dealing with the $25 million fine levied against Amway, as between Her Majesty the Queen in right of the federal government and Amway. I do not have a written answer. However, I have an answer that I think honourable senators will find very interesting. If honourable senators wish to proceed to other matters, I will hold this answer until Tuesday as well.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NEWFOUNDLAND—RESTRUCTURING OF DEEP SEA FISHERY

Question No. 113 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What is the state of negotiations between the Government of Canada and the Bank of Nova Scotia with regard to the restructuring of the deep sea fishery in the Province of Newfoundland?

Reply by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans:

An agreement has been reached between the Government of Canada and the Bank of Nova Scotia (BNS) concerning their roles in the restructuring of the deep sea fishery in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Although the full terms of the Canada-BNS agreement are still commercially confidential, the participation of each party in Newfoundland restructuring was outlined in the agreement signed and made public on September 26 by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Premier of Newfoundland.

JOINT VENTURES PROGRAM—EXPORTS OF FISH PRODUCTS

Question No. 116 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What tonnage of fish products were sold to foreign countries under the Joint Ventures Program in (i) 1980-81, (ii) 1981-82 and (iii) 1982-83?

Reply by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans:

Direct sales of Fish to Foreign Vessels

East and West Coast of Canada

1980	22,530 tonnes
1981	61,743 tonnes
1982	91,135 tonnes
1983	60,252 tonnes

Figures are in product weight.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. D. G. Steuart moved the third reading of Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation and handling of western grain and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Before we proceed with the third reading of this bill, I would like to make a few remarks which, in my opinion, might help our colleagues make a decision on the important bill before us. This bill was referred to committee and a preliminary study has already been made. The committee study was very interesting. We did notice that the officials of the Department of Economic Affairs—particularly Mr. Kroeger—were quite often hard put to answer questions from senators seeking more information on the meaning of certain clauses and subclauses dealing with the controversial aspects of this bill. Still, we thank the officials for their enlightening answers to the questions that were asked. Attendance at the committee was impressive and several representations were made. I did not know that Senator Riley was an expert on agriculture or interested so much in agriculture. He took quite an active part in the committee proceedings and I was truly amazed to see how interested he was in this bill.

I was not overly impressed by the Minister of Transport, Mr. Axworthy, when the discussion turned to possible amendments, particularly a major amendment which he could have accepted. We know that, because the government imposed closure in the other place, a great many amendments were not moved and considered on third reading. We thought that the few amendments supported by the opposition could have been accepted by the minister in the course of that discussion before the committee. The minister was inflexible. He claimed that no major amendments would be accepted. He told us that the bill would have to be adopted as submitted to the committee. I deplore the minister's attitude. We could have avoided this third reading debate which gives us an opportunity to introduce our amendments. In any event, democracy must prevail and we will move certain amendments this afternoon to make up for the lack of information on the part of the minister yesterday.

I would not want to give the impression that I have become an overnight expert on the Crow rate. Still, I must confess that I did learn enough to offer advice to those who, in and outside this House, believe that the adoption of this bill will put an end to the controversy about the Crow rate. I am under the impression that those people are dangerously mistaken. I have no hesitation in stating that, in my view, the new system to be established under this Bill will be of a still more disputed and controversial nature than the former one. As other members in my party, I believe this measure will put Western farmers in an unbearable position. Without the substantial amendments which we would have liked to see adopted in the other place and in Committee of the Senate, this Bill may cause irreparable damage to the western agricultural industry, which is still today one of the major industries upon which Canada as a whole is dependent.

From the early stages of this debate, members from this side of our House have stressed that in our view, farmers could not pay more for shipping their grain, in view especially of the fact that their operating costs have increased by 30 to 400 per cent over the last ten years.

We also indicated that commodity prices have declined to their 1972-73 levels, while fuel costs have doubled in two and a half years, and farmers have been the victims of a tax assault by the federal Government, to which they would have to pay $275 million a year in income tax only.

In 1982, the Prairie farmers' income has declined by 29 per cent. On the other hand, we know about interest rates, and their increase of between 400 per cent and 500 per cent. We are also aware that 10 to 15 per cent of Western farmers are on the brink of bankruptcy. We have pointed out that at a time when other nations increased their support and subsidies to grain producers, we were going in the opposite direction. Over the last ten years, the average subsidy received by wheat producers was $11.41 per ton in the United States and $19.96 per ton in Common Market countries, while in Canada the subsidy has been $6.35 per ton, the major part of which came from the transportation subsidy, more precisely from the Crow's Nest freight rate.

Canadian barley producers will be allowed the same subsidy, because their average subsidy over the last ten years has been $6.32 per ton, as compared to $7.57 in the United States and $32.80 in the Common Market. Honourable senators, that study was done by a consulting firm for the Manitoba Government and published in the provincial statistics.

Comparing Canada and the United States, we see that during the 1982-83 crop year, when Canadian wheat producers were receiving 37 cents a bushel from the Canadian Government under the Crow those in the United States were getting something like $1.12 per bushel.

We could talk about the benefits provided Argentine and Australian producers in the form of transportation subsidies, but I would point out in passing that, in Canada, we are reducing our support to grain producers, while in other countries the exact opposite is being done. Wherever this happens, Canadian farmers lose, because they cannot set prices. A freight rate increase will mean for producers lower income, because they cannot pass that increase on to the consumers.

[English]

The second area to which our party continues to take strong exception is the ever-escalating freight rate structure and the open-endedness with which farmers will be faced. This structure is being based upon so-called railway costs, a self-perpetuating cost-plus regime for which farmers will pay very dearly.

• (1530)

The freight rate is a very complex one indeed. It will take a timeframe of two-and-one-half years to establish the freight rate and farmers will not know their freight rate for the current crop year until that cycle is completed.

The minister has proposed a safety net. The general principle of a safety net is something that we on this side of the chamber can support, and indeed it is supported by the agricultural community. However, when we look at the safety net which the minister has brought forth, we find, on the basis of the calculations and figures provided by the Department of Transport that, for the year 1983-84, the freight rates would have to rise to $8.00 per tonne or grain prices would have to fall to a weighted average of $104.00 per tonne in order to activate this safety net. On the basis of the figures for 1982-83, we know that the weighted average was $192.88 and, therefore, this safety net is very low; it is at the 1972-73 level.

[Translation]

Third, this bill specifies once and for all that the subsidy will be paid to the railroads, which we find totally unsatisfactory. We have said that, in fact, this gives the railroads a guaranteed annual income. We feel that this will only make the situation that this bill was supposed to improve, even worse. It will do nothing to correct the deficiencies of the system. Costs will continue to increase and the farmers and taxpayers of Canada will foot the bill.

Honourable senators, it is not with this bill that the Government can provide solutions to the problems that it was supposed to solve. There was talk of diversifying and enlarging the agricultural basis and of promoting the livestock and processing industries. All these sectors will be in an even worse situation than before. The only winners in this whole exercise are obviously the two national railroads. The Canada West Foundation had this to say about it:

> The method of payment provided in Bill C-155 will not serve the long term interests of Western Canada. The major losers will be the Prairie livestock producers represented by the feed grain and livestock producers' associations. Bill C-155 is detrimental to these producers because the subsidies provided encourage the farmers to produce grain for the export markets, while the major losers will be the Western agricultural and food product industry. The rates they will have to pay to the railroads will cause them severe hardship, and this threatens the existence of present and future processing plants in Western Canada.

Of the four or five purposes the Government wants to achieve through this bill, only one will perhaps be met, and I emphasize the word "perhaps". Railroad capacity will perhaps increase. What is certain is that the railroads will get their money. They will be the major winners because they will have nothing less than a preferential treatment. It is a form of dividend such as we have never seen before in Canada. We just have to look at it to realize this fact. As a result of this bill the railroad profits realized in 1981, the best year ever, will double by 1985. It is really a preferential bill that the government wants us to pass.

It was also realized that the preferential treatment given to the railroads needed to be restricted. The Government therefore sponsored another study to examine the question of fixed charges, which are nothing more than a benefit for the railroads. The companies will be reimbursed completely for the movement of grain, because it must not be forgotten that the performance rate of 18 to 20 per cent and the depreciation are taken into account for cost recovery. this was explained by the official who appeared before the Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. In addition, the railroads will obtain a rate increase of 20 per cent. Without the fixed charges, the railroads will still receive over $1 billion a year to transport grain, including the payments made by the farmers, the government subsidies and the amounts received under the railroad rehabilitation program and other measures.

We are being asked to pass this bill now and to examine its effects later. It is provided in the bill that the capacity of the farmers to pay the rates imposed on them will be examined. On this side, we felt that we should look right now into the impact of these increased rates on producers and for better ways to distribute the money, before crippling producers with such huge increases.

The government is putting the cart before the horse. We had an outstanding opportunity for a new approach to this issue, which would have taken into account the concerns of Western Canada. The government could and should have defended Western producers' interests. Getting rid of the Crow rates and increasing the burden of producers are both ill-advised measures.

That is why we propose to maintain the Crow rate at its current level until the end of crop year 1985-86. That would not cost the government a cent. Simply, until then, the railways would get no subsidy to cover their current costs, which represents a 20 per cent profit. That is slightly less than $200 million, for the situation would last only two and a half years as the new rates are to come into effect on the 1st of January. This would provide the government with the time needed for impact assessment and analytic review. The government could then ascertain the impact on the family-type farm as well as on rural communities in Western Canada. It could look into the various methods of payment and determine the effect they would have on the future of livestock processing.

We feel that our proposal is responsible, practical and sensible. It would give producers the time to prepare for a probable increase and we suggest that this would be a good, fair and equitable procedure.

[English]

Honourable senators we, on this side of the house, would like to see the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rate for grain producers maintained. There is no demonstrated evidence of the producer's ability to pay more for shipping grain. The federal government's decision to review the producer's ability to pay after the bill has been passed seems to us to indicate their uncertainty, and one has to wonder why the bill should pass.

Bill C-155, as presently formulated, forces producers into an open-ended and ever-escalating rate structure. Producers will be paying twice the Crow rate in 1985-86, and five times the Crow rate by 1991.

Producers simply do not have the ability to pay the arbitrary costs imposed under this bill. Today world grain prices are at 1973 levels while input costs have tripled in the past decade.

Net prairie farm income decreased by 29 per cent in 1982. At least 10 per cent of Canadian farmers are currently in financial difficulty. This bill, if implemented, could be the straw that breaks the back of many producers.

The amendment I am about to propose, which would maintain the Crow rate, will reduce transportation costs to producers by approximately $216 million from the 1983-84 to the 1986-87 crop year.

The Crow benefit is a substantial factor in permitting Canada's producers to compete in the international marketplace. In the past decade, this benefit averaged one-third to one-half of those subsidies provided to American and European producers—our major competitors. The Canadian Wheat Board's testimony identified a total benefit in Canada for the 1982-83 crop year of 37 cents a bushel compared to the U.S. subsidy of $1.12 a bushel. The reality is that if Canadian producers are to retain their competitiveness in the international market, this benefit must remain.

[Translation]

The Crow rate issue is not a simple one. We know that this is a complex issue which goes far beyond the question of one-half cent per ton-mile. We should keep in mind what the grain industry means for Canada. In addition, 25,000 to 30,000 people are employed in related industries, namely transportation and railways.

Of course, all this creates employment. Of the overall tonnage that is moved through the St. Lawrence Seaway, grain accounts for 52 per cent.

[English]

Honourable senators, the new freight rate scheme to be implemented under Bill C-155 will double the costs of the producer by 1985-86 and will result in an extra $216 million in freight costs.

Another strong argument in favour of retaining the existing rate for the producers is their ability to compete in the international market.

Honourable senators, because of the producer's current inability to pay what they would be called upon to pay by this legislation, and because the railway companies do not need the extensive help at this time that the legislation before us would afford them, I move, seconded by Senator Macdonald, that clause 41 of Bill C-155 be amended as follows:

a) by renumbering clause 41 as subclause 41(1) and b) by adding the following after line 36 at page 24:

"(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the rate a railway company may change a shipper for the movement of grain for the period January 1, 1984 to July 31, 1986 shall not exceed the existing rates in effect on August 1, 1983."

The Hon. the Speaker: In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Asselin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald, that Bill C-155 be not now read the third time but that it be amended as follows:

a) by renumbering clause 41 as subclause 41(1) and b) by adding the following after line 36 at page 24:

"(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the rate a railway company may charge a shipper for the movement of grain for the period January 1, 1984 to July 31, 1986 shall not exceed the existing rates in effect on August 1, 1983."

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Acting Leader of the Opposition and my colleagues as well, if it would be a good idea for us to decide now how we want to deal with the amendments.

• (1550)

I noticed that Senator Bielish was on her feet when Senator Asselin resumed his seat, and wondered whether she intended to speak to his amendment or propose another amendment.

The Acting Leader of the Opposition is under no obligation to tell me this, but if he knows now that there are going to be two or three amendments, perhaps he would suggest how we should deal with them in terms of voting on all three of them together or separately. I invite him to make a suggestion in that regard.

Senator Asselin: I can tell my friend that we are going to propose three amendments. This is the main amendment. We would ask for a recorded vote on this amendment. We may not ask that a recorded vote be taken with respect to the other amendments; we may only ask for a recorded vote at third reading.

At the moment, Senator Bielish wishes to speak on my amendment. After that, we hope a few senators from the government side will take the floor because, up until now, only two senators from that side have participated in the debate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think it is a good suggestion that we wait until the debate is exhausted on this amendment before we have a vote.

As to the question of who on this side should speak, honourable senators on that side have no doubt noticed how intimidated we all are by the eloquence and expertise of Senator Steuart, and how happy we are to have him as spokesman, so it may very well be that no one else will speak.

Senator Asselin: We thought it was lack of interest on the other side.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I feel that I must rise to support the amendment.

Anyone who eats a good meal is involved in agriculture, whether he realizes it or not. The family farm is at stake with the passage of this bill. Senator Asselin has furnished us with all sorts of statistics, but I want to impress on you that a farmer is taxed as an individual, but his wife and, often, other members of the family contribute to the production on that farm.

People in this country sometimes have an odd view of "work" especially when it involves working on a farm. If Canadians today paid farmers the price per hour that labour demands, or salaries that management in other industries get, then they would have to pay the same proportion of their salaries that people in other countries have to pay for food.

As a farmer's wife, in touch with several thousands of farm women who do not count the hours and who do not get paid for what they contribute to the family farm, I am not surprised that organizations are now starting to form in order to have this situation recognized. Less than 40 miles from this city of Ottawa, the Women's Survival for Agriculture Organization has been formed. In this province, and elsewhere in this country, concerned farm women are organizing to focus on their problems.

As a farmer's wife and as a teacher, I often found myself in the position of taking off one hat to don another in a hurry. Not many years ago, when I would manage the farm for my husband who would be off on a threshing run or combining, I would start work at 6 or 7 o'clock in the morning and work until 11 o'clock at night. Next morning, the school principal would call and ask me to replace a teacher for a day or two. Even half a day was appreciated. I would then don my teaching hat and go off to school. I would arrive there at 8.50 in the morning and stay until 3.30. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon I would be back in my own post office, and people would note my change in attire from the previous day when I had been wearing coveralls on my way to the grain elevator to test a grain sample. They would comment, "Oh, so you were working today."

Honourable senators, what would provoke that kind of comment on that day, but not the previous day when I had worked until 11 o'clock? The difference was that for that day they knew I would get paid, but for the long day as a farmer's wife no one knew whether I was getting paid or not. My payment would depend on whether, after all the overheads had been taken off, there was anything left, and then there were priorities. No one would care whether I was paid or, in fact, whether my husband or anyone paid interest on loans or where the money was to come from.

I think my city colleagues, and those who left farms a long time ago, ought to know that that situation still exists. Children on farms work from the time they can do a job, and I think that is a credit to them. They grow up to be more concerned individuals.

When I served on the Council for Rural Development Canada, we did a study on rural women's work, their needs, and their role in rural development. The report describes the hours that women work in rural areas and the contribution they make to their communities without any thought of ever being paid. The community is their home; it is the place in which they live and raise their families. Analyses of the socio-economic picture tend to overlook the value of unpaid work, and the share of the GNP this kind of production represents is rarely, if ever, recognized.

Federal taxation, of course, discourages the heads of family enterprises, usually men, from paying wages to their wives for labour.

When the Conservatives came into power in 1980, the Speech from the Throne did suggest that the law should be changed. The Conservatives were not in power long enough to do that, but the present government has picked this up. That is all very well, but when farm families have their backs against the wall, that provision makes little sense.

Honourable senators have heard what the average farm family income is. It is a little over $13,000 a year. The government intends to set up a commission in 1985 to examine the consequences of Bill C-155.

As late as last night the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications received a telegram from 17 people in Saskatchewan who asked him to return the Crow bill to the House of Commons for an impact study on future effects on farm families and Canada.

• (1600)

Senator Argue is ill and I am sorry that he is not here. I wish him a speedy recovery. The Advisory Committee to the Canadian Wheat Board, however, in a press release, said this:

> The members of the Committee have concluded that major amendments to Bill C-155 must be made.

This, honourable senators, is one of the major amendments.

> They have identified that amendments must provide for a rate which reflects grain producers' ability to pay and remain competitive in world markets, for the exclusion of variable rates, for the completion of the branchline rehabilitation program and for the elimination of the volume cap. The Committee is also concerned that the Canadian Wheat Board's powers over marketing and transportation be left intact.
> The Committee asks all members of Parliament to support the withdrawal of the Bill if the above package of amendments is not included. Funding already allocated should continue to be invested in the necessary upgrading of railroads in western Canada.

One lone committee member asked to be recorded in opposition to the contents upon which this news release was based.

Honourable senators, I was talking about farms. If the family farm is destroyed, it will be like inflicting a wound. Over the next three years, or whatever time it takes, anything a commission could come up with would only be as a band-aid with which to patch that wound. Why not pass the amendment now? That would be like preventive medicine. I am sure that if the farmers can see their way clear they will co-operate. I know of no more co-operative or generous person than a farmer, if he has the wherewithal.

I noted recently that Massey-Ferguson is again going under. Machinery just is not selling. Is it any wonder, honourable senators, that machinery is not selling? The farmers are the greatest people when it comes to buying, but if they do not have the money, they cannot buy. There are enough farmers who have already gone under or who are in serious financial difficulty; the others are now sitting very tight. They do not know what is in store for them.

The hearings on the Crow bill took place during the summer and harvest months. Farmers cannot pay any attention to this sort of thing during that time. It is when the sun shines that they must get to work. The harvesting has to be done in its season—it cannot wait until December. People are now starting to take a look at this legislation and it frightens them.

Honourable senators, my father-in-law used to say, "Convince a man against his will and he will be of the same opinion still," and that applies here. A government which forces something on a certain sector of society will feel the results. If it were only the government that felt the results, I might not be so sorry, but all Canadians will feel the results of this legislation. There are enough statistics to indicate that the multplier factor of the farming industry has an impact on thousands of jobs across the nation. I spoke to several farmers and asked this question, "If it does not pay to grow grain, what are you going to do?" The reply was, "Well, probably seed it into alfalfa and let the bees make honey. I suppose we'll go on welfare, or whatever the newfangled name for it is—social assistance."

It is a shame, I agree, that we have come to that. Honourable senators, this is a vast country. Those of you who have not been through the prairies to see the work that is done there and who may not understand, please consider this at this time. I spent about three weeks on the Joint Committee on Senate Reform. At that time I did not have my mind made up respecting an elected Senate. I can tell honourable senators that, at this point, if senators from the prairies had to go back to an election today, I seriously wonder whether farmers would take a second look.

There are more stories that I could recount to honourable senators. When we think about the average farm, we must think about what its costs are. Not so many years ago I was the one who went to pick up the pesticide or herbicide, or whatever it was that we needed. In those days we bought such things by the gallon. I used to buy a five-gallon can for $9 or $10. A year or so ago I was again sent to buy a couple of cans. The bill amounted to $197. I said, "You must be kidding," but the salesman said he was not. I asked my husband whether he knew what the cost was, and he said, "Yes, about $200." Honourable senators, that is exactly the way it was, and these are small things. These do not constitute the main costs. When we say that costs are escalating, we must realize that they have not escalated a mere 3 per cent; it is more like 300 per cent.

I want to put on the record that, although farmers receive some Crow rate benefit, all of the farmers' supplies—everything that comes from the east, every tractor and every piece of machinery—is marked "f.o.b. Windsor," "f.o.b. Hamilton," "f.o.b. Toronto," or "f.o.b." whatever the source. The west is not angry at the east or at central Canada. All the farm family wants is simple justice and equality.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Bielish.]

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I simply want to say a few words about this amendment, without rehashing all of the long debate that has taken place in this chamber, in the other place, in committee and in the hearings that were held all over western Canada. Senator Bielish has raised an excellent point with respect to the question that must concern all of us, especially those of us from western Canada, which is: Can the average farmer afford an increase in freight rates for moving the grain to market? I agree that the farmer does pay the freight rate; it comes off the price of his grain. I would point out, however, that he is not the only one to pay a freight rate. Almost all of the other industries in Canada do this as well. However, she has raised a good point.

• (1610)

I should like briefly to examine the other side of the coin. I would remind honourable senators that there is a safety net, in that the increase will take place gradually. When we talk about twice the Crow rate or five times the Crow rate, we should not forget that the Crow rate is extremely low. The rate was set about 90 years ago, and I would ask honourable senators to recall any other segments of our economy that are paying major production costs, or costs of doing business, at rates that were set 80 or 90 years ago. I do not think they will find one.

I would also remind honourable senators that while the Crow rate is being changed, it is not being done away with. The government will pay a minimum subsidy of $658 million a year, in addition to providing a safety net. While that may not be enough, it is still a considerable subsidy. While it may not be as much as is paid by member countries of the Common Market, I should point out that at times the record of the American government is very much up and down in its support of grain farmers. When we ask whether the farmers can afford to pay more, we should ask ourselves whether they can afford a deteriorating transportation system and again have to face what we faced in the late 1970s when we could not move our grain to market. When we come out of the current recession, grain will have to compete with potash, coal and other bulk commodities from western Canada, and if we do not take steps to improve our railroad system and port facilities, then something will have to give, or something will have to be rationed.

The railroads are losing money, and if they continue to lose money on the movement of grain, then the incentive to move grain will not be present, the grain will sit on the farms, as has happened in the past, and the cost of on-farm storage and interest rates will soon exceed the gradual increases that farmers will face under the new Crow rate.

As to this particular amendment, I do not believe that a three-year delay will accomplish anything. I feel quite honestly that it is a move by the opposition to avoid stopping the passage of the bill, so that the impact of having changed the bill will still fall on the Liberal Party and the Liberal government, yet make it appear to western farmers that the opposition party is trying to do something. If the opposition party feels that it is likely to win the next election, then I am not convinced that they will want to face a situation of having to provide an even larger subsidy to the railroads than the present government is suggesting, or of charging a large increase in one lump sum to western farmers.

We must also consider how a three-year delay would affect the investment plans of the railways. It is all very well to say that they will go ahead anyway. Certainly, in the meetings they have attended, and the meetings I have had with officials of both railways, they have said they will go ahead with what they have started. I am convinced that if we do not face this situation now, we could, at best, foresee a delay affecting the billions of dollars with which they are planning to upgrade the railways—and, God knows, the rail system and the port facilities need upgrading. We might even see some cancellation of that development money. That would harm not only the farmers but also shippers of coal, potash, petro-chemicals and other products.

I cannot say that I am happy to see one of the pillars of our western economy changed. That was something on which we always depended. I do not feel any great sense of elation from the passage of this bill. I am as concerned as Senator Bielish and others at what it may do to western agriculture. I live in western Canada; my future is there; my family is there. While I am not a farmer, no one can live in western Canada and not be concerned about the fate of our largest industry, especially those who live in the prairie provinces. However, we have to look at this in a responsible fashion and at the whole picture. While it is not pleasant to see this happening, I honestly do not think that the predictions of gloom and doom will materialize. Neither do I accept the view of those who feel that by changing the Crow and upgrading the railroads we shall see a great burst of economic activity on the prairies the like of which we have never seen before. I do not believe those who take a pessimistic attitude; nor do I believe those highly optimistic people who say it will provide the answer to all of our problems. I do not believe it will. I believe it will help solve our transportation problem. No doubt, it will cause some serious problems for farmers, particularly the young farmer and the small farmer; there is no question about that.

The one safety factor in this legislation, apart from the safety net, is the review process to take effect in 1985-86. If members of the opposition are serious about all the promises they have made in the course of the Crow rate debate; if they want to change the legislation and put the Crow rate back to 13 cents per bushel, then, as a westerner, I would say, "God bless you." If, at the same time, they are prepared to take $1 billion or more per year out of the treasury, then, on one side of the coin they will be talking about cutting government expenditures and, on the other side, they will be telling western farmers that they are sharply increasing government expenditures. If the opposition party is able to balance that, then, as a westerner, I will be the first to welcome it. However, I do not think they will be able to do it, any more than we can. While I am concerned about the future of this legislation, I feel also that the time has come when we must face a change. Therefore, I cannot support the amendment.

Senator Bielish: May I be permitted a question?

Senator Steuart: Certainly.

Senator Bielish: I have listened carefully to the honourable senator, who referred to predictions of gloom and doom. Does he really believe that this bill will solve the rail transportation problem? When the honourable senator refers to billions of dollars, does he not believe that the farmers who make a profit contribute to the treasury in many ways? Does he not consider that it is logic rather than gloom and doom, that it is facing the issue as it exists?

Senator Steuart: As to whether this legislation will solve all of the railroads' problems, I do not expect that it will. Certainly, it will solve the problem of double tracking, and the problem which we now face across the mountains and in the port facilities in Vancouver. The problem concerning delays and those concerning unloading at Prince Rupert and Vancouver will be solved. However, I do not believe that it will solve all of the problems. We have a growing economy; we will be producing far more grain in future, as well as potash, coal and other commodities. No doubt we shall face ongoing problems.

It has been suggested that if this bill is passed it will break a great many farmers. I do not agree with that view. There may be a 13-cent-a-bushel increase next year, and another 13-cent-a-bushel increase the following year, with the figure eventually rising to 80 cents, 90 cents, or $1 per bushel to move grain, but that would be the case only if the average price of grain goes up to $8 or $9 per bushel. I admit that no one likes to pay more, and many marginal farmers may well be hurt; but, at the same time, when western farmers can move their grain to market with confidence, most of those difficulties will be overcome.

If it does work a lot of hardship, there is a review process, and I am sure that the government of the day, be it Liberal or Conservative, will not let the great agricultural industry of Canada go down the drain. I recognize that there will be problems, but I am not as pessimistic as some on the other side of the chamber or, indeed, others across Canada, about the effects of the changes brought about by this bill.

● (1630)

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion in amendment of Senator Asselin defeated.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Is this on the main motion?

Senator Balfour: Yes.

Honourable senators, I have a few brief comments to make with respect to the bill before us.

A major bone of contention alluded to in the debate at second reading stage on Tuesday was with respect to the method of payment of the government's financial contribution to the overall transportation costs involved in the bill before us. The bill sets out that the entire $658 million Crow benefit is to be paid directly to the railways. We on this side have serious reservations with this approach, for a number of reasons.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

First, it is very generous to the railways. Some experts have put the annual overpayment as high as $50 million, which would have the effect of perpetuating a cost-plus regime in which the railways would have no incentive to control costs. Secondly, it does not encourage system efficiency but, rather, reinforces the status quo. Finally, payment to the railways to the exclusion of the other players does not remove the economic distortions created by the Crow which particularly affect the livestock industry and the secondary processing sector. Indeed, the Canada West Foundation, an independent think-tank organization, stated in a recent report that Bill C-155 clearly discriminates against prairie livestock interests and represents a near death blow for agricultural processing on the prairies.

If the government is really serious about passing a bill which has some degree of support in western Canada, then I suggest it should seriously consider the amendment which I propose to put forward with respect to the implementation of the review process concerning the method of payment.

As the bill now reads, and in particular, clause 58 thereof, the method of payment of the Crow benefit is locked in to the railways only. If the review commission should, in its wisdom, recommend a change in the method of payment—for example, to either pay the producers only or, alternatively, some combination of paying the railways and the producers—and if the government decides to accept this recommendation, then under the existing bill the only way the change could be made would be by amending the legislation. This could be a long and arduous process which, in light of the experience of the government with the bill before us, it should appreciate.

It has taken three years just to reach the stage at which we are today. The amendment I propose is intended to facilitate a change in the method of payment, provided such a change has been recommended by the commission of inquiry and provided it receives cabinet approval.

The amendment is simply intended to introduce an enabling provision designed to facilitate this change. In debate on Tuesday the operation of a commission under the existing bill was characterized as a sham. Perhaps that overstates the situation somewhat. However, I suggest that any fair-minded person would agree that if recommendations of the committee require an amendment to this bill in order to be implemented, then its function could very well become an exercise in futility.

It should be borne in mind that the method of payment in question involved intense debate which at various stages produced different proposals. For example, Gilson recommended that payment to the railways be made first, but gradually, over time, ending in an 80 per cent and 20 per cent proportional share between the producers and the railways respectively. The reason for the Gilson recommendation on the method-of-payment formula was intended to eliminate or to gradually reduce the economic distortions brought about by the Crow rate. Under this formula, producers would have freedom of choice to either pay the railways to export grain under the Crow rate or, alternatively, to keep the payment themselves in order to broaden the base of western agriculture and so diversify the livestock and processing industry.

The Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin revised the Gilson recommendation to a 50-50 split between the producers and the railways. He then, under pressure, altered his view and the result was the 100 per cent payment to railways provided for in the bill.

The Honourable Lloyd Axworthy inherited the problem from the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, but that does not mean that the problem has gone away. Experience with the operation of the bill may, sooner or later—and more likely sooner than later—call for an alteration to the method-of-payment formula. If this should become the state of affairs, I submit to honourable senators that this alteration to the method-of-payment formula should be implemented without delay.

My understanding of the rationale behind the introduction of the commission of inquiry amendment, which was introduced by the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, was an intention to give hope to the livestock industry that change to the method of payment formula was both possible and practical. I submit, however, that without an enabling provision to facilitate such a change by regulation rather than by amendment to the bill, it could result in a self-defeating provision. In a nutshell, too much time would be wasted to bring about a change, and the economic distortions which I alluded to earlier would be further aggravated before corrective changes could be made.

I therefore move, seconded by Senator Nurgitz, that Bill C-155 be amended in clause 58 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 34 the following:

> "(3) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, based upon the recommendations of the committee established under section 62(2) to examine the method of payment, the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing the manner in which and the parties to whom payment of the government contribution, including the Crow benefit, shall be made.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Balfour, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, that Bill C-155 be amended in clause 58 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 34 the following—

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt that motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Steuart: I want to say a brief word on this amendment, simply because I do not necessarily disagree with it. I would have been happier—

Senator Asselin: Are you going to vote for it?

Senator Steuart: You will have to wait and see. I am still making up my mind.

As you say, the Gilson report recommended an 80-20 split; the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin then said 50-50; and then it was changed—and I shall not go into the reason why it was changed. The wheat pools, the largest grain organization in western Canada, wanted it changed, and the Quebec farmers wanted it changed. In my opinion, they were both wrong and I would like to see at least part of the subsidy paid directly to the farmers. However, that is what the review provision is there for, and I hope the review will educate a great many people to the fact that perhaps this is the best vote: some payment to the farmers and some to the railroads. However, by the time that vote is in, we shall have had an election and if, by some dreadful circumstance, the Conservatives happen to be the government, the one ray of sunshine may be that we shall remind you of your commitment to change this method of payment and, although I shall not look forward to much if you are the government, I shall look forward to that change.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt Senator Balfour's motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Motion in amendment of Senator Balfour negatived, on division.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words with respect to the bill and, in particular, with reference to clause 65 which you will find at page 40 of the most recent version of the bill. Clause 65 states:

> Notwithstanding the Crow's Nest Pass Act and any agreement made pursuant thereto, Her Majesty in right of Canada may hold, dispose of or otherwise deal with the lands selected under paragraph 1(i) of that Act in any manner and on any conditions she thinks fit.

Honourable senators, this provision overrides a legislative impediment to the exploitation of these coal-bearing lands. The Government of Canada maintains that these lands were conveyed to it under paragraph 1(i) of the original Crow's Nest Pass Act. That paragraph states:

> That if the Company or any other company with whom it shall have any arrangement on the subject shall, by constructing the said railway or any part of it as stipulated for in the said agreement, become entitled to and shall get any lands as a subsidy from the Government of British Columbia—and it goes on to say how the land is selected. It then concludes by saying:

> —for the purpose of securing a sufficient and suitable supply of coal to the public at reasonable prices, not exceeding two dollars per ton of two thousand pounds free on board cars at the mines.

And on the part of the Government, to pay the said subsidy by instalments as aforesaid.

The subject coal lands here have been known as the Dominion Coal Blocks. The northern coal block is adjacent to the coal operation of British Columbia Coal Limited, which comprises 5,000 acres and contains perhaps 20 million tonnes of metallurgical and thermal coal resources. The southern Block in the Flathead Valley comprises 45,000 acres and contains an estimated 1.2 million tonnes of metallurgical and thermal coal resources.

In 1890 the Province of British Columbia passed an Act in Aid of Certain Railways which provided for the granting of certain lands to the Kootenay Lake Railway Company, later known as the British Columbia Southern Railway Company, for the construction of the railroad through the Rocky Mountains. The province has maintained from the very beginning that it was its intention that any such land grants would reserve for the Crown Provincial all minerals, precious and base, as well as coal.

The federal government's 1897 Act to Authorize a Subsidy for a Railway Through the Crow's Nest Pass included the provision, earlier noted, which required the company building the line to transfer to Canada 50,000 acres of any coal lands it received from British Columbia. As indicated, British Columbia has maintained that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company could not transfer the coal lands to Canada, as the coal resources were never conveyed to it in the first place.

This brings us to the very problem that concerns me, and that is, having given this land to the railway company, then known as the British Columbia Southern Railway Company which was ultimately usurped or taken over by the CPR, the CPR then became the beneficial owners of that land which now, in turn, is to be conveyed back to the federal government.

Despite their abundant coal resources and proximity to infrastructure, these coal lands have not been explored to any great extent, and no development has taken place on them. There have been numerous exchanges between federal and provincial ministers on this issue over many years.

It is not my intention to get into all of the historical—or hysterical—arguments, but on May 20 of this year, ten days after the first reading of Bill C-155 in the House of Commons, the British Columbia Minister of Energy, Mines and Petroleum Resources sent the following message to the then federal Minister of Transport:

> Your proposals to amend the grain rates established by the Crow's Nest Pass Act have received support from this province. We continue to hope for an early resolution of this issue, although we have concerns with recent changes you have made to the subsidy arrangements. We believe it desirable to pay the subsidy to the farmers, and not to the railways directly—

I must apologize for reading the entire letter, but now I come to the part that relates to the amendment I propose.

● (1650)

The letter continues:

[Senator Nurgitz.]

> We are troubled, moreover, by the language employed in section 62 of Bill C-155. The Province of British Columbia has always maintained an ownership claim on the subject coal lands. Moreover, it has regulatory requirements and land use priorities which must be met by all explorers and developers of coal. Accordingly, we trust that the federal government would never attempt to dispose of these coal lands unilaterally.
> I believe it is possible for our governments to take a co-operative approach to resolving these outstanding issues in order to facilitate the orderly development of the coal resources for the benefit of British Columbia, and all of Canada.
> I suggest that we meet at an early date prior to any disposition of the lands to hold discussions on ownership, management and regulatory policy .

That concludes the letter sent by the provincial minister.

Senator Frith: Which provincial minister is that?

Senator Nurgitz: The British Columbia Minister of Energy, Mines and Petroleum Resources. That letter was sent to Mr. Pepin, the then Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pepin's reply is dated June 22 of this year. He acknowledged that the wishes of the province should be taken into account in a development strategy, but at the same time strongly affirmed that the federal government believes the coal lands legally are a federal responsibility.

No doubt, lawyers could argue the merits of each side of the case in court for many years, but because I am anxious to get a response from Senator Steuart and I am fearful of getting an argument from Senator Frith, I want to avoid the long legal precedents which I do have and which I will, on another occasion, give to Senator Frith. There is a question of some form of co-operative government. I believe that British Columbia has a good legal argument but, as they indicated, negotiation would far surpass any kind of court hassle that might take years. It is simply not good enough for the federal government to offer to take into account the wishes of the Government of British Columbia, as Mr. Pepin said in June, but the province has responsibility for resources, environmental management and mine regulations. And those things are more than wishes; they are the mandated responsibility, under our Constitution, of any provincial government.

We ought to support that province in its call on the Government of Canada to enter into discussions which will ultimately lead to a plan for the management and development of these coal lands. Whether you want to talk about environmental matters, project proposal reviews or mining regulations, there is a vast area of issues which ought to be worked out as between the two governments. I think it vitally important that we not just unilaterally legislate the province out of the picture.

As I have indicated, for brevity and other reasons I do not want to go into all of the legal precedents. There are several decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which are pertinent. I merely want to indicate that there has been a consistency in both circumstances and events that would support an argument for the return of the coal lands to the ownership of the Province of British Columbia from the central government. Rather than concentrate on the most recent amendments to the Constitution dealing with natural resources, I think it might be more appropriate to suggest a pattern of events leading inevitably to a conclusion that the lands ought to be given back.

It is important to note that public lands and natural resources were treated differently when British Columbia joined Confederation than they were in the case of the other western provinces. Ownership remained in the province by virtue of the terms of the union. This unique position was confirmed by a case that was heard in 1888 by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Senator Frith: Could we have the name of the case?

Senator Nurgitz: The Attorney General of British Columbia v. the Attorney General of Canada. It is reported in (1889) 14 Appeal Cases, at page 295.

The lands which were conveyed to the central government by virtue of paragraph 11 of the Terms of Union, known as the railway belt and the Peace River block—these were other pieces of land under what I suggest were identical circumstances—were studied by the royal commission of 1928. It concluded that lands given up by the Province of British Columbia in support of the construction of certain portions of the railway ought to be reconveyed. I should like to read briefly from that conclusion. The royal commission said:

> Notwithstanding the national character of the undertaking (the building of the railroad), British Columbia has borne the burden of contributing large areas of her public lands to aid in its construction—largely on account of the predicted failure and burdens to be created—and today is the only province of Canada which granted lands towards the building of the railway, national in its character. The inter-colonial railway was provided for in the Confederation pact; it was a part of the price paid by Canada for the entry of the Maritime provinces into the Dominion, and no doubt the province by the sea, as well as other portions of Canada, profited by its construction; the Maritime provinces, however, contributed no lands to aid in building it; they have, it is true, contributed their share of the cost to Canada of the building of the road and of the deficits which were encountered in its operation, in the same way as the people of British Columbia have contributed their share as citizens of Canada of the moneys expended in building the Canadian Pacific. The situation is one which, in my opinion, calls for a remedy, and the remedy should be the restoration to the province of the lands held by the Dominion in both the railway belt and the Peace River block. When this is done, British Columbia will be placed in a position of equality with the other provinces in respect of the cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

It is arguable on a basis similar to that advanced before the Royal Commission on the Reconveyance of Land to British Columbia that the position of the coal lands is also unique in Confederation and, for the same reasons given in support of the reconveyance of the railway belt and the Peace River block, the coal lands should be reconveyed to the Province of British Columbia.

An analysis of the evolution of the Crow's Nest Pass agreement itself indicates that many changes have taken place which led the Turgeon royal commission, in 1951, to conclude that the agreement had been put to an end, which brings in the question that these lands were given to the railway in trust, and when the trust failed those assets put up for the trust should be given back to whoever first gave them. The British Columbia Railway Act, enacted in 1900, illustrates an intent to keep minerals within the control and ownership of the British Columbia government.

Finally, one can argue that the most recent amendments to the Constitution are the outcome of persistent pressure by the provinces for more control of their natural resources, and they indicate, perhaps as far as British Columbia is concerned, the continuation of a trend which commenced at the time it joined Confederation. Honourable senators, clause 65 runs counter to that.

I move, seconded by Senator Doody, that Bill C-155 be amended by deleting lines 1 to 7 at page 40 and substituting the following therefor:

> "65. Notwithstanding the Crow's Nest Pass Act and any agreement made pursuant thereto, the Government of Canada shall, in accordance with section 109 of the Constitution Act, 1982, return to the Government of British Columbia all lands and any mineral, coal or any other rights on those lands it received pursuant to paragraph 1(i) of the Crow's Nest Pass Act, and the Government of British Columbia may hold, dispose of, or otherwise deal with such lands in any manner and under any conditions it thinks fit."

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt Senator Nurgitz's motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Motion in amendment of Senator Nurgitz negatived, on division.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: I have some reservations and I would like to ask a few questions before we proceed with third reading. It is about the report by the Transport Committee—

The Hon. the Speaker: Are you speaking to the motion?

Senator Tremblay: It is about the report, and it is also on the main motion, since—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The problem is that according to our rules, a report referred by a committee without amendment is adopted without debate. Perhaps this question could be raised on another occasion or after the vote on third reading.

Personally, I do not think it affects the matter now before this Chamber. The motion for third reading is not affected by a report that has already been adopted.

Senator Tremblay: It concerns the Bill. Isn't a question that concerns the Bill in order at any time?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: No, not at this time.

Senator Frith: Well, if it is only a matter of reservations—

Senator Tremblay: It depends how you look at it. It concerns how we proceed in the Senate when we have a committee report stating that many drafting and printing errors were found in the text of the Bill. It is said this does not affect the principle, and in fact, the principle has already been adopted, but it may affect some of the provisions.

I would like to know how the errors in question will be corrected in the present Bill. Upon terminating its comments, the Committee said to be careful in future when drafting other bills to make sure that such errors did not happen again.

Does that mean they are going be left in the Bill? Or does it mean that they are going to be corrected, and who is going to do it?

I would just like to know, for our own information, since we are considering bills, why numerous errors like the ones referred to here are not corrected before the Bill is passed, whether they are corrected afterwards, and how this is done. Basically, we are adopting the Bill in its present form.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if I understand correctly, Senator Tremblay said there are a number of drafting and printing errors in the Bill. This is quite normal. Senator Tremblay has probably noticed that we occasionally pass legislation to correct this kind of error. Consequently, the fact that we are obliged to make changes is not exactly a unique situation.

I understand from the Committee's report that it stressed the need to pay particular attention to any bill, not only this one, but also future bills, in order to eliminate the need to correct drafting errors and any lack of conformity between the French and English versions.

As far as the substance is concerned—

Senator Tremblay: The report says that both texts contain many errors.

Senator Frith: That is correct.

Senator Tremblay: It is not simply a question of conformity between French and English.

Senator Frith: That is why I mentioned conformity as an example.

Honourable senators, it is a good idea to draw the attention of the Senate to the recommendations contained in the committee report, although they do not relate to the substantive question before us.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

17 November 1983

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 17th day of November, 1983, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be

Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 22, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the motion is agreed to, I would like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government why we will be sitting at 2 p.m. instead of 8 p.m.? Will special bills be introduced in the Senate, or will committees be sitting Tuesday?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is still for the same reason. Two or three months ago, we decided to sit at 2 p.m. for the reasons mentioned when the new system was adopted, among others because the other place no longer sits at night. It is a matter of adapting our schedule. I introduced that measure as an experiment until the end of this session. We will have other opportunities to discuss it.

For the time being, we can take into consideration the changes in the other place. There is no other reason.

Finally, as a corollary, I do not want to change the arrangements mid-way through, for fear that the committee sittings might be disrupted.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INCOME TAX TREATMENT OF MEMBERS OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRAS

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Godfrey on October 27, 1983, regarding the members of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and whether they ought to be treated as self-employed.

A payroll audit in the spring of 1983 by National Revenue, Taxation, showed that while income tax was being deducted at source from the remuneration of the musicians, no withholding was being made for CPP and UI. The explanation was that the musicians were viewed as self-employed and the tax deductions were being taken as a service.

The auditor referred the question of the true status of the approximately 100 musicians for a ruling as to whether they were or were not in pensionable and insurable employment. The terms of employment of the Toronto musicians were found to be like those of the musicians of the Vancouver Symphony. The Pension Appeal Board had ruled that the terms for the latter constituted a contract of service and, therefore, they were in pensionable and insurable employment. On this basis, the employment status was ruled as being of the same nature.

Discussions are under way with the employer about the date at which deductions for CPP and UI will have to commence.

Honourable senators, by way of additional explanation, apparently the contract of the Montreal musicians is different from that of the Vancouver and Toronto musicians. They are being treated differently, and apparently some investigations and discussions are going forward in this regard. We are not at liberty to disclose the details of the private contract between musicians and orchestra administration.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

AMWAY CORPORATION CONVICTION—DISPOSITION OF FINE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Robichaud on November 14 concerning the $25 million fine levied on the Amway Corporation.

Honourable senators will remember that the fine was divided such that $20 million was levied against the U.S. Amway and $5 million was levied against Amway Canada.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: It is a matter of justice administration, therefore a provincial responsibility.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators will recall that, when Senator Robichaud asked the question, I hazarded a guess that, because a federal statute was involved, the proceeds of the fine would go to the federal government. Senator Robichaud said that he knew the answer, but he wanted to know if I knew the answer. In hazarding that guess, I felt I was, perhaps, on my way to becoming an expert, according to a definition I read the other day, namely, that an expert is someone who makes three right guesses in a row. I thought I had made the first right guess, but it seems that the answer is not that simple.

The general governing rule falls under section 651 of the Criminal Code. It reads, in part:

> Where a fine . . . is imposed . . . and no provision, other than this section, is made by law for the application of the proceeds thereof, the proceeds belong to Her Majesty in right of the province in which the fine, penalty or forfeiture was imposed—

It would seem, therefore, that the proceeds would go to the province.

However, the exemption in subsection (2) states:

> Where
> (a) a fine, penalty or forfeiture is imposed
> (i) in respect of a violation of a revenue law of Canada,
> the proceeds of the fine . . . belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada—

It does not end there, honourable senators. The charge was not one laid under the Customs Act. The charge was one of fraud, laid under the Criminal Code. Therefore, if it falls under the general section, the proceeds would go to the province.

I discussed this matter with the Department of Justice. What happened in this case was that, when they heard about what was going on, the RCMP started an investigation. The government did not want to appear to be using the criminal courts as a collection agency, so it started both civil and criminal proceedings at the same time. After the RCMP had investigated to a certain point, they handed the matter over to the Attorney General of Ontario. The Government of Canada has always looked at the criminal proceeding—the civil suit is still going on—as a provincial matter, to recover the actual amounts.

After my discussion with the Department of Justice, I leave honourable senators with this intriguing question mark. Should another look be taken at it? It was a charge of fraud, and that would clearly mean that the proceeds of a fine would go to the province. Was it not a charge of fraud, however, "in respect of a violation of a revenue law of Canada"? The test in the Criminal Code is not whether the charge is under a federal revenue law, but simply whether it is "in respect of" such a law.

It seems to me that, for $25 million, I would be prepared to make an argument that it was "in respect of." I leave honourable senators with that amusing—I hope they will find it amusing—and esoteric bit of "avocasseries."

As it turned out, Senator Robichaud's question was, indeed, a good one—perhaps a little more intriguing than either of us thought it would be.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I think that the federal government has no intention of asking for a Supreme Court declaratory judgment to that effect.

[English]

Senator Frith: No comment.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (No. 3).

An Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

An Act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act (No. 2).

An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 22, 1983, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 22, 1983

The Senate met at 2. p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE ESTIMATES 1983-84

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1984. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 6224.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I present the motion regarding the adjournment, I have a few comments to make about the business before us.

I prepared a motion to the effect that we adjourn today until 2 p.m. on Thursday, according to recent practice. Perhaps I should start by apologizing for bringing honourable senators back here this week when it now appears that there will not be any business for us from the other place, and our committees have pretty well cleaned up their work. With all the benefit that comes with hindsight, honourable senators probably feel that, except for Question Period, there is no reason to be here. Unfortunately, last week I was bound by that other aspect of the laws of time. I had to judge on the basis of foresight, rather than hindsight.

In any event, that is why I am proposing a motion that we do not sit on Thursday, but come back on Tuesday next. According to the tradition, we would not sit on Wednesday. I will now propose the motion and then explain why I believe it is necessary for us to return next Tuesday. I believe I have used up my leave to talk ahead of the motion. Therefore, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 29, 1983, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, if leave is granted I will explain what we will be doing on Tuesday.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Why not adjourn until 8 p.m.?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there are two questions to be answered with respect to why we should come back on Tuesday, including Senator Molson's question with respect to sitting at 8 o'clock as opposed to 2 o'clock.

With respect to the first matter, there remains the possibility of an adjournment for prorogation at some time around the thirtieth, which is next Wednesday. That is certainly under active consideration at the moment. As far as I am aware, nothing has been decided so far, but it is certainly an option open to the government and one being seriously considered. Therefore, I think we should make it possible for the government to carry that out in order that this session can be brought to an end. One way to do so is to come back next Tuesday, but since there will definitely be one item which we will want to deal with before an adjournment takes place. That is supplementary estimates (B) and the appropriation bill. Senator Everett has adjourned the report of the committee on supplementary estimates (B) and we will deal with that. It will be a part, although not formally so, of the debate on the appropriation bill which the government will present in the other place and here in the Senate to enable the government to either adjourn for prorogation or prorogue on the thirtieth and to resume about a week or so later.

Honourable senators, the other possibility is the Atlantic fisheries bill. I am sharing all my knowledge with honourable senators with respect to imminent legislation.

The reason for our convening at 2 o'clock, as opposed to 8 o'clock, is that if the scenario develops in the way I have described, then it is very likely we will want to sit on Tuesday and Wednesday. It may be that if we do receive the fisheries bill, one of our committees will want to consider it either on Tuesday morning or Tuesday evening in order to deal with third reading on Wednesday. So, for that reason, plus the normal reason for sitting at 2 o'clock— that is, to keep our sitting hours roughly the same as those of the other place—I propose that we meet at 2 o'clock and not 8 o'clock. I am sure that my explanation with respect to meeting at 2 o'clock, as opposed to 8 o'clock, has been just as persuasive as it has ever been with those senators who are against the system.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on behalf of the official opposition, and with my hon. colleague, I deplore the fact that senators were asked to meet here today for a sitting of the Senate. Some senators have a long way to travel. It is all right for those who live in Quebec and Ontario, but I know that some of us come from as far away as Vancouver and our Western Provinces. It is clear that this inconveniences them considerably. The Deputy Leader of the Government will recall that I was reluctant to come back today at two o'clock, as he. In fact, I suggested we come back at eight o'clock this evening. I don't think it serves any purpose to keep senators here when we do not have enough work to keep us busy, although perhaps a more extensive agenda could have been arranged, including committee meetings that could have been held this week.

On the other hand, since this resolution was moved by the Government, we agree with the adjournment as proposed. However, I warn the Government that if we have to consider two Bills next week and the session is to be prorogued Wednesday, we should not have to consider two Bills on the same day.

• (1410)

[English]

Because the motion is to adjourn until next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock and, as the Deputy Leader of the Government has said, it is likely that the government will prorogue the session the day after, it is my opinion that there will not be enough time for the Senate to study two bills.

Senator Frith: The appropriation bill will not take very long.

Senator Asselin: However, a few senators on this side of the house may wish to speak on the subject of the appropriations bill. Also, the Atlantic fisheries bill is of great importance to senators from the maritime provinces, and, if it is received by the Senate this week, it will take some time to debate that bill. All in all, we will probably require two or three days to dispose of those two bills. I hope that the Deputy Leader of the Government has taken that into account in deciding to recall the Senate at 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon next. If we received those bills during the day on Monday, we could meet on Tuesday at 11 a.m. to commence debate on them.

The main objection I have is that we do not want to be pushed into rushing through such important bills. Some of the senators on this side of the chamber have asked me to convey to the deputy leader their desire to study this important fisheries bill; they are asking, therefore, that you give us more time, if we should need it, in order to meet our commitments.

Senator Frith: The adjournment will be subject to the call of the Chair.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments made by the Acting Leader of the Opposition. I was about to suggest to senators, including the acting leader and his colleagues, that adjourning in compliance with the motion made by the government house leader carries with it the implication that we could meet earlier than Tuesday at 2 p.m., at the call of the Chair, as my honourable friend knows, provided there is some legislation to deal with. For example, if the other place passes Bill C-170 on Thursday or at some time early on Friday, so that we are aware that we shall have it for first reading as soon as we next meet, we could meet on Monday at 2 p.m.—or perhaps Monday at 8 p.m. would be more reasonable.

We would then be faced with the fact that we would need leave to proceed to the next stage, second reading, for which 48 hours' notice is normally required. If we do not meet until Tuesday at 2 p.m., that would take us over until Thursday at 2 p.m. I am sure that we would not want to deprive honourable senators opposite of their opportunity for debate, nor would we want to frustrate the timetable because we were unable to get leave to move through the second reading stage, with then, perhaps, a reference to a committee.

I am not sure about this, but I would presume that honourable senators would wish to have Bill C-170 referred to a committee of the Senate so that one or two meetings could be held. I accept all that has been said by the Acting Leader of the Opposition.

The Senate could meet on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and even Friday so that Royal Assent could be given as soon as possible to any legislation that was passed.

The reason the Deputy Leader of the Government has given for the Senate to adjourn today is a good one, unless legislation is passed by the House of Commons, including Bill C-170. As Senator Asselin has pointed out, other bills could be passed by the House of Commons; sometimes by agreement they pass two or three non-controversial bills on Fridays. We will have to wait to see, but if that happens, the Senate could be recalled for Monday evening.

Senator Asselin: I want to get an assurance that when the Senate is recalled there will be work to do. Don't call the Senate back if there is no legislation to deal with.

Senator Frith: Not even for Question Period?

Senator Asselin: That could be important.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, as the deputy leader knows, I never disagree with him and I would hate to make an exception on this occasion, but in the wise remarks he made a few minutes ago he mentioned that the tradition now is that the Senate does not sit on Wednesday afternoons, but rather on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

I question whether that is a tradition. It is a precedent, but I do not think it is a tradition. Indeed, I should like to go further and suggest to my colleagues in the Senate that it should not be a precedent. I know that we are nearing the completion of a very peculiar session of Parliament: not only has it made history by dragging itself indefinitely until it has become old, fatigued, and is now dying, but it has been a difficult session. The legislative program presented in both houses has been extremely difficult for everybody concerned.

In recent years we have decided that Wednesday mornings should not be at our disposal for Senate business; they are now taken up by caucus. Consequently, the business of the nation, as we others see it, is suspended. In recent weeks we have eliminated Wednesday afternoon sittings of the Senate. I do not know what other changes will take place, but I think that we have gone a long way from the customary practices of this chamber.

I will not develop any argument against caucus being held on Wednesday mornings, because I know the feelings of honourable senators in that respect, but I still insist that the business of the nation should come before any other consideration and, if there is business to be done in the Senate, it should be done regardless of caucus meetings.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Molson: I hate to remember how long I have been here, but Wednesday mornings were always held open for meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Those meetings usually took place from 9 a.m. or 9:30 a.m. until lunch time, and sometimes continued even after lunch. Those who attended caucus because they felt that that was their primary duty went to caucus, but it was not because caucus took precedence over meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. The change has been a modern development; let us not pretend to ourselves that it has been in effect for a long time, because it has not. I know that Senator Croll, Senator McGrand and others will agree with me that, when we started in this chamber, Wednesday mornings were always devoted to committees. Nor do I not think the practice of not sitting on Wednesday afternoons should be perpetuated as a tradition. We should return to what we have done historically and traditionally, sitting on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, unless there is additional business in which case we sit on Mondays and Fridays. I certainly do not think we ought to accept the current practice as the custom and tradition, because I firmly believe that it is not.

• (1420)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I said that, if it was a tradition, it was a new one. I agree with Senator Molson and I take full responsibility for having suggested and promoted the idea of sitting at 2 o'clock on Tuesdays. My reasoning was that, if the other place sat afternoons and not evenings and had their evenings available for committee meetings and that sort of thing, we should try to follow suit.

With respect to Wednesdays, I must take part of the responsibility for not sitting on Wednesdays. Senator Molson knows that I urged Senator Hayden not to have his committee meet on Wednesday mornings. As usual, Senator Molson was delicate in his criticism of the suspension of sittings of the Senate or of committee meetings because of caucus, saying that from his point of view that was not the nation's business. On behalf of those who consider the activity of the major political parties in caucus part of the nation's business, I should simply like to make that point.

Concerning Wednesday afternoons, I really wanted to leave that as an experiment and not to try to establish it as tradition. The reason I wanted to try it as an experiment and asked honourable senators to support it was that almost inevitably four committee chairmen were asking for leave to sit while the Senate was sitting on Wednesday afternoon. It was getting so out of hand that I was having to tell honourable senators I could not allow more committees to meet. The pressure seemed to be for committees to meet rather than for the Senate to sit. I would suggest that we continue the experiment, at least for this session, and consider whether we want to follow that practice in the next session. To reiterate, the reason was to try to accommodate the de facto situation that there seemed to be pressure for meetings on Wednesday afternoons; that was why I suggested we try that experiment.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. What does he mean by a new tradition? Does he not mean a break with tradition?

Senator Frith: I suppose a new tradition would be, as he says, a break with tradition, but it would also be a tradition of shorter duration. Whatever tradition the new tradition broke with, do not forget that it, too, started sometime.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I am for change when change is beneficial, but if you are going to adopt a different mousetrap, let us make sure that the new mousetrap is superior to the old one. I do not see the advantage of having the Senate sit on Tuesday afternoon as opposed to Tuesday evening. Only last week I pointed out that some of us have to be up at 4.30 in the morning to catch a 6 o'clock flight to be here by 9 o'clock in the morning. Getting up at 4.30 in the morning means the day is ruined.

Is there some strong and definite advantage to be gained by us adopting this new procedure? Is it necessary? If not, I would plead with the deputy leader to revert to the Tuesday evening sitting, which would at least allow some of us to get a decent night's sleep.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Rowe for his proof of the soundness of the remark I made at the end of my first intervention, namely, that my arguments for a Tuesday afternoon sitting were, to those opposed to it, as persuasive as they ever have been—that is, not at all.

While I find it difficult to find an overpowering reason in support of this new schedule, I believe it has been working well in terms of committees. There have been more committee meetings on Tuesday evenings than there used to be on Tuesday afternoons. Of course, to have a Tuesday afternoon committee meeting would not solve Senator Rowe's problem of having to get up at 4.30 in the morning.

I think we should try to continue with this arrangement. Perhaps the answer to Senator Rowe's problem is for the Senate to sit on Monday evening at 8 o'clock; then, of course, he would not have to rise so early to be here for Monday evening and he would be fresh and alert for Tuesday.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Maybe we should sit on weekends.

Senator Asselin: I hope that is not blackmail.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION

STATUS OF BILL S-31

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

For over a year, a Senate Committee has been examining Bill S-31, a Bill that is aimed at limiting investments by the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec and similar institutions in national and interprovincial transport corporations to 10 per cent, all this to prevent, as was repeated a number of times before the Committee, control by such institutions of a company like Canadian Pacific Ltd.

Bill S-31 is perceived by Francophones as an attempt to bring about separatism in reverse, as Senator Tremblay said in Committee. In other words, to prevent the Caisse and other institutions in Quebec from investing in national and interprovincial corporations that offer a higher return and higher dividends than other companies.

The fact that Bill S-31 was tabled before a Senate Committee, with the retroactive effect of freezing the percentage of investments by the Caisse in Canadian Pacific Ltd., had a very detrimental effect on this and other institutions in Quebec.

I would like to know first of all—I have other questions I will ask subsequently—whether the Leader of the Government intends to have Bill S-31 passed during this session.

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the principles of Bill S-31 embody the policy of the Government of Canada in that respect. However, a number of matters were raised some time ago during meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and, more recently, during meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which the bill has now been formally referred by this chamber. A number of matters were discussed, including that which was raised by Senator Asselin having to do with shares that are ultimately or beneficially held by a provincial government and the manner in which the voting rights would be maintained and so forth.

We are seriously examining the arguments that were made and will come back to the committee with reasonable amendments that will not do damage to the principles of Bill S-31—amendments that will respect the previous position. In other words, honourable senators, it was never intended that this bill should retroactively diminish the value of any shares.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate aware of the fact that amendments have been added to the original Bill? The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mrs. Erola, submitted these amendments to the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. The amendments did not meet with the approval of the witnesses who testified before the Committee. In fact, they told us that the two amendments, submitted by Minister Erola to the Committee in an attempt to upgrade a Bill that had been set aside because of its defects, instead of helping the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec and Quebec's other financial institutions, would make them even worse off. The Caisse would be prohibited from investing in thirty-five national transport companies and possibly be prevented from doing so in a hundred other companies involved in various economic sectors, including transport. Everyone in Quebec has emphasized the drawbacks implicit in this Bill for the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec and the SGF and other financial institutions in that Province.

I could send my honourable colleague clippings from the Francophone press, which would give him some idea of the opposition to this Bill in Quebec. The Montreal Gazette takes the same stand. Therefore, in view of major objections by the Chambers of Commerce of Montreal and the rest of the Province, and by businessmen who are asking the Government to withdraw this defective Bill, will the Leader of the Government advise the Government to withdraw this legislation? Could the Leader of the Government give us further details at our next sitting? Can the Leader of the Government give me the assurance that this Bill will die with the present session?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I cannot give that assurance, because that is not the intended and stated policy of the government.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Is it the intention of the minister to move a motion at the end of this session so that the bill will be re-introduced unchanged and at this stage in the next session?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friend knows that there cannot be a commitment from one session of Parliament to the next session. However, with respect to the amendments placed before the committee for its consideration by the minister, the Honourable Judy Erola, views have been expressed on the method of dealing with some of those amendments as well as with others. The one that I explained a few moments ago appears to be worthy of serious consideration. The minister gave an undertaking that she would consider the views expressed and might again appear before the committee with further modifications. That is still the position of this government. November 3, 1982, is the date provided in the bill, and that date is still valid.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: In the other place yesterday, in answering questions from Mr. Clark and other members concerning this bill, the Deputy Prime Minister stated that the bill is before the Senate and that it could not be debated in the House of Commons at the same time. However, we can talk about it in the Senate. Could the Leader of the Government tell us the nature of the other amendments which the minister, Mrs. Erola, wants to introduce in committee to improve the bill?

[English]

Senator Olson: It is possible that some of those matters could be discussed. If I recall correctly, the honourable senator was present for at least part of that meeting. I know that Senator Tremblay was present throughout the meeting. A number of matters were discussed including that of ensuring the continuation of, I believe the term is, grandfathering the rights respecting shares already held. The government is now giving consideration to an amendment that would accommodate the views expressed, at the same time keeping in mind the fact that the date and principle involved in the bill remain government policy.

As I have already explained—and I see no reason why I should have to repeat it—some impressive arguments were made concerning the value of shares already held; in other words, the question of grandfathering those shares and also the voting rights. Once we have considered the matter to accommodate the legitimate views expressed, the minister will introduce a further amendment to give effect to those views.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. If I understood the answer correctly, further amendments will be moved by the cabinet minister responsible for that sector. My question is about the proceedings of the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce chaired by Senator Barrow. I know for a fact that several groups or institutions want to appear before the committee. They would like to express their views on the relative importance they attach to the amendments which have already been introduced. It would be imperative that these groups be made fully aware of all the amendments to be introduced. There have been four already so far. According to the newspapers and the remarks of the Leader of the Government, I have the impression that there will be more to follow up some of the remarks made before the committee. How will the committee be able to arrange its schedule to accommodate the organizations which have asked to be heard? That is my question about the committee proceedings.

● (1440)

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we have heard a number of views on these matters over, as Senator Asselin pointed out, nearly a year now. It seems to me that it would be better for everyone who is keenly interested in this bill to wait to see the amendments first and then express their views. It may be that the amendments will be so acceptable that those interested will say, "The bill meets all our aspirations and requirements."

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: I am not making a judgement on the value of future amendments in light of those which have already been introduced. I would not dare prejudge the value of future amendments. In any case, we agree that it is important for the groups which want to give their views on all amendments to be able to consider the latest amendments. Therefore, should I conclude that, if those amendments are tabled this or next week, the groups concerned will be invited to appear the following week? They have to know when they will be able to consider the new amendments. Therefore, if they are called before the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, they will have some idea of the time they will be appearing.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Tremblay knows as well as I do that he is asking his question not only of the wrong person but in the wrong context. The committee chairman and the steering committee make decisions as to who will be invited to appear before the committee. That is the way it has always been done. The honourable senator recognizes, as does the Acting Leader of the Opposition, the impropriety of my either denying or giving that assurance; that is up to the steering committee. It seems to me that, under the circumstances, the reasonable attitude is to await the amendments the minister proposes and then work out the other matter afterwards.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: We have no idea when the minister will introduce these new amendments. If I am talking to the wrong person when I direct my question to the Leader of the Government, I can very well put it to the chairman, since it has to do with committee proceedings. Is that what the Leader of the Government meant by his remarks? I can and will indeed do just that.

[English]

Senator Olson: Senator Tremblay should understand by this time that I have already indicated that the ministry is working on the amendments. That is clear and there is no question about it. I do not know what the chairman of the committee can say until he has seen the amendments. I am not even sure that he will call a meeting of the committee until the minister and her department have finished preparing the amendments for presentation to the committee. I see no purpose in calling a meeting until the amendments have been presented. Then the other questions, whether they be directed to the chairman of the committee speaking on behalf of the steering committee or to the Leader of the Government, can be answered with a little more precision. We have to wait until we have seen the amendments presented to the committee.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: Logically, a supplementary question stems from the answer which I have just been given. We have no idea when the minister will table new amendments—maybe this week, maybe next week, and maybe never. May we know at least whether the amendments will be tabled before the end of this session? The Deputy Leader of the Government said a moment ago that the session might be prorogued next week, nothing definite, but a possibility. Now then, will the amendments be tabled before the end of this session? If not, could the Leader of the Government tell us what procedure will be used so that the bill does not die on the Order Paper when the session ends?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I realize that Senator Tremblay is on a fishing expedition, although he legitimately wants the information. However, his questions are hypothetical. I do not know what day the amendments will be presented to the committee. What I am fairly sure of—and perhaps the honourable senator can ask the chairman—is that there will be no meeting of the committee this week. However, when the minister is ready, possibly next week, no doubt she will get in touch with me and the chairman of the committee to arrange a meeting so that she can present those amendments. So, no matter how concerned Senator Tremblay may be, he shall simply have to wait until the amendments are ready and until the rest of the process I have described has matured.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Is it the intention of the chairman of the committee to convene a meeting of the committee on Bill S-31 before the end of this session?

Hon. A. Irvine Barrow: Honourable senators, I really do not know my intentions. I am waiting for the minister to bring forth her amendments and until the people required to appear before the committee have been so advised.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a final question for the Leader of the Government.

We, of the Opposition from Quebec, are not alone in complaining about Bill S-31. Members of the Quebec Liberal caucus are also complaining. The Member of Parliament for Montmorency made a statement, as did the Member for Lévis. I would like to know whether the Member for Saint-Denis, Mr. Prud'homme, was speaking on behalf of the federal Liberal caucus when he replied to a question asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition simply by saying: "Do not worry about Bill S-31; it will die on the Order Paper in the Senate."

Does the federal Liberal caucus really believe that Bill S-31 will die on the Order Paper in the Senate as stated by the Member of Parliament for Saint-Denis, Mr. Prud'homme?

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Acting Leader of the Opposition hardly needs to go to the effort of conveying to me what members of the Liberal caucus have said from time to time, because I am keenly interested in what they say.

Senator Asselin: The only thing I can say to my honourable friend is that, if he wants to pass this bill before the end of this session, we on this side of the house will put up a good fight.

PENITENTIARY ACT PAROLE ACT

STATUS OF BILL TO AMEND

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Last spring, this chamber—and, subsequently, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs—was pressed by the Solicitor General to proceed with Bill S-32, to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act. The committee, chaired by Senator Neiman, held many meetings, including a number with the Solicitor General because of the pressing nature of the bill. That bill was passed by us on June 9, 1983. If that matter was as urgent and pressing as we were told, can the Leader of the Government indicate where it is now?

• (1450)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): We are doing a quick check right now.

Senator Nurgitz: My information should be checked.

Senator Olson: I am not sure whether they have made any progress.

Senator Nurgitz: That is precisely my point. I was extremely interested in whether there had been any progress. We were informed that dangerous offenders were being released and that the streets would not be safe unless the Senate moved quickly. Could we have a report on the progress on this matter?

Senator Olson: The house leader is looking up that information, Senator Nurgitz. He usually has all these matters at his fingertips in order to make immediate responses.

In the meantime, I can deal with the other part of the question, with respect to the urgency expressed in the committee and on the floor here. I cannot really comment with respect to its still being the case or not in the other place. I cannot really say what will happen in the other place, although perhaps spokesmen for the government would make the same arguments. However, the old adage is just as true today as it ever was, that is, that government proposes and opposition disposes.

Senator Nurgitz: Are we to assume, without any information at all from the deputy leader, that the fault is the opposition's?

Senator Olson: Usually it is.

Senator Nurgitz: Usually it is, and I accept that. However, I understand that the deputy leader may have a substantive answer.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it appears on the order paper in the other place, as Senator Nurgitz knows, as an "S-" bill received from the Senate. The honourable senator already has that information.

With respect to where it stands in terms of priorities, I would like to make an up-to-date inquiry in order to have an answer for next week.

TRANSPORT

AIRPORT FIREFIGHTERS—HOURS OF DUTY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like the Leader of the Government to take a question as notice for the Minister of Transport. It has to do with Transport Canada changing its regulations with respect to the number of hours that firefighters work protecting airports. The hours have been reduced from 16 to 12 hours. This situation is in effect at the Stephenville airport in western Newfoundland.

I cannot understand the justification with respect to reducing hours or the savings that might accrue, since Transport Canada has announced as an alternative that these firefighters would be called out on overtime, if necessary. In light of the imminent danger with respect to reducing firefighters' hours, can the leader determine from the Minister of Transport the justification for such a change in the regulations?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Yes, I will take that question as notice.

SENATE REFORM

REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—DELAY IN TABLING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government a question. I would have liked to put it to Senator Molgat in his capacity of co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform. I understand that this committee was to table its report on December 1, 1983.

Can we expect this report to be tabled on December 1 or will the Committee ask for an extension because its report will not be completed by that date?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have already discussed this problem with Senator Molgat who is the co-chairman of the Committee.

It seems that the Committee is not ready to table its report. Senator Molgat has raised the possibility of asking for an extension. We are preparing a motion to this effect. He has informed me that it would be better to move a joint motion before both Houses of Parliament. I hope that you will realize as I do that this is what we intend to do. This motion will probably be introduced next week to provide for an extension until the end of January, 1984.

DISARMAMENT

PRIME MINISTER'S INITIATIVES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Considering the fact that the Senate will not reconvene until next week, I think it would be appropriate for us to know something of the peace mission to Asia of the Prime Minister and his retinue. We have been told that in Japan the Prime Minister met a very important and distinguished emissary from the Soviet Union and—

● (1500)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): If the meeting had not been unfavourable, you would not think that he was so distinguished.

Senator Asselin: It has been said that this emissary from the Soviet Union was not too encouraging about the peace mission of the Prime Minister of Canada. We have been told also that the Prime Minister sent an ambassador, Mr. Geoffrey Pearson, to China and to the Soviet Union to find out whether the Prime Minister's goals and objectives with respect to this peace mission would be well received in those two countries.

My question is: Can the Leader of the Government give us a report on what the cabinet knows regarding the achievement of the Prime Minister with respect to this peace mission?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I have already replied on one or two occasions with respect to the meeting between the Prime Minister and the senior official from the Politburo of the Soviet Union, Mr. Arbatov—a 30-minute meeting which took place, I think, in Tokyo. The Prime Minister has indicated that Mr. Arbatov said that he was not optimistic that the Prime Minister of Canada could be successful in modifying the views of the United States. That, of course, is not the total requirement. The Prime Minister's objective is to have all the nuclear powers raise their level of consultation and discussion on nuclear weapons in order to avoid an escalation of any series of events that would lead to the use of those weapons.

At the moment, I am unable to give a report of the mission of Ambassador Pearson. I think he is still in Peking, although today he may be flying back to Tokyo before proceeding to Moscow. I think that his first report of those meetings would be to the person who sent him, namely, the Prime Minister of Canada, so I am sure that Mr. Pearson will report to the Prime Minister first.

Hon. Eric Cook: Perhaps the Leader of the Government would tell us which Liberal rally we should attend in order to find out the details of those meetings.

Senator Olson: I was referring to the ambassador's report, and that would be to the Prime Minister, in the first instance. As soon as I hear the details of that report, I shall report to Senator Asselin and to this chamber the results of those preliminary discussions.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: I am sure that all senators are hoping that the Prime Minister will be successful in his mission.

Senator Olson: I am sure that we are all wishing that the Prime Minister will be successful in dealing with this terribly difficult situation.

Senator Asselin: I want to say to my good friend from St. Boniface that I have already conveyed to the Prime Minister my good wishes for his trip.

Senator Guay: I am very pleased indeed to hear that, and I hope that you are speaking for all of your party.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, as a member of the Conservative Party, I would like to state that I certainly wish that the overtures being made by the Prime Minister will be fully successful. I am very interested in them and am exceedingly anxious to learn the results of his efforts at the earliest possible moment.

My supplementary question is: Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us when the next Liberal convention or meeting will be held, so that we can plan to attend and hear the results announced at the earliest possible moment?

Hon. Jack Marshall: As long as it costs under $200 a seat to attend.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: I have a question for the Leader of the Government, which he can take as notice.

In view of the fact that in Argentina, for the first time in over 40 years, a government has been elected that is neither a Peronist nor a military government, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister of France and the Prime Minister of Spain will be attending the inauguration of the new President, together with a large number of other very important people, including the Vice-President of the United States, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government who will be representing the Government of Canada at this very important event which is, as I say, something that the people of Argentina have been awaiting for the last 40 years.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I can assure Senator Stollery that I shall put that question later today and, if a decision has been made as to who will attend this event, I shall obtain an answer.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

EFFICACY OF TEAM SPORTS

Hon. Jack Marshall: I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning the findings of a Canada Fitness Survey on Youth and Physical Activity. This survey, for some reason or other, blames the mediocre level of fitness of youth on the proliferation of team sports. This, to me, is a contradiction of everything that we have learned over the years and of what has been preached to youth, that team sport is the essence of comradeship and an aid to youth in functioning in society.

As a result of reading the article, it seems to me that the new Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, the Honourable Céline Hervieux-Payette, is in agreement with this report and I would ask the Leader of the Government to find out what further studies and discussions will take place to determine whether it is indeed true that team sports are now considered a detriment to the physical development of our youth.

It seems strange that the corporate sponsors and the executive directors of the administration of the Council of Amateur Sport have as their heading, "An Unbeatable Team".

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The problem with that question is that there were at least three assertions in the preamble to it that were also questions. Senator Marshall, of course, is an expert at creating a debate in the preamble to his questions, and he has done a superb job again this afternoon. He is a master of the art, and I admire that, although I am not sure that it complies with the rules.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is a masterful non-compliance.

Senator Olson: As Senator Frith has just said, it is a masterful non-compliance with the rules. In any event, he says that it flies in the face of all the things that he has learned about sports; then he says that the minister seems to agree with it; then he comes up with two or three other arguments and finally he asks me if I can comment on it. If the minister has studied the report and is prepared to comment on it, I shall obtain that comment. I do not expect that that will be an answer to all of his concerns, and it is not intended to be.

• (1510)

Senator Marshall: During the new session we hope that the Committee on Social Affairs will have under its umbrella fitness and amateur sport. Would the leader promise to ask that committee to study this report and call witnesses on it?

Senator Olson: No, not in this case nor in the one raised by honourable senators a few minutes ago. Those matters, of course, can be brought up for discussion during steering committee meetings.

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN INDUSTRIES LIMITED—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a very good question asked by Senator Roblin on October 11 concerning the government's security position on the assets of Maislin Industries Limited. Since this is the only delayed answer I have this afternoon, I shall read it into the record.

Honourable senators, the company's major operating subsidiary, Maislin Transport Ltd., was declared bankrupt on October 19, 1983. The Clarkson Company, which is the receiver for the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, is presently liquidating the assets of the company and applying the proceeds against the debts of the secured creditors.

The government's position is that it has given insurance of up to $27 million in United States funds to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce for any losses which the bank may sustain on $32.5 million of United States funds in loans. Our position is secured by fixed and floating charges on all of the company's assets, plus the assets of all of the other subsidiary and affiliated companies.

Until such time as the receiver completes the liquidation of all these assets, it is impossible to calculate what loss the bank will sustain. However, the government's liability is limited to a maximum of $27 million in United States funds and it could be considerably less than that.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK—VIA RAIL SERVICE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Riley on November 1, 1983 regarding Amtrak Trains.

I have been in contact with the Honourable Ed Lumley, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion. He has advised me that his officials are presently having discussions with railroads about the purchase of the two Amtrak trains. The minister has promised to keep me informed of the latest developments as they materialize, and I will keep honourable senators concurrently informed.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I have a supplemenatry question for the deputy leader. He has quoted, I believe, Mr. Lumley with respect to ongoing negotiations. If we can believe the reports we read in the press, there is only one possible buyer of those trains according to Mr. Lumley: VIA Rail is the only possible purchaser. I have been told that, if the trains remain adaptable to the VIA Rail operations, they might cost as much as $51 million.

When I put that question to the Deputy Leader of the Government, I also asked who was responsible for the "boo-boo," but he has not told me that. Why are those trains rusting outside the Bombardier plant?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, first of all, I have no information that anything took place that could be described as a "boo-boo," except by hindsight. I have no information to indicate that the decisions that were made at the time were "boo-boos"; obviously, no one can be held responsible for something that did not happen.

As to the choice between what the press says and what the minister has authorized me to say, I think it would be preferable to rely on what the minister has authorized me to say in Parliament rather than on what the press has quoted him as having said.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

WRITTEN QUESTION NO. 130 WITHDRAWN

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, with leave, I request that Question No. 130 be removed from the Order Paper. I have received an answer to that question directly from the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Question withdrawn.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, 1983 at 2 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1984

November 22, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, were referred, does, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Monday, November 14, 1983, report as follows:

The Subcommittee on Estimates, chaired by the Honourable Senator Doody, was authorized by the Committee to examine and report to the Committee upon the expenditures proposed in Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

In obedience to the foregoing, the Subcommittee heard evidence from the following witnesses from the Treasury Board: Mr. J. L. Manion, Secretary; Mr. J. J. Noreau, Deputy Secretary; Mrs. Ruth Hubbard, Assistant Secretary; and Mr. Rolph Cook, Director, Crown Corporations Division, Program Branch.

Supplementary Estimates (B) totaling $1,893.4 million, is the second supplementary for the fiscal year 1983-84. The total 1983-84 estimates tabled to date are thus $90,251.5 million. Of the $1,893.4 million contained in these supplementary estimates, $77.6 million represent the net adjustment to items with a statutory authority. These payments are non-discretionary in nature. The remaining $815.8 million represent new spending authorities that Parliament is being asked to approve.

Treasury Board supplied the Committee with a list of $1 Votes included in these estimates, which is attached as an Appendix to this Report.

Secretary of State—Canada Student Loan Program

When the Subcommittee heard testimony on Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year 1982-83, it reported that it was concerned that the interest rates paid by the government and recipients of Canada Student Loans to designated lending institutions were substantially in excess of the prime rate. Upon investigation, it learned that the Canadian Bankers Association, on behalf of its members, have approached the government to change the legislation in such a way as to tie interest paid on student loans to the prime rate. However, to date, the Subcommittee has not received any answer as to why the government has not done so or if it plans to make such changes in the future.

Secretary of State—Education Support Programs Branch

The Subcommittee learned that the Secretary of State has requested $1.45 million for expansion of its post-secondary education statistics collection. While the Subcommittee recognized the need for the federal government to have such data available when negotiating fiscal transfers for education purposes with the provinces, it indicated that greater collaboration should be done with the provinces and Statistics Canada to insure that data of this kind are consistent regardless which level of government does the collection and that there is no duplication of effort between the two levels of government.

Errors in the Estimates

When the Subcommittee questioned the witness about the size of the budget for the Governor General, it learned that figures in the summary table overstated the figure in the detailed table in these Supplementary Estimates by $7.9 million. Upon questioning this discrepancy, the Subcommittee learned that the summary table contained a typographical error and that the detailed table was correct. The Subcommittee indicated strongly that when errors of this nature occur and they are known, an "Errata" should be published, or at least presented to committees of Parliament in order to reduce any confusion that may arise.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT,
Chairman.

LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1983-84

The 11 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed below by ministry along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These One Dollar Votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X".

a. Seven votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)

b. Three votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)

c. One vote which authorizes the amendment of the Adjustment of Accounts Act. (An explanation is provided in the attached Appendix.)

Additional Explanation

Public Works

Vote 6b—Authority is requested to amend the Adjustment of Accounts Act to:

—provide for the inclusion of authority to permit the use of inter-program charging by the Construction Services Resolving Fund within the Department of Public Works; and —increase the drawing authority of the Fund by $95 million to a total of $150 million.

Explanation—The Construction Services Revolving Fund of the Department of Public Works was established as a Working Capital Advance Account by Appropriation Act No. 2, 1967. The initial drawing authority of the Account was $10 million. This authority was later increased to $55 million through the use of several Appropriation Acts.

This Account was included under the Adjustment of Accounts Act (1980) as a Revolving Fund. Section 33 of the Act includes authority to amend certain sections of that Act through an Appropriation Act, including Section 26 which deals with the authority for making payments out of the Fund and with the amount of the drawdown authority.

The inter-program charging authority is needed as a result of a recently approved revision to DPW's Program Structure whereby the Services Program (through the Revolving Fund) is to charge other Programs of the Department for its services in exactly the same way as DPW's reimbursing clients (such as Correctional Services, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, etc.) which now pay for these same services. These new arrangements will enable the Department to initiate the changes required for the eventual implementation of revenue dependency.

It is also proposed to increase the existing drawdown authority to a maximum of $150 million. This increase of $95 million is required to permit the Revolving Fund to carry out an expanded volume of business operations resulting from:

(a) Implementation of the inter-program charging referred to above;

(b) The transfer of responsibilities from Public Works to the Canada Post Corporation and the Ministry of Transport (Marine); and

(c) Additional volumes of business due to New Employment Expansion Development and Special Recovery Capital Projects Programs carried out through the Fund for other departments and agencies.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-96, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before leave is granted to move the motion perhaps this might be an appropriate opportunity for the leader of the house to tell us what the total program will be for the balance of this week in order that we can understand how this request for special procedure fits in with our total picture.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first, I would like to welcome back Senator Roblin as Acting Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have been discussing the plan with Senator Roblin's colleague, Senator Asselin, and I hope it is a plan we can achieve.

There will be three messages from the Commons this evening. The first one with respect to Bill C-96 has just been read by His Honour the Speaker. We will also receive messages with Bill C-172, to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act, and Bill C-171, to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.

If leave is granted I will present government sponsorship of these three bills this evening at second reading. Then if there are senators opposite who wish to speak to these bills they will be given the oportunity to do so. I might say that these three bills are more or less routine, although not totally. I do not think they are controversial. We may be able to complete second reading of these three bills tonight but, of course, that is not necessary since there will be no Royal Assent this evening. We would then meet tomorrow at 2 o'clock in order to have our Question Period, and also to deal with anything left over in terms of second reading debate with respect to the three bills I have just mentioned.

It is almost certain that the appropriation bill will pass the other place at 5.45 p.m. tomorrow. There is also a very good chance that Bill C-170 will also pass the other place tomorrow. This means that there will be two more bills ready for our consideration by tomorrow evening. We will then ask the Senate to sit tomorrow evening in order to deal with the two bills I have just mentioned.

Since Senator Bonnell's committee, the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, will wish to deal with Bill C-170, if we receive it, I will be asking the Senate to approve a pre-study of it. I will then be asking permission of the Senate for that committee to sit while the Senate is sitting tonight, and perhaps to continue tomorrow morning. This would bring us to the 2 o'clock sitting tomorrow afternoon.

As I have said, we would then also sit Tuesday evening in order to deal with the appropriation bill and Bill C-170. We would then give the committee a chance, if it so wishes, to meet on Wednesday morning. We hope to have Royal Assent and prorogation Wednesday afternoon by 3 o'clock.

If everything I have outlined up to now takes place, we will ask the Senate to sit at 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning in order to receive the committee's report on Bill C-170. This, of course, assumes that the bill will have gone through the stages I have mentioned. We would then reconvene at a time agreed upon, perhaps 2 o'clock, and then have Royal Assent. We would then prorogue with a prorogation speech to be delivered at about 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon.

At the moment I cannot give honourable senators the exact date on which we will resume after the prorogation, but I am reasonably sure it will be during the following week, probably Wednesday or Thursday. We would then begin a new session with a Speech from the Throne.

Those are the plans, honourable senators. I know that things can change. In a sense they are plans, predictions and hopes. However, Robbie Burns' law and Murphy's law apply here, as I suppose they do everywhere in the universe, so we cannot guarantee anything. This is the program we are asking honourable senators to support for the next three days.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend. My colleague, Senator Asselin, has outlined to me the conversations he has had with Senator Frith so the rough outline of what he had to say is familiar to me on that account. I suspect that Bills C-96, C-172 and C-171 will not cause us much problem because they are not of a highly contentious nature, and they can probably be dealt with expeditiously.

The fisheries bill is a horse of a different colour. It is a very difficult bill and we are going to have to take advantage of all the time we have to give it proper consideration. Therefore I agree with my honourable friend that it would be a good thing to proceed with the pre-study of the fisheries bill as early as possible. It would be advantageous, however, if the committee could be supplied with the amendments that are being considered, some of which have been accepted in the other place and others which have been proposed, so that the committee will have the full picture on amendments agreed to and amendments that are possible for their consideration. I think that those of us on this side of the house would be disposed to agree to those exceptions to our rules to enable us to complete debate on this bill in order that we may prorogue at the time that has been suggested. I would be quite willing to accept the suggestion that the house meet on Wednesday morning, if necessary, in order that we have as much time as possible to debate the fisheries bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin's suggestion with regard to the information on the amendments on the fisheries bill is not only reasonable but desirable. The chairman of the committee, Senator Bonnell, is here and I am sure has made a note of that suggestion and, if the Senate gives the permission that I shall be asking for shortly, Senator Bonnell proposes to have a meeting of the committee this evening at 8.30 with the minister in attendance.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Will the deputy leader permit a question concerning the activity on Wednesday afternoon? As I understand it, we shall be proceeding to prorogation on Wednesday afternoon and the deputy leader, in describing it, used the words "prorogation speech". Can the deputy leader give us any indication as to whether the prorogation speech will be as protracted as the session has been? I ask that in all seriousness because of my own commitments on Wednesday afternoon, and in order that I shall know whether I can plan to be elsewhere at a certain hour in the late afternoon.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I shall attempt to obtain a more accurate estimate as to the time element, having in mind any travel plans that honourable senators might have.

Perhaps the only way I could answer the question about the relationship between the length of the session and the length of the prorogation speech would be to look at previous prorogation speeches, calculate how long they were and make a mathematical comparison to the length of the session that they prorogued. I suspect, if I did that, I would share Senator Donahoe's concern that the speech might be rather protracted. However, I shall attempt to obtain a better estimate as to how long the proceedings might take because, as I say, the plan is that we shall prorogue at 3 p.m. I thought that meant we would have all the speeches and Royal Assent before that time and then actually prorogue at 3. However, I shall find out for sure and report to honourable senators tomorrow.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Might I ask the deputy leader if there is a deadline on completion of the debate in this chamber on Bill C-170?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the government has made it clear that it wants this bill passed before prorogation, and if it is not passed it will die on the order paper. I would not like to use the word "deadline", but certainly the government is very anxious to have that bill passed before prorogation, and that is why we are going to have these extended committee meetings. As I said earlier, we have that as a target to shoot for. Whether we shall achieve it remains to be seen.

• (2010)

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, because there are many aspects of the bill which affect each of the four Maritime provinces—aspects which will cause longer debate in the committee and in the chamber—does the deputy leader think it is fair that the Senate should be presented with a controversial bill, a bill which has taken approximately three weeks to be passed by the House of Commons, just before prorogation?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I would rather not comment on whether something is fair or not.

What we are trying to do is make as much time available to the committee as is possible so that as many witnessess as are available can appear before the committee. We are also providing time to the committee so that it can profit from some of the study which was conducted by the committee of the other place, although it cannot necessarily benefit from all of that study.

Whether or not it is fair to ask the Senate to pass this bill by Wednesday I would leave until we see how the committee does and what it recommends. On Wednesday, when the committee makes its report, we will find out whether the committee members thought they had enough time to consider the bill, given all the circumstances. I would not want to prejudge that.

Senator Marshall: I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is his intention to call a meeting of the steering committee so that we can decide on what witnesses will appear before the committee. Evidently, there are many independent fish processors across the country who are not aware of this bill. What is the intention of the chairman of the committee with respect to getting the committee in motion?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, the bill has not been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science yet, and perhaps it will not be referred to that committee. However, in the event that the bill is referred to that committee, I, as chairman, have had the minister stand by to answer questions on policy this evening, and after that meeting is over the members of the committee will decide on which way to proceed.

The minister will be present in the House of Commons for third reading tomorrow, so I thought we should have him appear before the committee this evening so that we can ask him questions on policy.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with respect to prorogation on Wednesday afternoon, I fail to see the necessity of a deadline. The new session will not commence until next week, as I understand it. I can recall a prorogation taking place in the morning, with a Throne Speech delivered in the afternoon of the same day.

The members of the House of Commons can go home on Wednesday afternoon and the Senate can continue with its study on the supplementary estimates and Bill C-170. I am sure that most of the people of Canada would not mind if the members of the House of Commons went home or went to Rangoon. They are fed up with the House of Commons anyway. That would allow the Senate to do its job in a proper manner with respect to both pieces of legislation.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that option is open and has often been the situation in the past. We could adjourn for a short period and then resume for half a day and prorogue in order to commence the new session. That option, as I said, is available, but so is the one I have just outlined, which is the one the government wishes taken.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, my question is for the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science. Do I understand that there is to be a meeting of the committee this evening, and if so, where and when?

The bill is being referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, as I understand it. Is that the committee which studies fisheries?

Senator Frith: Until the new session commences.

Senator Doody: I knew that the industry was in bad shape, but that's ridiculous. Could the chairman comment on that?

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, as I said earlier, no legislation has been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science. The Senate will decide to which committee legislation is referred, and if it should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, I have arranged for the minister to be available to answer questions of a policy nature. We intend to hold a meeting this evening at approximately 8.30 p.m. in room 356-S if the bill is referred to the committee.

Senator Doody: Is the minister in a position to be referred to another committee? Do we have a minister with a travelling portfolio, or something to that effect? I understand that he will go to any committee if, indeed we decide to send the bill to any committee this evening.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I shall be prepared to release him at any time.

Senator Marshall: Would the minister indicate to us whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare is standing by or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Senator Bonnell: I believe that they are all standing by to serve the country at any time.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-172, to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act and to authorize certain payments in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Leave is granted for the motion, but I would like to ask when the bill will be distributed. In my file I do not see Bills C-96, C-172 or C-171. Have they been distributed?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have Bill C-172 and Bill C-171 in my envelope, and Bill C-96 has been there for some time. I am surprised that Senator Roblin does not have them.

Senator Roblin: I will look through my envelope and see if I can find them.

Senator Frith: I am glad to say that the versions that we have are the versions as passed rather than the first reading versions.

Senator Roblin: I only raise the subject because I have a rooted objection to passing a bill before I see it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that point has been made before, and that is why I have always tried to ensure that the bills are distributed. When I was briefed on these bills, of course I was given copies of them, but I am not referring to those copies but to those that are in my package. There must be some mistake if they are not included in Senator Roblin's package.

Senator Roblin: My helpful colleague to my left, Senator Macdonald, has provided me with copies, so I am prepared to proceed.

Motion agreed to.

GARNISHMENT, ATTACHMENT AND PENSION DIVERSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-171, to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

• (2020)

Senator Olson, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-170

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e) and rule 67(1)(k)(vii), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of Bill C-170, intituled: "An Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable Senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), I move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science have power to sit during the sitting of the Senate today, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Martial Asselin: If leave is granted, as it probably will be since this was previously discussed with our Leader, will this prevent the Senate from considering the Bill in committee of the whole on third reading?

Senator Frith: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Petten be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Thompson on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John M. Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Asselin be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Murray on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT PROROGATION

BROADCASTING ON CBC PARLIAMENTARY NETWORK

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move:

> That television cameras be permitted in the Senate chamber for the purpose of recording the Royal Assent and Prorogation Ceremony for broadcast on the CBC parliamentary network.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: By way of brief explanation of this motion, I inform honourable senators that we have received a request from the CBC parliamentary network to televise the Royal Assent and prorogation ceremony which will take place on Wednesday, if all goes as planned. I discussed this matter last week with Senator Asselin and will answer any questions that honourable senators may have about it.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, although I discussed the matter with the deputy leader last week, we did not have time to determine the main purpose behind the televising of this ceremony by the CBC network.

Senator Frith: That is right, honourable senators. When speaking about the television network, I underline the word "parliamentary." The televising will not be done by the CBC general network, in the sense that the televising of this ceremony is not like competition between the networks for the televising of the Grey Cup, or anything of that sort. It is all to be done under the auspices of the parliamentary network, but the CBC does take care of the actual televising for that network.

Honourable senators, I have made inquiries as to the costs involved in the televising. It will not cost the Senate anything to grant this permission.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, is there an hour specified in the motion?

Senator Frith: No, honourable senators, I did not specify either the hour or the day, because we do not know exactly when the prorogation ceremony will take place. I thought it would be better to ask for permission to televise the ceremony whenever it is. In that way, I will not have to make another motion for new permission if the anticipated time of the ceremony should change. In the event that the business of Parliament is prolonged and it becomes obvious that the ceremony will not yet take place, I will ask either to withdraw or to revoke the motion. However, assuming that the ceremony will take place this week, I think it better to leave the motion in its general form.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to know whether this means that we shall be tripping over cables and what-not in the foyer.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I expect that there will be some cables laid in the foyer, but I certainly hope that no one will trip over them.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, since the subject matter of Bill C-170 has been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, as chairman of that committee I wish to advise the house that the committee will meet almost immediately in room 356-S.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate the chairman of that committee on the speed, despatch and efficiency with which he has organized the meeting.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: Obviously the honourable senator is of cabinet calibre. Can he tell me under which of the three titles of the committee the fisheries legislation will be considered—whether health, welfare or science?

Senator Bonnell: Since the fisheries industry is a scientific matter, is good for one's health and is for the welfare of all, the matter has therefore been referred to my committee.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government give us a short report on the state of health of the two ministers who have been absent from the Senate for almost two weeks. Honourable senators expect to be accorded the privilege of having ministers present to answer questions.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree that it is extremely important for ministers to be present in the chamber to answer questions raised by honourable senators, particularly those from the opposition. It is also extremely important that in the interests of Canada's trade, ministers attend meetings and functions outside the Senate. I believe that Senator Austin is presently in China.

Senator Asselin: With the Prime Minister?

Senator Olson: I am not certain about that. I can say, however, that he is visiting China on government business, promoting trade with Pacific rim countries, which, as the honourable senator knows, is important to Canada's future.

Concerning Senator Argue, I understand that he has now been released from hospital. I have not spoken with him today, but I know that he was quite ill a few days ago. I cannot give the honourable senator any indication as to when Senator Argue will be returning to the chamber.

An Hon. Senator: He may be in Russia.

Senator Olson: No, he has been to Russia. For the information of honourable senators, I will inquire as to when Senator Argue will return to the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

DUTY ON IMPORTED AUTOMOBILES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Approximately a year ago the Canadian government imposed extra duty on the importation of foreign cars. Is it the intention of the Leader of the Government to propose to his cabinet colleagues that duty on imported cars be reduced, and thus support his colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, in his efforts to sell wheat to Russia?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): The honourable senator may not be correct in his comments concerning increased tariffs on foreign cars. If the preamble to his question is inaccurate, then it follows that I have no way of replying to the question.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I disagree with the Leader of the Government that my statement is inaccurate. It is accurate. I ask the Leader of the Government if he supports his cabinet colleague, or his Senate colleague from Saskatchewan, in his efforts to have Canadians buy more Russian cars so that the Russians will buy more Canadian wheat?

Senator Olson: The honourable senator has asked a question that could be the leading edge of a debate and, it being that both he and I respect the rules of this place, I am sure that he would not like to enter into a debate during Question Period, no matter how brief.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION

STATUS OF BILL S-31

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government and concerns Bill S-31. There is every indication that the Bill will die on the order paper when the session is prorogued a few days from now. My question is as follows: Once this bill has died on the order paper, will financial institutions that would otherwise have been affected by this bill be released from any constraints that would have resulted from this legislation?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Tremblay will find a very complete and precise answer to the question he has just posed if he will refer to Debates of the Senate of last Tuesday. I recall that I chose my words very carefully in response to a number of questions posed that day. It is clear that the principles involved in Bill S-31, as well as the effective date of the application of those principles, remain, even though we will probably prorogue this session before Bill S-31 passes into law. At present the bill would be required to pass, not only third reading in this place, but all stages in the other place and Royal Assent. If Senator Tremblay will refer to Hansard at pages 6218 and 6219, he will find very carefully worded and precise answers to the question he just raised.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: I noticed how carefully the Leader of the Government answered Senator Asselin's questions as well as my own. I wanted to make sure that events and statements subsequent to the date on which the Leader of the Government answered my question had not altered the situation. Am I to understand from what he just told us that the principles and effects of Bill S-31 shall remain in effect even if the Bill dies on the order paper, when the session is prorogued within the next few days? This is an important question, because supposedly official spokespersons in the other place used terms which, actually meant—I am not quoting the exact terms that were used—that the Bill had been withdrawn or had died on the order paper. Among interested parties it was understood that as soon as the session was prorogued, the effects of this Bill would disappear. However, you have just told me that they would remain. I just want to make sure that your answer is clear and definite on this point, which is a major one for all concerned.

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should express my appreciation to Senator Tremblay for raising this matter again. However, I think the replies that I gave on November 22 are clear. I said very clearly there that the principles of Bill S-31 embody the policy of the Government of Canada. At that time, I also said that we are seriously examining the arguments that were made, and we shall come back to the committee with reasonable amendments that will not do damage to the principles of Bill S-31; amendments that will respect the previous position. In other words, honourable senators, it was never intended that this bill should diminish retroactively the value of shares, and so on.

However, I would point out to Senator Tremblay that he is getting into an area where I cannot reply. He has asked me for a statement of government policy; that is right and proper and I have given him that reply. If he wishes to take the next step and ask me for a legal interpretation, that is an improper question and I shall not even attempt to reply to it.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: I have no desire to engage in debate during Question Period. However, because of the way the Leader of the Government is opening the door to such debate, I shall repeat my question.

[English]

Senator Olson: This is not a period of debate; it is Question Period.

Senator Tremblay: However, the manner in which the Leader of the Government has answered my previous question has opened the door. He has argued that he does not have to give a legal interpretation of things of that nature and, in my view, that is pretty close to a debate.

However, in the interests of the Canadian public and the Canadian financial institutions in particular, it is an overall problem not only for the financial institutions in Quebec but in all of Canada. When the Leader of the Government says that the principles—and he has used the plural—will be respected, does that refer to the definition of a society and to the limitation in clause 6 to ten per cent of the shares in any corporation which, after November 3, 1982, a government will not be allowed to vote?

The Leader of the Government has said that all those principles, in the plural, will still be there and will still apply. As I demonstrated, I think, a year ago, those principles are present in various places in the bill. In my opinion, I am not asking for a legal interpretation; I am asking for a common sense interpretation.

Senator Olson: It is also partially a legal interpretation but I am not going to quarrel with Senator Tremblay about that for the moment.

The minister who is directly responsible, the Honourable Judy Erola, said that she intended to return to the committee with some amendments that were in response to—

Hon. Martial Asselin: That is not what she said last week. The Honourable Marc Lalonde said that the bill is going to be withdrawn; that it is going to die in this session.

Senator Olson: The bill is not going to be completed in this session. Everyone knows that, and there is no question about that—

Senator Asselin: The bill is going to die.

Senator Olson: Senator Tremblay asked me last week, and Senator Tremblay is asking me again, what the government's policy is with respect to Bill S-31. He asked me two things. He asked me about the principles that were involved, as well as the effective date, and I would refer him to page 6218 of Debates of the Senate. I would assure him that has not changed since last week and suggest to him that, if he is receiving all of these comments from friends and colleagues in the financial community, he can reiterate very clearly what the government policy is. I do not need to repeat it a third and fourth time, because it was stated very clearly last week. It is clear to us, as well as to anyone else who wishes to make a reasonable assessment of what will happen in the remaining days of this session, that that bill is not going to pass all the stages necessary for it to become law before prorogation.

Senator Tremblay: Then it is clear—and correct me if I am wrong—that the status quo, so to speak, created by Bill S-31 on November 3, 1982 does remain, in fact, after prorogation?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is a legal opinion. It is the government's intention that it stays the same.

Senator Tremblay: Then my question is this: In practical terms for all of us concerned, are the effects the same as if Bill S-31 had been passed?

Senator Frith: No, of course not. That is a legal opinion. They have to judge that for themselves.

Senator Tremblay: You understand me very clearly. I am speaking in the name of those who wish to know how to behave after prorogation, since it has been clearly indicated that Bill S-31 will die. Common sense is telling them that there is no longer a Bill S-31 and that the limitations on all of their own actions have been removed. That is what they want to know.

Senator Frith: Let me try to explain once more, although I think Senator Olson's explanation was very clear. As long as Bill S-31, or any bill is not passed, it is not the law. It is simply an expression of government intention. It has been an expression of government intention until the present, and will remain so until prorogation. We now know, from what Senator Olson has told us, that it will continue to be the government's intention after prorogation. Therefore, the government is making it clear to everyone concerned that it is its intention to continue with the bill. So, anyone who governed themselves in terms of their investments, up until the present, on the basis of Bill S-31 did so because Bill S-31 was a clear expression of government intention, and what Senator Olson is saying to you is that it is still going to be the government's intention. Therefore, people will have to govern themselves as they have done up until now on the basis of their knowledge of the government's intention.

Senator Asselin: You want to save the face of the government.

Senator Frith: There is no face to be saved.

Senator Tremblay: Are we then to understand that we are operating under a system of government by intention, rather than by legislation?

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Frith: That is a conclusion which you have drawn; that is not a question.

Senator Tremblay: It is what you have said.

Senator Frith: No it is not; it is what you have said.

AIR CANADA

REFUSAL TO PUBLISH AUDIT REPORT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Nurgitz on October 19, 1983 concerning the Air Canada audit report, which I ask be taken as read.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

As Senator Nurgitz has indicated, the flying public has expressed concern about safety in the air as a result of a number of recent incidents. Transport Canada shares this concern and has responded in a number of ways to identify problem areas and take steps to ensure corrective action.

Air Canada hired a team led by Captain Buck, formerly of Transworld Airlines, to conduct an audit of their company and it is this audit report, the Buck report, to which Senator Nurgitz's question refers.

Honourable senators can appreciate that the Department of Transport does not consider it appropriate to release this report since Air Canada has chosen not to release it publicly themselves. Nevertheless, the report will be used by the Air Administration in the course of its own audit of Air Canada and any deficiency discovered in that audit will be followed up to ensure that all necessary corrective action is taken.

It is also because of the Minister of Transport's concern for the safety of the flying public that a public inquiry into the Gimli accident was initiated in Winnipeg on November 8, 1983. This will be an important forum at which factual information will be released to the public.

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF CERTAIN CBC TELEVISION STATIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Muir on November 17, regarding the possible closing of certain CBC television stations. Because the answer is fairly long, I ask that it be taken as read.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Honourable senators, let me assure you that this press speculation has no basis in fact. The CBC's owned-and-operated stations play a vital role in ensuring that their viewers have access to a distinctively Canadian television alternative.

The Minister of Communications has never suggested or contemplated the possibility that CBC owned-and-operated stations such as the one in Sydney, Nova Scotia, would be closed down. On the contrary, an essential goal of the government's recently announced strategy for broadcasting in Canada is to ensure that Canadians in all regions continue to enjoy access to an expanded range of Canadian programming. This objective would hardly be served by the demise of CBIT, Sydney, Nova Scotia, or any other CBC owned-and-operated station.

The government has been reassured by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that their owned-and-operated stations have an important place in their future corporate plans and that the CBC has no intention of shutting these stations down.

DISARMAMENT

PRIME MINISTER'S INITIATIVES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to questions asked by Senator Asselin on November 17 and 22, 1983, concerning the Prime Minister's initiative on east-west relations and international security, which I ask be taken as read.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Prime Minister's initiative on east-west relations and international security was discussed by the Deputy Prime Minister/Secretary of State for External Affairs and the American Deputy Secretary of State in the course of consultations on November 15.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs outlined the Prime Minister's primary purpose, which is to arrest and reverse the downward trend in east-west relations and thus reduce international tensions and the risks of confrontation. He referred to the Prime Minister's proposals, which relate to the need to restore confidence and re-establish high-level political dialogue between east and west and include a series of arms control and disarmament proposals.

The American government's official position is general support for the broad purposes of the Prime Minister's initiative, although they have queried some of the specific consultations on these points.

It is hoped that a meeting between the Prime Minister and President Reagan can be arranged in the near future. Arrangements have not been made at this time for a meeting with Chairman Andropov.

SASKATCHEWAN

WATER SUPPLY TO REGINA AND MOOSE JAW

Hon. H.A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Balfour on November 17, 1983, concerning the fresh water supply to the cities of Moose Jaw and Regina. May this answer be taken as read?

Hon. Senators: Agreed

(The answer follows:)

Over the years, PFRA has been involved in a number of studies relating to water supply for the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw. The most recent of these studies was completed in November 1982, at the request of the Province of Saskatchewan. This PFRA report, which was given to the Muirhead Committee charged by the Premier with reviewing Regina-Moose Jaw water supply question, provided brief technical assessments and cost estimates of five alternatives for resolving the two cities' water quality problem. The principal conclusions of the PFRA study were that:

(a) a granular activated carbon treatment system would be effective, would be the least costly of those schemes considered, and would be convertible to other uses should a different solution be adopted in the longer term;

(b) either a pipeline directly from Lake Diefenbaker to the Buffalo Pound Filtration Plant or a regional canal system would be effective in providing good quality water; and

(c) the regional canal system would potentially provide considerable other economic benefits.

Nonetheless the Muirhead report, released in January 1983, recommended the Lake Diefenbaker pipeline as the preferred solution. The water supply question for Regina and Moose Jaw has been under active consideration by the provincial and municipal governments since that time, and the province and the cities formally approached the federal government for assistance in funding a pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker in July 1983. This request was turned down by the federal side but a willingness to consider the activated carbon system and to participate with the province and the cities in the evaluation of long-term regional water supply options to meet the broader needs of Regina, Moose Jaw and southeastern Saskatchewan, including a joint assessment of the regional canal scheme, was made. To date, the province and the cities have not taken up the latter offer but have publicly taken the stance that the question has been studied at length over the years and that construction of the pipeline is the long-term answer. Thus, PFRA has not, to date, undertaken any further studies specifically related to the Regina-Moose Jaw water supply question.

However, the feasibility of a scheme identified as the "Riverhurst East Irrigation Project" is currently being investigated in co-operation with the Province of Saskatchewan and local farm organizations. This scheme would cover a significant part of the area which would be served by the regional canal alternative identified in the earlier Regina-Moose Jaw studies, but is being studied on the basis of its own merits, without consideration of possible multi-purpose benefits. The identified potential for irrigation by farmers in this area was one of the factors which suggested the possible attractiveness of a regional canal scheme.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK—LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Muir on November 17 concerning federal programs available to assist in the transition of the New Brunswick livestock industry.

(The answer follows:)

As mentioned earlier, Crow Rate change would have little or no effect on the New Brunswick livestock industry. Nevertheless, the federal government is in the process of developing an initiative independent of Crow to assist the industry.

Agriculture Canada's Agri-Food Development Strategy for New Brunswick has identified the livestock industry as an important opportunity for development.

Senator Muir also asked on November 17 whether the Crow Rate change would have any effect on the New Brunswick livestock industry.

(The answer follows:)

1. Except for periods of distress grain sales, the price of grain on the prairies is generally the world price minus handling and transport costs. Under Bill C-155 the costs of moving grain on the Prairies will gradually increase from an average of $4.89 per tonne in 1982-83 to about $8.50 per tonne in 1985-86 and $25.80 in 1991-92. The effect of this increase would be lower prairie farmgate prices than if Crow remained.

2. An increase in the Crow rates will have little or no effect on the price of western barley in Eastern Canada and, therefore, the costs to eastern livestock producers, including those in New Brunswick, will not increase as a result. Western barley and corn compete as feed substitute in both the international and Eastern Canadian markets. Because of the dominance of corn in feed grain production, the price of barley is, for the most part, determined by the price of corn.

3. Agriculture Canada has estimated a combined reduction of about $12 million in eastern hog and beef production in 1990 under Bill C-155 relative to keeping the Crow. For New Brunswick dairy, cattle and poultry producers the effect would be negligible since dairy and poultry producers are protected from cost increases through the use of cost of production pricing formulas and feed grain prices in Eastern Canada would not change in response to increasing the Crow rates.

4. Livestock production in Western Canada would experience a moderate increase as a result of Crow rate change. This increase would be generated by relatively cheaper feeding costs. It is estimated that, under Bill C-155, western hog and beef production would increase by about $400 million, most of which would be exported to nearby states in the United States. On the cattle side, there would be a slowdown of movement of feeder cattle from Western Canada to Eastern Canada and this would have a positive effect on the cow-calf sector in Eastern Canada.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. John M. Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(l)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Doody be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Sullivan on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-96, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-96 is an act to amend the Financial Administration Act. Honourable senators will be able to infer from its number that it has been on the Order Paper in the other place for some time. In reading through the bill, I have identified seven categories of amendments. What I propose to do is to read through those categories in order that you will have an idea of what subjects are dealt with in this bill and to give examples of the categories. With that in mind, I have gone through the bill and marked each clause in accordance with what category it falls into so that, if the examples I give are not sufficient, we can deal with particular clauses in the context of those categories.

The first category identified is the package of amendments for modernizing certain provisions regarding financial administration and controls. The example I can give you of the modernizing group is that at the present time the register does not permit the use of computer technology. Consequently, clause 14 of the bill, dealing with section 51, is a change to modernize the techniques. That is one example and there are others.

The second category would better be characterized as streamlining the law to express the principles or the end of a provision rather than the means to produce it. In other words, in some cases, the Financial Administration Act goes on at some length to describe how to do something without making it perfectly clear what it is that is meant to be done. That group of amendments does that streamlining I have referred to. As an example I give clause 7, dealing with section 25.

The third category of amendments is what we characterize as deficiencies—that is, weaknesses—where it is clear that certain powers are to be given with regard to financial administration and control, but where there are deficiencies in terms of the techniques to bring them about. For example, under the Financial Administration Act, the government can guarantee loans and, of course, can honour those guarantees, but there is no expedient mechanism to do so. Up to now oftentimes special acts have been necessary to honour a loan guarantee.

Hon. Martial Asselin: A lien.

Senator Frith: Senator Doody has been very concerned about what he calls letters of comfort and it is really this deficiency that led to letters of comfort because, as I think Senator Asselin knows, there was a weakness in terms of actually carrying out the honouring of these guarantees. I am sorry that Senator Doody is not here because I would like to tell him that if we pass this amendment—-

Senator Asselin: We will let him know.

Senator Frith: Tell him that, if we pass this amendment, while I cannot say that letters of comfort are dead, I think their days are numbered.

The example there is clause 6 of the bill with regard to section 22.

Honourable senators, by way of a footnote, when I talk about a clause, I am referring to the bill; when I talk of a section, I am referring to the act.

The fourth category is a desirable one, which is to improve disclosures through public accounts to Parliament. An example of that is clause 8 regarding section 30.

The fifth category are changes to make the wording of the Financial Administration Act more consistent with the Auditor General Act. An example of that is clause 15, dealing with section 54.

The sixth category is tightening or strengthening the provisions regarding defalcations and, generally, regarding the handling of public money. An example is clause 20 respecting section 92 with regard to public money and property. Hard to believe though it is, although there has been power to deal with defalcations regarding the handling of public money, there has not been with regard to the handling of public property. This amendment remedies that defect and it is in clause 19 regarding section 91.1.

The seventh category is a general clarifying for greater certainty.

Honourable senators, I have marked my copy of the bill and, in the event that honourable senators want to read my speech in order to debate the matter according to my analysis, the clauses would follow in the manner I shall outline. The first part of clause 2 would be in category 5; the second part of clause 2(2) would be in category 7; clause 3 is in category 6; clause 4 is in category 2; clause 5 is category 6; clause 6 is category 3; clause 7 is category 2; clause 8 is category 4; clause 9 is category 3; clause 10 is category 7; clause 11 is category 1 as is clause 12.

I must pause there because although I know that my responsibility is to deal with appropriation bills and the speeches I have given with regard to appropriation bills have not exactly been what we might call best sellers. Honourable senators will recall that at the end of every appropriation bill speech I have given I have said that the ability to pay off loans in foreign currencies was due to a special section in the appropriation acts that I was presenting; but once we pass the amendments to the Financial Administration Act we will no longer have to do that.

I am glad to say that, if we pass the appropriation bill, this will be the last time we will have to do that because that is dealt with in this bill.

That is category one in clause 39(1) as it is referred to, and that is at the top of page 8.

Clause 13 is dealt with in category 3; clause 14 in category 2; clause 15 in category 7; clause 16 in category 4; and then that part of clause 16 dealing with section 56 is contained in category 3. Clause 17 is contained in category 5; and clause 18 is dealt with in category 6 as are clauses 19, 20 and 21. That takes us through to clause 22, which is dealt with in category 1. Clause 23 is dealt with in category 6.

That takes us to page 15 where we deal with clause 24 which relates purely to transitional matters. The consequential amendments are dealt with in clause 25.

Honourable senators, I have described the nature of the amendments. They are somewhat technical and have been through quite a bit of detailed study in committee and, generally, in the legislative process. I believe I have covered all the categories of amendments and would ask honourable senators to support this bill at second reading.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am not sure whether it is the effect of jet lag or some natural deficiency from which I suffer, but I find my honourable friend's explanation rather unenlightening.

I could not follow his categories and I am not just sure what he was trying to explain to us. I think I found the root of the trouble, when he explained in his closing paragraph that this is a technical bill—and, believe me, it certainly is. It is not one of those bills that can be presented under any guise or principle which we usually consider at second reading. I have to admit it is a difficult bill to discuss.

I know the bill has been around for some time; indeed, when it was first introduced in the House of Commons, it was found highly objectionable. It gave the government the right to act in an arbitrary fashion to obtain information that should have been protected in terms of privacy; it gave the government the right to do things to which the Auditor General objected. It was simply not a satisfactory piece of legislation at all.

However, I think it only fair to say that the government was not insensitive to the criticism, because I notice that the bill we are looking at this evening is far different from the one first presented to the House of Commons. In fact, if you have followed the proceedings in the other place, you will have noticed that the bill is honeycombed with amendments that were necessary to strike out those objectionable matters contained in the first instance and to insert those ameliorating, softening phrases required to make it acceptable to the House of Commons.

I have had an opportunity of reading the proceedings in the other place, particularly those relating to amendments which modify the original bill and which bring it into a more acceptable frame than originally was the case.

It is quite impossible to discuss a bill of this kind. It contains umpteen different factors and umpteen different items which are not bound together by a clear principle of any kind, but are purely a succession of administrative changes the government thinks it requires to make the administration of the law easier. It is not possible to deal with it in those terms.

If we have the time to do so, I think we should give it a clause-by-clause examination. That, I suggest, would be best done in the relative committee where we will have an opportunity to ask someone like the Auditor General, who has a great interest in this matter since so much of it comes under his particular purview, to appear before the committee to deal with the clauses, tell us what they mean, whether he is satisfied with them and what other views he may have.

I do not propose to oppose this bill at second reading. It has had a pretty thorough review in the House of Commons. I must admit that the amendments introduced at the committee stage were unusual not only in number but in importance.

If there are no other senators who wish to speak to this bill, it seems to me that we would be well advised to give it a clause-by-clause review and refer it to the appropriate committee this evening. We can then have a proper examination of each of the clauses of what may, indeed, be an important measure.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I have to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-96.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin has quite accurately said that this bill is one which really consists of technical changes. It certainly is not one which contains any clear overriding principle except that of wanting to improve financial administration and control.

I believe the categories I mentioned would be better and more easily followed in print than they could be verbally. It may be that I was too short in my remarks. However, I believe that examination of the bill and of the Debates of the Senate tomorrow will show that the categories I picked do cover all the types of amendment—namely, modernizing; streamlining; correcting deficiencies; improving disclosures; making the wording more consistent with the Auditor General Act, and tightening or strengthening provisions regarding default, which I think is an important category.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: That does not tell us a thing about what they mean.

Senator Frith: The only way to do that is to go through every single clause. That is why it seemed to me that the categories I gave would serve as some sort of guide in any study done in committee.

I do not feel that we should resist Senator Roblin's suggestion to refer the matter to committee.

I am sure the appropriate committee to which this bill should be referred is the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Therefore, when the bill receives second reading, I will recommend that it be referred to that committee for report before third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-172, to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act.

He said: I would remind honourable senators that the act this bill amends was passed May 1, 1982. The act provides benefits to those older workers in designated industrial sectors whose unemployment insurance benefits have run out and who are unable to secure other employment. The general purpose of the act is to ensure that persons over 60, whose benefits have run out, will have an opportunity to receive additional benefits.

• (2110)

The general purpose of the amending bill is to improve the delivery of these benefits. In the administration of the act certain weaknesses were found. I think it safe to say that every one of the amendments before honourable senators will benefit the recipients or the entitled persons. The amendments are intended to make certain provisions of the act more generous, not more restrictive. One such amendment deals with lump sum pension plans. Its purpose is to make such plans more equitable in the sense that they are also more beneficial.

Honourable senators, some clauses of the bill deal with variations between the English and French versions of the act. Dealing with benefits, for example, the word "involuntary" appeared in the English version but did not appear in the French version. This bill removes from the English version the word "involuntary" so that unions, employees and employers can make special arrangements on what would be "a voluntary basis" to enable more people to receive benefits.

The second problem addressed by the bill is known as the "Bill 20 problem."

[Translation]

That is the problem created by Bill 20, as it is designated in Quebec, which will come into force in January 1984, I believe; as a result of this bill, a person aged 60 will have the option of selecting a benefit calculated on an actuarial basis.

Because of the way the legislation we are trying to amend is drafted, the result would be that some people between the ages of 60 and 65 would lose their eligibility.

The purpose of the amendment is to make the two bills compatible and to avoid the possibility that some people between the ages of 60 and 65 might no longer be eligible. There is also the fact that a great many Quebec residents receive benefits under the federal legislation. That is the main reason for these amendments related to the problem created by Bill 20.

[English]

Incidentally, honourable senators, the "Bill 20 problem" involves subsections 5.1 to 5.3 and section 6 of the act. The bill also deals with clarification of the original intent, found in clauses 2 and 4 of the bill which amend subsection 3(8) of the act, which deals with continuation of entitlement.

Following that, there is the question of deduction of survivors' benefits. The administration of the present law has resulted in the deduction of certain survivors' benefits from the benefits under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act. The administration has been bound to do so because of the wording of the original law, and that has been considered to be a mistake because the intention was to have deductions apply only to earnings that are received. This makes sense because, if people receive earnings, it is reasonable that they should be deducted from the benefits. However, to deduct pensions from those benefits is not reasonable and clause 7.(4) respecting subparagraph 17(1)(b)(ii) of the act is there to correct that mistake.

The bill next deals with eligibility criteria, which involves the question of combining entitlement. In simple terms, the four basic designated industries are textiles, clothing, footwear and tanning. When adding up entitlement, one has to have a certain number of years of service in these designated industries. Strictly speaking, one would have to have served all his years of service in only one of those designated industries. Therefore, subclauses 5(1), (3) and (4), dealing with section 13 of the act, make it clear that any combination can be used. In other words, a person can count all of the time spent in textiles, footwear, tanning or clothing or any combination thereof when adding up his years of service.

The bill also deals with what is known as the "Rule of 80." It would seem that, for a rather dull subject, there are some interesting titles for the remedies. To qualify for special benefits under the Rule of 80, there are two basic factors or criteria. One must have a certain age and at least 10 years of service which will add up to the number 80. For example, if someone were 50 years of age and had 30 years of service, he would qualify. There has been an effort made to try to improve this rule so as to bring the age down a little below 50. Obviously, under the Rule of 80, one would have to begin working at a very early age in order to qualify. If it is worked out mathematically, it can be seen that the bottom age will be around 47, which, combined with enough years of service, could still provide a person with the qualifications to receive these special benefits.

Another problem dealt with by the bill—and this is still under the heading of eligibility criteria—is that of administrative delays. Simply put, there is a board which reviews eligibility, and there is often a delay between the time at which the application for eligibility is made and the time at which the board makes its decision. Should the board make its decision in favour of a person's receiving the benefits, and if, in that process, four or five months may have passed, subclause 6(1) ensures that entitlement would be received from the time the original application was made.

There are, contained in the bill, some technical amendments regarding the consolidated revenue fund. The payments are now to be made according to clause 11, which provides for a new section 29.1. The problem arises because there is sometimes difficulty in estimating the amount of money that the department wishes to set aside in order to pay these benefits. If the department runs out of money, a separate appropriation act is always required. Provision will now be made for this in the estimates, but not necessarily through a separate appropriation act. In other words, these provisions will now be the same as those which apply in the case of old age pensions and family allowances.

The seventh group of amendments deals with deductions for lump sum pension plans. This falls under clause 7 of the bill, which deals with section 17 of the act. A problem arose because there was a way to avoid the deductions if a lump sum was taken instead of periodic payments under a pension. That resulted in an inequity to people who did receive periodic payments. Therefore, it was felt that deductions should take place for those persons who could benefit from pensions, whether they be lump sum or otherwise; they are treated in the same way.

Finally, there are some regulatory powers to implement any lump sum deductions. In that connection I refer honourable senators to clauses 7(2)(5) and 10.

Honourable senators, to the best of my ability I have explained the problems addressed in the bill and the solutions offered. In my view, this is a salutary bill. If one is in favour of the concept of last resort for persons whose benefits have run out and who will find themselves in a difficult position with regard to finding other jobs, there is no question that the bill before us tightens up some of the weaknesses contained in the original legislation and generally provides improvement for the benefit of eligible persons. Therefore, I ask honourable senators to support second reading of the bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I was wondering, not too seriously, whether Senator Frith would finally talk about some principle or other at this stage of the debate on second reading of this Bill.

I therefore admired his conclusion which, as I understand, simply means that the principle is explained in the Bill, or rather in the act amended by this Bill, and as for Bill C-172, if it has some purpose, it is to make the act better than it was before in the light of experience.

In fact, as noted by Senator Frith, the act being amended is quite recent. However, it deals with issues which concern important problems for the workers, especially in the sectors listed by Senator Frith, where there were some weaknesses that the legislation implemented a year ago attempted to correct. As evidence that the act implemented last year contained some valid solutions, there is the fact that, at least according to my information, labour organizations, unions and various groups directly involved in these especially weak sectors, made recommendations and suggested improvements on how to better achieve the purposes of the legislation.

Such is the thrust of those amendments, except for some changes of a purely technical nature ensuring agreement between both versions. These amendments, which I am not going to review in detail, include corrections suggested by the people involved based on experience as to how things could be better arranged without however changing the original intent of the statute now in effect.

Therefore, those amendments tend to reflect this still recent experience in order to better achieve the goals set by the legislation passed a year ago. To that extent, the principle is questionable.

There might be a few comments on details I have not very well understood, to which the amendment was addressed. It seemed to me that the original wording was more or less saying what the amendment does say. In that respect, on reading it, this is almost a technocratic masterpiece, but Senator Frith guided us perfectly well through that painful reading, and I do thank him for this. So, as far as we are concerned, there will be no problem about adopting these draft amendments on second reading. Nor shall we insist on having the Bill referred to Committee. If this matter can be expedited by having Senator Frith answer questions put by honourable senators, we are prepared to drop the committee stage after adoption of the second reading stage.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: If Senator Frith speaks now, he will be closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Tremblay is right. I did not restrict the debate to the principle of the bill, which is entirely in order on second reading. I elaborated on certain aspects, as he pointed out, in order to avoid having to refer the bill to committee. I therefore move that the second reading of this bill be agreed to.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

GARNISHMENT, ATTACHMENT AND PENSION DIVERSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-171, to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill deals with the right of a creditor to garnishee the wages of Senate and House of Commons members and staff. Honourable senators will recall that some time ago we passed a bill extending the right of garnishment in connection with members of the Public Service, but it was not clear whether that legislation applied to members and staff of the Senate and the House of Commons. However, a case heard in the Seventh Small Claims Court of Ottawa-Carleton in September involved an employee of the House of Commons, and the court's decision, rendered in mid-October, found that the act did apply to employees of the House of Commons.

The assessment of the amount owing was heard on Monday of this week. The employee involved has appealed the Small Claims Court decision. The ministry is satisfied that the appellate courts would uphold the decision of the lower court, but the appeal process would likely be lengthy and it seems clear that such a delay would not be fair to creditors. Hence, this amending legislation makes it abundantly clear that members of Parliament from both the upper and lower houses, and the staff of the House of Commons, the Senate and Library of Parliament, are subject to garnishment under the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act. This purpose is accomplished by creating a separate division to apply to the House of Commons, the Senate and Library of Parliament. At present the divisions are: (1) departments and certain crown corporations; (2) the rest of the crown corporations; and (3) Canadian Forces. The bill provides for a fourth division, namely, the Senate, House of Commons and Library of Parliament. The fifth division is a general category, which now exists.

Once the bill is passed, necessary regulations will go forward to the Governor in Council. As soon as the Speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate have indicated their approval of the regulations to the Minister of Justice, the way will be cleared for the regulations for the pension diversion portions of the act to be proclaimed into force early in January, 1984. I therefore ask honourable senators to support the bill on second reading.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, after the impressive performance of my honourable friend this evening, considering the fact that a number of senators would like to hear the minister in the committee that is now sitting, considering the poor weather conditions, that people want to go home, and finally, that we should keep some work for tomorrow afternoon, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Asselin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2:00 p.m.

SENATE REFORM

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Reform of the Senate of Canada, presented the following report:

Tuesday, November 29, 1983

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on the Reform of the Senate of Canada has the honour to present its first report.

In relation to its Order of Reference dated Monday, December 20, 1982, your Committee recommends that it be reconstituted and that the matter of the Reform of the Senate of Canada, and the evidence adduced thus far, be again referred to the Committee as one of the first items of business in the next session of the current Parliament. Your Committee also recommends that the deadline for submitting its final report be extended to Tuesday, January 31, 1984.

Respectfully submitted,

SENATOR GILDAS MOLGAT
Joint Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(e), that this report be considered at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit at 4.00 o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, the National Finance Committee wishes to meet at this time to deal with Bill C-96, referred to it last evening. I believe that there are some witnesses called to appear before the committee.

The chairman of the committee, Senator Everett, may want to take the opportunity at this time to announce details of where the committee is meeting, and who those witnesses are, if he thinks it appropriate.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I assume that the meeting will take place in the usual committee room. The witnesses are to be the Comptroller General of Canada and the Deputy Auditor General of Canada. Those are, I think, the witnesses whom the Acting Leader of the Opposition requested and we agreed with him that those witnesses should be invited.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I would like to thank my honourable friend for his diligence in this matter. I think the witnesses selected are the ones we want to hear from.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

REMOVAL OF SEATS FOR ACCOMMODATION OF TELEVISION CAMERAS

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. If Senator Charbonneau wishes to speak today, has provision been made for him to do so in the open, or does he have to speak from behind the "confessional shroud" that conceals the stand for the television camera.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: It was suggested that I cross the floor and sit on the other side.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): And we have provided a confessional for him while en route.

Hon. James R. Balfour: He would need one.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ALGERIA—REFUSAL TO ADMIT STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to inform the Leader of the Government in the Senate that I have observed that the Minister of Agriculture reported that he has had a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture and Agrarian Revolution of Algeria, as well as with his Excellency the Ambassador of Algeria, Salah Mohamed Dembri.

I should like to ask my honourable friend whether this is the same Algerian ambassador to Canada who found it impossible to arrange for the admission to Algeria of the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs who were visiting the Middle East?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): I will determine whether he is the same ambassador who was involved in the refusal.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that my information is that the Algerian ambassador to Canada was requested to arrange for the reception of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs that was travelling in the Middle East. That ambassador found himself quite unable to do so.

I should add to my question by asking my honourable friend to tell us whether he has now received any explanation from the Algerian ambassador with respect to why that courtesy was not extended to the members of that committee.

Senator Olson: No, I have not received any explanation. I should add that I have not sought one, although others in the Department of External Affairs or other departments may have sought an explanation. In any event, if one is now available, I shall obtain it.

THE GREY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO TORONTO ARGONAUTS ON WINNING CANADIAN PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate, since he is a westerner, whether he has considered sending a congratulatory note to the Toronto Argonauts Football Club on the occasion of its brillant victory over the British Columbia Lions during the annual Grey Cup classic.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had not considered that up to now. Let me now express my congratulations to the Toronto Argonauts football team, its players, managers and coaches, as well as to the City of Toronto. I do that very enthusiastically because, after all, my home province won it for so many years that I think it added something to the game to see the Grey Cup move to another city, particularly Toronto, since it has been 31 years since the Argonauts last won it.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, as a governor of the British Columbia Lions Football Club, I wish to say that the West once again demonstrated its warmth and hospitality towards the East by hosting a Grey Cup game that generously permitted the East to win by one point. There should, however, be limits to generosity. We hope that next year, when the game is played in sunny and hospitable Edmonton, the result will be reversed.

In all seriousness, we commend the Toronto Argonauts for ending their long Grey Cup drought, one which has lasted since 1952. The drought for the British Columbia Lions has been just about as long, but we will win the Cup next year.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to welcome the Honourable Senator Argue back to the chamber. I am pleased to see that he has recovered from his illness and trust that all symptoms have left and that there are no after effects. We have missed him and it is nice to have him back.

● (1410)

With that in mind, I would first ask him if he could give us some definition of which of the two contradictory statements on government trade policy would most likely be the dominant one. Is it the purchase of more Lada cars and Belarus tractors, or is it the Honourable Ed Lumley's attitude in which he feels that that is not the government policy but rather a personal opinion of the honourable senator?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I appreciate the remarks in welcoming me back to the Senate. I am pleased to be here, and I am grateful that I feel much better than I have felt in the recent past.

I have been endeavouring to promote Canadian trade and, in particular, Canadian exports of grain for many years, and, I think, in a rather successful fashion. I have also been engaged during part of that time, along with my colleagues, in ensuring that the agricultural and farm implement industries in Canada are healthy and have the chance to compete and grow. Evidence of that is the government's action in supporting the continuation of the Massey-Ferguson company, the Canadian Co-op Implement company and, more recently, the White Farm Machinery company. In order for those farm machinery companies to be successful in marketing farm machinery in Canada, I feel that it is absolutely necessary that farmers in western Canada have the kind of income that is required to buy substantial quantities of agricultural machinery.

Last year, we exported to the Soviet Union approximately $2 billion worth of goods, nearly all of which was grain. At the same time, we imported approximately $43 million worth of commodities, some of which was agricultural machinery.

While travelling in various countries of the world, including the Soviet Union and China, and at every meeting where this subject came up—and it came up at the majority of the meetings—I pointed out that Massey-Ferguson produces excellent combines, Versatile company produces fine tractors and Co-op Implements produces a broader line, and that we would like to see a wider purchase of these commodities. We, as a government, support multinational trade, growing trade and lower barriers to trade. In pointing out to western farmers that Belarus and Lada are companies that are in the Canadian market and that growing trade with the Soviet Union in my judgment is in the interests of all Canadians, I feel that I have been doing a service for everyone in pointing out the need to expand our trade and going in both directions.

Senator Doody: I thank the minister for his reply and I did not mean at any time to imply that he was not a dedicated and, indeed, an effective, salesman for the grain products of this country. Where I have difficulty is in trying to understand and relate the connection between government policy in relation to the manufacturing of motor vehicles, tractors and equipment in Ontario and the export policies of the minister's department. Are we to believe now that there is to be some connection between the sale of wheat and the purchase of Lada cars and Belarus tractors, or is this general concept that the minister was expressing the sentiments of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce when he said that this was not government policy, and that Senator Argue was speaking in his capacity as the minister responsible for selling Canadian wheat abroad? I have some problems with that concept because I was always led to believe in my days in government office that when one spoke as a government minister one spoke with government authority and of government policy. There appears to be a contradiction here, and perhaps the minister would welcome the opportunity to clarify the matter.

Senator Argue: In my judgment, government policy is for a very large volume of trade for Canada in the export field, multinational trade, and a growing exchange of goods between our major customers and ourselves. I feel that what I have said is within the broad framework of that policy. I think the talk of conflict between ministers is in the mind of my honourable friend.

Senator Doody: I have one further supplementary question, and I pose it in my position as a senator from Newfoundland, which gives me probably an equal interest in both the motor car industry and the wheat and grain industry.

Is it the minister's opinion that the western economy would be better off if farmers and others in western Canada bought more Russian-built farm equipment and machinery and cars rather than the equipment manufactured in Ontario? Which would be most beneficial for the economy of the country; and which does the minister suggest should be the proper thrust for the populace of the country to take?

Senator Argue: I do not think we need to talk of one or the other. I say sincerely that I think it can and needs to be both.

[Senator Argue.]

Although no one in this chamber would wish to follow this route, I think the best way to make certain that we do not have markets for the products of the Canadian farm machinery industry in other countries, whose products we might buy, would be to forgo or to no longer be able to obtain the very large grain markets that we have obtained in recent years. Those mammoth sales of western grain have enabled farmers and other Canadians to buy the products of our industries in larger quantities and, in my judgment, have left room for a reasonable growth in goods that can be used in Canada produced in the countries that buy our grain.

I might say that I had the opportunity to visit East Germany when a three-year term trade agreement for the sale of grain was concluded and a general trade agreement was signed. That long-term grain agreement provided, in a term of three years, for the sale of $500 million worth of Canadian grain to East Germany.

Immediately those contracts and agreements were signed, we were invited by our German hosts to go to the Leipzig Fair. At the Leipzig Fair they showed us quantities of their industrial and farm machinery. The major company—which is the state company—producing and showing farm machinery, is a company called Fortschriftt. They showed us a huge combine — perhaps the largest combine I have ever seen. Farmers with us on the delegation were very interested in it, but said that we would have to have huge swaths to accommodate that machine. They said it probably needed dual wheels because, in our soil conditions, it would sink out of sight. They felt that the grain storage tank on the combine was probably too small for the size of the combine and for our conditions, and that it would require a number of trucks to keep it unloaded. The price quoted was rather low, and our farmers suggested that, if the company were interested in selling it, they should send it to the Prairie Agriculture Machinery Institute in western Canada for testing and, perhaps, for modification recommendations. Also being exhibited was a four-wheel-drive tractor that looked to be in the range of 110 to 115 horsepower. Again, our farmers thought that should be tested.

The feeling among the Canadian delegation was that, while we have obtained a market over a three-year period for $500 million worth of Canadian grain, we should say that our market is open to the machinery products of East Germany. We should say that we are willing to facilitate their appearance in our market by recommending that they have their machinery tested by the Prairie Agricultural Machinery Institute.

● (1420)

Trade, I believe, has to be a two-way street. I think that, by obtaining a large market for our grain, we can have the best of both worlds—namely, large grain sales, substantial and satisfactory production in Canada's farm implement industry, and sales of those machines within Canada.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for that lengthy answer. Perhaps the Leader of the Government would keep in mind, the next time he feels that we on this side are being unduly long in our questions, that there is a certain balance in the same respect on the other side of the chamber.

My question was: Which of the two choices does the minister think would be most beneficial to the Canadian economy as a whole, his advice to the western farmers to purchase more Lada cars and Belarus tractors or the purchase of equipment built in Canada? The minister stood up and said, "Both." I would suggest, honourable senators, that probably the farmers can neither afford nor need both. Perhaps we will have to make a choice as to which direction we want to take. I hesitate, however, to provoke the minister, because I realize that it may take another hour or hour-and-a-half to get a response from him.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I do not agree with the implication of my honourable friend. The suggestion that a choice must be made between machines produced in some other country and those produced in Canada may or may not be a feeling that is held on the other side of the chamber.

Senator Doody: I was just asking.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I feel that, if we have a very large market for western grain, as we do now, and if we can hold, develop and expand that market, that is the best possible thing that can be done for the agricultural industry in Canada. I think it is necessary to recognize, at the same time, that some of those benefits which flow from the currency of other countries as a result of our grain sales may be used by our farmers to purchase some of their equipment.

I could remind the honourable senator that there is a third dimension to this matter. I understand that, in the first eight months of this year, our deficit in terms of agricultural equipment from the United States amounts to some $650 million. I would have to check that figure, but that is what I have been informed. Therefore, there are huge quantities of agricultural machinery purchased by Canadian farmers, in this free market system, from the United States. Once again, I think that if our markets are large and continue to expand, everybody gains, including the Canadian automobile and farm machinery industries.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have been interested in this discussion that the minister has instigated because, as a fellow westerner, I applaud, more often than I decry, his efforts and the efforts of the government to increase international trade. That is my view of things as well. What makes one wonder, with respect to the consistency of government policy, is not the minister's activities in selling abroad—which is a good thing, and the more he can do, the merrier—but the fact that the government apparently considers, while it espouses the expansion of international trade, on the one hand, that on the other hand it takes a protectionist attitude with respect to some aspects of Canadian industry, to the point of subsidizing otherwise bankrupt firms. My honourable friend has mentioned three such firms today—Massey-Ferguson, Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited and White Farm Machinery. They would all be broke if it were not for the government. This business of rushing in to bind up the wounds may be very good, from a social point of view. From an economic point of view, however, it certainly leaves question marks in my mind, particularly when I recall that it is the farmer in western Canada who, at least in part, must make good on these subsidies and support what the minister talks about. I will not, however, ask him a question on that subject because we have other business to attend to.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACCOUNT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board a question about government policy respecting the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The minister is aware that there has been no pay-out on that account since 1978. The minister is aware that there are some $800 million in the kitty, a quarter of a billion dollars of which belongs to the western producers who put it there. The minister is aware that this is a cash support policy which is really not well designed to bring any monetary returns to the people who subscribe to it. I should like to ask the minister if he has plans to amend the provisions of this act. What is the policy in that respect?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I thank the honourable senator for his question. With regard to his statement concerning bankrupt companies that have been bailed out and his question about whether or not it was a questionable procedure, I would comment that if a huge, multinational company such as Massey-Ferguson is experiencing difficulties, and action by the Government of Canada—and, in the case of Massey-Ferguson, action also by the Government of Ontario—is helpful in maintaining the viability of that company in future, then such action has merit. Of course, the industry provides a good deal of employment in Canada, not only in the production of farm equipment but also on the service side. Some farm implement dealers, particularly large and successful machinery distribution agencies, have from 50 to 100 employees. The Chrysler Corporation was guaranteed certain sums, and the corporation is now a great success. I am hopeful that the companies that have been assisted may make the same sort of recovery.

I agree with the honourable senator that amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act are required. In connection with that statute there has accumulated over $800 million, and I believe that approximately four years have passed since any payment has been made. Under the act, for every dollar the farmers contribute, the government contributes two.

There have been many changes in our western economy since the act was first instituted, and it would appear that amendments should now be considered. Amendments at present under consideration, which I have discussed with the Advisory Committee to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, concern a possible reduction in the base period, within which the act operates, from five years to three years, and a change in the governing period on which payments are made into the fund, from the current calendar year to the crop year. I am informed that those two amendments—and there may be others—would make the act much more sensitive and would likely result in earlier payments.

Some farmers feel that they should be given an opportunity to withdraw from the provisions of the act. Once they have stayed in for three years, if they have not elected to withdraw from the provisions, they are tied to it permanently. The suggestion has been made that after a period of 10 years they should be able to elect to withdraw. The act has now been in operation for approximately eight years and if this amendment were provided, then, two years from now farmers could elect to withdraw. If after two years they are aware that the act is more sensitive and has been operating favourably from the standpoint of the producer, they may agree to stay in the plan. I am of the view that they should have the opportunity to elect to withdraw, and there is the suggestion that it might be done at the end of the ten-year period.

In any event, amendments to the act are being carefully considered and I hope that action can be taken, and will be well received, resulting in the act being more sensitive from the point of view of payments to producers.

Senator Roblin: When the minister is reviewing the act, will he give consideration to approaching the problem from another standpoint? Essentially, the stabilization fund is a cash flow support system. It is possible to consider a price insurance system that will operate on much the same basis as the crop insurance system, namely, with premiums being calculated for each farm or district in the same way as the crop insurance system is handled, or in a similar fashion. It would give a better basis of support, namely, an insurance basis on price rather than a cash flow basis.

I notice that the Canada Grains Council has elaborated a plan to do just that. No doubt the minister is aware of it. According to the plan of the Canada Grains Council, it can be made actuarily sound by varying the premiums, whether or not the government participates. Will the minister give some consideration to that fundamental revision of the whole idea, rather than simply content himself with changing the present statute?

● (1430)

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, we are dealing with the question of whether amendments should be made to the present act so that farmers have access to a portion of the $800 million that is in the fund, which farmers in western Canada feel, as I do, belongs to them, because the act was put in place to be of assistance to them. The act has many things in its favour and is quite sound. However, since the coming into force of the act, circumstances have changed and amendments are necessary. This matter was carefully studied when the act was first put in place. I shall have my advisors look into the report of the Canada Grains Council and the remarks of and questions raised by Senator Roblin, as well as having them research the matter based on the principles the honourable senator has enunciated.

[Senator Argue.]

Senator Roblin: I urge the minister to do so because, at the risk of recounting some ancient history, I can tell him that when the matter of crop insurance was first mooted in the province of Manitoba, it was said by everybody that it could not be done. Yet, it was done by the provincial government, with substantial assistance from the federal government, to ease the burden of premiums paid by farmers. Since the inception of crop insurance it has proven to be a good measure. I urge my honourable friend to adopt the same attitude with respect to this proposal.

ALGERIA—REFUSAL TO ADMIT STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. I am asking it in my capacity as Deputy Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I was somewhat surprised to learn a few minutes ago from the Acting Leader of the Opposition that our delegation from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which visited several Middle East countries and Algeria to discuss Middle East problems, was not received by the Algerian authorities, although an official request had been made to have the committee delegation meet with Algerian government officials to discuss that important issue.

Since Algeria is one of Canada's major trading partners, there has to be a reason behind this refusal to receive as prestigious a delegation as members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. As Deputy Chairman of the committee, I consider that gesture as an insult. I have the impression that Algeria's ambassador ought to be asked to give the Senate a convincing explanation for that refusal.

In my opinion, it is the duty of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to inquire from the Algerian ambassador and report to the Senate on the reasons why they refused to admit our delegation.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have already given an undertaking that I will make an inquiry of the nature just described by Senator Asselin, through the proper channels, the Department of External Affairs.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-172, to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

GARNISHMENT, ATTACHMENT AND PENSION DIVERSION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Monday, November 28, 1983, the debate on the motion of Senator Frith for second reading of Bill C-171, to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Frith, gave a remarkable presentation last night of Bill C-171 which, in fact, is not meeting much opposition. He explained the provisions of this Bill so that we would be able to vote on the principle of this legislation. Previously, this legislation was passed as Bill C-38, an Act respecting garnishment, attachment and pension diversion, which has been in effect since March 11, 1983.

At the time, when we considered the Bill in the Senate, the purpose of the Bill was to eliminate the privileges of Members of the Senate and the House of Commons as well as those of employees of the Library of Parliament with respect to the garnishment of their wages. Legally, they were not employees as defined in Bill C-38. The purpose of Bill C-171 is to correct certain shortcomings of Bill C-38. Upon reading the proceedings of the debate in the other place, I found that there was a reaffirmation of the equality of all before the law, including members of the House of Commons and the Senate. They cannot be exempted from legal obligations that apply to all employees, including the right of garnishment.

Bill C-138 eliminated a form of privilege which is that the wages of the employees of the Crown were exempt from garnishment, based on the historic concept of royal prerogative, which holds that a court cannot move binding orders against the monies and properties of Her Majesty. It is a principle that is as old as our laws, namely, that the monies and properties of the Crown are inviolate. In the other place, some concern was expressed to the Minister that certain provisions of Bill C-38 might have been implemented before Bill C-171 was considered. Most of the debate was on clauses 2 to 4. They have been left pending until today, and now there is an attempt to overcome those shortcomings through Bill C-171. There has been insistence to have it promulgated as soon as possible, including certain provisions of Bill C-38 which have yet to come into force. Promulgation of this legislation has to take place before January 1, 1984.

That situation has been at the root of blatant injustices among certain classes of society. Family law has changed considerably in all Canadian provinces over the past ten years or so. In the past, divorce was a responsibility of the Senate. Now we have family law to implement the provisions of the Divorce Act.

Among people who must pay a maintenance allowance to their spouse, how many resort to every means possible to avoid that obligation? The old provisions did create a lot of injustice because the salary of a federal civil servant could not be garnisheed. After the adoption of Bill C-38, some provisions of the Act were not clear and certain experts claimed that those provisions did not apply to members of the House of Commons and of the Senate.

A significant ruling was made in a recent court case. I will quote excerpts from that ruling by a judge of the Small Claims Court of Ontario.

[English]

The facts underlying the dispute are that the government proposed and Parliament passed the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act, proclaimed in force on March 11, 1983. The purpose of the act was to eliminate the privileges under which public servants, unlike their private sector counterparts, were immune from court orders garnisheeing their wages. However, when Texaco Canada Limited decided to garnishee the wages of Mr. Dagenais, a House of Commons guard, arguments were advanced that the act was defective and could not apply.

● (1440)

On the one hand, Her Majesty, whom the act allows to be garnisheed, is not indebted to Mr. Dagenais because he is not an employee of Her Majesty. On the other hand, the act, in its present wording, does not eliminate the parliamentary privilege of the House of Commons, which does owe Mr. Dagenais his wages. More importantly, the act only protects Her Majesty, and not the House of Commons, from a claim for unpaid wages by an employee whose salary has been garnisheed.

On October 12, 1983, His Honour Judge Tierney of the Seventh Small Claims Court of the Judicial District of Ottawa-Carleton awarded judgment against Her Majesty. Since the judgment was against Her Majesty alone, it does not bind the House of Commons. The house was technically not a party to the proceedings and, in any event, it cannot, under the Constitution, in the absence of legislation to the contrary, be subject to a court order.

Any appeal from the judgment could be expected to emphasize to the court the importance of its ongoing obligation to defend the constitutional principle of the independence of Parliament. The Crown, the Senate and the House of Commons are separate constitutional entities, each entitled to the control and management of its own employees. The lower court decision, by supporting a major breach of the privacy of that employment relationship, is in violation of the constitutional principle affirmed at an early date in Canada's constitutional history by the Supreme Court of Canada in the MacLean case in 1881. On appeal, Mr. Dagenais would be in a position to emphasize that he is entitled to the rule of law and thus his wages should not be withheld until properly formulated legislation is in place.

It is clear that a legislative amendment, specifically binding the Senate and the House of Commons, is the only reasonable solution to the problem. The principles of the separation of powers and the independence of Parliament will be advanced by this amendment.

I have drawn to the attention of the house some of the problems which have been rasied by Bill C-38 which we hope will be solved by adopting Bill C-171. Our party, therefore, will be voting in favour of that bill and it will not be necessary to refer it to committee. In my opinion, this is a purely technical means of solving the problem and we will, therefore, be voting in favour of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES 1983-84

CONSIDERATION OF THE REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Supplementary Estimates (B) which was presented on Tuesday, November 22, 1983.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I rise to speak on the Report of the Subcommittee on Estimates on supplementary estimates (B). There is a certain amount of pretense in my action, for indeed the subcommittee is chaired by Senator Doody, who conducted the examination and will undoubtedly be speaking to the report that was tabled by me in the Senate last week.

I would like to take this opportunity to review with you, very briefly I hope, the work of the National Finance Committee during the time that I have been its chairman. When I became chairman in 1970, the committee dealt largely with examinations of the main and supplementary estimates and legislation relating to the control of government spending. We decided that we would expand the work of the committee and thought that the most profitable field would be government economic policy.

Accordingly, we embarked on an examination that resulted in a report in 1971 entitled Growth Employment and Price Stability. This report examined government economic policy, after hearing from witnesses throughout the world, including Canada, and gave a prescription for economic policy that, interestingly enough, was not accepted at the time but has largely been implemented more recently. In fact, the policy prescriptions that were laid out in that report, and that have been followed in the last two years, have resulted in a very major decrease in inflation in Canada. If those policies are adhered to, I believe that we will have non-inflationary growth and a return to reasonable levels of unemployment.

Following the conclusion of this report, the committee decided that the examination of the estimates was, to say the least, haphazard. At that point, the government was spending some $8 billion per year—and I might say parenthetically, according to the 1983-84 estimates, government spending is now $87 billion per year. However, in those days, the amount was $8 billion, and we felt that we really were not handling the matter properly. What we were doing was asking random questions that were easily handled by the bureaucracy. We learned very little and, indeed, had very little effect. Therefore, we decided that we would probably be more effective if we embarked on a detailed examination of a department or a program. We decided to make the subject of our first examination the agency that was then known as Information Canada. At that time, it was spending only $10 million per year and sounded as though it would be easy to look at. We could then decide whether or not we could prove our point. It turned out that the task was much greater than we had thought because it involved, in time, an examination of the vast apparatus of government information.

We made recommendations to improve the way in which information was disseminated, how the public could communicate with the government, and most importantly, how we could achieve efficiencies in government information services. Our recommendations were not accepted or implemented. However, we proved that it was possible for a parliamentary committee with limited resources to make a detailed examination of a government department.

In 1974 we embarked upon an examination of Canada Manpower, with a report issued in 1976. At that time that department was spending over $600 million a year. It became apparent that, in order to conduct such an examination, we would have to improve our support staff. We hired the Parliamentary Centre which is operated, as honourable senators are aware, by Peter Dobell. I do not think we could have made a better choice. I cannot say enough good about the work of the Parliamentary Centre, and how much it has done to make the committee more effective.

The report on Canada Manpower was produced in 1976, and action was taken by the Government on 52 of the 56 recommendations. Under Mr. Dobell's guidance, we also instituted a follow-up procedure. As honourable senators know, when a royal commission looks at a matter, it makes a report to the government and then dissolves. The one advantage that the Senate has is that it can come back again at a later date to see how the policy prescriptions that were accepted by the government have been implemented. Indeed, the committee has done just that.

In 1976 we undertook an examination of the Department of Public Works. That examination involved for the first time a complicated and highly technical area. Once again, a large percentage of our recommendations were accepted. Of those that affected the Treasury Board, 28 out of 34 recommendations were accepted. Of those that affected the Department of Public Works, 10 out 12 were accepted.

The major recommendation of that report was revenue dependency. What we had found was that the Department of Public Works paid most of the costs related to accommodation in government, and the government departments that used the accommodation paid virtually nothing for it. That, of course, is a prescription for cost overruns and ineffiency. Revenue dependency requires a department that uses accommodation to pay market rent for it to the Department of Public Works, and to show that rent as a cost in its accounts. The Department of Public Works is required to operate within the income that is provided by those market rents. What that means is that the departments are far more careful about the amount of accommodation they take, and DPW has to be as efficient as a private developer in providing accommodation to government departments.

If there is any acheivement that the committee can be proud of—and there have been many over the years—revenue dependency is certainly one. A trial of the concept has been completed in Halifax and has been evaluated, and revenue dependency is now being fully implemented with a target date of 1986. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that the savings to the public of that innovation will more than pay for the services of the Senate since Confederation, if that is not too much hyperbole.

In 1978 the committee commenced an examination of the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion, but found that it could not confine itself just to the department, but that the committee had to look at the entire field of regional development. In 1982 we produced a report entitled Government Policy and Regional Development. I think we showed for the first time that a parliamentary committee can not only deal with the operations of departments and programs, but also the broad ambit of government policy in a certain field.

That brings me to what I believe are the accomplishments of the committee over the years. I think we helped to show—and I underline the word "helped"—that parliamentary committees can, through examination, influence government spending, departmental operations, the implementation of government programs, and indeed, basic government policy.

That can be done at a reasonable cost. It is interesting to note that the average expenditure of the committee over the 12 years from 1970 to 1982 was $38,500 per year, yet the committee held a reasonable number of hearings. During this session the committee held 72 hearings and the Subcommittee on Estimates held another 16 meetings, for a total of 88 meetings. It is interesting to note that the committee still carried out its general examination of the main estimates and supplementary estimates during that period, and dealt with all legislation concerning the control of spending by government.

In 1982 we created the Subcommittee on Estimates. It now handles all of the work related to spending estimates and is chaired by Senator Doody. That committee, under his guidance, has also embarked upon a major study on federal government support of investment in high technology. I think anyone who has attended meetings on the study on high technology, or on the examination of the main estimates, will agree that Senator Doody is doing an outstanding job.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Everett: The idea of creating the subcommittee was to allow the main committee to spend more time dealing with government economic policy. That is one of the most important aspects of government policy, and yet there is not a committee of Parliament that deals with it. We thought that the National Finance Committee could provide an important parliamentary forum for that purpose.

As it turned out, because the composition of the main committee and the subcommittee was the same, and since the subcommittee was involved in a detailed examination of high technology, it was not possible to hold any hearings on economic policy.

That leads me to a suggestion. I believe that we should change our committee structure somewhat. I believe that the Subcommittee on Estimates should be made a full committee of the Senate. From now on it should be decided that that committee will be chaired by a member of the opposition and charged with the responsibility of dealing with the main and supplementary estimates and the national accounts. I think that the National Finance Committee should be merged with the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, and that committee should be known as the Banking, National Finance and Commerce Committee dealing with the subjects that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee deals with today, in addition to economic policy.

• (1500)

Essentially, there would not be much difference from what is going on today. What would be important is that there would be a spending estimates committee that would be charged specifically with that responsibility and that would have a name that would indicate what it does. It would be a full committee, under the chairmanship of a member of the opposition. If you wish to prove that that is a sensible thing to do, you only have to consider what Senator Doody has done with the Subcommittee on Estimates.

The Banking, Finance and Commerce Committee would then deal with the subjects of banking and commerce and government economic policy. I do not know whether the administration can find it in its heart to make such a change.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Why not?

Senator Everett: Sometimes these changes are difficult to make, but I think it would be a very useful change and one that would work extremely well. Before honourable senators or the administration reject it, I should like you to think seriously about it.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to take a few moments to comment briefly on Senator Everett's remarks. I had not expected to speak this afternoon on this particular topic. We have been going through a total immersion course in the restructuring of the Atlantic fisheries and we have been dabbling a little in the appropriation bill, Bill C-96 and various and sundry other bills.

Using the preamble as an apology, I should like to say a word or two on the comments of Senator Everett. As usual, he was eloquent and generous. I thank him very much for the kind words he said about me, although I fear that I deserve them not. The subcommittee has had the responsibilty of preparing a report on government involvement in high technology and whether or not it should support it. Since resuming after the summer adjournment, we have not had an opportunity to finish our report. We have been on the road with other matters, primarily Senate reform, which has taken up much of my time. If I may be bold enough to criticize this all-knowing and all-powerful government, they have not seen fit to supply enough manpower in this chamber to man the committees that we have, not to mention the special committees. We have a deficiency of approximately 20 members, and the demands on staff, rooms, facilities and accommodation are just far more than this establishment is equipped to bear. With that in mind, we have postponed, at least, the conclusion of our report, although most of our studies have been done. There are three or four other areas of the economy we would like to hear from, and fully intend hearing from, and I shall be back to our subcommittee members towards that end later on.

At this time I should like to ask my colleagues to seriously consider reconvening that subcommittee in the new session, if only for the purpose of concluding what I think is not a very large but a very important report.

On the various other studies of perhaps deeper content and more pressing moment that Senator Everett's committee has tackled in the past, certainly the one I am most familiar with is the review of government policy as it relates to regional development. The report was of a quality that engendered the praise that we received for Senate reports generally as we toured the country during the summer and fall on the Senate reform hearings. There was one common thread in all the testimony we heard— and there were many reservations about our legislative and regional representation functions. I do not think there was a dissenting voice about the quality of the committee reports and the contribution that they have made to the Canadian scene generally. I would place this regional development report high on that list. I very much regret that the government, in its wisdom or lack thereof, has seen fit to ignore most of its recommendations. Quite the contrary; they headed off in quite a different direction, and DREE is left withering on the vine before it really has had a chance to operate to its full potential. The directions that were pointed out or suggested in that report would have been worthy of review or more serious consideration than they in fact received.

I do not intend to comment at great length on Senator Everett's suggestion on the structuring of a new committee. I had not heard about the suggestion before and, obviously, it has merit on the surface, but I simply want to mention the same reservation as I had about committees generally, namely, that unless we get more people, more facilities and more interest among those people we now have, it would be very difficult and perhaps impractical to suggest setting up another committee. Certainly, the need is there and the work should be done, but we are going to have to devote ourselves to finding ways and means of doing the work we now have before us before we take on extra responsibilities. Who knows what direction we may take when Senator Molgat and his joint chairman descend on us with the wrath of the gods in their new report. We might all be on unemployment insurance this time next year.

Honourable senators, concerning the report of the committee, I can only say that this particular report is an ongoing addition to a series on the estimates that the government keeps sending to us and which we, in our wisdom and justice, look at as best we can. Obviously, we can have little impact on the amount of spending or on the direction of policy which government takes as it spends its way to perdition. Fortunately, the decision on whether or not their policies are wise and sensible and their restraint is indeed practised as loudly as it is preached, will shortly be made in another arena or forum out among the electorate, and I look forward to that with some satisfaction and anticipation.

There are various small errors and omissions in this particular set of the estimates, as mentioned in the report itself, but I see little merit in going through them. Once again, I congratulate Senator Everett and his committee on the work they have done and will continue to do, and I thank the Senate for its time and forbearance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as no other senator wishes to participate in this debate, this order is considered debated.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we adjourn, to reassemble at the call of the bell at 8 p.m., I would like to say that we expect to receive this evening two more bills from the other place, one being the fisheries bill and the other an appropriation bill dealing with the supplementary estimates (B), which were the subject of the order just debated.

• (1510)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Will a new scroll be published?

Senator Frith: Yes, I have just checked the draft. It will be distributed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8.10 p.m. the sitting was resumed

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Douglas D. Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

November 29, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which was referred Bill C-96, "An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act" has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Monday, November 28, 1983, examined the said Bill and reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-170, intituled: "An Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises".

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be read the second time now.

He said: Honourable senators, I take pleasure in moving second reading of Bill C-170 which is of such vital importance to Atlantic Canada and my province of Newfoundland. As all honourable senators know, its purpose is to authorize the government to invest in and to provide financial assistance to the Atlantic fisheries. More basically, it is enabling legislation. It will allow the government to take measures to deal with the severe crisis now facing the offshore sector of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. That is the immediate aim, to stave off imminent disaster. Even more important is the long-range objective, and that, honourable senators, is to reconstruct, to redesign this keystone sector of the Atlantic fishing industry.

As my honourable colleagues are aware, the industry needs this kind of basic change. Throughout its history, the industry has been plagued by economic collapse or by collapse of the fish stocks themselves. Ten years ago, for instance, the industry was facing a crisis caused by foreign overfishing. That state of affairs continued until 1977, when this country extended its area of control over fish stocks from 12 nautical miles to 200 nautical miles. I think it is safe to say that the 200-mile zone solved most of the biological problems. We have control over most of the stocks and we have used that control well.

Indeed, honourable senators, Canada's success in rebuilding stocks in the zone has won praise from fishing management authorities throughout the world. Since the 200-mile zone came into effect, Canada has become the number one exporter of fish and fish products, in terms of value, throughout the world. Yet in spite of these successes, the ironic fact is that, for most of the years since 1977, the Atlantic fishing industry has been losing money on a catastrophic scale. A team of independent management consultants has surveyed the performance, over this period, of 100 processing companies. It painted a grim picture of progressive decline. I shall cite just one example.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Was that the Kirby report?

Senator Petten: With respect to working capital, the excess of current assets over current liabilities, in 1977 the combined working capital of the companies in the survey was $21 million. In 1978 it was $36 million. In 1979 it was $26 million, and in 1981 it was minus $106 million. Once again, the bottom had fallen out of the industry—this time in spite of rising fish stock abundance; this time without any blame to be placed on foreign fishing.

We have to recognize that these were difficult financial times—years of high energy costs and high interest rates; years of world recession. Still, given our great advantages, such as proximity to the U.S. market and a relatively healthy state of the stocks themselves, difficult economic times do not, by themselves, explain such massive disaster. Clearly, honourable senators, there were inherent long-term problems. Clearly the time had come to correct these basic defects and to clear the way for the industry to capitalize on its advantages.

It was to exactly that end, Senator Asselin, that the government established the task force on the Atlantic fisheries, headed by Dr. Michael Kirby. The task force made its report early this year. The report has confirmed two things: first, that the industry does, indeed, have serious structural problems; secondly, that with these problems out of the way, it is endowed with sufficient inherent strength to be a rich and rewarding industry.

Canada should not only be the leading exporter of fish products in the world, Canada should and can be the home of the world's greatest and most efficient fishing industry.

Senator Asselin: Hear, hear.

Senator Petten: The potential has not yet been fully realized, but certainly it is there.

The first task is to deal with the current crisis. The deep sea industry has to be kept afloat as the first step in a long-range process. The deep sea industry has to become a more stable, more efficient industry—one that can compete successfully on world markets in good times as well as bad; one that can survive bad economic weather without falling apart.

We are talking about a formidable challenge, honourable senators. Since early this year, the Governments of Canada, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, together with the large deep sea companies and the banks, have been trying to fashion a co-operative strategy to deal with it. Now, after much effort and some difficulty, they have done so.

We now have a signed agreement between the federal government and the Province of Newfoundland covering the industry in that province. There is also an agreement-in-principle covering the industry in Nova Scotia. In addition, the Government of Canada has made a proposal to help reorganize the fishermen's co-operative in the province of Quebec, known as the Quebec United Fishermen, which represents approximately half the total employment in the Quebec fish processing sector.

Restructuring is only one of the industry's needs. At the most basic level, obviously, the industry needs to become economically viable. In more detailed terms, it needs to deal with problems of over-capacity, both ashore and at sea. It needs to get better at marketing. By improving the consistency of product quality, it should get a better price for its products.

The bill before this chamber will not, by itself, make it possible to do all these things. It is, however, an essential first step. It will authorize the government to take part in a joint public sector-private sector operation in order to restructure the deep sea sector of the fishing industry.

If this bill comes before us in an atmosphere of urgency, there is a reason. The situation of the industry has been deteriorating rapidly. The only way to describe it now is terminal. Without decisive action, including infusions of money, it will collapse completely. Already some companies are in receivership.

The government has reviewed its options for action. One option was to lend money or to guarantee loans to the companies in trouble. Clearly that was not the answer, as already they were staggering under massive debt. A second option was to make a grant of public funds to the companies and their shareholders—in other words, a bail-out. Obviously, that was not an acceptable approach. A third option, theoretically, was to let the deep-sea industry sink. One need only think what this sector means to Atlantic Canada, with its 40,000 jobs, its $340 million in salaries, wages and purchases of fish paid to fishermen and plant workers, to realize that this would be a path of social irresponsibility. One need only think about the inherent advantages of this industry, including its markets and its resource base, to see that it would also be the squandering of a major national asset.

I have already referred to the agreements between the Government of Canada and the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, and the proposal to restructure the Quebec United Fishermen. I would like to review briefly what they cover in each case.

In the case of Newfoundland, both governments are united in their perception of the problems and what needs to be done about them. They, and the financial institutions that will provide part of the funding, have agreed on a plan to combine the assets of John Penny and Sons, the Lake Group Limited, North Atlantic Fisheries, Fishery Products and some other companies. Simultaneously certain Nova Scotia assets of H. B. Nickerson and Sons will be merged with those Newfoundland components to achieve a better mix of capability.

The new structure will have two basic parts, one being an operating company incorporated in Newfoundland, and the other a holding company incorporated under the laws of Canada. The latter will hold all of the shares.

In Nova Scotia we have an agreement in principle. In this case the plan is to merge National Sea Products and elements of H. B. Nickerson and Sons into a restructured National Sea Products company. Financing will be provided by the conversion of some debt to equity by the provincial government and the Bank of Nova Scotia. The federal government will inject new cash for equity. This consortium will provide common share equity in the amount of approximately $90 million. Equity will be provided through a company that will probably own 75 per cent of shares of the restructured company.

In Quebec the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has offered to help with the reorganization of the Quebec United Fishermen. The offer has been accepted by the co-operative, but a formal agreement has not yet been concluded. This co-operative has already been supported through a federal loan guarantee in the order of $5 million, which has made it possible for more than 1,500 employees and fishermen to keep their jobs.

The proposal to restructure Pêcheurs Unis aims at the longer term economic viability of this entity. The new corporation will have headquarters in the Gaspé area and will encompass two distinct units, one responsible for fish processing and the other being concerned with marketing and sale of final products. The latter would also eventually offer marketing services to independent producers.

This offer is similar in many ways to those made in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, but it also has the distinction of being specially tailored for Quebec, since it takes into consideration the wishes of the local communities and the eventual return of several of the units to local interests.

Those are some of the details; now for some of the general concepts.

It needs to be said, honourable senators, clearly and uneqivocally, that what is taking place here is not nationalization, nor is it a step toward nationalization. The aiming point is a private enterprise industry that will be stronger and more successful than it was before. The Government of Canada is committed to this aim and so are the provincial governments involved. Indeed, these governments would step aside tomorrow if private investment could be found to undertake this operation. But in the present grim financial situation of the industry, private money cannnot be found. Investors are not willing to take that kind of risk alone.

The Government of Canada, having heard the fears over government ownership in fishery enterprises, agreed to changes to Bill C-170 which emphasize the desire to see these companies privately owned. The bill will include a clause on divestiture of government ownership after the enterprise in which the government has acquired an interest becomes economically viable on a continuing basis. A further amendment will require the government to report annually to both the House of Commons and the Senate with respect to the administration of the Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring Act.

There is another general concept which should be recognized. It concerns the way these new companies will relate to independent companies in the Atlantic region. The independents have a justifiable interest in knowing that public money, which includes their taxes, will not be used in ways that work against their legitimate interests. The government's position on this matter can be summed up in two points.

First, the government is committed, as a matter of policy, to the cultivation of a vigorous small business sector in the fishing industry. It believes such a sector is an essential part of a balanced efficient industry. Indeed, in the agreement under discussion in Nova Scotia, there is specific mention of spinning-off at least one small processing operation. And this will not be an isolated example.

Second, the government will not allow its participation in the industry to be used as an unfair competitive edge against the independents. Moreover, it expects the success of these new companies to be good for the smaller companies. For instance, it takes size and marketing strength to make an impact on world markets. The new companies will be required to make their marketing capabilities available on mutually acceptable terms to any companies that feel they want them.

More basically, honourable senators, the independents benefit immediately from these measures by not facing a general collapse of the industry. For no one should be in any doubt about the fact that if this did occur, the independents could not be insulated from the impact. They could expect sell-offs of large inventories and cut-rate prices. Not only the large companies, but large numbers of their suppliers and trade creditors, would be ruined. The resulting collapse of the supply sector would be a disaster for the independents too.

This is not the first time that the Canadian taxpayer has been asked to help prevent disaster in the fishing industry. Instability in the industry has made requests of this kind a regrettable necessity. Circumstances now allow us to correct that instability. The taxpayer is being asked on this occasion to invest in the building of a successful, self-sufficient industry. It is a feasible task. There is every reason to believe that passage of this legislation will prove to be a turning point in the history of the Canadian fisheries. I urge honourale senators to give it early and favourable consideration.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Petten on his presentation of the government's position on this restructuring of the fisheries in the Atlantic provinces. His background and experience in dealing with many of the historic fishing companies in the various outport communities, which he represented for so long in a commercial sense, has certainly given him a great deal of rapport with the industry and a great feeling for the people affected by this legislation.

Honourable senators, I will not take up very much of your time this evening. I know that there are many of our colleagues here who wish to participate in this debate. I should say at the outset that I fully support this bill. However, it is a tragedy indeed that this bill, as important as it is, as vital as it is to Newfoundland, has to be rushed through Parliament with such unseemly haste. I have really given up on any hope of seeing this place treated with any other sort of consideration. We have become quite used to having bills presented to us at the last moment no matter what importance they might hold in the overall legislative scheme. It is something quite new to see the House of Commons being treated in the same particular way. The sword was hung very nicely over their heads, and properly so, in terms of the survival of the industry in Newfoundland, but rather improperly so in terms of the respect that government should have for Parliament and the importance that this legislation has for a large part of our country.

We are told by the government that without this legislation the restructuring necessary to reactivate the Atlantic industry could not take place. Right now, in effect, it is not an active industry; it is just tottering along from meeting to meeting, fending off the creditors, keeping them at bay. Without immediate help now these companies, or their successor companies which are proposed by the restructuring scheme, will not be in a position to take advantage of the new fishing plan which comes into effect on January 1. Each January 1 the licensing, quotas and so on are put into effect. If this does not happen then, obviously, these companies will not be in a position to participate. Perhaps even more importantly these companies would have undoubtedly gone insolvent. Their huge inventory stocks would have been dumped on the market and there would have been chaos, particularly in the United States which accounts for the vast majority, certainly of the cod block and red fish markets. Unbelievably, one company alone has $132 million worth of inventory tied up while they are teetering on the verge of bankruptcy—for all practical purposes they are bankrupt. The receiver would have very little choice but to dump all that stock on the market in order to satisfy the creditors, and that could depress the market for years and certainly destroy any hope the independents would have had to exist on any sort of level. That in itself is ample reason to get this bill through as quickly as possible.

This is not a new problem. When the bill is rushed to us a couple of weeks at the most prior to the restructuring deadline—the bail-out deadline—one would assume that it is a new problem. While I commend the government for what it is doing in trying to resolve the problem I certainly cannot commend it for its delay in recognizing what to many in all governments involved, the industry and in the financial institutions, has been obvious and inevitable for quite a long time. Indeed, it has been inevitable since the mid-1970s when the Government of Canada saved the day for the fishing industry on the east coast through a mass subsidization program carried out through the outright purchase of huge quantities of cod blocks. This was in the 1970s, and in order to soak up that surplus cod the Government of Canada bought the whole production and stored it. This stock was later eased into the market over a period of time. I would have suspected that that would have been the time to get tough, to get everyone to the table and rationalize the mess. The bloom was off the rose of expectation engendered by the 200-mile economic zone. The economic zone, as my honourable friend suggests, came into effect in 1977, but it was anticipated by many for a great number of years prior to that, when all of us geared up for this great boom which was to come. Great expectations were built in the minds of the people in Newfoundland and, I suspect, in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the other provinces as well, and the Government of Canada must not be expected to accept the entire blame for that. I was a member of the Government of Newfoundland at the time, and we were equally enthusiastic that at last, a good economic future for our people could be seen as a result of the controlling of the species, the conservation of fish stocks and the restoration of other stocks. Generally speaking, it was a brand new picture, and we encouraged many people to get in over their heads. As I say, the Government of Canada was not totally to blame. The Government of Newfoundland was equally enthusiastic about the prospect.

Mid-1976, when we already had a tremendous over-production, was, I think, the time that perhaps we should have realized that this was not all going to resolve itself on its own, but we did not. We continued on our merry race and the result, I guess, is what we now have before us. It was obvious for some time, and perhaps it is quite understandable, that for the first time in 400 years of fishing history on the island it appeared that people who were fishing for a living could actually make a living out of fishing—and there is a vast difference in the two phrases.

However, it was not to be. It should have been recognized; the necessary steps should have been taken. One of those steps—and a major one—has been taken today. It is not the only step and I would hope that, with this message in mind, we still have a place for the rationalization of the in-shore fishery on the east coast of this country. A major off-shore effort has been organized, re-organized and rationalized here, but I would sincerely hope that the governments involved will seriously look at a way to rationalize and handle the in-shore fishery as well.

In our discussions with Dr. Kirby and others today in the committee, I noted that they pointed out that, in this particular agreement with the Province of Newfoundland, there is a recognition of the fact that there is a difference between a social obligation by government and the economics necessary to keep an industry on an even basis. To that effect, there is a clause in the agreement that says if a government or a party to the agreement decides to keep an uneconomic fish plant open for social reasons, then the cost shall be borne by that shareholder, whether it is the Government of Newfoundland, the Government of Canada or the Bank of Nova Scotia. This is an important step forward. I do not think that that sort of idea has ever appeared on paper before. It has always been a matter of political necessity at any given time when the social problems were trotted out, and the companies or whoever were obliged to keep the operation going, had no choice but to turn to the government for subsidies or bail-outs. I hope that this sort of common-sense approach will continue, and will carry over into the in-shore area.

Honourable senators, while I fully support the principle of this bill and am, perhaps, as anxious as anyone in this house to see it passed as quickly as possible so that it will be in operation in time for the new fishing year, there are some worrisome points which I would like to touch on, but not in the spirit of carping, vindictiveness or even partisanship. There are some areas that I think should have been recognized by the drafters of the bill, and perhaps it is not too late to do something about them.

One of the points that has been raised by me and others is that the Auditor General is not to be invited to participate in this new structure. I think it would be of some comfort to the taxpayers of Canada, who are, in effect, the shareholders, whether in fact the shares are held by CDIC or by the minister in right of the Crown. Those shares are still the taxpayers' shares, paid for by the taxpayer, and I think it would have been appropriate if the Auditor General had been invited to participate in the examination of the accounts. However, that is not to be. It is to be handled strictly as a private enterprise operation with no government involvement at all, other than the share purchase. While that, on the surface, sounds like a laudable operation, as Senator Roblin pointed out today in committee, it sounds suspiciously like Canadair and some of the other unfortunate government enterprises that we have to deal with in Canada today. There are other problems along the same line. Some of the rules of reporting for a Nova Scotia company are different from those applicable to a Newfoundland company. In any event, I am not quite sure whether the Nova Scotia agreement has been signed. My honourable colleague, when introducing the bill, did not differentiate, but my impression is that the Nova Scotia agreement is still under negotiation.

Another matter of major concern to me is the anomaly of having the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans as the minister responsible for the administration of this act. If ever there were an opportunity for a perceived—if not a real—conflict of interest, this is certainly one. The minister who is responsible for the licensing and quotas, and seeing that each company or fisherman operating in the area is treated in a fair and equitable manner, is also the minister responsible for reporting on the operations of these joint companies to both houses of Parliament.

It would be a naive and simple person who, if denied a licence or quota, did not at one time or another say to himself, "Isn't it possible that the minister is keeping some of these fish stocks or some of the licensing capacity to protect the two larger companies for which he is responsible?" I think the government would have been a great deal wiser to have passed the administrative responsibility over to some other ministry, whether that be Trade or DRIEE. If that were the case, this problem would not arise. Apparently, that is not to be, and I am sorry it is not going to be, because a simple thing such as that could have created a great deal of good will and trust.

Trust is very important because a major problem in Newfoundland, and perhaps even more so in some of the other Atlantic provinces, is the fear the smaller independent companies have of these larger companies which have been befriended by the government. They fear what they might have in mind in terms of their future. A great deal of that fear has been caused by a lack of consultation. It has been said that there really was not enough time to consult, but I take that with a grain of salt because I think there was a great deal of time available. The opportunity did exist for the government to talk to the smaller operators. Had they done so, they could have put their fears to rest. Those small operators are vitally important to the economy of the area. I think those fears are real, though it may well be, as we were told during the committee meeting today when we were conducting a pre-study of this legislation, that these fears are unfounded. The example the government has put forth to demonstrate the fact that the fears are unfounded relates to the point Senator Petten made earlier—that is, the marketing capability of these large companies will be at the disposal of the smaller companies. Though that sounds good on the surface, I suggest that many of those smaller companies will be reluctant to get into bed with an elephant when it comes to marketing their product. They might very well find themselves swallowed up or left behind.

If a representative of the larger companies has to make a decision as to what product will be pushed on the market, I rather suspect that the smaller independent operator will be second in line and that the representative of the larger company, whose first responsibility is to his own company, might very well decide to push his own product. I may be too cynical on that, but perhaps ways can be found to eliminate that possibility.

It has been mentioned by many people publicly, and in the debate in the other place, that the major difficulty was in the finding of private capital to take on the responsibility that the government is now taking on on behalf of the people of Canada. Many of my colleagues have said that that is not so, that the government did not try hard enough. With respect, I have to disagree with them. I think the government could have gone around for another five years and still would not have found any private-sector money to go into this mish-mash that is now on the east coast. It has been said that private enterprise is not interested in getting into a profitable industrial operation, whether that be a fishing operation, or what-have-you. Of course, it is.

No industry, in its right mind, is going to put private enterprise dollars into an operation that is as split as the fishing industry on the east coast of this province with the two jurisdictions, with the fishing capacity licensed by the Government of Canada, with the plant capacity and licensed by the Governments of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or wherever. In many cases the two governments were at loggerheads, for one reason or another. The rules have been changing from time to time. Oftentimes, from month to month quotas will change. Plant supply is uncertain. The costs of making corporate decisions in a vacuum are high and are completely at the whim of this heavily regulated industry. I doubt very much if there is a more heavily regulated industry in Canada or, indeed, in the world—certainly not in the free enterprise world—as the fishing industry. Of course, private industry would not get involved.

Today we were told, and I welcomed the news enthusiastically, that the Government of Canada will now be in a position to put forth a five-year fishing plan for the industry. If that could be held up and demonstrated to private industry as an actual way in which they can operate and make their own decisions, obviously, within good conservation practices, that will make a major difference in the whole atmosphere there, both in terms of investment and giving confidence to the people who have been working with the industry. That is a big step forward, and I am very happy to hear about it.

I have little else to say about this bill. We could carry on and look at the deficiencies in it, which could be done for quite a while, to no avail at this point. I can only say with a great deal of certainty on behalf of the people of Newfoundland, that they are very pleased to see this agreement in place. They look forward to happier years in that industry which has been such an integral part of the rationale for their settling there approximately 400 years ago and which has made us in Newfoundland so different from the rest of the people of Canada. When you cling to a bunch of rocks for 400 or 500 years you learn to laugh and you grow long finger nails. The people of the rest of Canada have been moving inland and have become perhaps more calm and placid. We have not had an opportunity to develop that sort of attitude yet. Perhaps this will be a step in that direction.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, first of all, I should like to congratulate Senator Petten who moved second reading. He comes from a well-known Newfoundland family whose roots, like so many Newfoundland families, were grounded very deeply in what we in Newfoundland call the prosecution of the fisheries. Having known his esteemed father, who was also a senator here for a number of years, it gave me great pleasure to listen to Senator Petten this evening as he expressed the hopes and aspirations of Atlantic Canada in this manner, and particularly of his native province.

I also want to congratulate another Newfoundland colleague, Senator Doody, for the very moderate and penetrating way in which he has approached this issue. I hope that some of the defects, if defects they are, as Senator Doody pointed out, will be remedied in time. As the government proceeds to give effect to the implications of this bill, I am sure that there will be amendments forthcoming which will improve the legislation. I am not a Newfoundland chauvinist, but I cannot help express my pride and deep satisfaction that two of the men most closely identified with the development of this policy during the past several years happen to be young and very brilliant Newfoundlanders, in the persons of the Deputy Minister of Fisheries and Oceans here in Ottawa, Dr. Arthur May, and, of course, the chairman of the task force, Dr. Michael Kirby. It must give these relatively young men tremendous satisfaction to know that, in their work on behalf of Canada as a whole, they are also doing something which will benefit the province of their birth.

Honourable senators, there is nothing new in trouble in the fisheries. The history of the Newfoundland fisheries goes back to at least 1497. I believe that it may have preceded Cabot's voyage of 1497.

I am sure some honourable senators are not aware of the magnitude of the Newfoundland fisheries. When I say the "Newfoundland fisheries," I mean the fisheries which were conducted by the western nations of Europe, notably France, Spain, Portugal and, as the century rolled on, Britain. In the spring of a year, France would send out an average of 600 ships to fish in the ice-infested, foggy waters around the coast of Newfoundland and on the Grand Banks. The ships would return in the fall. In time, Britain caught up with France. Portugal and Spain, especially the Basque country of France and Spain, also sent out hundreds of ships, so that for several hundred years 1,000 to 2,000 ships came out from western Europe in the spring and returned in the fall.

Periodically, the fisheries would be overfished. There would be a depletion of fish stocks. There is nothing new about this business of depleted fish stocks; it was the cry in the year 1714. That is why the Treaty of Utrecht—one of the great treaties so far as North America is concerned—was signed. You will remember in the War of the Spanish Succession and in what we call the "French and Indian wars"—that series of wars which stretched over 30 years or more—France was subjected to very heavy military losses in Europe. The British armies and their allies on the continent, under that great military genius, John Churchill, first Duke of Marlborough and a direct ancestor of Winston Churchill, in a series of some of the greatest battles of history, smashed the French armies. France almost bled to death.

The Treaty of Utrecht of 1714 was, essentially, a British treaty because Britain was the victor. However, France, rather than give up the fisheries here, was prepared to renew the war. It was on the basis of that threat—and, I might say, some humane considerations on the part of some Britons—that Britain gave France, by the Treaty of Utrecht, the right to fish on one-third of the coast of Newfoundland. That right was perpetuated for 200 years. It was not until 1904 that the matter was settled by France giving up her fishing rights around Newfoundland in return for a piece of British-owned territory in West Africa.

I refer to the history at some length because I want to impress on you that the fisheries of eastern Canada—most of which are centred around Newfoundland, the Grand Banks and off the coast of Labrador—have always been of prime economic importance to eastern Canada as well as, of course, to European countries.

[Senator Rowe.]

In the 1700s, especially in the 1800s and also in the 1900s, there have been crises in the fisheries when the industry has virtually collapsed because of climatic conditions such as ice, fog, storms and wind and lack of sunshine—a very important factor when fish had to be cured by sunlight—and the disappearance of fish markets. Thus, in the 1920s alone, right after World War I, market after market in the Caribbean, South America, Brazil, Chile, and in the Mediterranean, within a period of five or six years, collapsed, and Newfoundland's economy staggered from pillar to post. In that period, as in other periods, tens of thousands of Newfoundlanders forsook their native soil and came to central Canada, and, indeed, went to New England in the United States. In fact, I would judge that one-half of the Irish families of Boston had their origins in Newfoundland. There is nothing new about these crises.

It is of fundamental importance that we keep the Atlantic fisheries from collapsing because, if they do, it will mean the collapse of the economies of the four Atlantic provinces and of the eastern part of Quebec. Just picture what would happen in Newfoundland. Just think of what has happened in Newfoundland over the last four or five years. All of the mines in that province except for three, employing thousands of Newfoundlanders, have been closed down. The largest paper mill in the world only five years ago is to close down within six months, again throwing thousands upon thousands of Newfoundlanders out of work. Of course, there have been similar catastrophes, big and small, in other parts of the Atlantic region.

What will happen if the fisheries collapse? I can tell you what will happen to my own province. People will leave it by the tens of thousands. They will seek opportunities here in central Canada, and I am sure many of them will want to join their families and friends in the United States. Therefore, we cannot allow the fisheries of eastern Canada to collapse. For this fundamental reason, I support this bill which, undoubtedly, has some weaknesses and defects in it. In time, these will be detected and removed.

Honourable senators, over the past few years the Government of Canada has not had many compliments paid it. Tonight, I want to applaud the government—and I am sure that all of my fellow Newfoundlanders want to do the same—for planning to adopt the policy that this bill contains.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: In case honourable senators get the idea that this is "Newfoundland night" or something of that nature, I would remind them that there are other fishing areas of Atlantic Canada, and Prince Edward Island is one of them.

Honourable senators, the creation of these two huge corporations to compete with the smaller independent processors and the co-operatives is a matter of great concern to the fishermen, processors and government of my province. It is not that they are opposed to an effort being made to help the Newfoundland fishermen. They fully realize that, if the Newfoundland fishery collapsed, the entire industry in the Atlantic provinces would collapse, as has been mentioned by the previous speaker. However, they are concerned that these companies are receiving somewhat the same treatment as was given to Petro-Canada. They are receiving an infusion of government capital without having to pay interest on it.

This morning in committee, honourable senators, I asked the officials of Price Waterhouse how they envisioned these fishing companies becoming viable. The answer was very simple: a reduction in interest rates and an infusion of federal capital without interest. Officials of the Bank of Nova Scotia—God bless them—have become human and have taken a special preferred share with a 5 per cent dividend required on it. Should the company be unable to pay that, who will pay? The federal government will pay the 5 per cent dividend. And the government then tries to convince me that it is not competing with the co-ops and the small processors in the other provinces. Honourable senators, there is certainly an advantage there that cannot be denied.

In addition, the processors are concerned that the banks have reduced the loans on inventory. This is probably not entirely due to this bill. In fairness I must say that, because there is a huge inventory of fish in storage, the banks are concerned. Formerly, they loaned 75 per cent of the inventory; now they have reduced that to 50 per cent.

There is also a fear of allocation of fish quotas to certain plants that will become part of the corporations created under this bill. The fishermen in my area are very quick to tell you that the government is assigning the fish quotas to certain harbours. The government is responsible for the maintenance of those harbours and can easily neglect a specific harbour so that the wharves in that area would decline, resulting in the tendency of fishermen to move elsewhere. Honourable senators, these are genuine concerns held by the fishermen and are concerns that I can understand.

The chairman of the committee was generous in the amount of material he supplied to committee members to read during the meeting. The only thing was that I found I could not read it and listen to the witnesses at the same time. It is rather unfortunate that the material was not made available a little sooner. In one of those documents, entitled "Questions and Answers on Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring," point 23 states that the bill deals with the potential restructuring of any fishing enterprise, including small processors and boat-owner fishermen. It goes on to say that this is enabling legislation. So often in this chamber I have expressed concern about enabling legislation. Again I find myself in that position where I have to say that I just do not like the enabling legislation. Point 23 goes on to say:

> The government has accepted Kirby Task Force Recommendation 45 that no new program of general financial assistance to the fishery be established at this time.

Honourable senators, we are also given an allocation of the funds provided in Bill C-170. Of the $138 million, only $9.9 million remains uncommitted. That leaves very little for the province of Quebec, the province of New Brunswick or the province of Prince Edward Island. I hope that the government will remember that there are fishermen in the other three provinces as well.

I was disturbed last night to hear the Deputy Minister of Fisheries say that the government was considering a quota for each individual fisherman. He said that this was being imposed from the top down because, the further down the ladder one goes, the more people are involved and the more difficulty there is in establishing the quota. It is my hope, honourable senators, that both the Senate and the other chamber will have some further opportunity to discuss the principle of a quota for individual fishermen. It is better to have that opportunity than to find a quota passed by an order in council under enabling legislation.

The Nova Scotia operating company will probably be called National Sea Products. National Sea Products owns plants in five provinces. The directors of that company will be appointed by the federal government and the province of Nova Scotia, with one appointee, I believe, of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Certainly, National Sea Products will be closing plants. I do not think that even the optimistic sponsor of the bill would deny that. When the board of directors that is appointed by the Province of Nova Scotia and the federal government goes looking at plants, honourable senators, I am very suspicious that plants in Quebec, New Brunswick and P.E.I. will be considered for closure before any in Nova Scotia. This is a matter of concern to me, personally. At the town of Summerside there is a plant operated by National Sea Products. I had a part in the establishment of that plant, and I will be watching closely, indeed, to see what happens in this case.

The Minister of Fisheries, in committee last night, stated that the federal government could veto that decision, providing that a subsidiary were paid to the operating company. I am not very reassured by that, honourable senators, because within my province right now the CNR is asking for permission to withdraw the services throughout a large portion of the province. The federal government could maintain the railway lines by paying a subsidiary, but I am awfully suspicious that those railway lines are going to go and that the plant will go. And a plant closing creates unemployment and causes a social problem in the area. In the course of the committee meeting this morning, Dr. Kirby said that this was a problem that would have to be dealt with by governments rather than the fishing industry. However, I am afraid the pattern will develop in such a way that the federal government will keep profitable plants open and borderline and unprofitable plants will be closed. They will then say to the province "That is your problem", and provinces are just as hard pressed financially as is the federal government. I believe we shall meet a problem there.

During the debate on the Constitution we heard a great deal about the necessity for mobility of employment, freedom of trade, and so on. Apparently the federal government has quickly forgotten that aspect of the Constitution, because I understand that the agreement with Newfoundland requires draggers to be refitted and repaired within Newfoundland, whereas formerly draggers were refitted and serviced throughout all the Atlantic provinces. I would like to see that aspect changed.

Perhaps the most discouraging part of the committee meeting held last night was the statement that there is no expected increase in the price of ground fish for at least five years. This summer in my province some fishermen did not go to sea for certain periods because they were receiving only approximately four cents per pound for mackerel and eight cents per pound for cod, but their fuel bill alone was from $90 to $100 per day. One would have to catch a lot of cod to be able to pay out $100 for fuel. Therefore I see very little benefit in this bill to small inshore fishermen.

Throughout the discussion in committee there was constant reference to overcapacity within the fishing industry. Several years ago Prince Edward Island signed an agreement with the federal government for a 15-year development plan. One aspect of that plan was to reduce the number of fishermen by half. That has been achieved, but there has been little improvement in the life of P.E.I. fishermen as a result of that reduction.

I would not like the sponsor of the bill to believe that all he has to do is refer this bill to committee. The Province of Nova Scotia has signed an agreement in principle, but it has asked for certain changes. I would ask the sponsor to tell the Senate what those changes are. Do they include the opening of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to trawlers, and do they involve changes in the allocation of the fish quota from one province to another? I hope he will enlighten us when he closes the debate.

Senator Doody mentioned the availability of the marketing setup of the operating companies, and he rather doubted whether it would be of much benefit. I agree wholeheartedly with the honourable senator. This morning in committee we were told that National Sea Products has an inventory of $130 million and that the interest alone on that inventory was $15 million per year. Honourable senators, I would hate to be handing my marketing over to a setup of that nature. Yesterday evening the minister stated that the companies were expected to make $50 million in the next five years. That is not a huge profit for the amount of money invested. I hope that the corporation succeeds in doing that and, despite my skepticism, I hope that the program will succeed.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I am not sure whether it is because I sit on this side of the house that it is easier for me to find fault with some of the legislation proposed by the government, or whether it is because of the fact that, before coming to the Senate, I sat for years in opposition in the Legislature of New Brunswick. However, I wish to say at the outset that I understand the good feeling that my whip, the honourable senator from Newfoundland, has for the bill, and it was easy to see, when he was introducing the bill on second reading, that his heart and soul were in it. He did a very good job and I am sure that people in his province will be proud of him. I myself am proud to have him for a colleague.

[Senator Phillips.]

I listened with interest to the remarks of Senator Doody, who, since I have come to know him in this house, always makes a good deal of sense in what he says. The history lesson that we received from Senator Rowe was interesting. We all know him as a scholar and writer who is able to express his views eloquently.

I have listened to many debates in this house, and I want to say that politicians are incorrect when they refer to regions. We do not have 10 regions in this country; we have 10 provinces. By means of this bill, the government has advanced a program to salvage the fishing industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. I question the way the government is going about this. I am always skeptical when I see governments come to the rescue of banks and other large corporations, such as National Sea Products and H. B. Nickerson and Sons. I cannot speak about the large corporations in Newfoundland, because to my knowledge they have had no dealings with New Brunswick fishermen. It is no more than five or six years ago since National Sea Products was at the door of almost every independent fish processor in my province, trying to buy them out. It had reached the point that fishermen were worried that there would be only one major fish processing operator in New Brunswick.

I thank God that a number of small processors resisted and stayed in business and, believe it or not, have prospered. My colleagues talk about the disasters in the fishing industry. I have dealt with fishermen over the past 30 to 35 years and until 10 years ago I travelled the coastline of New Brunswick. I know the conditions that fishermen face. But if you were to travel that same coastline today, you would not believe what you would see. The small fishermen and processors of New Brunswick are prospering, but they are concerned, as I am, that they will not be able to compete with these monsters created by this legislation.

At one point I was not concerned about this legislation because I figured that the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada would appoint directors to the boards of the companies with the welfare of the fishermen and the small independent processors in mind. But as I listened to the minister and the consultants from Price Waterhouse explain the financial structure of these companies, saying that it is their hope that the board of directors will be left to manage the companies in such a way that they will earn a profit, I asked myself, "What will happen to my people in New Brunswick?" I wondered whether this was the only way to bail out the fishing industries in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. It was mentioned earlier this evening that the Government of Canada at one time had to buy the stocks and inventories of the major fishing companies in those two provinces because of the financial predicament they were in. The government held these inventories and stocks back for a number of years and then released them gradually into the market as the market was able to absorb them.

When people tell me that if these large corporations were allowed to go bankrupt the whole bottom would fall out of the fish market in the United States and around the world, I ask myself why the Government of Canada does not purchase the inventories once again and release them as they did four or five years ago and then let private enterprise come in and pick up the remnants of the corporations and the banks which have invested so unwisely. Let the chips fall where they may. In a very small way I have had experience with the fishing business in my province. I have experienced some tough years—but if anybody doubts my word, he can check with the Bank of Montreal—but I can tell you that at no time did the Government of Canada come to my rescue. Either the private enterprise system should survive or it should not.

Honourable senators, I am concerned that the people in the federal department of fisheries do not understand fisheries problems or, for that matter, the fishing industry in at least my province. I am about to do something which probably has not been done in this chamber by too many senators and that is quote my son, who appeared last week before the House of Commons Fisheries Committee on behalf of the fishermen of my province. I am quoting from the Telegraph Journal, November 24, 1983. The article reads in part:

> Gilles Thériault, Maritime Fishermen's Union executive secretary, who met with the Commons Fisheries Committee Tuesday, said he is still not convinced the government understands the implications the restructuring could have on inshore fishermen and independent processors.

I completely concur with that statement. Out of this restructuring will come problems. The inshore and offshore fishermen, as well as the processors, are concerned and they have all sent representatives to appear before the House of Commons committee. Naturally the processors have different views than the fishermen. Why is it that, in spite of the problems and the negative things we hear about marketing boards in the agricultural field, the wheat boards, hog marketing boards, egg marketing boards and all the other such co-operatives have been successful, at least to some degree in Canada? They assure their producers a price for their products, so why could the same thing not be done in the fishing industry in Eastern Canada, particularly in my province?

I repeat, I am concerned because of the tremendous power and influence these consortiums will have on the market. I echo the sentiments expressed by Senator Doody when he said that if he were a small processor he would hesitate before placing the marketing of his products in the hands of these people. Nor would I happily put the marketing of my products in the hands of these consortiums which start out owing hundreds of millions of dollars, having spent hundreds of millions of dollars building plants when they were advised by the government and the Department of Fisheries not to do so. I am concerned. Not often do I agree with my good friend Senator Phillips but I am concerned, as he is, over the fact that there is only $9.9 million uncommitted in this program, particularly since the minister has stated that it will cost more than $9 million to rectify the problem in Quebec. That means that there is nothing left to assure the fishermen of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick that the Government of Canada stands ready with dollars to back them up if the restructuring under this legislation causes them problems. One cannot in good conscience vote against this bill because of the plight of the industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

Hon. Martial Asselin: You can abstain.

Senator Thériault: I will probably do more than abstain. One cannot help but feel what was said by Senator Petten and Senator Doody and I hope that the legislation rectifies the problems in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. I tell you, my colleagues, this bill may rectify the problems in Nova Scotia and in Newfoundland, but it creates problems foreseen by the fishermen and the independent processors in my province. I hope that you will stand by me in urging the Government of Canada to do for my province, New Brunswick, what it is doing today for Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

• (2130)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, with the permission of Senator Phillips I will return to the province of Newfoundland, where the help is needed. I can appreciate what Senator Thériault said in vividly pointing out, humanely and sincerely, the problems of the inshore fishermen, which I will allude to later.

First, I wish to congratulate my colleague, Senator Petten, who introduced Bill C-170. As Senator Doody mentioned, he knows the hardships which are suffered by the fishermen of Newfoundland.

I would like to digress for a moment and repeat what I have said many times before. We are again faced with last-minute pressure to pass a very important bill, a bill which affects many thousands of fishermen and their families, a bill which affects the fishermen of various provinces in different ways. This is a bill which has far-reaching effects and which causes concern to almost 100 independent processors who fear the consequences of this bill. This legislation affects the thousands of fishermen who own large long draggers worth between $100,000 and $500,000. These fishermen are waiting with fear and concern to see how they will fare under this restructuring.

We are almost always under duress to pass a few bills as we approach the end of each parliamentary session. This is because of the schedules in the other place and because of the government's schedules. Again, we cannot carry out our responsibility perhaps to veto a bill or to propose amendments to a bill because of the fact that we here are impotent. We cannot carry out the responsibilities which were set out for us back in 1867.

There are a couple of members of the press here tonight—they usually come in at the end of the session—and we will again be accused by them of rubber stamping. Again, they will manipulate our words to show that we are not doing our job.

In this case we even make a mockery of the sensible Hayden procedure of pre-study. One can only wonder why we did not pe-study the bill at least at the time it was introduced in the other place for second reading. Instead, we commenced the process last night and, as I indicated before, the press will say that we are rubber stamping this bill, that we passed it within a couple of hours.

In the short time we had to deal with this bill we were given the details of the restructuring process. We were told something about the relationship of the bill to the Kirby task force report. We were given the highlights of the federal initiatives, the rationale for the federal position and the background with respect to the restructuring, which subject we are debating tonight. We were told something about the thinking behind the bill which led up to its formulation; and, while there are still some unanswered questions with which we are all concerned, my fears for the future of the industry were allayed by the seeming sincerity of the witnesses who, it is hoped, will oversee the restructuring process. If there is any faith left at all in our government that this bill will allow a revitalization of the fishing industry, it is because of the sincerity shown by the deputy minister, Dr. May, Mr. Cliff Kirby, who was attentive as a witness and who headed the task force, the representative of Price Waterhouse, Mr. Hart, and the assistant deputy minister, Mr. McLure. I hope that we will see a realization of the government's objectives, those being to find a just and lasting solution for the rebuilding of the deep-sea fishery, recognizing the fundamental role which the industry plays, and to ensure that the company is well managed on a commercial basis with management being left alone to manage. As Mr. Hart stated today in the committee, this means keeping bureaucrats out of management. If that is done, there might be a reasonable chance for success.

One of the main concerns I have with the bill, and a concern alluded to by Senator Doody which I think is worthwhile repeating, is with respect to the fact that an excuse is always found not to use the Auditor General. It was proposed in the other place that the Auditor General of Canada should have unlimited access to records, accounts and other documents pertaining to fishery enterprises in which the Government of Canada has more than a 45-per-cent controlling interest. I do not know what happened to this amendment in the other place. I said I felt assured by the witnesses because of their sincerity. However, I cannot accept the explanation they gave with respect to this amendment not complying with the Financial Administration Act and that that is the reason why we do not have someone overseeing the bill or to audit the bill at the end of the year. All I can think of in that respect is that the government of the day must be having a sudden change of heart with respect to complying with any act. This government has made a complete mockery out of Parliament's responsibility for accountability. There are countless examples of that fact, the least of them being the complete lack of common, ordinary basic management with respect to the accountability of crown corporations. This pertains to anything in any act—the government just does not pay attention to what is in them. So it is very easy to understand why the government will not allow the Auditor General to inspect the accounts at the end of the year. However, honourable senators, we were assured that the minister has agreed to table a detailed report each year in both houses. That was something of a revelation. The report will be given to this chamber, which will give us an opportunity to look at it and consider it. I hope that we will see a profit at that time.

[Senator Marshall.]

I am a little uneasy, too, with respect to the fact that in an industry so diverse and varied the thrust of the bill is concentrated on only one aspect of the industry. While I can accept the emergency need for the injection of $138 million into the restructuring of large companies, I can only hope that the worries of both levels of government are overcome now that the additional inshore fishery is not forgotten. To my mind, and as alluded to by Senator Doody, these two fisheries go hand in hand. The best way I can express this point is to read an extract from the response by Premier Peckford to the report of the Royal Commission on the Inshore Fishery in the province of Newfoundland. This extract will indicate the close relationship between the offshore and inshore fisheries. It reads:

> It will be noted that the commission's terms of reference were confined to the inshore fishery, primarily because of the sensitive role this sector of the fishery plays in our overall economy. This, by no means, should suggest that my government is not equally sensitive to the special role which the offshore fishery occupies. Indeed, we have taken a number of measures over the past several months to address specific problems in this sector as well. Our overriding fisheries policy objective is based on the need to maintain the most appropriate balance between the inshore and offshore sectors.
> The commission's findings on the economic performance of the inshore harvesting and processing sectors warrants special consideration by both levels of government. Indeed, the viability of the inshore fishery is closely related to the resource allocations and licensing process and it is noted that the commission's major recommendations on inshore/offshore allocations and licensing is fully supportive of the position taken by the province.

● (2140)

The Premier of Newfoundland went on to commend the Royal Commission on the Inshore Fishery, but in every case emphasized the relationship between the inshore and offshore fishery and the fact that the one cannot be separated from the other. However, I realize the importance of putting in process now this restructuring because of the fact that, as Senator Phillips mentioned earlier, a delay at this time will cost millions of dollars in interest.

However, the fact that two or three or even ten large companies are going bankrupt should not allow us to forget the fact that there are many inshore fisheries and small companies that are going bankrupt. According to Richard Cashan, the Chairman of the Newfoundland Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers, there are 3,500 to 4,000 boat owners who are already bankrupt. How are these people going to be revitalized? In the case of the fishermen with the large long-liners, their insurance has gone up from $6,800 per year to $10,000 per year. Fuel for their boats is $2 per gallon. Installment payments on a $100,-000 long-liner are approximately $15,000 per year. It costs around $30,000 a year to run a long-liner with four sharemen on board. I say that we must be equally concerned about these people. There should be no difference between Nickerson and Fishery Products, on the one hand, and the in-shore fishermen and the small boat owners on the other. These people are also having a difficult time.

There is a fear, honourable senators, across Newfoundland and the maritimes, and I witnessed some of it last weekend when I was down in the great northern peninsula. There is a fear, first of all, because they do not know about the bill; they do not know what is in the bill because they are isolated and do not get the news as fast as they might. There is also the fear of the thousands of people who have borrowed $50,000, $60,000, $70,000 from the banks. The banks are not that kind; they not only get the guarantee of the government but they take the fisherman's home as collateral for the mortgage, which makes life very difficult. There are 30,000 or 40,000 of those people who also have to be helped.

There are many other points in this bill, mentioned by my other colleagues, which one has to be concerned about. I shall not repeat them, except to say that, in essence and despite the fact that I have concerns and fears about what is going to happen in the first, second and third years and over the months that are coming when the fishermen realize what is happening, I hope, perhaps, this is the answer. I have seen this cycle, the ups and downs of the fishery, go on for 15 years, but this bill will be a start in the revitalization of the whole fishing industry. It is hard to understand why an industry which produces approximately $1.6 billion per year in exports cannot make a profit, even taking into account the high interest rates they face. However, I join with the others in the hope that this will be a start in the revitalization of an industry which will make Newfoundland and the other maritime provinces have-provinces, rather than have-not.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to drag out this debate, but I want honourable senators to realize that there are other provinces besides Newfoundland. I agree with the senators from Newfoundland; I think this is a necessary piece of legislation which we should support and vote for in an attempt to save the fishing industry.

However, there are some concerns that I, as a Prince Edward Islander, have. I sometimes wonder how it is possible to have an agreement when Nova Scotia controls the plants in Prince Edward Island. I sometimes wonder how there can be legislation without first having some kind of agreement with Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

I know it is important that we pass this bill. I do not propose to vote against it; I think it is good legislation, but I too have fears and I think that, after this bill is passed and we return for the next session of Parliament with a new committee of this house called Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry, that committee should immediately proceed to look into the fishing industry of Canada. For example, I would like to know something about the quotas. Will the quotas go to individual fishermen or will they go to individual processors so that they are guaranteed enough fish to keep their factory operating? I would like to know what will happen to the cod stocks. Are the cod stocks of Labrador and Newfoundland to be frozen and sent down to places such as Georgetown and some of the other smaller processors in Prince Edward Island, or will the government companies own those stocks, in which case we shall be left out? I would like to know if the over-the-side sales, whereby fishermen sell their catch directly to the Russians, will continue, or will these fish be processed in Atlantic Canada to give work and employment to our own people? I would like to know if the saving over the next five years of $50 million per company will be effected by the saving in interest rates which will be enjoyed by the companies because of the influx of government money and the taking of shares instead of loans by the Bank of Nova Scotia? What are we doing to help the small processor, who can ill afford the two or three per cent over-prime interest rates charged by the banks? He cannot afford to compete. The fishing industry in the past has been a poor risk and banks are cutting back on the amount of money they will lend to fish processors from 75 per cent down to 60 per cent of their stocks. These problems exist, and I think we should know about them.

I would like to know, for example, what is going to happen to the fish and sea chowder producers in Prince Edward Island, now that National Sea is competing in that area. With all this extra money going into National Sea, will they be advertising their new High Liner products on television and in newspapers and, as a result, put the little processors of clam chowders and seafood chowders out of business? In my opinion, the injection of all this extra money into these large companies will leave our small processors in a very precarious situation.

I know that the bill, in clause 2, says that "Atlantic Fisheries" means all the activities relating to the harvesting, processing and marketing of fish in the provinces of New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Quebec. But there is only $9 million; we do not know how it is going to be allocated, and I do not know how the small processors in Prince Edward Island, for example, or in the other maritime provinces are going to compete. I would like to know if the Government of Canada is prepared to take the stock or the inventory of those smaller companies and hold it for them when there is a poor sales effort, so that they will not have to pay high interest rates on holding their inventory. The bigger companies have a holding company to hold their inventory.

I would like to know if there is going to be an agreement signed between New Brunswick and the Government of Canada, and between Prince Edward Island and the Government of Canada. Apparently, there is an agreement with Nova Scotia, and one with Quebec fisheries.

These are all things that I think need looking into, but perhaps we should not take the time to do this now because of the importance of passing this legislation in order to save the fishing industry of Atlantic Canada.

● (2150)

I would also like to know how we are going to licence the fishermen. Now it seems that they license the boat. The fisherman pays $5 to license the boat, and then sells it for $5,000. I think that a full-time fisherman should have a licence. I think the fisherman should be licensed, because when a man goes out he cannot sell himself. That means one more fisherman can fish.

I would like to know if, in fact, we are going to license the fisherman to be a full-time fisherman so that, as long as he is fishing within his quota, he can fish, and if there is tuna at sea, and the quota has not been met, any full-time fisherman can fish for tuna because he has a fishing licence. If there are mackerel available, then he can fish for mackerel before they swim away. If there is money in scallops, the fisherman will fish for scallops, and if there are herring stocks available he can fish for herring. If he has no licence to fish for herring but one to fish for mackerel, and there are no mackerel, he has to go back to shore. Another fisherman might have a licence to fish for scallops but, because he does not have a scallop drag, he cannot go to sea. I would like to think that, somehow or other, the licence will go to the fisherman.

These are all important pieces of information the Senate fisheries committee, which will be established in the next session, should look into and report on to Parliament.

I would like to know whether the banks are going to continue charging high interest rates to independent fishermen. There are many things I would like to know, including whether the minister is prepared to give us a commitment that he will accept amendments to this bill at a later date. For example, Clause 9(1) of the bill under the heading "Report" states:

> The Minister shall cause to be laid before each House of Parliament, not later than the fifth sitting day of that House after the first day of June next following the end of each fiscal year, a report with respect to the administration of this Act in that fiscal year.

That says "laid before each House of Parliament". Clause 9(2) states:

> In preparing the annual report required by this section, the Minister shall take into account any recommendations made by any committee of the House of Commons—

It says nothing about the Senate. Clause 9 says that a report should be laid before each House of Parliament, so I think we should ask the minister to bring in, at a future date, an amendment stating that recommendations of a Senate committee be accepted, otherwise there is no sense in reporting to both Houses of Parliament.

Honourable senators, I do not want to hold up the bill because I know it is important. I propose to support this legislation, but I think that there are many questions which remain unanswered. When the fisheries committee of the Senate is established during the next session of this Parliament, I think we should instruct it to look into not only the Atlantic coast fisheries, but also the Pacific coast fisheries.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to Senator Bonnell. I understand the committee will meet later this evening, and I expect to be in the Senate then dealing with the supplementary estimates.

With regard to the point Senator Bonnell raised respecting clause 9(1), I suggest to him that there is probably a reason for setting out the House of Commons, and that is that the House of Commons may recommend expenditures of public moneys. As I understand things, the Senate does not have a role to play in that, so he might want to discuss that with the minister during the meeting of the committee later this evening.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I had also intended to ask Senator Bonnell to obtain the minister's opinion on that matter as well.

Recently, during a study of legislation relating to traffic safety, we found one or two omissions. I was under the impression that they were to be regarded as housekeeping matters and that corrections or insertions could be made without going through the time-consuming process of referring the bill back to the House of Commons to obtain a special amendment to insert a comma where there was a period. This might be somewhat more significant than a comma replacing a period, but I wonder if the reference to the Senate was not an oversight. Legislation is sometimes devised in the other place without much thought given to the role of the Senate. On the other hand, I agree that it could very well be, as Senator Phillips has said, a money matter over which we have no jurisdiction.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I appreciate the comment made by Senator Phillips, but the clause does not say that they must follow our recommendations; it says "take into account", and if they are going to take into account the recommendations of the House of Commons committee, then I think the minister should take into account the recommendations of a Senate committee. If he does not want to follow through on what we recommend, that is up to the minister, but I think the minister should take into account the recommendations of both Houses of Parliament.

Senator Rowe: Is that not to be regarded as a housekeeping matter, and can that not be corrected without going through the whole rigmarole of referring the bill back to the House of Commons?

Senator Bonnell: It is not my intention to propose an amendment; it is my intention to bring this to the attention of the minister. I will see if I can obtain a commitment from the minister that he will do this kind of housekeeping.

I believe, rightly or wrongly, that this arose as a result of an amendment made by the committee of the other place. They were thinking of themselves and did not take the Senate into consideration. I wish to obtain a commitment from the minister to that effect, but if he does not give me that commitment, I shall still vote for the bill because it is too important. I think it is important that the Senate be recognized.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I intend to take just a few minutes to discuss this bill. As we have already heard, the federal government and the officials from Nova Scotia have only agreed in principle to this restructuring. I think it would serve no useful purpose to deal with the bill at any length as it affects the Nova Scotia agreement while these negotiations are being carried on. I think it is important to know, though, that in Nova Scotia there is a strong feeling that certain things should be in the agreement before it is signed by the province.

As an example, an editorial which appeared in the Cape Breton Post on November 22, 1983 stated:

> Mr. Buchanan says new negotiations may be needed unless Ottawa firms up conditions agreed to in the federal-provincial discussions in September which were to have been incorporated in the deal for rolling the two big offshore companies into one super-company with the help of federal and provincial financing. These conditions, he points out, have not been met in the legislation which Fisheries Minister Pierre De Bané has placed before the Commons.
> They include such things as the redfish catch in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the maintenance of cod quotas north of Newfoundland for Nova Scotia trawlers. Mr. Buchanan also insists there must be legislation to ensure that no government will have a controlling interest in the new company and that it will be returned to private enterprise in a specified period of time.

In the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 12, 1983 in an article by Harold T. Shea, a three-point counter-proposal is set out. That article states:

> Nova Scotia asks for a federal commitment to these principles, as the basis for further consideration toward a shared federal-provincial involvement in the restructuring of debt-troubled companies which control the lion's share of the fleet and plant capacity in the province.
> The commitments sought are:
>
> Firm assurance from the federal department of fisheries and oceans that Nova Scotia fishermen will have access to the Gulf of St. Lawrence red fish grounds, and a reasonable control over scallop quotas and sales off Nova Scotia.

● (2200)

> A guarantee that neither government would wind up with majority control of the operations to be taken over: the provincial suggestion is that Ottawa control 40 per cent, Halifax control 40 per cent, and the Bank of Nova Scotia, the major mortgage holder, by virtue of loans granted the companies, hold the remaining 20 per cent;
> Security legislation, passed by Parliament and the Nova Scotia legislature, to end the governmental involvement within five years of the takeover, so that the restructured industry may then be sold to private enterprise.
> The Buchanan government, it is learned, has received strong representation from various groups, including the independent fishermen, demonstrating concern over possible misunderstanding in the United States, where most of the fish is marketed.

I expect that before long some satisfactory agreement will be reached between the two governments. Certainly, it is well known that the people of Nova Scotia are very reasonable and easy to get along with.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macdonald: We have heard criticism of the two big companies, H.B. Nickerson & Sons Limited and National Sea Products Limited, in that they got into difficulty, but I think it should be recognized that the difficulties in the industry were not the fault of these two companies. Actually, they are not the only industries that come upon troubled times when a recession hits a country. When we judge these things, I think we have to do so in the light of what is happening at the time. Certainly, these companies expanded too rapidly but they were not alone in doing so. It also must be remembered that the lending institutions, especially the Bank of Nova Scotia, which is the major lender in this case, had their own economists. They did not foresee what was going to happen with the general economic conditions in the country. While it is unfortunate that such a situation developed, we cannot say that this or that company is to blame.

I think we should also remember that both these companies were great friends of Nova Scotia. I remember when these companies were formed. The head office of H.B. Nickerson is in my home town of North Sydney. That company was formed at the height of the depression in the mid-1930s. When the original Nickerson, the father of the present owners, came to North Sydney, we had practically no fishing industry. At that time there was only one plant operating on a day-to-day basis and the plant that Mr. Nickerson took over had been bankrupt and ravaged by fire, and stood vacant. He used family money to acquire that plant and operate it. He was a tremendous person as well as an ambitious worker with a great knowledge of the fishing industry. He built up a very successful business. His sons took over that business, and they, too, know the fishing business—make no mistake about that. They expanded the business thereby creating many jobs.

I also remember when the National Sea Products was formed. A number of smaller companies in Nova Scotia merged into this one company. They took over the small plant that I mentioned in North Sydney, and that became a division of the National Sea Products Limited. Both of those companies were responsible for the development of the fishing industry insofar as Nova Scotia is concerned. Not only did those companies become a source of employment for many people, but the managers of those companies were great community people. It saddened all of us when their financial situation began to deteriorate. I can only gather from this report that the H.B. Nickerson company is going to disappear. At the present time they own a controlling interest in National Sea Products Limited. The Nickerson company is going to be absorbed by National Sea Products, and, in turn, they are going to be absorbed by the new company. I only hope that the managerial skills which the Nickerson people have will continue to be maintained because it would be a shame if that were lost to the fishing industry. To cite an example, the two plants—Nickerson and National Sea Products—located in the town of North Sydney are now managed by one person. You could not find a more competent manager of a fishing plant—at least, not in Nova Scotia.

As I mentioned before, I do not propose to go into the bill in detail because I want to wait until the negotiations are completed. It has come to my attention that perhaps there has been a little too much concern about government involvement in this industry. Personally, I am not one of those people who become frightened at the idea of nationalizing this industry or that one. Perhaps something new always comes out after a time of recession. In this case what is going to be the "something new" is the involvement of government in private industry. Instead of giving subsidies or granting tariff protection and introducing long quotas, what you are going to see is the government directly involved in an equity situation. Certainly, I would never want to hear anyone say that the government puts up the money for the rest of us, and they get it back on a profitable basis only to turn it over to somebody else. It does not seem to make sense to me. I think if you are going to make money, you should make it for yourself.

In any event, I think that we have come to the stage in our economic development where we are going to see more government involvement in private business. They are not going to take the companies over, but they are going to be a part of them and have some say in their management. Personally, I think it would be a good idea if the government had representation on the board of directors of every company to which they are giving assistance. Perhaps it is from whence I come that I have these ideas, but in Cape Breton the great sources of employment are the crown corporations. We are not objecting to them, but I wonder if the concerns felt by the independent inshore people are not that exaggerated. The small independent companies have been up against competition from big companies like National Sea Products and Nickerson's for some time. I do not know why it should be that a super company is going to give greater competition.

I should like to refer to a newspaper clipping from Yarmouth which I came across the other day. That article states:

> Excess cod dumped on the Boston market by National Sea Products and H.B. Nickerson is going to "demolish" small fish plant operators in the province, says a Boston fish broker.

● (2210)

The article goes on to say:

> In a telephone interview Monday, the American fish dealer, who asked not to be identified, said "when your big companies like National Sea flood the market there is just no way your small guys can compete . . ."
> Independent fish plant operators in southwest Nova Scotia say the supply the large fish companies are putting on the New England market is depressing prices.

Are we going to say, "No, you cannot sell in the Boston market; you can only sell so much?" These companies have had competition, and they expect to continue to have competition.

I wholly agree that the government can in some way help the small independents by giving them a market so that they are not wiped out because, if that were to happen, it would be a disaster.

In any event, I just wanted to say a few words to indicate that we in Nova Scotia are concerned with the future of the great fishing industry. While the bill may not go far enough, I feel we should pass it without undue delay.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I have to inform the Senate that, if the Honourable Senator Petten speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-170.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, first, I would like to congratulate all senators who took part in this debate for their kind words to me and for their complete coverage of the fishing industry.

As all honourable senators know, this is just the first step in the re-organization of the deep-sea sector of the Atlantic fisheries. I agree with Senators Doody, Marshall and others who say that we must look into the inshore sector. I am sure that my colleagues from Atlantic Canada will make sure that this comes to pass, and that the inshore fishermen will get the support and aid they need for their sector.

A question was raised by Senator Phillips regarding the agreement in principle between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada. The only information I have in this regard relates to the joint press release by the Honourable John Buchanan, Premier of Nova Scotia, and the Honourable Pierre De Bané, Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, which was tabled in committee.

As we all know, this is an ongoing process, and this enabling legislation will permit the two governments to come to what will be a satisfactory agreement.

Honourable senators, I do not want to delay this bill unduly. If it now receives second reading, the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will meet immediately, and the minister and his officials will be in attendance to answer senators' questions.

Senator Marshall: This evening?

Senator Bonnell: Yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 67(1)(k)(vii), I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, some concern has been expressed by my colleagues concerning the fact that Senator Petten has suggested the committee meet immediately. The time is well advanced, and we have had a busy schedule throughout this morning, afternoon and evening. We have already put in a 12-hour day.

It seems to me that it might be useful to hold the meeting at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, which would give us a couple of hours for discussion in committee before the Senate sits at 11 o'clock. This may be a more effective way of dealing with the subject than to try to address it tonight when senators are scarcely at the peak of their attention and interest in the matter. Unless there are very good reasons why the committee should meet this evening, the Senate might consider that 9 o'clock tomorrow morning would be a more suitable time for the committee to meet.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, what Senator Roblin has said is not strictly relevant to the motion before us, which concerns referral to committee. I would suggest that we adopt the motion and then, I am sure, Senator Bonnell will take into account the observations made by Senator Roblin. Perhaps the chairman can then communicate with the officials and decide whether the witnesses will be available tomorrow.

Senator Roblin: I am well aware of what the motion is about, but, in view of the fact that the mover of the motion had already given notice that he intended to have the committee meet right away, it seemed to me to be the part of good sense to deal with the matter as I did.

Senator Frith: It is still a matter of whether we are going to refer it to committee. The matter of whether the committee is to meet tonight, it seems to me, is not for Senator Roblin or for Senator Petten directly, although their observations are relevant. The chairman of the committee will decide whether he will persuade us to sit this evening. We should deal with the motion for referral and then deal with the question of when the committee should meet.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, during this morning's meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, authority was given me, as chairman, to call a meeting at a time suitable to the chair. Taking into consideration the remarks of the Acting Leader of the Opposition, which seemed very reasonable to me—he is always reasonable—

Senator Roblin: Usually; not always.

Senator Bonnell: He is not always reasonable—I am sorry for that superlative. If the Senate feels that we can dispose of this matter, both the pre-study and the bill itself, in two hours tomorrow morning before the Senate sits at 11 o'clock, then I think it is reasonable to accept that we should call the meeting for tomorrow at 9 a.m. in Room 356-S.

Senator Muir: I would pose a question to the chairman of the committee. Is it not correct that this bill was before the committee last night until after 11 o'clock?

Senator Frith: We were dealing with the subject matter.

Senator Muir: In other words, it has been pre-studied, and now the committee is to meet to study the bill.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, Senator Muir, who is nearly always correct, is right that the bill was pre-studied last night and again this morning. We hope to complete the pre-study and study the bill itself tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock in Room 356-S.

Senator Roblin: I would like to say that I appreciate my honourable friend's co-operation. I think that is the first victory I have won today.

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-173, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1984.

Bill read first time.

• (2220)

SECOND READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be read the second time now.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, the Bill before you today, Appropriation Act No. 3, 1983-84, provides for the release of the whole of the Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1983-84 amounting to some $1.9 billion.

Am I correct in saying that Senator Phillips will be responding on behalf of the Opposition?

Hon. Martial Asselin: Yes, he will be answering you.

Senator Frith: I have an English version of my speech for Senator Phillips.

Senator Roblin: You are most co-operative. I hope you won't have too much trouble reading your speech in French.

Senator Frith: These Estimates, which are the first "regular" Supplementary Estimates for this fiscal year, bring the total Estimates tabled for 1983-84 to $90.3 billion.

These Estimates were tabled in the Senate on November 14, 1983, and were immediately referred to the Committee. They were reviewed by the National Finance Subcommittee on Estimates on November 17, 1983, when Treasury Board officials appeared before them.

Supplementary Estimates (B) contains a total of $1.9 billion of which $1.8 billion represents new spending authority that Parliament will be asked to approve. The remaining $100 million represents the net adjustment to items of a statutory nature.

There are eleven one-dollar votes in the Estimates. A listing of these votes and an explanation as to why they are included in Estimates was provided to the Committee.

Honourable senators, I have two tables to submit. First, there is a statement of Estimates Tabled to Date for 1983 and 1984. As usual, the headings include the Main Estimates, with budgetary and non-budgetary sub-headings. There are also Supplementary Estimates (A) and Supplementary Estimates (B) with the same sub-headings, and finally the Total Estimates Tabled. Above each column you will find: "To be voted", "Statutory" and "Total".

The second table indicates Supply to Date for 1983-84. Two Appropriation Acts have been approved in respect of Estimates for 1983-84. You will note the Supply Approved to Date, that is, the amounts now before the Senate. We have already adopted Appropriation Act No. 1. As for Appropriation Act No. 2, you have the figures. You also have the result, namely, Supply for the whole of Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1983-84, awaiting approval.

Honourable senators, do I have your permission to have the following two tables, in both official languages, included as part of today's proceedings?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Tables Follow:)

[Senator Roblin.]

SUPPLY TO DATE FOR 1983-84

Two Appropriation Acts have been approved in respect of Estimates for 1983-84:

Supply Approved to Date
Appropriation Act No. 1, 1983-84 which granted Interim Supply for April, May and June including 31 additional proportions, based on the Main Estimates for 1983-84		$ 9,328,506,277.74
Appropriation Act No. 2, 1983-84 which granted Supply for:
— the balance of the Main Estimates for 1983-84;	$23,618,654,033.26
— the whole of Supplementary Estimates (A) for 1983-84	1,369,452,002.00
		$24,988,106,035.26
Total		$34,316,612,313.00
Awaiting Approval
Supply for the whole of Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1983-84		$ 1,815,817,064.00
Total		$36,132,429,377.00

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I will be happy to provide all the information you could need. I ask your support for this Bill to be passed at second reading stage.

[English]

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, when I was asked to speak by the Honourable Senator Roblin, he asked me to take at least 45 minutes. At this hour of the night, however, I think I will reduce that amount of time considerably. Senator McElman said that I can have 45 minutes, but I notice he is leaving.

Honourable senators, the supplementary estimate of $1.9 billion is not the largest supplementary estimate that I have seen introduced in this chamber. However, if we take it on the basis of 250 working days per year, it comes out to $8 million per day, or $1 million per working hour, for the Public Service. Therefore, honourable senators, even if the hour is late and we have put in a very long day, I am still conservative enough to believe that a million dollars an hour deserves a bit of our consideration.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Hear, hear.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, the National Finance Committee, in reporting on its pre-study of an appropriation bill in June, referred to its concern respecting the financing of the federal debt. It is rather unfortunate, honourable senators, that we did not have representatives of the Bank of Canada appear at that time. Since then the Bank of Canada has listened to the concerns expressed on this side of the chamber. In a statement made not too long ago, an official of the Bank of Canada expressed concern about the huge borrowing by all levels of government—federal, provincial and municipal—and the effect this is having on interest rates. Government borrowing tends to crowd out the corporate sector and thus tends to keep up interest rates. He went on to point out that the main culprit was the federal government, which this year will be borrowing at least $27 billion in the form of either treasury bills or savings bonds. In addition, the federal government will, in effect, borrow $4 billion from pension funds under its jurisdiction.

It was my intention to review the concern expressed by various pension groups at the time of the six-and-five legislation. I will condense that to one or two sentences and say that I think the Senate should examine this practice of the government's use of pension funds in an effort to ensure that the pension funds are used to give the beneficiaries the maximum return.

The next item I wish to discuss is the concern over the size of the federal debt. Normally the Minister of Finance says that the federal debt is $127 billion. I cannot miss the opportunity of needling my honourable friend who sponsored the bill to remind him that Canada required from 1945 to the present to double its population, but it required only the past five years to double the national debt.

● (2230)

The Auditor General has stated that many of the items that should be included in the national debt are omitted, that they are buried away, hidden, allowed to grow and develop without proper supervision. In fact, he pointed out that last year the federal deficit was underestimated by something in the vicinity of $6 billion; or, on the basis of my earlier calculation, $3 million per working hour was hidden. The Department of Revenue recently published a statement on the national debt. At the present time the amount owing on Canada Savings Bonds and treasury bills is $127 billion. The department went on to list a number of other debts, and I would like briefly to list them. There is the $6.4 billion for the Petroleum Incentive Payments. There are personal obligations to federal employees for indexing their pensions. As I have stated, the pension funds have already been used by the government, but indexation is due on those, and that amounts to $13.5 billion. Then there is severance pay due to civil servants. As honourable senators know, civil servants receive one week's pay for each year in the Public Service. That amounts to $1.3 billion. In addition, employees in the Public Service tend to accumulate vacation pay, to save it up for their retirement. It is estimated that $1 billion is owing for that.

Senator Frith: One billion dollars?

Senator Phillips: Yes. Debts of crown corporations amount to $37 billion. The Unemployment Insurance shortfall will be $3.6 billion. Those items total $209.8 billion. That is the Department of National Revenue, just one branch of government. Since that department has a habit of writing to me and correcting my income tax returns, I am sure its calculations are far more accurate than mine.

Honourable senators, I do not believe that each of those extra items I have just read will be called in either today or tomorrow, but there is cause for serious concern on the part of the Canadian public and I would like to see the Senate give some consideration to those matters at some time in the future. If honourable senators are interested, I would recommend that they read the editorial that appeared in the Toronto Sun of November 17. As they know, that paper is an ardent supporter of the government. I enjoyed the heading of the editorial, "Cooking the Books"; but then the editorial became quite serious. If a corporation did many of the things that the government is presently doing, then I believe the directors, and certainly the comptrollers, would face criminal charges. However, there is some hope. The Honourable Herb Gray, President of the Treasury Board, says that if anything is wrong, the government should take a look at it. I hope it will.

Earlier I referred to the statement of the Bank of Canada, which pointed out that corporate borrowing this year had decreased from approximately $11 billion to $6 billion. However, half of that $6 billion was due to money borrowed for renewal of mortgages. There has been a considerable drop there, and I am afraid it does not indicate a particularly bright future for our expansion. I have here items on de Havilland and Canadair. However, I feel that in mentioning those subjects, I am beating a dead horse, and at this late hour of the day I propose to skip those portions of my notes and save them for the debate on the Throne Speech. There is an advantage in making copious notes. If one does not use them on one occasion, there is always an opportunity in the future.

When I study supplementary estimates I always enjoy looking at one item, namely, "Professional and Special Services". In connection with some items, supplementary estimates (B) should become a collector's item. I shall mention vote 5b under "Agriculture". Main estimates had a figure of $7,233,000; supplementary estimates (A) had an item of $684,000, an increase of 9 per cent; and supplementary estimates (B) has a figure of approximately $3,798,000, or an increase of 52 per cent.

I always look upon this item as a euphemism for consultants and the rehiring of retired public servants, and I am suspicious that departments are now using this item to circumvent the restrictions that were placed on hiring. In supplementary estimates (A) the Department of Fisheries and Oceans had an item of $4,204,000 for Professional and Special Services. Those supplementary estimates contained a figure of $6,722,000, or together approximately $11 million. I am referring to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, vote 1b, under "Professional and Special Services". I was about to point out that at 90 cents per pound, that is an awful lot of codfish.

There are three or four Department of Transport votes, but I will take just one, namely, the Air Transport Program. The vote is for $8,496,000, or an increase of 27 per cent over the main estimates. Perhaps they are investigating air crashes, or something of that nature. I think we should have an explanation of some of these items.

The Ministry of State for Economic Development has an item which asks for $2.23 million. These guys are mere pikers, and that is only an increase of 136 per cent over the main estimates. I have not seen that much economic development that we need all these consultants. As I have said, I wonder how much of this money is being wasted. The Solicitor General paid out about $40,000 for a consultant to improve his image. The taxpayers were lucky because he got an honest consultant who reported back to him that nothing would improve his image.

Senator Frith: That is gilding the lily.

Senator Roblin: It is painting the lily.

Senator Phillips: There are two or three other items I would like to mention. The first is the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Supplementary estimates (A) included an item of $1.2 million and supplementary estimates (B) included an item of $61.5 million—an increase of 66 per cent for that company. The minister responsible for the company said that he was shocked when he learned this fact. I do not know how he felt on numerous other occasions, such as when my favourite topic, Canadair, was raised. However, I am sure the minister is not the only one who is shocked. Tom Kent is a favourite of this government and keeps getting one appointment after another. I notice that with each appointment he creates an empire, and then moves on when it is about to collapse, before the roof falls in.

Senator Frith: Just like Mr. Mulroney and Iron Ore.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Come on!

Senator Frith: How come it is always partisan when we do it?

Senator Phillips: My colleague, Senator Muir, has asked on a number of occasions when the governments involved intend to fill the vacancies on the board of directors of this corporation. Some of the vacancies on the board have existed since 1979. Perhaps if there had been a board of directors just a bit better than the board of Canadair, they might have seen some of these losses occurring and prevented the deficit.

The former Solicitor General, in the Clark government, asked the Minister of Justice about the item with regard to the Justice Department. The explanation he received was that this money was necessary because the Department of Justice had contracted to do legal work for the Post Office. The sponsor of the bill likes to refer to himself as being learned or a member of a learned society. I ask him for the legal basis for this contract. Is the Post Office repaying the Justice Department? If they are, why do we have this vote in the estimates? I hope that the Deputy Leader of the Government will give me an explanation before this bill receives third reading, after which we may have more to say on its legality. I ask that the deputy leader check the legality of this matter with the officers of the Crown by tomorrow, and I am sure that he will do so in the interest of co-operation.

There is one final vote I would like to mention, and then I think it is time that we call it a day. I refer honourable senators to vote 1b under Indian Affairs, on page 86. It is a $2 million item and it is described as being necessary for the improvement of management practices. Obviously, the government has a different idea on improving management practices than I have. I think of improvement as reducing costs, but these birds take it the other way and increase costs. That item just about sums up supplemenatry estimates (B).

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have just three points to raise. Senator Phillips usually uses the appropriation bill to make some general comments about the economic policies of the government—

Senator Roblin: And why not?

Senator Frith: Let me finish. I think that is perfectly fair game because if I were in his place I would do the same. However, I do not intend to enter into that kind of debate. Perhaps we will cross swords on the subject in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, as he suggested.

The second point is that supplementary estimates are necessary for many reasons. In this case, the main estimates were approved before the recent budget. As Senator Phillips knows, since he is a student of estimates, appropriations bills, borrowing bylaws and other such esoteric matters, a good many of the changes provided for in supplementary estimates (B) are related to necessary adjustments to implement that budget.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Which Senator Phillips applauded.

Senator Frith: Yes, I seem to remember his applauding that budget, but perhaps the implementation of it has, to his mind, left something to be desired.

The third point is that Senator Phillips raised not only votes that appear in the appendix to the bill but sub-items which we do not have and which he candidly identified as sub-contracts under the vote items to which he referred. Our practice has always been to debate and examine those estimates in a more detailed way when they are before the National Finance Committtee. So I shall not make any comments on the individual items. No doubt he raised those same points in committee and he is underlining them so that they will appear in Debates of the Senate.

Therefore, honourable senators, I ask for your support on second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators,when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(l)(g), moved:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, November 30, 1983, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

He said:

Honourable senators, I will give a brief explanation of the program, as I see it, for tomorrow, if leave is granted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (2250)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the program tomorrow will include a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, to which Bill C-170 has been referred. That meeting will be at 9 o'clock in the morning. The Senate will sit at 11 a.m., in accordance with this motion, and will proceed with Question Period and third reading of certain bills, including the appropriation bill. We hope that by then we will receive a report from the committee dealing with Bill C-170. We will try to dispose of all that legislation. Then we could reconvene at 2 o'clock and proceed immediately to Royal Assent, and then have the prorogation speech and prorogue. It is very hard to estimate the timing accurately, since we do not know how quickly the members of the other place will come here or the exact length of the prorogation speech. However, if that schedule is followed, I think it is safe to assume that by 4 o'clock we should have prorogation. At that time we will know on what date the new session will commence. I think it will be Wednesday of next week, but of that I am not certain.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: That program is agreeable to us in the opposition, provided Senator Frith can promise that we will not receive more legislation from the other place at the last minute.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, our cordial agreement is quite specific. It covers the legislation we have received so far, nothing more.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 30, 1983

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY

TRIBUTE TO THE SCOTTISH PEOPLE

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, today is St. Andrew's Day, a day that meant a great deal to the founder of our country, Sir John A. Macdonald.

It has been said by no less a person than the great Lord Tweedsmuir that the Scottish people are wide-ranging and clannish. Since this is so late in our busy, long session, I assure you that my remarks will not be wide-ranging.

I wish too that I could salute the day and honour it in the Gaelic tongue, which, we are told, was more the mother tongue of the Fathers of Confederation than English or French.

However, I hope that my good and clannish colleagues will join me in saluting St. Andrew and the people of Scotland on this auspicious day.

Hon. Senators: Hear, Hear.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER TABLED

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, tabled the following report:

Wednesday, November 30, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-170, intituled "An Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of November 28, 1983, examined and considered the said subject-matter and now reports that it recommends that the said Bill, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

Respectfully submitted,
M. LORNE BONNELL,
Chairman

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, presented the following report:

Wednesday, November 30, 1983

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, to which was referred the Bill C-170, intituled "An Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of November 29, 1983, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL,
(Chairman)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, is the chairman of the committee forgetting one part of the report?

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, with the unanimous consent of the house, the chairman of the committee would like to make a few remarks.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, just so that we know where we are in terms of procedure, under rule 78(2), this report having been presented to the Senate it should be received without debate. Rule 78(4) states that a report on a bill without amendment, as this is, shall stand adopted without any motion, and the senator in charge of the bill shall move that it be read a third time on a future day.

As it stands now, this report is adopted and normally what would happen is that the sponsor of the bill, Senator Petten, would now move that it be read a third time on a future day. However, if I understand what has transpired between the chairman of the committee and Senator Marshall, the chairman of the committee wishes leave to make some comments now with respect to the report, although it does stand adopted, and before we proceed to third reading.

Is that correct, Senator Bonnell?

Senator Bonnell: Yes, that is correct.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if leave is requested for this unusual procedure, and if it is granted, as I anticipate it will be, I think it should be understood that members on this side of the house who may wish to comment on the chairman's report should be at liberty to do so.

Senator Frith: Yes, I think that is quite reasonable. We are suspending the rule which deals with debate on a committee report by virtue of the fact that we are allowing the chairman of the committee to comment. I think Senator Roblin's corollary to that is very reasonable. If we are suspending the rules to allow the chairman to make comments, then we should suspend the rules in order to allow other senators to make comments. However, we will need unanimous consent.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I ask for unanimous consent of the Senate in order to make a few comments.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is unanimous consent given?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science who attended the committee meetings faithfully and in force. A great many senators attended the meetings.

I would like to say that I have a commitment from the minister, which is recorded in the minutes of the committee meeting, that clause 9(2) will be amended at the first opportunity in order to take into consideration recommendations made by both houses of Parliament, as opposed to just the House of Commons.

For the benefit of my good friend, Senator Phillips, and for mine, I would like to say that under clause 6(2) there will be $100 million available for the aggregate amounts of guarantees given under this section which are outstanding at any one time, and which shall not exceed $100 million. This amount of $100 million can probably be used by the department for Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, with respect to clause 9(2), the chairman indicated that there would be an amendment as soon as possible. I am wondering if that is a misuse of the word. I thought we had an agreement in committee; indeed the minister said that this was an omission and it was just a matter of reprinting that section. That will not entail an amendment. An amendment, as I see it, would have to come before both houses again for approval.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, Senator Marshall may well be correct. I was so intent on getting the bill through that I may have misheard a word. At any rate, it was an unintentional omission, and they assured us that they would correct it as quickly as possible.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, before I accept the report, I have a question that I would like to ask of the sponsor of the bill, the chairman of the committee, or the government house leader. After I left the committee this morning, it was brought to my attention that it is reported in the Citizen of November 29, 1983, that one shareholder of one of the companies that is being taken over, or bailed out, will be receiving $2 million in cash from the Government of Canada for his six per cent of the shares in that company.

I was informed that the reason for the bail-out of these companies was that they were almost in a state of bankruptcy, and I would like to be advised as to whether or not this article in the Citizen is the truth, or merely press speculation, before I vote on this bill.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to take that question as notice. As Senator Thériault has pointed out, it is perhaps some press speculation. I do not know whether it is or not, or, if so, what the foundation is for it. I can tell him that I shall have a member of my staff attempt to obtain the background information on that matter as quickly as we can.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

LECH WALESA

FELICITATIONS ON AWARD OF NOBEL PRIZE FOR PEACE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, on December 10, in Oslo, Norway, the 1983 Nobel Prize for Peace will be presented, in person or in absentia, to Lech Walesa of Poland.

As this is the prorogation day of the first session of the 32nd Parliament, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move, seconded by Senator Asselin:

> That the Senate of Canada offer felicitations and best wishes to Lech Walesa, Nobel Peace Prize winner, leader of the Solidarity in Poland, for his non-violent struggle for human and fundamental rights.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand that this motion is unanimously supported by the members of this house.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

CANADA'S ECONOMIC PROSPECTS

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. On the eve of the prorogation of this long session, I would like to hear his comments on the recent GATT economic report concerning the performance of Canada.

This report has raised a lot of concern among people and among economists who had forecast that Canada's economy would improve and grow stronger in the coming months. However, according to the GATT report dated November 26, 1983:

> Among industrialized nations, Canada's economic performance was the worst during the recession and her apparent recovery depends solely on the vagaries of consumer spending.

If I may elaborate on my question, I should like to quote another excerpt of the GATT report which appeared in Le Devoir of November 26, 1983:

> In its report on 1982-83 international trade, GATT points out that the "continuous degradation of international trade conditions" explains the weakness of the recovery. According to this organization, "the current recovery may very well be short-lived unless international markets become more easily accessible".
> Considering that Canada still has an unprecedented $31.2 billion deficit for 1983, GATT maintains that "budgetary deficits ought to be the main target in any effort to boost savings".

Since those forecasts were made by an international organization whose credibility is widely acknowledged by all economists, both in Canada and abroad, could the Leader of the Government comment on Canada's economic outlook?

[English]

• (1110)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, what Senator Asselin has just read to us is the opinion of someone at GATT. That is not a fact. When someone describes something as being the best, worst or average situation, that is obviously an opinion. I am not going to argue that that is anything different. We know we are highly dependent on international trade for Canada's internal economic activity.

You can also read other reports. In fact, one recent report from the OECD says that Canada's growth performance during the past few months has been the best in the western world.

Senator Asselin: Who said that?

Senator Olson: The OECD said that.

Senator Asselin: Is that your opinion?

Senator Olson: Do you know what the initials OECD stand for? Of course, you do. There are many different opinions.

Obviously, when commencing a new session, which in this case will be inaugurated by a Speech from the Throne, projections are made by the government, and the government intends to make projections in the upcoming Speech from the Throne. During the debate on that Speech from the Throne, Senator Asselin, I and others can bring these matters to the attention of the Senate.

What he has read to us, as I said earlier, is an opinion held by someone at GATT. That is not necessarily fact.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I have a supplementary question. Is the Minister aware that there are in Canada a million and a half unemployed people looking for jobs, which is a source of great concern for many young Canadians? I hate to say this in this house, but in my area two young people between 20 and 25 years of age took their own lives last week because they had failed for nearly a year and a half in their search for jobs.

It is a fact, therefore, that our young people are deeply concerned about this situation. Does the Minister think that a great many of these million and a half unemployed feel as he does that everything is fine and dandy in this best of all possible worlds and that our economy is in good hands?

[English]

Senator Olson: No, the Minister of Finance, in particular, but other ministers as well have expressed their deep concern about the levels of unemployment, along with their determination to do what is possible to ameliorate that to the greatest extent possible.

Of course, that involves a number of the matters contained in the budget and the programs that arose from those budgetary considerations for the purpose of relieving as much of the inherent distress as possible. The government has consistently said that.

• (1115)

The point I wanted to make was that, according to the OECD, we have had the greatest growth factor, from the bottom of the recession to this point in time, of any country in the industrialized western world.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Does not the Minister feel that in order to reassure potential investors, the government should lead the way and reduce our current $31.2 billion deficit and that it should control its expenses more closely to attract foreign investments in Canada?

[English]

Senator Olson: A great deal of the funding in the whole of the federal budget, including the deficit, is specifically designed to create jobs so that it would have exactly the opposite effect.

Senator Asselin: The contrary has happened.

Senator Olson: The contrary has not happened. What has happened is that there has been a remarkable—and better than any other nation—increase in employment in our economy during the past few months.

Senator Asselin: What about the number of unemployed during the past few months?

Senator Olson: That was deliberately designed to have that effect, but that does not mean to say that the results so far are completely satisfactory. As long as there are unemployed people, this government will try to create more jobs and more economic activity to relieve that distress.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not like to dampen my honourable friend's enthusiasm for economic progress in the country insofar as it is real, because I share it, but surely he recognizes that the statistics issued within the last week indicate that the number of jobs in Canada—not the number of unemployed—has actually fallen and that 67,000 people withdrew from the labour force because they could not find jobs. I think my honourable friend should take what comfort he can in what good news there is, and I will join him. He leaves me with an impression of complacency, and it seems to me that it would be better to advise the house exactly what the situation is with respect to these jobs because, according to the latest figures received, there has been a fall off in the number recently.

Senator Olson: If my friend got the impression that either this government is, or I, as a member of the government, am complacent about the difficulty and the distress regarding unemployment in this country, he got exactly the wrong impression. I could not more diametrically disagree with his alleged impression. This government has held job creation and increased economic activity as the highest priority ever since the recession started in the western world, and we continue to do so. The one thing about being a member of this party is that, if there are problems to solve, we are never satisfied until we have made the maximum effort to achieve the greatest success in that undertaking.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend needs to have this attitude because the policies of his government have resulted in the greatest decline in productivity and prosperity of any nation in the OECD.

Senator Olson: No, no.

Senator Roblin: That is absolutely the case. We have the worst record of performance, in this downturn, of any nation in the industrialized world. First of all, it indicates the earlier ineptitude of the government and the steps it will have to take to get back to where we started from.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the conclusions are wrong because they are based on erroneous background information.

Senator Roblin: Of course, my honourable friend had better be prepared to prove that because I am prepared to produce the figures to show that I am correct.

Senator Olson: But it will be your opinion.

Senator Roblin: I am entitled to my opinion, but I am also interested in the facts, which is more than my honourable friend seems to be.

GIOVANNI CABOTO

RECOGNITION IN GOVERNMENT PUBLICATION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is he aware of a recent government publication entitled: "Constitution 1982" and, particularly, the chapter entitled, "Looking Back"? On page 28 there are several pictures and a footnote which reads as follows:

> After the 15th and 16th century explorations of the Italian Caboto, the French Cartier and the British Gilbert, colonization of Canada began in the 17th century under Samuel de Champlain.

I would like to thank honourable senators for the support that they have given me in my endeavour to have the official discoverer of Canada known by his original name.

Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate aware that acknowledging the contribution minority groups have made to the history and the development of Canada makes then feel more deeply Canadian and gives them a greater sense of belonging?

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the answer to the first question is, yes, I am aware of the publication and I have read it once, although I do not profess to be familiar with every one of the details.

With respect to the second question or comment, I believe I should look that over because, although I agree with it, I am not sure whether the honourable senator asked for a commitment.

MULTICULTURALISM

APPOINTMENT OF NEW ADVISORY COUNCIL

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On the weekend of November 19, in our capital city, the new Advisory Council on Multiculturalism, consisting of 30 representatives or appointees, met in its first session.

I should like to know whether this new council was established by Order in Council. If so, when did that occur? Were the various national ethno-cultural organizations consulted in any way with respect to this decision and the appointments to the new council?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to check whether it was by Order in Council. I do not know whether that council requires Governor-in-Council appointments. In any case, I will try to obtain complete answers to your questions.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I hope I will be forgiven for asking this question pre-emptorily. I should probably wait until the leader deals with delayed answers, but the suspense is killing me.

Since this is the last day of the session, will all the questions on the Order Paper and all those requiring delayed answers be responded to today?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer which I will get to during that part of our proceedings. I cannot say now that every minister has answered every question taken as notice or that there may not be a perception in the mind of some senator that an answer was still to come, because I have run into the problem once or twice that questions were not specifically taken as notice.

However, as far as my office is concerned, I believe we are reasonably well up to date, having responded to 98 per cent or 99 per cent, and, after today, it may even be 100 per cent.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PROPOSED CHANGES IN QUOTA SYSTEM

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I understand that he is contemplating changing the system of quota delivery of grains to make it possible for improved cash flow for small- and medium-size farmers.

I have been out of the country for the last few weeks and have not heard any details of this proposal. I wonder whether the minister might expound a little on what could be a very good idea?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the quotas are established by the Canadian Wheat Board under its authority. Therefore, the Canadian Wheat Board has the prerogative to make any changes in the quota system. There is an advisory committee to the board which has a subcommittee that from time to time deals with the system of quotas that is to be established.

It is correct, however, that recently, at meetings in western Canada, particularly before the various wheat pool organizations, I did extend for discussion purposes an idea that there should be built into the quota system, a system of proportionately larger quotas for the smaller and medium-size farmers. Two or three statistics will indicate what I have in mind.

I suggested that for farmers with up to 500 acres the quota acreage should be increased by 50 per cent in each quota, and that for farmers with between 500 and 1,000 acres it should be increased by 25 per cent. Fifty per cent of all permit-book holders have 500 acres or less; 84.3 per cent of all permit-book holders have 1,000 acres or less. Therefore, modifying the quota system, if it should be done by that amount, would make it possible for the smaller and average-size producers to bring their grain to market more quickly, in a proportionate way, than the rather large farmers. This would have the advantage of increasing cash flow. I think it would be particularly helpful to the smaller farmers in terms of cash advances, which could then apply to a larger number of bushels of grain that would flow relatively more quickly into the market.

If our agricultural industry had a small carry-over of grain at the end of July, then I think that the smaller and medium-size farmers would have sold their grain and that this carry-over would be in the hands of the larger farmers, who are perhaps better able to handle a modest carry-over. If the Wheat Board were able to accept virtually all of the grain offered, as was really the case last year, then of course the farmer, large or small, would be able to clean out his bins at the end of the year, but the suggested change would still have had the advantage of the smaller and average-size farmer having been able to bring his grain to market a little more rapidly, with a better cash flow, earlier in the crop year.

As I have said, honourable senators, the establishment of quotas is not within my jurisdiction. The idea has been put forward for discussion. I think that producers are looking for ways in which to increase the cash flow for the smaller and average-size farmer. I am sure that, if the producers are in general agreement with this idea, then the Wheat Board will take it into consideration when it is establishing its quota system.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, because it is St. Andrew's Day and I am in a very generous mood, I hesitate to distress the Leader of the Government in the Senate—that great contortionist who is always prepared to break both arms in patting his own back with respect to answering questions. On November 17, however, I asked a question of the honourable gentleman regarding compensation for the wrongful imprisonment of Donald Marshall. Although we have read many reports and heard many different things on this subject, the minister has not brought forward a response to my question.

On the same day, I asked the minister a question regarding the possible closing of certain CBC television stations. I am happy to say that he has responded to that question, although later in the day another question I posed with regard to agriculture in New Brunswick he took as notice. Further, I pursued the question of the appointment of members to the board of directors of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Those are just a few small items. I am sure that the Leader of the Government, if he has an opportunity, will be glad to forward me the information by letter. Perhaps it would be convenient for him to deliver the letter to my office at approximately 4 p.m. this afternoon.

• (1130)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if by 4 p.m. today I have answers that are satisfactory to the honourable senator, I will forward them to him then. If not, then obviously the answers will reach him somewhat later. There is a subtle difference between an answer that is satisfactory to the honourable senator and a reply. I believe that I have replied to all of those questions, with the exception of the one relating to the problem concerning Mr. Marshall. In that connection, I have forwarded a request, and as soon as a reply is received I will convey it to the honourable senator, whether or not the Senate is sitting.

Senator Muir: I thank the Leader of the Government for his reply. However, I am a little confused—which is not unusual for me—regarding his response concerning a satisfactory reply. I did not say that I had not received a satisfactory reply, but only that I had not received any reply to questions which the Leader of the Government said he was taking note of.

Perhaps he is not hearing so well today, but I extend to him best wishes for a happy St. Andrew's Day.

Senator Olson: And the same to you.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

GATING OF INMATES—SUPREME COURT JUDGMENT—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION

Hon. L. A. Hastings: Honourable senators, may I remind the Leader of the Government of a question I first asked in May and have since brought to his attention on two or three occasions? It pertains to compensation for the 11 Canadians whose rights were violated by the National Parole Board. I would again ask the government leader to seek a simple "yes" or "no" reply from the government during the period when the Senate will not be sitting.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will give an undertaking to pursue that question further.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Stollery on November 22, concerning who will represent Canada at the inauguration of the new President of Argentina.

The answer is that the Honourable Pierre Bussières will represent Canada at the inauguration of the new President of Argentina.

THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-173, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1984.

He said: Honourable senators, yesterday evening I undertook to meet a request of Senator Phillips for information before the house votes on third reading of this bill.

After we adjourned last night Senator Phillips and I discussed how we could get this information with reference to a contract between Canada Post and the Department of Justice. It turns out that the contract consists of an exchange of letters. I understand that the Department of Justice has been in direct contact with Senator Phillips and is in the process of compiling the material to send over to him. If that is satisfactory to the honourable senator, perhaps we can now proceed to third reading.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I regret to advise Senator Frith that the Department of Justice has not been in contact with me. I have heard from no one except his assistant. Perhaps, if I receive copies of the letters, I can pursue the matter in the new session.

Senator Frith: I should have read my information more strictly. It says that the Department of Justice has been speaking with Senator Phillips' office. I do not know whether that distinction is important. In any event, I have the information here that copies of the exchange of letters that constitute the contract are being put together to be sent to Senator Phillips.

Senator Phillips: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Senator Petten, moved the third reading of Bill C-170, to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises. [Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, before proceeding with the vote on third reading of this Bill, I think it would be desirable to hear what a representative from the Province of Quebec has to say about the legislation now before the Senate.

I listened with great interest yesterday to the comments of my colleague, Senator Phillips, who to a certain extent defended the interests of Quebec. Other colleagues who spoke to the Bill, including the senator from New Brunswick and our senators from Newfoundland, made very good presentations. I would just like to say here in this Chamber that the Bill does nothing to solve the problems we in Quebec are facing in connection with our fisheries. If I were talking to the people of Charlevoix about federal-provincial relations in this respect, I would say that things are in a pretty bad way.

I am not blaming anyone, nor am I criticizing the attitude of the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Honourable Pierre De Bané, or the decisions the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Garon, seems to be making that stress the province's jurisdiction over fisheries.

The fact remains that in Quebec, the fisheries industry and the fishermen themselves are in financial trouble. I think everyone is aware of the problems experienced by the Société des Pêcheurs unis. They are also aware of the representations made by the Compagnie des Pêcheurs unis—

Hon. Léopold Langlois: The name is Coopérative des Pêcheurs unis.

Senator Asselin: I want to thank Senator Langlois, who has lived in the area for a long time and is certainly more familiar than I am with the co-operative on the Lower St. Lawrence.

In any case, we know that, over the objections of Quebec, the federal Government has invested certain sums of money to try to buy back the assets of the Coopérative des Pêcheurs unis which was almost bankrupt, and that shareholders of the co-operative were the Fédération des Caisses Desjardins, the Banque Nationale and the Province of Quebec, which had invested $5 million. No agreement was reached on how to apportion the assets resulting from the bankruptcy of the Coopérative des Pêcheurs unis. It is claimed that Minister De Bané found a formula that included the Banque Nationale, the Fédération des Caisses Desjardins, plus the $1.2 million invested by the fishermen themselves. We are told that Mr. De Bané proposed a formula under which the federal Government would purchase the assets and convert them into shares. The federal Government would give the fishermen shares in return for the amounts they had invested in the co-operative.

All this is not very clear and raises major problems and a number of questions. The Opposition was well represented on the committee that studied Bill C-170. Our party was represented by Senators Phillips, Muir, Doody and Marshall. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister is delaying the appointment of other senators from Quebec who would support our cause. There are not enough of us. There are only two or three senators from Quebec to do all the work on all committees. Nevertheless, a Liberal senator from Quebec, Senator Wood, asked the Minister how he was going to use this Bill to solve the problems of the fishing industry in Quebec. The committee's official proceedings have not yet been published, but this morning I was able to get an unrevised copy. I skimmed through the answer Minister De Bané gave to Senator Wood. His answer was evasive and confused, and supported the status quo. We do not see how, in a matter of months or even years, there could be any agreement between the federal Government and the Government of the Province of Quebec regarding the fishing industry in that Province. In fact, Senator Wood, after the Minister's lengthy, evasive and confused explanation, said the following:

[English]

You have not really answered my question.

[Translation]

She was right, because the Minister seemed reluctant to come to grips with the problem and tell the Committee that the Bill would resolve current problems in the fishing industry in Quebec. The trouble is that right now Quebec is trying to reaffirm its jurisdiction over fisheries within its territory. Quebec intends to pass legislation in the provincial legislature that would oblige Quebec fishermen, if they want to have the right to fish in Quebec waters, to carry a provincial fishing licence. Through this legislation, which has been tabled in the National Assembly, Quebec is challenging the constitutional definition of federal and provincial jurisdiction over fishing rights. If the Bill is passed, the Government of Quebec will be showing its opposition to the federal Government's attitude and interference in the fisheries industry in Quebec. The Members of the official Opposition in Quebec have joined Government members in saying that the federal Government is seriously encroaching on the fisheries sector in Quebec. I am not in a position to judge, I have not studied the Bill carefully enough and in any case I am not here to discuss the matter from a constitutional point of view. Perhaps that can be done later but, as a Quebecer, I have serious reservations when I say that Bill C-170 will not signal the end of the current dispute between the federal government and the Province of Quebec about fisheries.

Somebody might suggest that I should have made that speech on second reading, and then met with the minister to ask him some questions. This problem has been on-going for months and months. Both the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the provincial minister, Mr. Garon, are making ultimatums, but fishermen are the victims. The Government of Quebec is complaining about the federal government's interference in the Pêcheurs unis co-operative. The provincial government will lose $5 million, as will the Banque Provinciale and the Fédération des Caisses Desjardins, so the federal government said that it will compensate them by giving them shares worth as much as they have invested. Apparently, a similar offer has not been made to the Government of Quebec.

That is a major aspect of the problem of fisheries in Quebec, yet it has not been addressed and the bill before us does nothing to solve the issue I have just raised. However, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has stated that the whole of the fishing industry in Quebec is in agreement with him. They would like to get more grants from the Canadian Government, but also we have another story from the independent fishermen. As Senator Thériault pointed out last evening in his speech, the independent fishermen are scared to death at the idea of having to compete with those huge companies which the Canadian Government intends to set up and fund with quite sizable grants.

In my view, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans did not address those questions in Committee, according to the record I have here. In any case, their concerns are justified.

For this reason, honourable senators, I did not want to miss this opportunity, before third reading of the Bill, to express the views held in Quebec on the subject of fisheries. The fishing industry in Quebec is facing hard times. It is my belief that the Bill now before us is not going to solve our problems. If it does help my friends, the honourable senators from Newfoundland and the Atlantic Provinces, so be it, and I for one will raise no objection to the Bill. But it was may duty this morning to suggest to the House that this Bill will fall short of solving our problems.

I am not asking from the sponsor of this Bill, who delivered an excellent speech last night, an answer to all of my questions. I simply would like him to give his Minister of Fisheries and Oceans this message from a senator from Quebec who is not happy about this Bill. It will not solve our problems. But to help my friends from the Atlantic area and Newfoundland, I will support it.

[English]

• (1150)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): My honourable friend is indicating that he wishes to speak. If he does so, I would like him to take precedence because then we could alternate. He cannot close the debate, since there is no closing of the debate on third reading. He can just speak once. Is my friend going to speak?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Petten will speak later.

Senator Roblin: In that case, I shall proceed.

The course of this bill through the house has demonstrated that there are many senators who have a deep knowledge of and abiding interest in the problems this bill deals with, and I listened with much pleasure and interest during the debate, particularly on second reading, to those opinions and was pleased to note that at least in my party, there were a number of genuine experts, in the persons of Senators Marshall, Doody, Phillips and Macdonald, and now, on the constitutional issue, my friend Senator Asselin. I want it to be clearly understood, however, that when I contribute to this debate, it is not because I know anything about fish, because, while subjects like the Crow and the sale of wheat abroad attract my primary attention, I am a newcomer to the fish business. Sometimes I eat it; sometimes I catch it, but as to the economics of it in western and eastern Canada, I am remarkably uninformed.

Nevertheless, I have something to say about this bill, regardless of what it deals with, because it seems to me that it presents new principles in respect of government intervention into the economic sector and into the private sector that are, perhaps, worth noting and underlining; they may, it is to be hoped, be setting some new standards by which government economic intervention can be measured. I am one who has opposed quite strenuously most of the bail-out operations we have seen from time to time on the grounds that, while they make good short-run politics, they make bad long-run economics and usually perpetuate themselves indefinitely into the future, avoid dealing with the problems in question, increase the cost of living and generally are not a productive way to deal with change in economic circumstances. Flexibility and change will have to be the keywords of those who take an interest in the economic policy of the country—and I have not seen that point of view expressed, as I would like to have seen it, in many of the bail-out operations that we have seen from time to time.

In this bill, there is substantial new ground that has opened, and I am glad to see it. I feel free to vote for the legislation that is before us now, and one of the reasons why I do so is that the plan incorporated in this bill is market-driven; that is, it is intended that the industry from now on will respond to the market pressures and the market signals which are the best indications we have as to how management should proceed in the fishing business or in anything else. That seems to me to be a principle that we could well enshrine in most of the activities that government undertakes in the field of economic intervention.

It is made particularly clear in the bill that this is a bill based on economic principles, because it recognizes that there are other principles to be considered in public activities. One of them is the social priniciple.

We have seen in the activities at Devco in Cape Breton what trouble can arise when the economic principles and social requirements are mixed up in the same basket. That is one of the reasons, I think, for the seemingly never-ending series of deficits that we have down there.

In this bill, it is made perfectly clear that if a government wishes to do something under the auspices of this bill that is motivated for social reasons—and there may be plenty of good social reasons that would motivate governments—they are not to be charged against the fishing industry as such or against these companies in particular. That is the important principle. This fishing reform is to operate on economic principles alone, and if the Government of Newfoundland or the Government of Canada or anyone else wants to keep a plant open for social reasons or do anything else for social reasons, which, in themselves, may be well-grounded, the cost of the social initiative will not be borne by these companies or by the fishing industry but by the general exchequer. I think that is a good thing to do and a sound principle. Oftentimes, governments are justified in having social goals which are different from economic goals, but I think it is the better part of wisdom to see that they are not charged against the activities of economic concerns.

I think that this clear differentiation between the market-driven thrust of the fishing business and what may prove, in the event, to be desirable social policies that cost money should be completely separated. The fishery should be run on an economic basis and the social policies, whatever they may be, should not be charged against it but should indeed be separately budgeted by the authorities that wish to employ them.

The second thing that I like about this bill is that it makes clear from the beginning that the aim is to privatize this industry once again.

I made some inquiries of the experts who were before us at committee as to how they expected to do this because, although it is a nice sentiment and we might prescribe to it widely, the question remains how do they propose to do it. I was pleased, however, to hear that they had made a five-year projection by which they came to the conclusion that it seemed to be possible, and indeed probable, that this industry could be restored to such a state of efficiency and profitability that it could be privatized. I have been told that the projections that have been made have been made on a very conservative basis—a word with which I have no quarrel—and that they have taken into consideration forecasts of prices, markets, labour costs and other matters of that sort that lead them to think their goals are realistic.

I was impressed with the testimony because it seemed to me to be realistic and encouraging at the same time. Another good thing I see built into this bill in connection with government intervention is that not only should it treat the industry as an economic unit and not confuse it with social goals, but it should also have the clear ambition or the clear intent of restoring it to the private sector as soon as the situation makes that possible. The forecast given to us is that this might be done in five years. I do not know whether I shall be here five years from now—nobody knows whether they will or not—but, if I am, I hope I shall remember, at the end of five years, to find out what happened and see how good our efforts were. However, the heart is in the right place, and I like that.

There was another important statement made about the fishing industry during the committee's consideration of this bill with respect to regulation. The government seems to have recognized that this industry is indeed over-regulated. The over-regulation and indeed the uncertainty as to what the regulations meant, as well as the short timeframe, constituted a large part of the problem that confronted those who had been managing those companies in the past.

I was glad to hear that the question of fishing quotas was now going to be decided on a five-year basis so that those operating the business would have a reasonable timeframe in which to make their plans. Heaven only knows why that was not done before. I hope that that will be accompanied by a general relaxation of the regulations and that the regulations will have a more sensible and business-like impact on those who are engaged in this industry.

We must remember that, while this bill deals with the important offshore fisheries, it leaves a large segment of the fishing industry still out in the cold. The inshore fishery problems are still going to be with us; the problem of the independents in competition with these large companies is one of concern. We have heard from Senator Asselin that there are certain urgent concerns in the province of Quebec that should be attended to.

Nevertheless, the fact that we are going to operate on an economic basis, the fact that we are going to operate on market-driven principles, the fact that we are heading for privatization, and the fact that the government's regulatory structure is going to be more sensible than heretofore are all good things.

I inquired of the witnesses who appeared before the committee about our trade in fish. They told us that, as everybody knows, our major market is in the United States of America. That immediately rang a few bells, because we have seen in recent years—and certainly those coming from Prince Edward Island can talk about this—that the American view of government subsidies afforded to their competitors is something they find irritating. We have seen many examples in which retaliatory action has been taken against countries whose exports to the United States have been considered to be subsidized. I wanted to be assured that our advisors did not think that the measures contained in this bill would attract that kind of attention, because, if they did, they would be very unhelpful to us. The advice given was that they do not think that is the case; what is being done now is not being done by way of a subsidy, a grant, a special tax concession, or matters of that sort which are generally considered to be unjustified government help; rather, what is being done is in the nature of an equity investment which, by the very nature of that kind of financial participation, avoids many of the objections the American importers might raise in connection with Canadian fish exports to that country. So that was certainly a point that seemed to me to have been thought about and, insofar as one can be sure about these things, anticipated.

There is one aspect of the bill I found a little discouraging, and that related to the government still putting up stiff objections to involving the Auditor General in a review of the activities of these corporations. I noticed, by the way, that Mr. Maurice Strong, the head of the CDIC, had made some comments about the Auditor General in his bailiwick, and if the minister in charge, Senator Austin, had been here, I certainly would have asked him questions about that.

It seems to me that the government has not yet made up its mind that it is a good idea to have the Auditor General keep an eye on these various economic activities. I think that the argument is still strong that when there is government investment—in this case approximately $130 million—in operations of this sort, it is only right that Parliament should insist on having a better measure of control — perhaps not control, but a better flow of information as to what is going on in these companies and what has happened to the government investment.

I asked that not only the Auditor General be brought in, but that these companies be asked to make quarterly reports. I was told that one of them would. The company in Nova Scotia, which has shares on the stock market, would, in accordance with the rules of the exchange, be expected to produce both an annual report and a quarterly report.

That is not the situation with respect to the Newfoundland company. That is not quoted on the public stock exchange. It seems to me that that is a curious lack of consistency. If the fish company in Nova Scotia has to make quarterly reports, which will be available to all honourable senators and all members of Parliament, as well as to members of the public, why is not the same discipline being imposed on the Newfoundland company?

I received no satisfactory answer to that question. That is a matter which the government should take under advisement because it is well within its power, in my opinion, to see that these two companies report on the same basis. If the Nova Scotia company reports its activities on an annual and quarterly basis, why not impose the same discipline on the company located in Newfoundland, particularly when the government is stubbornly refusing to allow the Auditor General to keep an eye on these things? It seems to me that we should insist that the companies themselves should make reports on their activities so that we have a better way of measuring progress, so that we will not be told five years from now that they need another $140 million in order to keep afloat.

I conclude my remarks by saying that I intend to support this bill. I regret that the provisions for parliamentary supervision and parliamentary responsibility are not as good as they should and ought to be and could be. I think that is a serious flaw in the bill. I do take satisfaction in seeing that the bill lays down, in my opinion, some new principles that could be applied in respect of government intervention in the private sector. I would certainly like to see those principles employed in any other activities the government might get into.

I would go further and say that it ought to be made retroactive, because that represents the best way I have seen so far for the government to get into these various economic activities and reducing the risk to a minimum.

I am well aware that the activities of government in the commercial sector are fraught with peril, so I am always glad to see people take reasonable precautions to ensure that those risks are minimized.

So, as a non-fishermen, but one interested in those dependent for their livelihood on this great industry, I am prepared to support the bill.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I advise honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Petten speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for third reading of this bill.

Senator Petten: —I would like to thank Senator Roblin for his participation in this debate and to thank Senator Asselin for his comments. He can rest assured that his remarks will be brought to the attention of the minister.

Senator Thériault asked me to obtain an answer to a question he asked during the debate on second reading of this bill.

I have been informed by officials from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans that Mr. Gerry Nickerson owns six per cent of National Sea Products Limited free and clear. The negotiating team, headed by Dr. Micheal Kirby, has reached a tentative agreement to purchase his shares. The amount is not firm because of the ongoing negotiations with the province. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Honourable Pierre de Bané, has agreed to make a statement giving details of the financial arrangements when the negotiations have been completed.

[Senator Roblin.]

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SENATE REFORM

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Reform of the Senate of Canada which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, you will recall that the motion to establish the committee was originally agreed to by the Senate on December 22, 1982. However, the committee was not actually structured until April 31, 1983. I do not question the whys or wherefors for the time lag, but the four-month delay meant that the committee was faced with some difficult timing problems. Unfortunately, we only had two months prior to the adjournment of Parliament for the summer recess, which made it extremely difficult to schedule our committee meetings. However, the committee has worked steadily, and I should like to thank my colleagues who have been so willing to spend a great deal of their time in travelling across the country in the process.

Earlier this fall, with the agreement of the steering committee, and the full committee subsequently, it was agreed that all parties would be approached in both houses to determine whether an extension could be agreed to. Earlier, we had indications that there was agreement to this, and that we could bring forward our suggestion now, which requests an extension to the end of January next.

I have to put in a word of caution because the committee has not yet started its interim discussion on the first draft report. The committee has met on a number of occasions to determine the direction in which it wanted to go, and has given instructions as to the type of draft report it wished. That draft report, according to the timetable that we had established for ourselves, was sent to the members of the committee last Thursday, a day ahead of the date originally agreed, and the final translation was prepared yesterday.

We had hoped to have a meeting tomorrow, but because of prorogation we cancelled it. We also attempted to have a short meeting at 1 o'clock today, but because of the limited amount of time that was found to be impossible. Therefore, we will probably not be able to meet until the committee is reconstituted. It is our urgent wish that that take place as soon as the two houses reconvene. If that is done, we can then proceed to meet immediately and go into a detailed discussion of our report.

Our original deadline was to have everything ready for the printers on Friday, December 16. We were told that the printers would have worked through the Christmas period and we would have had the report ready for tabling in both houses when we reconvene on, as I assume, January 16. We have left an extra two weeks in asking for the end of January. We may have to ask for another slight extension, although it will depend on how soon we are reconstituted and how quickly we can come to an agreement.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would offer no obstacle to the proposal of Senator Molgat that the life of this committee be extended. I am not quite sure of the rules and regulations, but offhand my opinion is that we will have to have this resolution reintroduced at the new session because prorogation usually cancels everything that is at hand in the old session. Senator Molgat is probably just giving us warning that he is not going to have his report ready at the time originally anticipated. When we come back with the new session, he will probably be introducing a resolution to confirm the authorization which I think we are prepared to offer today.

I think that January 31 may prove to be an optimistic date. I, for one, do not want him to rush this report. It should be one of considerable significance. There are many vexatious questions to resolve when completing a final report of this nature, but if he needs the extra time to make sure he gets it right, I am prepared to agree, particularly if he has taken into sufficient account the very detailed statement I made before his committee in Winnipeg on October 4.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: God forbid!

Senator Roblin: If my friends would let me continue—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): You are in your own ranks.

Senator Roblin: They have never made any secret of their views, as I have made no secret of mine. My only fear is that my view may be the minority one because there have been a lot of good presentations made before this committee dealing with all subjects. If this resolution is presented to us at the next session, I hope that my colleagues will allow me to say that we will agree to any reasonable extension of time that is then requested.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I am delighted to hear that the deadline for submission of the final report is to be extended. Like the Acting Leader of the Opposition, I certainly think there is opportunity for careful, as there must be, consideration of all the aspects. To date, I have not heard of the committee's going to Australia to look at the operation of proportional representation in an elected Senate. My visit to Australia, along with other honourable senators, was an eye-opener. I saw its operational possibilities modified to suit the Canadian scene. I suggested, in my presentation to the committee, that it would be only fair if, at least, a subcommittee go to Australia, which is a country that has the same type of government as ours, and see how proportional representation could fit into the Canadian scene as part of an elected Senate.

I should like to say to the chairman of the committee and the committee members that I certainly hope there is an opportunity before a final decision is made, to see how that system operates in that country. Seeing how their system operates is quite different from hearing descriptions of it. I think that it is unfair for the committee to report without, at least, giving some of the committee members an opportunity to see how proportional representation works in Australia.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Why is Senator Buckwold confining that to the members of the committee? There are many honourable senators who are not on the committee who would be interested in going to Australia.

Senator Buckwold: I am all for that. I am sure that Senator Marshall at his own expense would be delighted to take a trip like that.

Senator Marshall: How about by way of Florida?

Senator Frith: How about by way of Hawaii?

Senator Buckwold: I might even suggest that some of you may want a one-way ticket.

• (1220)

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I enjoyed the comments of Senator Buckwold, but I cannot agree with him that we should send the committee to Australia. Some of our brilliant experts from this chamber went over previously. I cannot understand the implication that they are second-rate people.

Senator Frith: Brilliant.

Senator Muir: Senators Roblin, Frith, Buckwold and other bright lads came back having been completely sold a bill of goods. I am ready to run for election next week, next month or six months from now because I know I would be elected—unlike some others around here.

In any event, during my recent visit to Australia, I happened to be at a luncheon with a member of their present administration. After introducing ourselves, he said, "Oh, you are a member of this House of Conscience." I said, "You could call it that; we get called a lot of things." He went on to say, "It's bloody awful over here with the situation we've got. It is not working out at all." I wasn't even asking for information. He told me that we had a better system in Canada with a "House of Conscience." Perhaps it was a senator on our delegation who told him it was called the "House of Conscience."

I cannot agree with Senator Buckwold because some of the most imaginative brains possible have already been to Australia. They have made their report and outlined it in this chamber. There is not much left for the committee to do.

Senator Frith: Senator Muir has talked us out of it.

Hon. C. William Doody: That is the story of my life.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the report discusses and, in fact, recommends that the deadline for reporting, which was set at December 1, 1983, be set back. Of course, we can, by accepting this recommendation, deal with that.

Within the time available the committee actually has done a great deal of work. A large number of meetings were set up in Ottawa and in various places across the country. All the members should be commended for the effort that they have put into this.Therefore, I think it is reasonable for them to ask for an extension.

I have to say that I think January 31—whatever other problems they may run into—is about as late a date as possible if that committee report is to have the significance that it ought to have, or, indeed, that it was designed to have, in the consideration of constitutional matters before the Second Constitutional Conference of First Ministers which, as honourable senators know, will be held in late March, but no later than April 17, 1984.

Members, including the joint chairmen, co-chairmen, will also realize that from January 31 to that date is a relatively short period of time for the provincial governments and the federal government to consider all the implications and ramifications of what will be before the First Ministers' Conference, and indeed what is contained in the report.

Therefore, I want to support this recommendation, but I would caution, since some comments were made that perhaps the committee should take even more time, that there is a problem in that the report will not have the consideration it deserves prior to the meeting of the first ministers where, of course, constitutional considerations respecting federal government institutions like the Senate will be on the agenda. Although I support the recommendation, I would caution honourable senators against expressing the view that there is still more time. The report has to make the rounds of the people who have to look at it.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Let us do our job properly.

Senator Olson: We can do our job properly. I hope Senator Asselin is not trying to pick an argument with me. That conference is required to proceed, and, if we are to have an influence on the decisions or the discussions that will take place at that conference, then the report ought to be published in time for the background consideration that is always necessary.

I have no problem with the recommendations, but I do not think we should stretch them out because, if we do, the conference will go on in the absence of adequate consideration of a report that has occupied a great deal of the time and attention of a number of members.

Senator Asselin: Senator Olson should know that, when we met with the premiers of the provinces, they indicated to the committee that reform of the Senate was not one of their priorities, so they can wait for one year or more. How come he is in such a hurry?

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: We previously discussed the date on which the constitutional conference, provided in the amendment, could take place. We had an exchange of views on that. My understanding was that the proclamation of the amendment we have adopted cannot be made before June 1. Therefore, the amendment is not in force before June 1, 1984.

If I remember correctly, after one or two weeks of consultation with the Department of Justice, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs confirmed my understanding that the proclamation will not be issued before June 1, so there will not be a constitutional conference before that date.

I did not question if, for another reason, we could not accept a longer delay than proposed by Senator Roblin, but the reason for not having a longer delay is not the one given by the Leader of the Government.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friends can have their own opinion, but, as usual, they have completely missed the point.

Senator Roblin: Is the leader going to speak twice now?

Senator Olson: I believe, if I am asked some questions, that is usually permitted. If Senator Roblin wants to object, that is his business.

Some senators have completely missed the point. I said that we need the report in time so that all the governments and officials within those governments will have adequate time to consider the implications and ramifications of the committee's recommendations. That is just as valid now as it was when I made my comments a few months ago. It does not depend only on the date that the conference is held because, while it may not have to be held before June 1, it probably will be.

Senator Molgat: I thank all honourable senators who participated in the discussion. We will certainly proceed as quickly as we can. The problems that have arisen—such as prorogation today, which we could not forecast—have not been within our control. Today I am expressing a pious hope that, immediately upon our return, whenever that may be, we will reconstitute the committee. The committee will certainly be prepared to get to work the moment that is done.

• (1230)

Honourable senators, comments have been made regarding travel to Australia. I might point out that we are clearly entitled to travel within Canada according to our terms of reference. That we have done; we have travelled to every provincial and territorial capital. Perhaps Senator Marshall's suggestion might be resolved by holding a joint meeting of the Australian Senate and the Canadian Senate in Canberra. It is beyond the responsibility of our committee, however, to decide upon that.

I repeat, honourable senators, that, if the committee can be reconstituted instantly, it will get to work instantly.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to Senator Molgat. If this committee—dying as it will on prorogation—is reconstituted at the opening of the next session, will it be necessary to have the unanimous consent of both houses?

Senator Molgat: My understanding of the procedure is that a motion will be introduced. That will be a debatable motion, on which a vote will be taken at some stage.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.

PROGRESS OF CONVALESCENCE

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I rise to ask a question about Senator Flynn. We are at the point of proroguing another session of Parliament and it just seems strange to me to see his chair vacant. I wonder when Senator Flynn will be back in this chamber. At times he is difficult to get along with, but, quite frankly, I miss him very much and I would like to see him back. Could anybody give a report on his condition?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Acting Leader of the Opposition): If honourable senators will allow me, I should like to thank Senator Lucier, in Senator Flynn's name, for his kind thoughts. I know that the honourable senator has expressed the feelings of all of us on both sides of the chamber with respect to my colleague, the Leader of the Opposition.

I spoke to Senator Flynn quite recently on the telephone, and he sounded pretty perky to me. His main problem is that his doctors are holding him down—he thinks—and are making him pay attention to the strictures of good medicine in an effort to try not to rush his convalescence. He finds that this irks him. When he has an opportunity to go out on a good day, no doubt he feels better, but he is certainly very much alive and kicking.

Honourable senators, I think that Senator Flynn will continue his convalescence for some months. He will probably not be back in the Senate chamber this year. It will likely be some time in the early part of next year that we will see him again. I do thank Senator Lucier for his kind consideration. I would like to tell him and all honourable senators that, to the best of my knowledge, Senator Flynn is making a steady and satisfactory recovery to good health.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK—LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to extend an apology to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Earlier this day I was mildly critical of his failing to respond to a number of questions that I had raised on November 17. It is quite true that he had not responded to some of them. I did say that he had replied to one question regarding the CBC, for which I was grateful.

Shortly after I had spoken, I received a note from Senator Frith, who kindly advised me that a response had been given to the question respecting the New Brunswick livestock industry. I did not see the response, and I apologize to the honourable senator. The reason I was not aware that he had answered is that the reply was given on a day when Senator Frith had made arrangements for a committee to deal with Bill C-170. Our whip, in his usual, genial, kindly, benevolent and fatherly way, came to me and said "Bob, you get to that committee right away." That is why I was not present in the chamber when the reply was given. I am sorry if I caused any concern to the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate.

ROYAL ASSENT
PROROGATION

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALLL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

November 30, 1983

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency The Governor General will will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 30th day of November, 1983, at 14.00 hours, to give Royal Assent to certain Bills and for the purpose of proroguing the First Session of the Thirty-Secong Parliament.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 2 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

At 2 o'clock His Excellency the Governor General proceeded to the Senate chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and that House being come, with their

Deputy Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act and to authorize certain payments in relation thereto.

An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act.

An Act to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.

An Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises.

The Honourable Lloyd Francis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

PROROGATION SPEECH

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour today of closing the longest and most productive session in the history of the Canadian Parliament. During the three and a half year period in which you have been sitting more than 200 pieces of legislation have been introduced and over 150 of these have been proclaimed into law.

This session has been remarkable not only for the number of bills passed, but for the magnitude of their impact. The Government recognized that those who wait for unanimity never act, and that those who do not act are engulfed by the wave of events of a rapidly changing world. Accordingly, the Government launched a series of bold initiatives, any one of which would have been sufficient to make this session of Parliament an exceptional one. Four in particular have transformed Canada.

Following the Quebec referendum, the Government initiated the process of federal renewal which it promised would ensue from a rejection of sovereignty association, patriating the Canadian Constitution with an amending formula and an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms. A National Energy Program is in force providing a comprehensive set of measures designed to achieve security of supply, greater Canadian ownership and fairness to the consumer. The federal Government's 6&5 program established a framework for the cooperative national effort which has enabled Canada to realize a dramatic reduction in inflation. And the new Western Grain Transportation Act will replace the outdated Crow's Nest Pass freight rate with a more fair and equitable set of rates, thus completing the necessary groundwork for a major expansion of western rail capacity during the balance of the decade.

Meeting the Challenges of World Recession

These four achievements represent the highlights of the Parliamentary session which now is coming to an end; they have been attained in the midst of one of the most turbulent periods which Canada has experienced outside of wartime. The past three and a half years have been marked by global recession, by unstable international petroleum markets, by increased levels of East-West tension, and by the displacement of millions of people around the planet by war, hunger and economic deprivation.

The Canadian response to these troubled times has been, not to retrench, but to meet these greater challenges through a more effective mobilization of our resources. The Government took steps protect Canadians as much as possible from the ravages of international recession, and to battle domestic inflation. The stage thus was set for the renewed growth and job creation which we are now experiencing.

The centrepiece of the Government's battle against inflation was the 6&5 program, introduced last year to limit increases in incomes and prices regulated by the Federal Government to six percent and five percent respectively over two years. The compulsory restraint measures introduced in the federal public service were reinforced by widespread voluntary adoption of these guidelines by the private sector and the provinces.

The impact of the 6&5 program was enhanced by continuing Government restraint over the discretionary component of its expenditures, and by monetary policy conducted in a way which would not accommodate inflation. The "envelope" system placed pre-set limits on spending in each area of government responsibility, and ensured that policy and funding decisions were taken simultaneously. Improved management practices were implemented generating 122 million dollars in recurring annual savings; opportunities for realizing further annual savings of 139 million dollars have also been identified. Many of the recommendations of the Lambert Commission on Financial Management and Accountability were adopted. As a result of these efforts, the Government's "real", or inflation-adjusted, non-defence operating and capital expenditures are at the same level now that they were six years ago. Total federal government employment, measured in person-years controlled by the Treasury Board, is at the same level in 1983 as it was in 1979.

The inflation rate today is 4.9 percent, the lowest level in eleven years. Other dividends from the Government's anti-inflationary stance are reduced interest rates, a stable dollar and the record trade surplus which we are now experiencing.

Canada was struck as forcefully as its trading partners by the worldwide recession. The Government took concerted action to protect Canadians from its worst effects and to ensure the vigour of the domestic recovery. A work sharing program was introduced to prevent layoff. New funds were channeled into direct job creation, tax incentives and other measures to stimulate activity en employment-intensive sectors, and new programs to promote economic development. A framework of investment incentives has been announced. Change to the investment tax credit will make it more readily usable by firms investing in Canada, and will render a portion of the credit refundable. Purchasers of new shares issued by investing firms will also be eligible for the credit. A Special Recovery Investment fund is being created to speed and strengthen private investment during the early stages of the recovery. The maximum personal tax rate has been cut in order to encourage savings and investment. The Indexed Security Investment Plan will provide an additional incentive to invest in common shares of Canadian Companies by eliminating taxation on the inflationary part of capital gains.

Particularly consideration has been accorded to small business, the most dynamic force in our economy. The Small Business Development Bond increased the funds available to small business by providing a tax exemption on the interest earned by loans to small businesses. Tax measures were introduced to permit the deduction of spouses' salaries from income as a business expense, and review procedures for small business under the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act were streamlined.

In addition to initiatives aimed at stimulating private sector activity through direct incentive, the Government has undertaken a series of public sector and demand stimulus measures to generate rapid results. More than 2 billion dollars has been targeted to direct job creation alone during the past four fiscal years, providing work for over 700,000 people. A further 2 billion dollars in new funding has been directed to the stimulation of construction in the housing sector, while a major program has been launched, as part of the Crow Rate initiative, to speed the expansion and modernization of rail capacity in the West. The Special Recovery Program announced in the Spring Budget targeted a further 2.4 billion dollars over four years to public investment stimulus through accelerated capital and infrastructure projects.

These programs are now bearing fruit. During the first half of 1983 the Canadian economy grew at an annual rate of 72 percent. Housing starts, industrial production and capacity utilization are all up significantly. Employment levels have rebounded, and the number of people employed has grown at an average rate of 31,000 per month since last November.

Many groups in our society were cruelly affected by high interest rates during the past three and a half years. The Government took extensive action to provide relief to those groups particularly had hit.

It responded to the plight of homeowners facing high mortgage costs. Grants of up to $3,000 were made available to homeowners whose mortgage renewals brought their mortgage costs above 30 percent of their gross income. In addition, grants of $3,000 each were extended to first-time home buyers and to purchasers of new houses. The Canadian Home Renovation Plan provided assistance to homeowners undertaking home repairs.

Parallel measures were introduced to help renters. The Canada Rental Support Plan was put forward to ease tight rental housing markets by providing interest-free loans toward the construction of new rental units.

Special measures were enacted to ease the burden of farmers, fishermen and small businessmen. The ceilings for loans under the Small Business Loans Act and Farm Improvement Loans Act were raised to $100,000; for the Fisheries Improvements Loans Act to $150,000; and for the Farm Credit Corporation to $350,000. The total funding available under the Small Business Loans program was almost doubled, to 1.5 billion dollars, and a Small Business Investment Grant programs was initiated to reduce costs on borrowing undertaken by small businessmen, farmers and fishermen. The Special Farm Financial Assistance Program provided an interest rebate of four percent on loans extended through the Farm Credit Corporation.

The Government's action to deal with inflation, unemployment and high interest rates were accompanied by a program to respond to the challenges of the 1980s in a bold and creative manner. That program, outlined in the 1980 Speech from the Throne, had five principal goals:

—to respond to individual needs by promoting greater security for the elderly, expanded opportunities for the young, and equality for women;

—to achieve security of energy supply at a fair price for all Canadians;

—to promote national economic development in a way that would provide jobs, stimulate growth, build upon regional strengths, and increased Canadian ownership and control of our economy;

—to strength national institutions, while making them more responsive to provincial and regional goals;

—to ensure that Canada plays a vigorous part in the world beyond our borders.

Helping First Those Who Need Help Most

The first of the goals set out at the opening of the session, enhancing the security of the individual, was designed to help first those who need help most. The Government continues to believe that this must be its first guiding principle and it has given effect to this principle through a wide array of initiatives. In doing so, it has been one of the few western governments not to cut back spending on social services during the last three years.

The elderly came first, with the passage of legislation to raise the Guaranteed Income Supplement to the Old Age Security pension by $35 per month per household, thereby improving the standard of living of 1.3 million pensioners.

In addition, to initiate the complex process of pension reform, a National Pensions Conference was convened as part of the consultative phase of this process and a comprehensive study of the issue, published as a Green Paper, was undertaken.

The Government has addressed the needs and concerns of Canadian women, and taken steps to guarantee their right to full and equal participation in all aspects of our national life.

Within the federal public service, a pilot affirmative action program put in place in 1981 for women, natives and the handicapped is the model for a comprehensive affirmative action program now being implemented in all federal government departments. In addition, a Commission of Inquiry on Equality in Employment has been established to investigate employment practices affecting these groups in certain Crown corporations, and officials within the government have been working with private employers to help them develop their own affirmative action programs.

Female representation in the management and professional categories of the public service has expanded steadily. The principle of equal pay for work of equal value has been adopted within the public service as a guideline applicable to all collective agreements and salary settlements.

This session has been marked by the appointment of the first woman Speaker of the House of Commons and the first woman on the Supreme Court of Canada. Women have been appointed to positions as Chief Justices in Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan, and a woman has been appointed Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba.

Outside the public sector, the Women's Employment and Women in Non-Traditional Occupations programs have helped break down barriers to entry in non-traditional job fields. The new National Training Act, which has directed resources towards improved job training, provides important support to women wishing to enhance or update their job skills.

The Government has moved to help many women who are working parents. It enriched the child tax credit to $343 per child and doubled the child care expense deduction to $2,000 per child. The Unemployment Insurance Act was amended to provide greater flexibility and equity in the determination of eligibility for maternity benefits, and to extend these benefits to adoptive parents.

For those staying at home to care for their children, pension coverage was improved with the introduction of a child rearing dropout provision to the Canada Pension Plan. It entitles mothers or fathers to remain outside the labour force while their children are under the age of seven without sacrificing future pension benefits.

The Government has addressed the problem of violence against women through major amendments to the parts of the Criminal Code dealing with sexual offences. These amendments replace the offence of rape with various offences of sexual assault, and provide additional protection to women through elimination of spousal immunity and elimination of the need for corroboration of a complainant's testimony.

Amendments to the Human Rights Act also afford increased protection to women, particularly against sexual harassment.

And the most fundamental step of all has been taken by enshrining the principle of equal rights for men and women in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Young people have also been a particular focus for Government action, which dealt with the primary concerns of youth employment and academic prospects.

The young, lacking employment experience, have been a particular casualty of the recession at the very point in their lives at which they should be acquiring job skills and developing sound work habits. To deal with this situation, the Government has launched a series of initiatives directed specifically towards jobs for younger workers.

A Youth Wage Subsidy and Internship Program has been established to help young people obtain work experience and on-the-job training. Katimavik, the Youth Job Corps Program, and the Summer Youth Employment Program have all been expanded. An Extended Youth Training and Employment Program run by the Department of National Defence has been established to provide employment and vocational training.

Young people will be major beneficiaries of the National Training Act. Under this Act, 1.2 billion dollars has been made available during the current fiscal year alone for improved job training opportunities and facilities. The Act also provides for federal assistance to people enrolled in provincial and private educational courses.

Altogether, more than 300,000 young people will have been assisted this year by these and other federal training and employment programs.

Amendments also have been made to the Canada Student Loans Act which almost double the maximum annual amount available to individual students and which broaden the eligibility criteria for loans to include those studying part-time. The program will have benefited 185,000 students this year.

A new Young Offenders Act affords increased protection to young people accused of crimes by giving them explicit rights under the law, raising the age of criminal responsibility from seven to twelve, and providing for destruction of court records when sentences have been served and certain other criteria met.

The Government has given the needs of the handicapped special consideration.

The handicapped are one of the designaged groups to which the public service affirmative action program is directed. In addition, a Program for the Employment Disadvantaged has been introduced to develop private sector opportunities for handicapped workers.

Amendments have been made to the Human Rights Act to protect the disabled from discrimination.

A Parliamentary Task Force on the Disabled and Handicapped tabled its report during 1981, the International Year of Disabled Persons, recommending government initiatives to improve job opportunities and living conditions for the handicapped. Significant progress has already been made on more than two thirds of these recommendations, while steps are being taken to address the remaining third. Examples of recommendations being implemented include the allocation of five percent of housing units built under certain Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation programs to specially designed units for the disabled, and significant modifications to airports, train stations, ferries, bus terminals and other federal buildings to improve their accessibility.

The Secretary of State has been named the Minister responsible for issues affecting the disabled, and a status of disabled persons secretariat has been established within his department.

Energy Security at a Fair Price

The second major goal for Parliament set out at the opening of this session was that of achieving energy security at a fair price. The Government introduced the National Energy Program and signed agreements with the oil-producing provinces. A blended, made-in-Canada oil price, fair to producers and consumers, has resulted in average wellhead prices significantly below world levels. Recent amendments to the federal-provincial energy agreements give Canadians additional assurances of price stability over an 18 month period, as well as a guarantee that wholesale natural gas prices in the large eastern Canadian markets will not exceed 65 percent of the price of oil. In western Canada these prices are even lower. The commitment made in 1980 not to impose an 18¢ increase in the excise tax on transportation fuels has been honoured.

You were told three years ago that the Government would take steps to achieve 50 percent Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry by 1990. At that time, 28 percent of our petroleum production was owned by Canadians. Today, in large part because of a strengthened Petro-Canada and an incentive system designed to promote Canadian ownership, that figure is at 38 percent. Furthermore, a majority of all exploration expenditures now are undertaken by Canadian controlled companies, compared to three years ago when only 34 percent were Canadian controlled. As well, a new Canadian petroleum company, Co-Enerco, was established as a result of collaboration between the cooperative movement and the federal Government.

Energy conservation and the shift from oil to other fuels have both accelerated as a result of incentives put in place during the past three years. The Canadian Home Insulation Program has been extended and the eligibility criteria broadened. So far 1.8 million homes have received grants towards improved insulation, meaning average savings of 17 percent on heating bills. Natural gas pricing policy and off-oil conversion grants have helped to reduce the number of households heated by oil from 42 percent to 31 percent in the past three years. Grants have been provided for the conversion of vehicles to propane fuel, and a pilot project has been launched to investigate the feasibility of compressed natural gas as an alternative fuel. An alternate energy corporation, Canertech, has been established to carry out research and development on renewable energy forms.

The Government's vigorous promotion of conservation and oil substitution has helped reduce domestic demand so much that this year Canada achieved oil self-sufficiency. Only a few years ago, 1990 was considered an optimistic target for attaining self-sufficiency and we have hit it seven years early. Today, Canada has a cumulative 1983 crude oil trade surplus of over 300 million dollars and an overall energy trade surplus of 5 billion dollars.

The Government has aided companies willing to undertake major energy development projects. Despite softening world oil prices, several major projects were announced within the last two years—for instance, oil sands developments at Wolf Lake and Cold Lake, expansion at Syncrude in Fort McMurray, a heavy oil upgrader in Regina, and the Norman Wells project.

Since you were told that Petro-Canada would be expanded and its budget increased, it has more than doubled the value of its assets. The corporation's share of retail revenues in the petroleum industry has now risen to eleven percent, from less than two percent in 1979, reflecting an increase both in the number of retail outlets and in consumer support. Petro-Canada has been actively involved in Canadian exploration, particularly in risky Frontier areas. Today, Petro-Canada is at work in every part of the country, and Canadians are proud of their national energy corporation.

Promoting Economic Development

The third objective put forth in 1980 was national economic development. In addition to the measures already cited to promote job creation, improved job training and lower inflation, sectoral and regional initiatives were undertaken as part of our economic development policy.

The Government has pursued industrial development on a variety of fronts to utilize the strengths inherent in our well-diversified industrial base. It took measures to:

—preserve and rebuild Canada's industrial base;

—provide incentives for increased research and development;

—promote the expansion of export markets;

—upgrade Canada's transportation infrastructure;

—improve the health of Canadian resource industries.

Several major government departments are being reorganized to improve the process of economic policy development and the implementation of regional development concerns.

A 1 billion dollar Industrial and Regional Development Program has been established to help Canadian industry become more competitive internationally and to attract new industries. Under this program a more equitable index of regional disparities is being used to determine levels of assistance, and for the first time all economic development programs will be available throughout the country.

A large number of initiatives were undertaken during this session to stimulate disadvantaged areas, boost promising new projects and industries, spur productivity growth, upgrade infrastructure, and provide assistance to sectors experiencing temporary difficulties. Federal funds for the shipbuilding industry are promoting ship construction and assisting in shipyard improvement, while support has been extended to help Chrysler Canada and Massey-Ferguson weather periods of temporary difficulty. A major federal program of adjustment assistance is facilitating modernization and rationalization of the textile industry, and creation of new employment opportunities for displaced workers. An Office of Industrial and Regional Benefits is promoting Canadian sourcing of equipment and expertise for resource development projects. Government programs were a factor which helped Bombardier secure a major export contract for urban transit vehicles. The Canadian Space Program is providing continued support to leading-edge industries.

In view of the Government's commitment to raise Canadian spending on research and development to 1.5 percent of Gross National Product by 1985, a policy planning framework was announced. More recently, as part of a comprehensive technology policy, the Government has announced construction of fifteen new research facilities, additional funding allocations for high technology procurement and proposals to simplify and enhance tax incentives. Funding for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and for the Industrial Research Assistance Program was increased. Stimulated in part by these and other government measures, research and development spending as a percentage of Canadian Gross National Product has risen from 1.03 percent in 1979 to a forecast level of 1.4 percent for 1983.

Effective export promotion was the goal of several Government initiatives. The Department of External Affairs was restructured to help ensure that trade considerations receive priority in the development of our foreign policy. Funding was increased to help small and medium-sized businesses fulfill their export potential, and a new financing facility introduced to better assist Canadian companies to compete abroad. Overall funding for the Export Development Corporation was raised.

Since 1979 Canada's trade surplus has quadrupled, to a record high level of 17 billion dollars for 1983 to date. This rise contributed to the 7 billion dollar improvement in the overall balance of payments which occurred over the same period, resulting in the first current account surplus in nine years.

In transportation, a central part of the Government's approach to industrial development, the greatest single achievement has been resolution of the Crow's Nest Pass Rate issue. The legislation directs 3.5 billion dollars over four years towards implementation of a fairer freight rate structure and expansion of western rail capacity, and will lever up to 16.5 billion dollars more to these objectives. The decision to change the Crow Rate will mean a permanent subsidy to western Canada of 651 million dollars per year. Much of the Canadian National line between Winnipeg and Vancouver will be double-tracked. Altogether, 375,000 person-years of employment will thus be generated.

Steps have been taken to match increased rail capacity with enhanced port facilities. At Prince Rupert, construction is nearing completion of a new port which will include coal and grain terminals; the coal terminal will provide the facilities required for the northeast British Columbia coal development project. The Canada Ports Corporation has been established to increase local port autonomy and to improve overall efficiency of the national ports system. These improvements to our transportation system will become particularly vital when world market demand recovers.

In another major Canadian industry, the Government has already acted on many recommendations of comprehensive studies of the east and west coast fisheries, in order to improve their productivity and enhance the livelihoods of fishermen and plant workers. A federal-provincial agreement was signed to revitalize the Newfoundland deep-sea fishing industry, creating a new fishing company from the assets of several which are financially troubled, and agreement in principle was negotiated with Nova Scotia for a comparable initiative in that province. Enabling legislation was passed to authorize federal involvement in the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery. The Government has also taken action to help fishermen benefit more fully from the 200 mile zone by increasing the severity of penalties for foreign fishermen who break Canada's coastal fishing laws.

In forestry, one of the country's largest employers, Government support has been extended in the form of enhanced federal forestry facilities in St. John's, Fredericton, Ste. Foy, Sault Ste. Marie and Victoria; Unemployment Insurance funds to subsidize forestry jobs when world demand for forest products softened; assistance to forestry schools; and purchases of new water bombers.

Support has been provided to assist research and development in the mining sector. The industry has been given access to facilities of the Canadian Centre for Energy and Mineral Technology, whose work has led to important breakthroughs in occupational health and safety.

In recognition of the growing number of countries which prefer to make food purchases on a state-to-state basis, a new Crown corporation, Canagrex, has been established that will help agricultural producers expand their export markets. Other new legislation affecting farmers includes the Meat Import Act, which protects both producers and consumers, and an Act which enables the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow on financial markets.

Strengthening National Institutions

The fourth government goal set forth three years ago was the strengthening of national institutions and our country's unity.

In 1980, residents of the province of Quebec voted "no" to sovereignty-association in the Quebec referendum and the federal Government promised a process of federal renewal.

Clearly, the greatest achievements in this area have been the patriation of our Constitution with an amending formula, and the entrenchment of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These actions completed the final steps towards Canadian sovereignty and formally guaranteed every citizen certain basic rights and freedoms.

The task of strengthening the rights of Canadians will proceed. To this end, Parliament recently adopted a resolution urging the Manitoba Government to take early action to ensure that treatment of the province's official language minority conforms with constitutional requirements.

An important part of the process of renewal is to ensure that Canada's native peoples are able to realize their rightful aspirations within Canadian society. The First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Constitutional Matters last spring produced agreement on an amending resolution guaranteeing aboriginal and treaty rights equally to native men and women, and including land claims settlements under treaty rights. That amendment has now been ratified by Parliament and the required number of provincial legislatures, and will be incorporated into our Constitution next year.

Various native claims settlements have been reached within the last three and a half year. A Native Economic Development Fund was created to assist native peoples in the pursuit of their own economic development objectives. Funding for native housing programs and friendship centres has been increased. A new northern broadcasting policy is being implemented to increase native involvement in broadcasting in northern areas.

Other achievements of the past three years have contributed to the strengthening of our national institutions.

Amendments to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act have provided a new equalization formula and authorized transfers to the provinces of nearly 100 billion dollars over five years for equalization purposes and to help fund post-secondary education and Medicare. The federal government last year paid more than half the total cost of post-secondary education and of insured services under Medicare.

The House of Commons adopted a new experimental set of rules designed to enhance the role of the Member of Parliament and to improve the speed and efficiency of the institution.

A Joint Parliamentary Committee was established to consider options for Senate reform, and a Green Paper examining this issue was published.

Access to Information legislation was adopted to give the public wider access to government documents, and a new Privacy Act was passed with stricter controls on the transmittal of personal information.

The Post Office has been turned into a Crown corporation, and the process of streamlining its operations is well underway.

The Canada Elections Act was amended to shorten to 50 days the period required to hold elections, and to ensure a more equitable financial basis for all candidates.

"O Canada" was officially adopted as our national anthem, and July 1st officially designated as Canada Day.

Pursuing a Vigorous Foreign Policy

The last of the five major commitments made three years ago by the Government was to pursue a vigourous and active foreign policy.

The Government has pledged to fulfill its responsibilities as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization by increasing real defence expenditures by at least three percent annually. For the last three fiscal years the real growth of defence expenditures has exceeded that target. The Government has taken steps to acquire new F-18 fighter aircraft, Aurora patrol aircraft, military trucks, tanks, and patrol frigates. An agreement for defence systems testing has been signed with our American allies.

While honouring our international defence commitments, we have continued both publicly and privately to work towards mutual limitations and to advance the nuclear suffocation approach first proposed by the Prime Minister in 1978. An Ambassador for Disarmament was appointed. At the 1983 Williamsburg Summit, Canada played a key role in the process leading to the adoption of a declaration on security and arms control by the participating countries. Recently, the Prime Minister launched a new peace initiative intended to improve communication, and hence the prospects for progress on arms control and disarmament.

Canada has undertaken a number of actions to help developing nations. During the 1981 North-South Summit, which the Prime Minister co-chaired, Canada demonstrated leadership in helping to keep North-South lines of communication open in the face of international forces pressing for a retreat into isolationism and protectionism. On a per capita basis, Canada has resettled one of the largest numbers of foreign refugees of any country in the world: more than half of these refugees were government-sponsored. We have progressed towards raising official development assistance to 0.5 percent of Canadian Gross National Products by 1985.

Recently this Parliament approved amendments to the Bretton Woods Act to increase our contribution to the International Monetary Fund.

Canada played an active role with other major industrialized countries in seeking solutions for fundamental economic and political problems, and was pleased in 1981 to be host for the annual Economic Summit.

In particular, we have sought to resolve bilateral issues with our American neighbours. Many efforts were successful—for instance, in the transborder trucking and softwood lumber issues. Amendments to the Clean Air Act were passed which provide automatic Canadian matching of U.S. measures which afford environmental protection to Canada, and a bilateral agreement recently was concluded for a joint study of acid rain.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the previous and current fiscal years.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

The Honourable The Speaker of the Senate then said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

It is the will and pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General that this Parliament be prorogued until three o'clock in the afternoon, Wednesday next, December 7, 1983, to be here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until three o'clock in the afternoon, Wednesday next, December 7, 1983.
